COLLECTION OF TRIALS, &c.

The Proceedings in the Houſe of Commons, touching the Impeachment of EDWARD late Earl of CLARENDON, Lord High Chancellor of ENGLAND, Anno 1667.

October 26th, 1667.

MR. EDWARD SEYMOUR Charged him viva Voce with many great Crimes, whereupon a Debate aroſe what Proceeding ought to be had upon it, ſome moving to Impeach him in the Name of the Commons till Articles ſhould be prepared; others urg'd, that Witneſſes ſhould be firſt examined to ſee how the Charge could be made good, leaſt failing, it ſhould reflect on the Honour of the Houſe. After long Debate, a Committee was appointed to ſearch Records for Parliamentary Proceedings in the like Caſes, and to make Report.

30*th*, The Report being made by Sir Thomas Littleton, that various Proceedings were found in ſeveral Parliaments, it occaſioned a long Debate, ſeveral Members ſpeaking to the effect following,

Sir Tho. Littl. That in Caſes Criminal, they find Proceedings to have been, ſometimes by Articles, ſometimes by Word of Mouth; but in Capital Crimes no Proceedings appear till the Earl of Strafford's Caſe, againſt whom the Houſe carried up a General Impeachment, the Reaſon whereof ſeems to be this: Some Votes were made in the Houſe at which the King takes Offence, as if they would proceed upon common Fame; whereupon they vindicate their Proceedings as done in a Parliamentary way, and appoint a Committee to withdraw for about half an Hour to conſider the Matter for a Conference with the Lords about the Charge, and upon their Report a general Charge is carried up to the Lords Bar; the principal Charge then was for adviſing to bring over the Iriſh Army, and the ſingle Proof was Sir Henry Vane, ſo the Impeachment went up for High Treaſon, tho' no Member would poſitively ſay he would make the Charge good.

So for the Biſhop of Canterbury there was no Impeachment, but a Charge in general.

And if you take not the ſame Courſe now, but inſiſt upon examining Witneſſes firſt, the Difficulties will be unanſwerable; for is it like that Men before they ſhall ſee you in earneſt will have their Names produced againſt the Earl of Clarendon? If this be your Proceeding, we muſt never expect to Impeach a Great Man more. If you think there is nothing in the Charge leave it, but if you think 'tis worth your while, take heed of making ſuch a dangerous Precedent as by neglecting it to wound your Liberties; but proceed in the uſual way with a General Impeachment.

Serj. Maynard. I ſtand not up to give Advice, but to ſpeak to matter of Fact in the buſineſs of Strafford and Canterbury; I attended that buſineſs from the beginning, Sir John Clotworthy informed ſomething againſt Strafford to be direct Treaſon, that he had aſſumed an Arbitrary Power in Ireland, and diſpoſſeſſed one Savage by force of Arms, and undertook to prove it. Sir Henry Vane alſo told them, that he had a Note taken out of his Father's Cabinet, containing the Advice which Strafford gave the King in that Caſe; namely, the King wanting Money, and the Queſtion being how he ſhould ſupply it, he replyed, That if the Parliament was refractory and would not, you ſtand looſed and abſolve from Rules of Government; you have an Army in Ireland which you may employ to reduce them.

Then there was a Debate whether they ſhould accuſe him of Treaſon. And Sir Edward Herbert (the Attorney) ſaid, if you are perſuaded the Truth is, as is pretended, you may. And ſo it was; but when the Cloſe Committee had examined the Buſineſs, they moved the Houſe, that ſome Lawyers might be added to them; and had they gone, when they ſaid they were ready, they had not touched one Hair of Strafford's Head. Then it was conſidered what was fit to be done: To accuſe him of Treaſon would be a dangerous Precedent, as if out of many other Crimes a Treaſon could be drawn; thereupon it was Reſolved not to demand Judgment from the Lords, becauſe ſome Articles were not Treaſon. Then it was propounded not to ſtate what his Offences were, leſt it ſhould give advantage to inferior Courts ſo to proceed; but ſaid, he deſerved to be accuſed of Treaſon; and in concluſion a Proviſo was added, not to make that Caſe a Precedent.

For the Biſhop of Canterbury, the four Articles were general, and he was long in Priſon without any Proceeding againſt him; but after long time he demurr'd, then new Articles were framed, on which he died.

Mr. John Vaughan. You have had a Charge opened of a ſtrange Nature, and I know not what part of it can be proved, but the Reputation of this Houſe is at Stake, and of the King too: For, where a Charge is brought in by ſome of your Members, whereof one Article is, That he ſhould ſay ſuch Words of the King, as by a Statute made by you is a Præmunire, and to give Counſel to levy War upon the Kingdom; is it agreeable to our Duty to the King and Kingdom to let it die?

For the Perſon concerned, I know not which way his Honour can be whole without his giving an Anſwer to his Charge; for mark the Conſequence, if the King ſhould take him to Favour again before clear'd, will not the World ſay a Perſon is received to Favour again, who gave the King Counſel againſt the Kingdom, and traduc'd the King, and how can he be whole in his Honour this way?

Obj. But it will be ſaid, we muſt have Ground to put him to Anſwer.

Anſw. Whether you have Ground enough to prove I know not, but you have Ground enough to make him Anſwer to clear himſelf. Suppoſe thoſe two Articles had been Charged on a Member of this Houſe, what would it have become that Member to do? Should he ſit ſtill and ſay, I will make no Anſwer, but ſee whether the Houſe will make more Proof? If he ſhould do ſo, the not making an Anſwer is Reaſon enough to Charge him.

I can give you Inſtances of Perſons Charged in Parliament, who tho' not nominated, yet being (as it were) pointed at, Petitioned that they might Anſwer, and ſo would any Man; but when this is bruited up and down, will not the World ſay, You never ask the Parry whether Guilty?

The Duke of Suffolk was Charged upon Common Fame, and if that were a Ground for a Charge then (which I do not ſay it was) ſo it is in this Caſe; but he moved that he might be heard; and tho' it was deſired he might be Committed, yet it was juſtly rejected till he had Anſwered. Then for the Nature of the Charge, if it be true, it is very High, but whether it be Treaſon is another Matter, it is brought to you under no Name, when you make the Charge, it becomes you to ſay what it is; therefore chooſe a Committee to reduce the Accuſation into Heads, and bring them to you, without which you cannot right your ſelves, nor him, if Innocent.

For the way of it, it cannot be thought fit to publiſh your Witneſſes and the Matter before hand; if in private Cauſes the Defendant and Plaintiff ſhould have a Publication before-hand, no Cauſe would be rightly Judged, much leſs when you have Publication of all which concerns the One, but nothing of the Other. Again, if a Witneſs be examined concerning Matters in his own Knowledge, if he gives Evidence, where he is not brought judicially to give it, if he hath teſtified any thing which brings him within the Satute of Falſe News, how can he avoid the Penalty? For it's not enough for him to ſay he knows it, but he muſt have others to juſtifie it.

As for the Perſons who bring the Charge, they are your own Members, which the Writs return for honeſt and diſcreet Men, and if you are ſatisfied of that, how can you reject their Complaint, tho' grounded upon Common Fame, as all Accuſations are, ſeeing they tell you, they can bring Proof of what they ſay?

Then for Common Fame, if a Man ſpends largely, and hath no viſible way to get an Eſtate, no Man accuſeth him to have gotten it unlawfully; yet he may be put to clear himſelf from what Common Fame chargeth him with. Upon ſuſpicion of Felony, I may bring a Man before a Magiſtrate to clear himſelf; ſo in the Courſe of Indictments and Preſentments, a Charge is given of what Things are to be Preſented; then a Proclamation is made, That if any one can give Evidence, he may be ſworn, but if no Evidence appear, yet they may Indict.

Then it will be ſaid, the Oath is a Material Thing, but we are proceeding without an Oath.

To this I anſwer, What this Houſe ſhall Charge is of more Authority than the Oaths of ordinary Witneſſes; Peers, tho' not upon Oath, are ſuppoſed to do Right; ſo are we upon the Reputation of our Honeſty and Diſcretion.

Mr. L. H. I am ſenſible the Houſe may think me Partial, but I ſhall endeavour to ſhew my ſelf not ſo much a Son of the Earl of Clarendon as a Member of this Houſe; and I aſſure you, that if he ſhall be found Guilty, no Man ſhall appear more againſt him than I; if not, I hope every one will be for him as much as I; let every Man upon his Conſcience think what of this Charge is true, for I believe that if one Article be proved, he will own himſelf Guilty of all.

Sir Hen. Fin. An Impeachment there muſt be, if there be Cauſe; ſuch Accuſations are not to be paſſed over in Silence.

I believe not one Truth in the Law more than in this Propoſition, That there is no ſuch thing as Treaſon by Common Law, or by Equity, and we hold our Lives by that Law; Before the 25th of Ed. 3. a Man could ſcarce ſpeak any thing but it was Treaſon, in Parliament or out; but no Man ought to die as a Traitor, who hath not literally offended that Law, or ſome other made ſince: There is indeed in that Law a Proviſo about the Parliament's declaring what is Treaſon; but note the Danger of taking Declaratory Powers, which I fear hath brought us into a Reckoning of Blood, which we have not yet paid for.

The Power of Parliaments is double, Legiſlative, which hath no Bounds; Declaratory, by pronouncing Judgments.

And tho' I know not what the Legiſlative Power of a Parliament cannot do, yet it is not in the Power of the Parliament, King, Lords nor Commons, to declare any thing to be Treaſon, which is

is not in the Common-Law Felony before. The Proviſo in Strafford's Caſe was (it's true) made for Inferiour Courts; but I hope we ſhall not ſo proceed as muſt needs draw after it a Ne trahatur in Exemplum, and your own Act this Parliament ſhews, That all done by Strafford, a part, or together, was not Treaſon: And it behoves us to take heed we thwart not our own Argument.

For the manner then, Conſider how you ſhould proceed if it were out of Parliament, and how the bringing of it into this Houſe Alters it.

If it were out of Parliament, without doubt the Accuſation ſhould be proved before hand, and thoſe who diſcover it are guilty of Felony. This provides for the Subject, that the Witneſſes muſt be Two, and for the King, that none ſhall diſcover the Evidence.

But ſuppoſe the Charge be for Miſdemeanors, the Trial then is not to be by the Lords, but by the Commons; for the Lords are his Peers only in Caſes Capital.

How then doth the bringing it into Parliament alter the Caſe? If the Parliament ſet aſide Laws in this Caſe, we ſhould be happy to ſee Law declaring what is the Power of Parliaments.

There is no Precedent produced which is ſingly of Weight to guide you, therefore if you proceed, let it be as near as poſſible by the good Old Laws; Namely, That there be an Accuſation founded upon an Oath and the Evidence kept ſecret, I propoſe that way for the very reaſon that others oppoſe it, (viz.) The Accuſation goes over the Kingdom, and it will bring Diſhonour to the Houſe, the King and the Earl; For the Honour of the Houſe it will be hard to ſay, the Charge was brought in upon Miſinformation. A Perſon accuſed for adviſing to bring in Arbitrary Government, &c. And for ſaying the King is not fit to Govern; If this be true, tho' it be not Treaſon in the Formality of the Law, it deſerves no leſs Puniſhment than if it were; but if not found Guilty, Conſider the Caſe. If one ſay, A killed a Man, and it is not ſo, muſt not he give reparation? We have an Accuſation upon hear-ſay, but if it be not made good, the blackeſt Scandal which Hell can invent, lies at our door.

Then Sir Tho Meers moving to refer it to the Committee of Grievances.

Mr. Vaugh. You ſhould have put the firſt Queſtion before another had been moved, the Earl of Middleſex (Cranfield's Caſe) will not hold parallel; He was accuſed of Bribery, which might be proved by their own Books, but this is for Scandalizing the King, &c. And where ſhall the Committee of Grievances enquire about it? you ſay let them hear the Perſons.

But ſuppoſe they be of the Lords Houſe, Can you ſend for them? Or if you do, will they come and ſay it? The matter of this Accuſation is ſuch, that if it lies in the knowledge of a ſingle perſon, if he delivers it extrajudicially (which he doth, if not upon Oath) he may be undone by it, and hazard his Perſon too: At the Committee of Grievances the Perſons muſt be known, and what they can ſay, and then we may conclude what will follow: Beſides their Quality may be ſuch as they cannot be brought, or their Diſcretion ſuch as they will not anſwer.

Sir Rich. Temp. Tell but the Lords that a Man in Publick Place hath misbehaved himſelf, and they will ſentence him, if he purge not himſelf; Never yet were Witneſſes examined before the Trial in caſe of Treaſon or Felony, for then if there be two Witneſſes, a way may be found by Poyſon, or ſome other way, to take away one.

Serj. Mayn. No Man can do what is Juſt but he muſt have what is true before him; where Life is concern'd, you ought to have a moral Certainty of the thing, and every one be able to ſay upon this Proof in my Conſcience, This Man is Guilty. Common Fame is no ground to accuſe a Man, where matter of Fact is not clear; To ſay an Evil is done, therefore this Man hath done it, is ſtrange in Morality, more in Logick.

Upon the whole Debate it was Voted,

That the Committee do reduce the Accuſation to Heads and preſent them to this Houſe.

November 6th, 1667.

Sir Tho. Lit. Reports that the Accuſation was reduced to Heads, which he read in his Place, and afterwards delivered the ſame in at the Clerks Table, which are as followeth, viz.

I. THAT the Earl of Clarendon hath deſigned a Standing Army to be raiſed and to govern the Kingdom thereby, and adviſed the King to Diſſolve this preſent Parliament, to lay aſide all Thoughts of Parliaments for the future, to govern by a Military Power, and to maintain the ſame by Free Quarter and Contribution.

II. That he hath in the hearing of the King's Subjects, falſely and ſediciouſly ſaid, That the King was in his Heart a Papiſt, or Popiſhly Affected, or words to that effect.

III. That he hath received great Sums of Money for the procuring of the Canary Patent, and other illegal Patents; and granted illegal Injunctions to ſtop Proceedings at Law againſt them, and other illegal Patents formerly Granted.

IV. That he hath Adviſed and Procured diverſe of His Majeſty's Subjects to be Impriſoned againſt Law, in remote Iſlands, Garriſons, and other Places, thereby to prevent them from the Benefit of the Law, and to produce Precedents for the Impriſoning any other of his Majeſty's Subjects in like manner.

V. That he procured his Majeſty's Cuſtoms to be Farmed at under Rates, knowing the ſame, and great pretended Debts to be paid by His Majeſty; to the payment of which, His Majeſty was not in ſtrictneſs bound: And afterwards received great Sums of Money for procuring the ſame.

VI. That he received great Sums of Money from the Company of Vintners, or ſome of them or their Agents, for Inhauncing the Prices of Wines, and for freeing them from the Payment of legal Penalties which they had incurred.

VII. That he hath in a ſhort time gained to himſelf a greater Eſtate than can be imagined to be gained lawfully in ſo ſhort a time; and contrary to his Oath, he hath procured ſeveral Grants under the Seal from His Majeſty to himſelf and Relations, of ſeveral of His Majeſty's Lands, Hereditaments and Leaſes, to the diſprofit of His Majeſty.

VIII. That he hath Introduced an Arbitrary Government in His Majeſty's Foreign Plantations, and hath cauſed ſuch as complained thereof before His Majeſty and Council, to be long Impriſoned for ſo doing.

IX. That he did reject and fruſtrate a Propoſal and Undertaking, approved by His Majeſty for the Preſervation of Mevis, and St. Chriſtophers, and reducing the French Plantations to His Majeſty's Obedience, after the Commiſſions were drawn for that purpoſe, which was the occaſion of our great Loſſes and Damage in thoſe Parts.

X. That he held Correſpondence with Cromwell and his Complices, when he was in Parts beyond the Seas attending His Majeſty, and thereby adhered to the King's Enemies.

XI. That he adviſed and effected the Sale of Dunkirk to the French King, being part of his Majeſty's Dominions; together with the Ammunitions, Artillery, and all ſorts of Stores there, and for no greater value, than the ſaid Ammunitions, Artillery, and Stores were worth.

XII. That the ſaid Earl did unduely Cauſe His Majeſty's Letters Patent under the Great Seal of England, to one Dr. Crowther, to be alter'd, and the Enrolment thereof to be unduly raſed.

XIII. That he hath in an Arbitrary way examined and drawn into queſtion divers of His Majeſty's Subjects, concerning their Lands, Tenements, Goods, Chattels, and Properties, determined thereof at the Council Table, and ſtopped Proceedings at Law by Order of the Council-Table, and threatned ſome that pleaded the Statute of 17 Car. I.

XIV. That he hath cauſed Quo Warranto's to be iſſued out againſt moſt of the Corporations of England, immediately after their Charters were confirmed by Act of Parliament: To the intent he might require great Sums of Money of them for Renewing their Charters, which when they complyed withal, he cauſed the ſaid Quo Warranto's to be Diſcharged, and Proſecution therein to ceaſe.

XV. That he procured the Bills of Settlement for Ireland, and received great Sums of Money for the ſame in moſt corrupt and unlawful manner.

XVI. That he hath Deluded and Betrayed His Majeſty and the Nation in all Foreign Treaties and Negotiations relating to the late War, and Betrayed and Diſcovered his Majeſty's Secret Counſels to his Enemies.

XVII. That he was a Principal Author of that fatal Counſel of dividing the Fleet, about June, 1666.

The Clerk having read them a ſecond time it was moved. That in regard the Articles were many, they might be referr'd to the Committee to ſee how far they were true; becauſe Fame is too ſlender a ground to bring a Man upon the Stage.

Sir Fran. Goodr. Seconds it, becauſe new matter was now added to what was formerly charged Viva voce in the Houſe.

Sir Rob. Howard. Suppoſe the Earl of Clarendon Innocent, and yet Charged and Impriſoned (which is the worſt of the Caſe) he afterwards appears innocent and is diſcharged, receiving no more Hurt than other Subjects have done; Namely, * one Great Man lately.

* D. Buck.

Object. But why ſhould we Commit him?

Anſw. For Proof, whether the Articles be true or not. Suppoſe Men for ſelf Preſervation will not venture to come, not knowing how they may truſt themſelves, and ſo you have no Proof, He very guilty, and You not able to proceed? Is the Inconveniency greater for an Innocent Perſon (if he prove ſo) to ſuffer a few days, than for you to loſe your Reputation for ever. If this Man be not brought to his Tryal, it may force him to fly to that which he Counſelled, that is, that we may never have Parliament more.

Sir Fr. Goodr. I am not againſt proceeding, but unſatisfied to do it without Witneſs, it being like Swearing in Verba Magiſtri.

Sir John Holl. That the Committee undertake to make good the Charge, otherwiſe Examine Witneſſes.

Mr. Vaughan. You admit the Accuſation to be Matter for a Charge, if the Committee find Proof; if you intend to make this a diſtinct Caſe I leave it to you; but if this be to ſettle the Courſe of the Proceedings of the Houſe, I am againſt it; for this is ordering a way of Proceeding in the Earl of Clarendon's Caſe, which ſhall not be a General Rule. Tho' I cannot ſay one of the Articles to be true, yet I know them to be a full Charge if made good, and you are preſcribing a Courſe neither proper, nor ever practiſed. A Witneſs who ſpeaks without Oath is ſubject to Damage; not ſo upon Oath, becauſe the Law compels him: And whereas it hath been ſaid, If Witneſſes atteſt before the Houſe of Commons, what Judges dare meddle in it? I anſwer, ſuch Judges as meddled in the Caſe of Sir John Elliot, &c. and the Ship-Money.

Sir R. Temple. A Grand Jury is capable to preſent upon their own Knowledge, and are ſworn to keep the King's Counſel and their own, and I believe there is not one Article of the Accuſation but will be made good.

Sir Rob. Howard. As I am ſenſible of the Danger of publiſhing Witneſſes beforehand, ſo I would have every one ſatisfied; therefore take the Articles one by one, and according as you ſhall find what your Members may ſay for the Truth, you may be induced to proceed or not.

Sir Tho. Osb. The Houſe ought to have ſomething to induce their Belief, which they have had from ſeveral Members, and I know how ſome will be made good.

Sir Tho. Littl. What Article Members of the Houſe do not offer you Matter to induce you to believe, you may lay it aſide; therefore hear what ſhall be ſaid, and proceed accordingly.

Mr. John Tr. You cannot expect Witneſſes will appear before you, Lords will not, nor can you expect Commoners ſhould; for when you are up and gone, nothing can protect a Commoner, if this Information be not Judicial.

At laſt the Queſtion was put whether to refer it to a Committee.

Yeas, 128.
Noes, 194.

322.

Then the firſt Article was read to ſee what would be ſaid to induce the Houſe to impeach.

The Firſt Article read.

Sir Rob. How. } Heard from Perſons of Quality,
Lord Vaugh. } That it would be proved.

The Second Article was read.

Lord St. Joh. Perſons of great Quality have aſſured him to make it good, and if they perform not, he will acquaint the Houſe who they are.

The

The Third Article read.

Mr. Ed. Seym. Sufficient Perſons will make it good, with this Addition, When he received the Money, he ſaid, So long as the King is King, and I Lord Chancellor, the Patent will ſtand.

The Fourth and Fifth Articles read.

Sir R. Temp. Divers have undertaken to make them good, if they do not I will name them.

About his receiving Money of Vintners.

Sir Rob. Carr. That he knows who will prove it.

About his getting a great Eſtate ſo ſuddenly.

Mr. Ed. Seym. I ſuppoſe you need no Proof the Sun ſhines at Noon-day.

Sir Tho. Littl. The matter of Fact in the Article is eaſily made out, for his Place as Chancellor could not be worth above 4 or 5000 l. per An.

About introducing an Arbitrary Government in the Plantations.

Sir Tho. Littl. } One Farmer and others came
Sir Tho. Osb. } from the Barbadoes to complain of it, and lodg'd their Petition in this Houſe, but were impriſon'd that they might not be heard.

About fruſtrating Propoſals for preſerving Nevis, &c.

Sir Char. Wheel. My Lord Chancellor only oppoſed it.

About holding Correſpondence with Cromwel.

Mr. Swinf. That is pardon'd by the Act of Indempnity.

Mr. Vaugh. The Committee were aware of that, but the Defendant may plead it, and prove that he is not Out-law'd.

Sir Char. Wheel. I want not clearly to prove it.

Sir Rob. How. For ſuch ſecret things as theſe, he ought to plead, notwithſtanding the Act of Oblivion, that the World may know who are undiſcern'd Enemies.

Mr. Hambd. It is not only an Act of Parliament, but Oblivion; and no Man ought to be ſo much as Accuſed for what was done before.

Mr. Vaugh. If the Pardon be general, the Judges and you are to Note it, but if it hath Qualifications (as that Act hath) they are not to Note it; for you muſt ſay there is no Indictment or Outlawry againſt him (for ſuch the Act excepts) or the Article is to ſtand.

Then the Act was read.

Mr. Swinf. The Clauſe for Pardon is Abſolute, and any Man accuſed, pleading it ſhall not be ſued, nor his Fault mentioned, and this is to all Offences and Offenders; and for thoſe who betrayed the King beyond Sea (who are excepted) they muſt be proſecuted within Two Years.

Object. You will ſay, he may plead that Act.

Anſw. By the ſame Rule, any Man who committed a Fault, during the Troubles, may be put to plead it for Pardon.

Serj. Mayn. We profeſs that there ſhall be Candour in our Proceedings, Do we therefore believe this Great Man is Outlaw'd? If not, how ſhall we accuſe him of what we believe not true?

Mr. Vaugh. When I am ſatisfied of a thing I am not aſhamed to own it; I find now, having peruſed the Act, that he is within the Clauſe. The Indempnity is general, and he is within it if not excepted, the Exception reaches thoſe who have held Intelligence with the King's Enemies, ſo as they be proſecuted within Two Years, this he is not, therefore is clear.

So upon the Debate, the Article was expunged the Paper without a Vote.

About the Sale of Dunkirk.

Sir Tho. Osb. A great Lord told me that the Earl of Clarendon had made a Bargain for Dunkirk three quarters of a Year before it was known.

About Sealing Dr. Crowther's Patent.

Mr. Street. The King gives the Living to Crowther, in the Grant is a miſtake of a County, Crowther finds the miſtake, and petitions the King to amend it; the King calls for the Chancellor and Seal, and in the King's Preſence it was amended and Sealed.

Sir Tho. Littl. The Crime ſeems as great as a Chancellor could commit; the King was to Preſent by ſuch a Day or not at all; the Error was found after the Day, ſo that the King (by Act of Parliament) had loſt his Right. The Chancellor did alter the Patent, and the Record was fetch'd away by one of the Chancellor's Servants, and brought back raſed and altered, which might be done (and in other Caſes is done) where a Word only hath been miſtaken; but that is in Caſe of ſomething perfectly in the King's Power, and to ſave new Sealing; but here could be no new Sealing, the time being elapſed: It was to throw another Man out of his Freehold, and is a great Crime.

About drawing Mens Lands into Queſtion.

Mr. Thom. I ſhall be able to make it out.

About Quo Warranto's to Corporations.

Sir Tho. Littl. This is ſo Publick a Thing, that it need not be proved.

About the Settlement of Ireland.

Sir R. How. I doubt not but it will be made out.

About Foreign Treaties.

Sir Tho. Littl. This will appear by the Treaties themſelves, putting us in hopes of Peace, and ſo hindering the Fleet's ſetting out.

About Miſcarriage of the War.

Mr. Thom. I want not Perſons to bring to make it good.

Sir Tho. Littl. Sir Edward Sprag deſires Money to give an Intelligencer, and has it; Sprag brings the Intelligencer to the King, the King Commands him to meet him at the Chancellor's, there he met the King, and then Order was given to divide the Fleet.

Mr.

Mr. Marvel Chargeth Mr. Seymour with ſaying in his Accuſation, That the King was inſufficient for Government, which is now omitted in the Charge, and deſires he may declare where he had it.

Mr. Seym. The Party that told me at firſt, differ'd ſomething afterwards, therefore I rather withdraw it than to trouble you with uncertainties; but a Gentleman in the Houſe can give you further Satisfaction in it.

Sir John Den. A Peer of the Land heard the Earl of Clarendon ſay in a Coach, That the King was an unactive Perſon and indiſpoſed for Government: This will be made good.

Upon debate it appearing probable that theſe words were ſpoken before the Act of Oblivion, it paſſed over.

About the Cuſtoms.

Sir Rich. Temp. I have been Informed that he had a ſhare for under-letting the Cuſtoms and 40000 l. Bribe for getting pretended Debts from the King.

Sir Tho. Osb. The Earl of Clarendon ſaid, Bid who would for the Cuſtoms, none ſhould have them but the Old Farmers.

Mr. Prynn. Having gone over the Articles, we ſhould know where and when the words were ſpoken.

Mr. Seym. That will be a way to Suppreſs the Evidence, I hope you will Impeach him at the Lord's Bar, and in due time produce your Witneſſes.

Mr. Prynn. You muſt reſolve to Impeach him of Treaſon, or Miſdemeanour, and name it accordingly.

Sir Ed. Walp. You ought firſt to give a Title to your Impeachment; for if it be for Treaſon, you will move for Commitment; if it be for Impeachment in general, not.

Mr. Coleman, What is laid before you is only by Hear-ſay, but no Aſſurance that it will be made good; only that if they who reported it do not make it good, you ſhall know who they are. In the Earl of Strafford's Caſe (the worſt of Precedents) the Houſe proceeded not, till one ſpake in the Houſe upon his own Knowledge, and another engag'd his Reputation to make it good.

Sir Rob. Atk. Thoſe who have given you Inducements to proceed, do it at third hand, and and tho' they may know the Credit and Impartiality of thoſe that told them, yet you do not.

Sir Tho. Littl. A Queſtion ſhould be put, Whether this Houſe hath ſufficient Inducement to Impeach? Afterwards Conſider what the Title ſhall be, then appoint a Committee to frame Articles.

Which Queſtion being put, was carried in the Affirmative.

Then Adjourned.

November, 9.

The firſt Article read.

Sir John Goodrick, Treaſon ought to terminate in an overt Act, which deſigning is not, therefore pray read the Statutes.

Thereupon ſundry Statutes were read.

25 Ed. 3.
1 Hen. 4. Cap. 10.
1 Ed. 6. Cap. 12.
1 Q. Ma.
13 Car. 2d.
14 Car. 2d. Cap. 29.

Mr. Steward Declared it to be tranſcendent Miſdemeanour but no Treaſon.

Mr. Vaugh. Two Queſtions will be conſidered, One, Whether what's Charged in the Article was Treaſon in Common-Law before — 25 Ed. 3. That ſo we may underſtand the Nature of Treaſon; The other, Whether by any ſubſequent Act it is made otherwiſe.

Mr. Wall. The Advice given to the King I look upon to be this. To eſtabliſh a New Government, To be Govern'd by Jonezaries inſtead of a Parliament; To have a Divan and a great Miniſter of State, inſtead of Vizier-Baſſau, A worſe Plot than that of the 5*th* of November; There, if the Lords and Commons had been deſtroyed, there would have been Succeſſion, but here both had been deſtroyed for ever. Then in order to the Debate conſider how the Law looks on it; for tho' we may Accuſe on leſs Evidence than ſhe may Judge, yet we muſt be Cautious in naming the Crime: What therefore doth the Law call this before 25 Ed 3? Then look whether the Power of Conſtructive Treaſon be taken away ſince.

Sir Fran. Goodr. The matter concerns Life, therefore we ſhould be wary in the Exerciſe of Legiſlative Power; you are not tyed to Rules, but you are now a ſtep towards Judicature; The Common-Law is Jus non Scriptum, and tho' every Treaſon includes Felony, yet not every Felony Treaſon, 25 Ed. 3. There is a Declaratory Power, whether a thing be Treaſon, or other Felony, not whether it be Treaſon, and could not be declared Treaſon if not Felony before. In Caſes Capital at Common-Law they might declare it Treaſon, but in Caſes not Capital at Common-Law, they never exerciſed their Declaratory Power.

Among other things that Statute declares falſe Coin'd Money to be Treaſon, which is but Felony at Common-Law; afterward Money being imported, which was not according to the Stamp, there was no Puniſhment for it, but as a Miſdemeanour: Therefore 4 Hen. 7. Proviſion is made againſt that Practice, and it is made Treaſon; but if the Parliament's Declaratory-power could have made it Treaſon, what needed a Statute on purpoſe? So that I cannot think the Article before you is Treaſon, it not coming within the Words of the Statute.

Mr. Vaugh. I ſhall ſpeak to the firſt Queſtion, whether this Article was Treaſon at Common-Law; and firſt remove what ſome have aſſerted, Namely, That nothing is Treaſon, but what was Felony before 25 Ed. 3. where petty Treaſon is ſpoken of, the Wife killing the Husband, &c. Theſe words follow, If hereafter it come into Queſtion whether there be another Treaſon? It ſhall not be reſolved by the Judges, till the Parliament determine it; For in petty Treaſon, if it be Treaſon, it muſt be Felony, becauſe there is killing.

Then

Then comes more, whether raiſing, &c. and it follows whether it be Felony or Treſpaſs; And the thing it ſelf is more ſtrange. None ever doubted, but that all Treaſons of 25 Ed. 3. was Treaſon before, and was ſo reſolved 12 Q. Eliz. That by that Act the King declares what ſhould be Treaſon; Namely, If any Man Vitiates the King's Eldeſt Daughter, &c. But by this Doctrine if it were not Treaſon, what was it? Either Adultery or Fornication, when it is only the Eldeſt Daughter, not the Youngeſt.

It hath been in all Ages a Reputation to Perſons who have been Counſellors to Princes according to Emergencies to give Counſel to extricate them out of danger, and therefore hard to tax a Miniſter of State in a Caſe which he acquaints his Maſter with; for there can be no Treaſon but againſt the King himſelf.

I will ſhew you what I mean, It is true this is a Treaſon which cannot ariſe from Miſpriſion, becauſe it was ſpoke to the King himſelf; but as a Miniſter of State he has liberty to give Counſel for the King's ſafety. If a Perſon be able to Inform his Maſter what Alliances are good for him, it is his Duty; ſo what Trades are Profitable, what not, &c. So where Men or Money are wanting, to adviſe how to extricate is commendable; but when it comes to this, that he breaks in upon the Laws, invading the Contract between the King and his Subjects, it will be as if a Man adviſeth, That if the King wants Money, he may ſet up High-way Men to take it, and bring it to him, and ſo the skilfulleſt for breaking the Law ſhall be eſteemed the beſt Counſellor; therefore whoever thinks to ſerve his Prince by breaking the Laws, he is ſo far from a wiſe Man, that he is the higheſt Criminal, &c. Then for the Nature of the thing, The Treaſons declared 25 Ed. 3. were declared by the King's Commiſſion, and the Treaſons were of that Nature which concern'd Counſel, &c. they were not like to be declared. And there is a paſſage in Glanvil, called Seductio Domini Regis, that is, deceiving the King to what is pernicious to Him, and his People.

Now ſee the Nature of this Crime; If a Man Counſel his Prince, and Practice it ſuch a way as ſhall render him Prince of Conſcience, who hath broken his Oath, and all this to his Injury, ſo that he hath no Aſſent to it. Compare this with any Treaſon of 25 Ed. 3. Conſider it: Here is a Perſon who gives the King Advice, which at once muſt make his People ſee he hath broken all his Faith to his Kingdom (and is not the Counſel of Governing by an Army ſuch) all the Laws broken, to keep which the King has Sworn, and this the King put upon tho' not Inclin'd to: I aſſert not this upon the Earl of Clarendon, but upon the Article. Who doth this, Counſels the higheſt Treaſon againſt the Common-Law, becauſe others are ſo; but if a Man will pretend to give Counſel, wherein many ſhall have no benefit by the Law, he breaks all parts, and therefore I think this Counſel was Treaſon at Common-Law.

Mr. Colem. The Queſtion is, Whether it be in your Power to declare this Article Treaſon by 25 Ed. 3. If he adviſed an Army againſt the King's Conſent, it is againſt the Statute; but I ſuppoſe that the Expreſſion in the Article was Advice to the King in Aid of his Government. Your Enacting Power is a kind of Omnipotency, but in a Declaratory Power you can declare no more than is committed to you, and with ſafety to the Subject you cannot declare this Treaſon; Then what muſt be our Rule in Declaring, I dare not ſay: For ſcarce any Man can tell what was Treaſon before 25 Ed. 3. was made to bring things to a Certainty, and what was uncertain to them who made that Law can be certain to us now. As the Judges can declare no other Treaſon, ſo in your Declaratory-power, Neither can you declare Treaſon unleſs there be Reſemblance to ſome other like Caſe: The Advice ſaid in the Article to be given the King, cannot be within that Statute, unleſs the Counſellor muſt run the hazard of his Advice.

Mr. Vaugh. The greateſt Declarations of Treaſons which ever were, equal not thoſe 22 Rich. 2. in Nottingham Caſtle: the Judges are called to deliver their Opinions upon their Faith, and they, declare the Acts to be Treaſon becauſe Felony before, and tho' ſome of them were Hang'd for it, yet the Parliament declared the ſame thing.

Serj. Mayn. Was, what is mentioned, Treaſon by the Common-Law, tho' ſo ſaid by the Lords? and what was ſo declared was repealed, H. 4.

Sir Tho. Littl. Pray reſolve whether it was Treaſon by Common-Law; and if ſo, when made ſo. Some think not, becauſe they find not the Parliament declaring them Treaſons, as being ſo at Common-Law, and that that Statute was made to bound them, but that was only to bound Inferior Courts, not themſelves; for the Parliament makes not a new Crime and then Condemns it, but the Crime was before, and the Parliament declares it.

Sir Ed. Thur. Hath the Parliament declaratory Power now? Yes, but it muſt be by King and Parliament, ſo it was in the Caſe of the Genoua Ambaſſador. The Judges would not conclude the Articles Treaſon, nor would the Lords alone; and if you come to an equal declarative Power with them you muſt examine Witneſſes, or go by a Bill.

Serj. Charl. The Queſtion is, Whether it be Treaſon by the Practice of England, the Common-Law is the Cuſtom of England, and the Uſage is grounded on Precedents, I know not one Precedent where Words or Intentions were Treaſon at Common at Law, for they are not Treaſon where no Act follows.

Sir Rich. Temp. The Article is Treaſon by Common-Law, and Judges have recourſe to Glanvil, &c. who ſay, that giving Advice to over throw the Realm is Treaſon by Common-Law.

Serj. Mayn. The Queſtion is whether he ſhall be Impeached of Treaſon upon this Article? If you go to Treaſon at Common-Law before 25 Ed. 3. you fly out of ſight, for the Word Seductio was ſoon after called Seditio, Seducing, but not ſaid to what; nor were thoſe Authors ever reputed of Authority: It's true they are ſometimes quoted for Ornament, but not Argument, and not one Caſe in one hundred of Glanvil is Law; but when a Caſe comes that is the Sheet-Anchor of Life, and Eſtate, you ſhould be wary; for by Wit and Oratory That may be made Treaſon which is not; and this which is a great Crime, ought not, becauſe great, to be made Treaſon.

Object. But it will be ſaid, levying War againſt the Law, is againſt the King, and here was an intent to alter the Law.

Anſw.

Anſw. True, yet a Deſign to levy War is not Treaſon within the Statute, here is nothing of Act, but Words to that end; If a Counſellor gives bad Advice, it makes it not Treaſon, but by a Bill it may be made what you pleaſe. By that Statute of 25 Ed. 3. are more Treaſons than are mentioned; for it ſaith if any Caſe happen, the Judges ſhall ſtay till the King and Parliament hath declared, ſo that there is a Power, but the Modus is the Queſtion, whether by Impeachment or Bill; you may the latter, not the former. It was done, but you have repealed it, and have ſaid None of which pretended Crimes are Treaſon; and what was pretend againſt him? That he had Traitorouſly Endeavoured (which is worſe than deſign'd) to alter the Government, &c. Now where is the Difference? Here is Advice to Raiſe an Army, there to uſe an Army Raiſed, and theſe you have called pretended Crimes, and no Treaſon, which is not Comprehended by a Law; but to Impeach as a Traitor, and yet the thing No Treaſon is ſtrange. In this Houſe, other than by Bill, you have no Power; you carry your Impeachment to the Lords, and they may give Judgment without coming back to you; declaring by Bill is by way of Judgment, but, as an Impeachment, is only an Accuſation: ſo that whatſoever the Conſequence is, the Lords judge it, and it never comes back to you, and if you go by Bill you make it Treaſon, ex poſt facto.

* of Strafford.

Mr. Vaug. Concerning what you have declared about Straffords, that this Caſe is, if not leſs, equal to it, and you have declared that not one Charge againſt him is Treaſon is true thus far, when that Act was made I repaired to it, becauſe there were ſome Things which ſhould not have paſſed ſo, if there had not been ſomething to ſecure ſuch Charges as theſe; for there is no expreſſion of any Particular Charge, but that the Charge againſt the Earl of Strafford was not in the particular, Treaſon; and in the Cloſe of the Bill, it is ſaid, that the whole Proceeding ſhall be taken away; and if ſo, no Man ſhould ſpeak againſt the Particulars, but look on it as Repealed.

Then this is ſaid to be levying War, and it's true, it muſt be Actual, and ſo not within the Charge. And the Charge againſt Spencer was for Counſelling the King, &c. and is called levying War againſt the Kingdom, and the Judgment againſt him was but Baniſhment; becauſe the Sentence was mitigated at the inſtance of the King.

And for Counſel, tho' Counſel is given but in Words, yet Words are more than Counſel, and are an Action, otherwiſe a Counſellor is Sworn to nothing.

But it may be thought I have not dealt ingenuouſly with the Houſe, than which I abhor nothing more; when the Caſe of Strafford was before the Lords, I was of Opinion the Parliament had no Declarative Power left, becauſe 1 Hen. 4. there was an aboliſhing of all declared Treaſon, and that no Treaſon, for the future, ſhould be ſo, and then the Treaſon about the Genoua Ambaſſador was gone, and all declared Treaſons were gone; 1 Hen. 4. and no Statute hath recovered them, and if all Actual Treaſons were taken away 1 Hen. 4. or if not then, 1 Ed 6. then what doth the firſt of Q. M. do, unleſs it take away all declaratory Treaſon?

Upon the whole, the Queſtion was, whether to accuſe of Treaſon upon the firſt Article.

Yeas, 103.
Noes, 172.

275.

November, 11.

The Second Article was Read.

Mr. Prynn. Let the Act made by you, about defending the King be Read, becauſe it limits Proſecution to a Time, to ſee if this be within Time.

Mr. Vaugh. In things wherein there is a publick Defaming the King, it becomes no Man here to defend the Perſon accuſed, if the Charge be not proved, let the Party himſelf plead it; you had that which induced you to Impeach him, and have declared not to Impeach of Treaſon upon the firſt Article: And if any Man will add to the reſt of the Articles he may, but you ought to accuſe.

Mr. Sollicitor. None accuſeth but for Juſtice ſake, and ſhould be glad if the Party accuſed prove himſelf Innocent. There is a Duty to the King, and to Truth, and it is not fit that an Article of this Kind, brought into the Houſe, ſhould be laid by, upon pretence that the time is elapſed; for the Crime is more than what is mentioned in the Act made by you; it is an Offence at Common-Law, and if it be proſecuted by Fine and Impriſonment, no Time is limited.

The Third and Fourth Articles Read, and Voted.

Mr. Vaugh. Your reading every Article is needleſs, unleſs it be to ſee whether any one may be Charged as Treaſon, for if One may be Objected againſt, ſo may all as to Miſdemeanours.

Fifth Article, Read.

Sir. John Shaw. The Old Farmers had not the Cuſtoms till others ſaid they would give no more, and they had no reaſon to thank the Chancellor, becauſe they gave more than others: And I declare upon my Life I know no reward given him.

Sir. Tho. Litt. It appears by the Farmers Confeſſion, that they had it 50000 l. under, beſides time of Payment which was 30000 l. more.

Mr. Seym. You are at liberty to receive Objections to the Articles, but tho' others bad more, they were told they ſhould not have it, and had about 1000 l. each given them to bid no more.

Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth Articles Read and Voted.

The Tenth.

Mr. Vaugh. This is an Article of an high Nature, Dunkirk was then as much a Part of His Majeſty's Dominions as Ireland, and if the Sale of it be nothing, I know not what you would think of it if England ſhould be Sold, you lately debated whether on the firſt Article he ſhould be accuſed of Treaſon, and found by the Statute of of 25 Ed. 3. he could not, tho' it was abſolute Treaſon at Common-Law, and it's reported abroad that I ſaid that the Right of the Parliament in declaring Treaſon is taken away, which I did not, for there are Treaſons not mentioned in that Statute. Therefore it provided that the Judges ſhould not upon any one Treaſon proceed to Judge, until declared before the King and Parliament, and what is ſignified by it? If we think before the King, Lords, and Commons, that is impoſſible; for how can the Commons poſſibly declare before the King and Lords? nor was that the Caſe, but this, that there is the ultimate Power of determining what the Law is in a doubtful Caſe. In Writs of Error let them paſs from Court to Court, at laſt they come to the Lords, 24 Ed. 3. If the Judges cannot reſolve what the Law is, it is to be brought thither, that is, where it is queſtionable, but that is not in the Houſe of Commons, any more than in a Writ of Error: How then is the Caſe here? If a Queſtion be whether a Thing is Treaſon or not, it ſhall be Reſolved where the Law uſeth to Reſolve, that is, before the King in Parliament, that is in the Lords Houſe. Had the Words of the Act been theſe, there ſhall be no Proceeding untill Reſolved by the King in the Lords Houſe, and Suppoſe that Clauſe taken away, That Treaſon ſhall not be Reſolved, but ſuppoſe it ſhall not be declared otherwiſe, doth it follow it is taken away? No, if you charge Treaſon which is not within the Statute, it is another Thing, but I ſaid not, there is no Treaſon at Common-Law.

Mr. Sollicitor, There was a great Miſchief in the declaring Treaſon by Parliaments; for Mortimer was made a Traitor for incroaching upon Royal Power, which every Man, who incroacheth upon any Power, doth. Hence the Commons Petition'd the King to explain what incroaching upon Royal Power was, and when no Anſwer could be gotten to it, 25 Ed. 3. They Petition'd it might be declared certainly, and ſo Treaſons were enumerated, and if the Judges be in doubt, it is provided that the King and Parliament ſhall firſt declare it.

Declaration in Parliament, is a Declaration before the King, Lords, and Commons. Would our Anceſtors leave what is to be Reſolved Treaſon to the Lords, and themſelves have no ſhare in it? And Talbots being declared Treaſon by the Lords, is ſaid to be no Treaſon by Judge Cook, becauſe the Commons had no hand in it, there is no Treaſon in Common Law, becauſe there can be no Treaſon, where there is no way to Judge it, which is not at Common-Law.

Mr. Vaugh. When the Law is made uncertain the Lords muſt declare it, it appears there were Treaſons at Common-Law not mention'd, 25 Ed. 3. It is one Thing for a Matter to be Treaſon before, and the Parliament declare it; another, for the Parliament to make a Thing Treaſon which was not.

Sir. William Lewis. I deſire to be Reſolved whether Dunkirk was annexed to England, becauſe a Bill to that end was carryed, but not Paſſed.

Mr. Waller. To ſhew that Dunkirk was annexed to England, conſider we were Paſſing a Bill for 1200000 l. But when we were making a Preamble to the Bill, we were to ſeek for Reaſons for giving the Money, ſeeing we had no War, ſome ſaid to keep Dunkirk, but we were told we ſhould take heed of looking upon it as annexed unto the Crown; but it was replyed, Dunkirk was look'd upon as a Frontier Town, and accordingly noted in the Bill. Therefore the Sale of it Treaſon.

Mr. Coventry. Had it been part of the Crown of England, what needed a Bill to make it ſo?

Mr. Prynn. It cannot be Treaſon, becauſe Sold by the King's Conſent.

Mr. Vaugh. If the King agreed to it, doth it follow that he, who adviſeth the King to a Thing deſtructive to his Kingdom and King, is not a Traitor? if any part of the King's Dominions may be alienated, eſpecially when a Parliament is Sitting, for they concuring, it may be alienated, by the ſame Reaſon the King may alienate Ireland or England too without the Parliament. For by what Act of Parliament doth the King hold Ireland or England? It is by Acquiſition; I ſay not Tangier, for that was part of his Portion, and is his own: But Dunkirk would have been the Kingdoms if not thus diſpoſed of, and tho' it might have been alienated with the Parliament, it could no more without, than England or Ireland.

Mr. Ed. Hartl. The Act of Parliament for annexing was not This Parliaments, but of the Convention, and came in thus; the King was pleaſed to tell me, that the Spaniſh Ambaſſador might preſs him to part with it, which he had no mind to do; therefore he would have a Bill to annex it to the Crown, which ſhews it was the King's Will to have it annexed, accordingly this Parliament paſſed it, and Dunkirk might have been as uſeful as Calice.

At length this Article was paſſed by, without determining whether Treaſon or not.

Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth and Fourteenth Articles Read and Voted.

Fifteenth Article Read.

Lord Vaugh. I brought in this Article, his betraying the King's Counſels was to the French King during the War, and that in the Secrecy of State, which was the occaſion of the late Miſchiefs.

Sir. Tho. Osb. That is direct adhering to the King's Enemies, and if ſo, it is Treaſon.

Mr. Sollicitor. This muſt be Treaſon if you have any inducement to believe it.

Sir Rob. How. I have heard it from an Eye Witneſs who told it me, and added that we are neither to be truſted nor dealt with, who were ſo betrayed.

Serjeant Mayn. Betraying the King's Counſel to his Enemies is, doubtleſs, Treaſon. Correſponding is another Thing. Betraying muſt be without the King's Knowledge, otherwiſe it is but delivering the King's Words to his Enemies.

Sir John Bramp. Did this Information come from a Subject, or from one of the King's Enemies?

Sir Rob. How. I would not have brought you Information from one of the King's Enemies, nor did I ever Converſe with them during the War.

Coll. Birch. We cannot accuſe of Treaſon, except it be ſaid, Betraying the King's Counſel, or Correſponding with his Enemies.

Mr. Vaugh. You have declared that you have had inducement to Impeach, and ought to put the Queſtion, whether on this Article he ſhall be Impeached of Treaſon.

Mr. Sollicitor. To betray the King's Counſel, taken generally, is not Treaſon, for it may be to the King's Friends; but to his Enemies it is, if the Article be ſo.

Lord Vaugh. Let it be put, Betraying His Majeſty's Secret Counſels to his Enemies during the War.

Then the Queſtion was put whether theſe New Words delivered by the ſaid Lord Vaugh. ſhould be added.

Carryed in the Affirmative.

Sir John Holl. Was this Information given by an Enemy or by a Subject?

Mr. Vaugh. It muſt come from a Foreigner, or you could not know it; may not the King have from a Foreigner a diſcovery of Treaſon againſt him? The end of queſtioning it muſt be to know the Man, for it might as well be asked whether his Beard be Red or Black.

Sir Thomas Meers. The Words are diſcovered not betrayed, and diſcovering may be with the King's Conſent.

Lord Vaugh. Add the Word Betraying, for ſo I meant it.

Serjeant Mayn. They who give the Information ſay not they had it from more than one Witneſs, which Stat. Ed 6. requires, and only one of them Names the Earl of Clarendon.

Mr. Seym. This Exception is proper to be made before the Judges.

Then the Queſtion was put.

Whether to Impeach of Treaſon on this Article.

Yeas, 161.

250.

Sir Tho. Litt. That an Impeachment of Treaſon and other Crimes and Miſdemeanours be carryed up to the Lords againſt him by Mr. Seym.

Serjeant Mayn. For Miſdemanour he may have Councel, not for Treaſon: Therefore ſo diſtinguiſh the Charge, that he may have Councel.

Reſolved, That a Charge be carryed up.

Reſolved, That the Speaker and the whole Houſe carry it.

Nov. 12. It being conſidered that if the Speaker go up with the Charge, ſome diſpute might ariſe about carrying the Mace and otherwiſe.

It was Reſolved, That Mr. Seym. carry it.

Accordingly he went, where at the Bar of the Lords Houſe, the Lord-Keeper Bridgman being come to the Bar to meet him, he delivered himſelf to this purpoſe.

My Lords,

THE Commons Aſſembled in Parliament, having been informed of ſeveral Traiterous Practices, and other high Crimes and Miſdemeanours committed by Edward Earl of Clarendon, a Member of this Honourable Houſe, have Commanded me to Impeach him, and I do accordingly Impeach him of High-Treaſon and other Crimes and Miſdemeanours in the Name of the ſaid Commons, and of all the Commons of England: And they have farther Commanded me to deſire your Lordſhips to Sequeſter him from Parliament, and to Commit him to ſafe Cuſtody, and in convenient time they will exhibit Articles againſt him.

Nov. 15. The Lords ſent down to deſire a Conference in the Painted Chamber.

At which the Earl of Oxford delivered a Paper in writing (without any Debate) the Contents whereof were to this effect.

The Lords have not Committed the Earl of Clarendon, becauſe the Accuſation is only of Treaſon in general, without charging any thing in particular.

Mr. Garraway. I had rather the Houſe ſhould loſe the Puniſhment of this Man, (tho' a great Offender) than that this Houſe ſhould loſe its Privilege: For if this Houſe may at no time Impeach a Lord without giving in particular Articles, it may fall out to be at a time (as in the Duke of B———s Caſe) where a great Man by his Intereſt with the King procured the Diſſolution of the Parliament, and then the Accuſation falls.

Mr. Vaugh. Either you can juſtifie your Proceedings, ſo as to ſatisfie the Lords what you have done, or you cannot; you muſt name a Committee as well to conſider what you are to do, if your Reaſons ſatisfie not, as to draw thoſe Reaſons.

Mr Sollicitor. Without doubt this Houſe was not miſtaken in demanding that the Party accuſed for Treaſon ſhould be committed, That is, that Treaſon is worthy of Commitment, and you can but find Precedents that Perſons have been accuſed of Treaſon, and thereupon have been committed: But the Caſe is this, Treaſon is an Offence, for which Bail cannot be taken; the Lords tell you not they will, or will not Commit; But it is true, Perſons have been Committed for Treaſon, and Perſons accuſed of Treaſon, Judges may Commit, or not.

Conſider this Law. Let the Crime be what it will, an Impriſoning till the Charge is given is but an Impriſoning to ſecurity, not to Puniſhment; otherwiſe the Law is not Juſt, and if the Judges of the King's-Bench have a Judgment of Diſcretion, whether to Commit or not; can we wonder that the Lords have not Impriſoned, till they know the Article, when they have Judgments of Diſcretion tho' they knew it? You may find Precedents, but it is not an Argument it muſt always be ſo: But as the Judges have a Latitude much more than the Lords, the Impeachment from the Commons of England is properly the King's Suit, for there is no Treaſon but againſt him, and if the Judges may Bail in that Caſe, may not the Lords? But you are not told he ſhall be Bailed, but they deſire to know what his Crime is, and then you ſhall know their Anſwer, the Reſolution ſeems reaſonable, having gone no farther, I cannot except againſt it.

Sir Thomas Litt. The Long-Parliament had ſome good Precedents which we are not to caſt away leaſt we ſmart for it.

Reſolved, To Reſume the Debate to Morrow.

Nov. 16. Mr. Vaugh. The Lords do not ſay Commitments ſhould follow becauſe Treaſon is Bailable by the King's-Bench: it's true, the King's-Bench Bails for Treaſons, but how? If Perſons be brought thither for Treaſon directly, there is no Bail, but when a Commitment is by the Council-Table for Suſpicion of Treaſon, then if the

the Matter fall not out to be what was expected, they give notice to take Bail; elſe the great Article of the Great Charter, Namely, that Juſtice ſhould not be delay'd, nor denied, would be to no purpoſe; and in ſuch a Caſe a Man may be in Priſon for ever. On the other ſide, what is the Caſe of Committing for Treaſon? When a Perſon is Committed by the Council-Table, they ſay, they do no more but by ſpecial Command of the King, and that is the ground of his Committing, and were not this ſo, what would follow? Intelligence would be given of a Treaſon diſcovered, wherein many might be concerned, and if they who Commit ſhould Commit with the Treaſon, all the Complices would eſcape; and therefore ſometime they make it Treaſon General. Then for the Caſe, before you have gone up with a Charge of Treaſon generally, which is to the Lords a Warrant ſufficient for Committment, ſay they, we will know the Particulars; then will not the ſame Inconveniencies follow, if other Perſons be concerned, and ſo the danger of all expoſed upon the Nicety.

If a Buſineſs comes before this Houſe, which concerns others, and may prove Treaſon, if we go to the Lords (for we have not Juriſdiction except in Caſe of our Privileges) but are not yet ready to bring up Particulars, and deſire the Lords to apprehend ſuch Perſons, would it be reaſonable for them to refuſe it, there being no Inconvenience like to follow the doing it, much the not doing it? I ſay not to commit them, and we not proſecute, for that is delay of Juſtice.

Qu. But why do the Lords refuſe?

Anſ. Tho' I have great reſpect to the Lords, yet to clear ſomething in point of Privilege, the Lords have the ſame Privilege with us in point of Speech, their Members, &c. as they are eſſential to paſs Laws; but that great Privilege which they often aſſume as Peers, is as the King is there preſent in the higheſt Court: How then will it fall out in reſpect of this Privilege? If the King be there, there be many things which the Lords as Peers cannot pretend to, for the King hath often ſate there not only in paſſing Bills, but in Judgment. Had this Charge then come before the King there, it had been reaſon if the King ſhould have ſaid, I deſire to know what this Treaſon is, we muſt then have told it, becauſe he, whom it concerned, required it; or if we deſired Commitment, he, who could Releaſe or Pardon him, might ſay, let him be Bailed. The Lords indeed retain this Privilege, but it is in the King's Right, not as Peers.

Now we have carryed a Charge, if the Lords Bail him, I know not what would follow, for no Example can be given of it, and I think they will not do it, if the King do not direct it.

On the other ſide, I would be glad we might be no more troubled, than is neceſſary, becauſe others are liſtening what we do, and think there is nothing in the Caſe: Therefore I am not for delay, but ſatisfying others that what we have done is not barely for Impriſoning the Earl of Clarendon, but for Juſtice; and if you go this way, give the Lords the Reaſons why we ſent the Charge as we did, and yet keep up their Privileges, and declare ſo to them.

But then we muſt go up with more than that Head, on which we Reſolved to Impeach of Treaſon, for your Article muſt be ſo formed as to make it a Charge fit to be Anſwer'd for Time and Place, and that Article hath ſomething of that which muſt be penned ſo as to make it more certain, for the Article goes but thus. That there was Diſcovery and Betraying of the King's Counſels to his Enemies, and if you leave it there, thoſe who ſcruple doing any Thing, becauſe particular Treaſon is not mentioned will ſay; you ſay he hath diſcovered and betrayed Counſels to Enemies, but as we truſt you not what is Treaſon, but we will know it; ſo we know not whom you mean by Enemies; for we may think them not ſo, therefore appoint a Committee to form Articles.

Mr. Sollicit. It is a great miſtake to ſay, That the Power of the King's-Bench to take Bail for Treaſon, is no other but what is aſſerted, as if the Judges there had only Power from Magna Charta; when a Man is Committed upon Suſpicion of Treaſon, and no Proſecution follows, and the Party bringing his Habeas Corpus, the Bench Bails him, becauſe he ſhould not lie there eternally. It is not to be ſaid the Judges Bail for Treaſon; ſeeing no Crime is produc'd: For when a Man hath been accuſed of Treaſon for Coining falſe Money and brought to the Bar, the Judges have Bailed him not becauſe they ought, but from that diſcretionary Power wherewith the Law truſts them, they may Bail if they will, for no other Judicature, but they, can Bail in that Caſe; for ſeeing Impriſonment before Tryal is only that the Priſoner may be forthcoming, if they ſee there is no danger of eſcaping they may take Bail, for he is a Priſoner when Bailed, and the Bail is his Keeper; but there are few Caſes of this kind, wherein they will Bail, they have a fundamental Power to do it, placed in them to preſerve the Rights of the Crown; and the Lords will not think themſelves leſs truſted with the Rights of the Crown than the King's-Bench. Yet tho' the Lords may Bail, they will not exerciſe their Diſcretion, when there is a probable Truth in the Impeachment; ſhall we then refuſe this Intimation from the Lords, who ſaying, Becauſe they have not a particular Article of Treaſon do not ſecure, ſeem to imply, that if they had, they would, tho' they might refuſe. The Right of Bailing comes not from an imaginary apprehenſion of the King's ſitting there, tho' ſome Kings have ſate there in Judicature, but from their Inherent Authority of being truſted with the Right of the Crown: Let us do then what becomes us, and not let the Impeachment miſcarry upon a miſunderſtanding, but draw up the Article. But how is it poſſible to draw it as an Article which you expect he ſhould be impriſoned upon? For your Impeachment is in the Nature of an Indictment, and muſt contain ſo much of Certainty as to put him to plead, that ſo he may not Demur.

How may it then be Circumſtantiated, ſo as that he may be put to plead; if you do it according to 25 Ed. 3. (for diſcovering the King's Secrets to his Enemies is within that Statute.) The firſt part of the Article is not pleadable, for we muſt ſhew how he adhered to the King's Enemies, and we muſt add what the Counſel was that he betrayed, elſe he will deny to plead, and ſay, I can avoid it: Therefore conſider what kind of certainty this Article muſt have to make him plead, for the other Articles, it's enough to ſay them without proving Time or Place, if the Facts were after the Act of Oblivion; but in Treaſon, the Matter muſt appear in the Indictment, for he hath liberty not only to plead not Guilty, but to avoid it: Therefore prepare the Article accordingly.

Mr. Vaugh. What is Moved is to put you upon an impoſſible Buſineſs, for an Article preſented from the Parliament needs not that Certainty, as if it were to be tryed at the King's-Bench.

Sir Thomas Litt. It is not for the Honour of this Houſe to recede ſo eaſily from ſuch a Privilege, for beſides, the Earl of Strafford's Caſe, we have expreſs Precedents for, but none againſt us. We have heard that we muſt have no more Impeachments, becauſe they are dangerous and tend to Rebellion. Conſider the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury's Caſe, Finch, Rateliff, and others in the Long Parliament, and we ſhould not ſo eaſily part with them. William Delapool being commonly reported to be no true Man, (which is a leſs Charge than Treaſon) deſired he might acquit himſelf, and the Lords required no ſpecial Matter before they impriſon'd him, and afterward he was accuſed more Specially.

Sir Rob. Atk. In the Caſe of Anſelm Arch-Biſhop of Cant. the Commons Accuſed him, but the Lords did not Commit him, and gave no other Reaſon for it, but that he was a great Man; and yet afterwards he was Condemned as a Traitor, tho' the King reduced his Puniſhment only to be Baniſhment. Tho' a Privilege is much ſpoken of, yet I ſhall never be fond of any Privilege which ſhall Intrench upon my Liberty as a Subject.

Mr. Vaugh. I hear it Objected, That as you Charge a Lord generally, ſo may the Lords a Commoner, but that cannot be; for the Lords cannot cauſe a Commoner to be committed tho' for Treaſon, without your conſent: Therefore put a Queſtion, whether a Committee ſhall be named to draw up Reaſons to juſtifie what you have done.

Reſolved, That the Queſtion ſhall be put.

Reſolved, That a Committee ſhall draw Reaſons.

November 18.

The Committe brought in their Reaſons.

Firſt, What can or ought to be done by either Houſe of Parliament is beſt known by the Cuſtoms and Proceedings of Parliament in former times; and it doth appear by Example, that by the Courſe of Parliaments the Lords have Committed ſuch Perſons, as have been generally Charged by the Houſe of Commons for High Treaſon, to ſafe Cuſtody, tho' the particular Treaſon hath not been ſpecified at the time of ſuch Charge.

Second, That a Commitment for High Treaſon in general, is a Legal Commitment, and if the Party ſo Committted bring his Habeas Corpus, and the Cauſe of his Commitment thereupon be retnrned for High Treaſon generally; he may lawfully be remanded to Priſon by the Judges upon that Return.

Third, If before ſecuring the Perſon, the ſpecial matter of the Treaſon ſhould be Alledged, it would be a ready courſe that all Complices in the Treaſon might make their Eſcape, or quicken the Execution of the Treaſon intended, to ſecure themſelves the better there.

Fourth, If the Houſe of Peers ſhould require the particular Treaſon to be Aſſigned before the Party Charged be ſecured, they leave the Commons uncertain and doubtful (and that from time to time) how particular they muſt make their Charge to their Lordſhips Satisfaction; before the Offenders be put under any Reſtraint.

Fifth, The Commons Conceive, that if they ſhould deſire the Lords to ſecure a Stranger, or Native Commoner, upon the Suſpicion of Treaſon, which the Commons had of him, and which was by them under Examination to be Evidenced to their Lordſhips in due time; their Lordſhips in Juſtice for the Safety of the King and People, would ſecure ſuch Perſon or Perſons, upon the deſire of the Commons, and in ſuch Caſe there would be no difference between a Lord and a Commoner ſo deſired to be ſecured.

Sixth, The Proceedings of Inferior Courts, between the King and the Subject, or Subject and Subject, and the Diſcretion of Judges in ſuch Courts is bounded and limited by the Diſcretion of the Parliament which truſt them; and 'tis not left to the Diſcretion of the Judges in ordinary Juriſdiction to give the King, or take from him inconvenient Power for the Subject, nor to diſpence the Law Partially between Subject and Subject for Malice or Affection; but the Diſcretion of the Parliament, which is the whole Publick, comprehending the King, Lords and Commons (for the King's Preſence is ſuppoſed to be in the Lords Houſe) is, and ought to be unconfin'd for the Safety and Preſervation of the whole, which is it ſelf.

It cannot be malicious to a part of it ſelf, nor affect more Power than already it hath, which is abſolute over it ſelf and part, and may therefore do for Preſervation of it ſelf whatſoever is not repugnant to natural Juſtice.

Mr. Prynn. I like not the firſt Reaſon, becauſe it cannot be called a Cuſtom, where only one Parliament hath done it.

Mr. Swinf. The great ſtrength lies upon this firſt Reaſon, and is like to be a Precedent; for exact Precedents I find none, except that of Michael Delapool, and in the Long Parliament: But conſider the reaſon why there was no expreſs Precedent before, and what was the Cuſtom of Parliaments before. The Parliament was wont to proceed formerly by Bill, and thus far that Proceeding makes againſt the Lords now, and for committing the Party accuſed; for then the Proceedings upon Treaſon were by Common-Law, and becauſe the Judges could not proceed, therefore the Parliament went by Bill, and it cannot be ſuppoſed that the Parties were at liberty all that while.

Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth Reaſons Voted, Sixth Read.

Mr. Solicit. I am againſt this Reaſon, not as a Reaſon, but unneceſſary; for if the former Reaſons ſatisfie not, this will not, becauſe it ſuppoſeth things not in queſtion.

Our Debate muſt at laſt end in this Queſtion, betwixt Privilege of Parliament and former Proceedings; And there being no Privilege in Caſe of Treaſon, Why ſhould not former Proceedings Sway? Except we call that Treaſon which is not, for otherwiſe no Privilege will help.

Therefore add this to your Reaſon, That there is no Privilege for Treaſon, and the Lords ought not to think that the Commons will call that Treaſon which is not, or if they do, the Lords may by a ſpeedy Trial determine it.

Reſolved,

Reſolved, That a Conference be deſired with the Lords, and the Reaſons carried up.

November 21.

The Lords ſent down to deſire a Conference about the Subject Matter of the laſt Conference. But the Commons doubting that if they ſhould conſent to it, the Lords might afterwards refuſe a Free Conference, becauſe the Buſineſs in diſpute concerns Judicature, which belongs to the Lords, and ſo the Impeachment generally falls.

Reſolved, To ſend an Anſwer by Meſſengers of their own, and accordingly did, with Order to acquaint the Lords how far they had proceeded, and they expected they ſhould rather have deſired a Free Conference.

November 23.

The Debate about the Freedom of Speech in Parliament was reſumed.

And the Report read of Proceeding about Sir John Elliot, Mr. Holles, &c. 5 Car. 1.

Mr. Solicit. If you are ſatisfied that the Judgment paſſed upon them was Illegal, two ways you have to be ſafe; By taking notice of that Judgment, giving your Opinion upon it, and carrying it up to the Lords, that Judgment will be utterly Damned, elſe you may proceed by Act, but conſider then the Conſequence: For if you go by Act, you bound the Liberty of Speech, unleſs in Penning it you prevent it, but an unknown Limitation is better than bounding, for an Act it ſelf is ſubject to Expoſition, but your Vote, and the Lords Concurrence is not.

Mr. Vaugh. It is not ſafe for you to circumſcribe Privileges, therefore that muſt be done which may take away what deſtroys them.

The Laws and Rights of this Kingdom are Rights by Common Law, or Act of Parliament; what is an Act of Parliament, may be Repealed by Parliament; what is Common Law may be altered by Parliament, and whatever is both, may be altered by a New Law; and how is it poſſible to do one or the other without Liberty to ſpeak about it? And how can there be any Inconvenience about Freedom of Speech, about any thing which cannot be a Law, without paſſing King, Lords, and Commons.

Then it being moved to put the Queſtion for confirming that Report.

And it being reply'd that ſome Paſſages in that Buſineſs, viz. about keeping the Speaker in the Chair were not warrantable, and ſo not to be joined in the Queſtion with the reſt.

Mr. Vaugh. That Buſineſs which is ſo much talked of, and condemned, I ſhall ſtate to you.

The Houſe is to adjourn it ſelf, tho' ſometimes the King adviſeth them to adjourn themſelves (as then he did) but the Adjournment is always made by a Queſtion, and without it the Speaker cannot leave the Chair.

The Speaker acquainting the Houſe then with the King's Meſſage, Sir John Elliot ſtood up to ſpeak, but the Speaker would not hear him, but was going to leave the Chair, whereupon ſome ſaid, if you go out without a Queſtion the Parliament is diſſolved, upon which he was leaving the Chair; ſome kept him, and told him, if this be a Houſe, you, as Speaker, have no Place in it but the Chair; and this was all the Irregularity in that Buſineſs ſo much talk'd of.

Reſolved, That the Judgment given againſt Sir John Elliot, &c. 5 Car. was an illegal Judgment, and againſt the Freedom and Privilege of Parliament.

The Lords ſent for a preſent Conference, after which Report was made that the Lords had Voted the Commons denying them a Conference lately, was contrary to the Courſe of Parliamentary Proceedings, and gave Reaſons why it was not yet time for a Free Conference.

November 25.

After Debate whereof, it was Reſolved to grant them that the Commons agreed to the Conference formerly deſired.

At which the Lords declared that they had conſider'd of the Precedents and Reaſons formerly ſent them by the Commons, but were not ſatisfied to ſecure the Earl of Clarendon, or to Sequeſter him from Parliament, until ſome ſpecial Treaſon be aſſigned.

November 28.

The Commons ſent to the Lords to deſire a Free Conference upon the Matter of the laſt Conference.

To which the Lords concurring, Mr. Vaug. Sir Rob. How. Sir Tho. Littl. and others were appointed to manage it, who went up immediately to that End.

Mr. Vaugh. Made Report of the Conference with the Lords yeſterday to the Purpoſe following.

The Lords told us, That no Precedent can be againſt the Law.

We Anſwer'd.

If that can be made good, we ſhall preſs Precedents no more: But what they moſt ſtood upon was the Petition of Right, where 'tis provided that none ſhall be Committed without ſpecial Cauſe, whereby the Party may Anſwer according to the Law, thence they infer that our Proceedings are againſt Law; becauſe a general Charge is againſt the Petition of Right.

Commons. The Caſe of the Petition of Right, rightly ſtated, will clear this, which was This: Some Perſons were committed by no other Warrant, but the King's ſpecial Command, they bring their Habeas Corpus to the King's-Bench to know the Cauſe: This Cauſe was returned by the Judges, that they could not Bail a Man, when ſo committed, becauſe they knew not the Cauſe, nor had any way to bring him to his Trial.

Then the Petition of Right, provides That the Cauſe ſhould be returned, whereby the Crime might appear, and that before and after the Petion of Right to this Day, if upon bringing a Habeas Corpus, it be returned that the Party is impriſoned for Treaſon, the Judges ought to Remand, unleſs there be ſome ſpecial Cauſe to make them take Bail. So that the Petition of Right was againſt them, for they ſay, a Man ought not to be Impriſoned upon a general Charge, becauſe 'tis againſt the Petition of Right: We ſay it is not againſt the Petition of Right, becauſe the Judge may Remand the Party, if there be not ſpecial Cauſe.

Then

Then the Lords ſaid, That the Reaſon why the Judges Remanded in that Caſe was, becauſe the Party Committed knew it was for Treaſon: Therefore they Re-committed.

We owned it, becauſe it was the Rule for the Judges to proceed by, but that was no Rule for Proceeding of Parliament; for as a Magiſtrate commits for Treaſon, and is ſuppoſed to be acquainted with it; ſo alſo is he with the Probability upon the Proof: But the Lords inſiſt not now upon that, but ſpecifie Treaſon, and if the Courſe of Parliaments ſo much varied in ſuch Caſes, that was no concluding Proof, why they ſhould have ſpecial Treaſon. And for the other part,

That upon the Return, there ſhould be a Cauſe Returned, that ſo the Party might Anſwer; for when a Return is made, if the Cauſe be ſuch as that the Party ought not to be Impriſoned, the Judges free him; otherwiſe they leave him to come to his Tryal.

Then to the Precedent about the Earl of Strafford, they Replyed, That it was made in bad times. And we Anſwered, That as good Laws were made before, in, and afrer that Time as any other; and if the Lords then might make ſuch Laws, we could not ſee, why it ſhould be a good time to make Laws, and no good time to Adminiſter to Perſons the Laws already made.

Farther, to their Objection, that in the time whence thoſe Precedents were brought, there was a Face of War. We Anſwered, That could not alter the Caſe, for the Law calls no Time a Time of War, whilſt the Courts of Juſtice have Freedom, as they had when Strafford, Finch, Canterbury and Ratcliff were Impeached: And it was ſtrange that in the Parliament-Houſe there ſhould be ſuch a Conſternation as to make their Proceedings invalid, when in other Courts there were none: Beſides, in Holland for many Years there was a conſtant Scene of War, and can we imagine that there was not Juſtice done at that time.

Then they preſſed Precedents againſt ours, One 14 Ed. 2. againſt the Spencers, where a great Man moved the King to Commit one of them, and the King anſwered, it could not be unleſs Cauſe was ſhewed. We Replyed, This was a Precedent like that, a Man was Committed, becauſe he was Committed; for there was no Allegation of Treaſon.

Second Precedent was 38 Hen. 8. againſt Lord Stanhope, the Commons moved the King to Impriſon him, and the King Anſwered, he would conſider of it. We Anſwered, That was no Denial, but a thing uſual with the King, and that Motion was to the King himſelf, which differs from this Caſe, for that was not alledged to be Treaſon: Beſides, had it been Treaſon, it was againſt the King himſelf, and being an Offence againſt himſelf, he might (if he would) not Impriſon, becauſe he may diſcharge a Man, or pardon him, tho' for Treaſon; but this Caſe is not ſo, becauſe the Lords Juſtice is but miniſtred to the King.

21 R. 2. Arundell Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, who as they ſaid was Impeached of Treaſon, but not Committed.

Anſwer. The Caſe was this. There was a Commiſſion iſſued out by Ric. 2. That that Biſhop and others ſhould regulate what was amiſs by evil Government, and the King was offended at the granting of it, and at Nottingham ſent for the Judges, and charged them upon their Allegiance to give true Anſwer to what Queſtions he ſhould ask them, and the firſt Queſtion was, Whether that Commiſſion ſo granted, was not invading his Prerogative? They Anſwered, Yes. Then he asked how they ought to be puniſhed, who procured it? They Anſwered, as Traitors. In the 21 the Biſhop is charged by the Commons, and the Treaſon alledged is, That he had procured himſelf to be put into the Commiſſion.

This being the Caſe, we ſaid, that if a Fact be called Treaſon, which afterwards appears to be none, there could be no Commitment. For if a Man call another Man's coming into his Ground Treaſon, it falls of it ſelf; therefore the Biſhop was not Committed.

The Lords ſaid farther, That all thoſe Articles were declared to be Treaſon, which before could not poſſibly be Treaſon to Commit a Man, becauſe the Nature of them muſt be Treaſon at Common-Law, and till theſe Treaſons were declared, which was not till 21 Ed. 3. they were not Treaſon ſo as to Impriſon, or Try any Man for them.

We Reply'd, All that Parliament was Repealed, yet the Precedent was the more authentick. But I think that Lord (it was the Earl of Bridgwater) underſtood not what he ſaid, at leaſt I did not.

Then about the Earl of Strafford's Precedent, the Lords ſaid, that the very Impeachment was taken away by the Act of this Parliament, becauſe the Impeachment is recited in it. Namely, Whereas the Earl of Strafford was Impeached, &c. But every Clauſe in that Act of Attainder is taken away now, therefore the Impeachment; and you cannot make uſe of any part of it.

We Replyed, It's true, the Act of Attainder is taken away, but the very Act of Repeal doth recite that very Clauſe (whereas Thomas Earl of Strafford was Impeached, &c.) and the Act cannot take away any thing which ſtrengthens its own Suppoſition.

Then the Lords ſaid, that they ſhould be willing to comply with the Commons, but that they muſt be tender of their own Judicial Proceedings.

Commons. It's true they ought, and we ſuppoſed that the Lords might be jealous that we ſhould Intrench on their Power; but the Commons were ſo far from that, that they thought the Judicial Power better lodg'd with them than in the Commons themſelves could be; but we would open the Objection.

Their Lordſhips being the Judges in this Caſe might think, that for the Commons to take upon them to know what was Treaſon, would be an aſſuming to themſelves what was only proper to the Lords, and that it was ſo now in Charging the Earl of Clarendon generally.

Lords. The Objection is right.

Commons. For our knowing Treaſon, we have many among us who are Juſtices of Peace, truſted by Law to know and Commit (and if the Parliament be not Sitting) even to Commit a Peer himſelf for Treaſon, and the knowing what is

Treaſon

Treaſon is ſo far from being improper to the Houſe of Commons, that every Man in the Nation is bound to know it; for was it ever known, that Ignorance of the Law could ever excuſe a Man from breaking the Law? Laws are made to be known by Subjects, eſpecially thoſe which concern the King; and unleſs they could find a Reaſon, why the Parliament Embodyed ſhould be more ignorant than particular Perſons, the preſent Caſe muſt be clear. That the Jealouſy of the Lords aroſe from a Fallacy thus, The Lords have Judicial Power concerning Treaſon, and muſt of neceſſity know it; the Commons have no Judicial Power over it, therefore cannot know it; that is, becauſe the Commons know what Law is, therefore they have Judicial Power over Law. To this was not any thing Replyed.

Farther, We ſaid that becauſe they inſiſted upon to ſpecifie Treaſon, becauſe by Commiting upon a general, they might wrong the Party by Committing him without Cauſe, and becauſe they themſelves were not inform'd in their Conſciences what they did: They would do well to conſider the many Inconveniencies which might follow, if the Charge of Treaſon was not general, but particular; and ſuppoſe it was Special, their Lordſhips would know no more by it. For ſuppoſe a Man Impeached for Counterfeiting the Great Seal, which is expreſs Treaſon, and he may be Impeached for it, yet neither their Lordſhips nor the Party could have any advantage by that Specification, becauſe there might be as many Queſtions what is Counterfeiting the Great Seal, or what is Treaſon.

For Inſtance. One Leak, a Clerk in Chancery, intending to Forge a Patent, puts together two pieces of Parchment, and had fitted them, and put them together with Mouth-Glew, that they appeared as one: Then a Grant was written upon the outmoſt, and a Seal affix'd, ſo that the Great Seal is put to a true Thing; then he cuts off the Edges of the Parchment, ſo as to ſever them, takes of the written One, and leaves the Seal on the Blank, then Forgeth the Grant and makes uſe of it. This was queſtioned before the Judges, whether 'twas Treaſon or not, that is, whether Counterfeiting the Great Seal or not? If it were, it was Treaſon, otherwiſe not. They Reſolved, it was not Counterfeiting the Great Seal, and ſo not, but Miſpriſon. And if it had been Treaſon, they Reſolved, that an Indictment had been enough to Impeach him. Then ſuppoſe you have ſuch an Impeachment before you for Counterfeiting the Great Seal, you have Special Treaſon, and Impriſon him; but when it is brought to Queſtion, it appears not to be Treaſon, therefore he is wrong Impriſoned: And if your Lordſhips will examine what Knowledge you have of this Fact, you have no more than if it had been a general Treaſon.

Lords. There is a Caſe put there, as we are content to take a Special Treaſon, but expect not the Proof as there it was.

Commons. If it were a Caſe put, ſo is your Lordſhips Reply, for it was put ex Conceſſo, becauſe you agreed that if the Treaſon was Special, the Party was to be Committed, and this Caſe was to ſhew their Lordſhips, they were in no better Caſe then, than if the Treaſon were general.

But the Lords ſtill preſſing that the Impeachment it ſelf of the Earl of Strafford was Repealed in the Act about him.

Commons. We Reply'd one part of the Act ought to be ſevered from the other, and that which is without Exception ſhall ſtand, tho' the other be taken away: For, ſuppoſe a Man proſecutes in a Court of Juſtice, for what he apprehends to be his Right, and yet the Cauſe goes againſt him, and he hath no effect of his Suit, afterward the Party (being an evil minded Man, and thinking to reach his Ends) Forgeth a Deed, or Suborns Witneſſes, and then begins a Suit in ſome other Court, and by thoſe ways attains his Ends. Then a Bill comes before this Parliament to Reverſe the Judgment, reciting that ſuch a Perſon hath been a Suborner of Witneſſes, &c. ſo, and ſo, and therefore the Judgment is made void; certainly tho' this Perſon is Named to be an evil-minded Perſon, yet this lays no blemiſh on his firſt Proceedings. So that it appears by the Act, that the Proceedings againſt the Earl of Strafford were legal at firſt, if thoſe afterwards, when the times became tumultuous, were not, it is not to be applied to what was well done and legal: Then we told them that we had preſſed them with four Precedents, and to three of them nothing was Replied.

Lords. They Anſwered, the Reaſon why my Lord Finch was Committed, was becauſe of his Flight.

Commons. He was fled before the Impeachment; but it was Ordered, That he ſhould be Committed when found.

Then we told them, That we muſt Report to them, that be the Treaſon what it would, we could not go to the Lords to have it puniſhed without that Diſadvantage, which the publiſhing the Treaſon before-hand would expoſe us to by making of Witneſſes, eſcaping of Parties, and the like; then bad them conſider, whether if we ſhould lay before them a Treaſon in every Thing circumſtanced as Gun-Powder-Treaſon, they would not Impriſon the Party till the whole Matter was opened.

Lords. They Anſwered to hear that Caſe put, for in Matter of State, other Courſes are to be taken, and they could ſee no Inconveniency in Publiſhing that to the Lords, which muſt be publiſhed before 400 in the Houſe of Commons.

Commons. The Commons may proceed with what Secrecy or Openeſs they pleaſe, and the Lords are not to take Notice of their Proceedings, whether open or ſecret.

Farther, That by a Matter of State muſt be underſtood, when a Parliament is not Sitting, and we know not whither to reſort, but when a Parliament is particularly called to prevent the Miſchiefs threatning the Kingdom, if that be not capable of Remedying, no other Council could, or we are not bound to reſort to that, we are excluded from that to which we ought to reſort.

Lords. That the Lords bad us take heed of the Liberty of the Subjects, to which they are now fain to have Regard, bidding us conſider the Biſhop of Canterbury's long Impriſonment, without knowing the Cauſe, and they muſt ſatisfie their Conſciences, leſt they ſhould Commit for Treaſon, and it not prov'd ſo.

Commons.

Commons. It appears not that the Biſhop of Canterbury ſhould have lain leſs time, had the Impeachment been Special; and for the Liberty of the Subject, we know not how a Subject ſhould have more Liberty by Special Matter, than General; Special being but adding a formal Title, and the Subject goes to Priſon, as well for the one as the other.

For their Conſciences. Suppoſe a Perſon accus'd generally, they are then to know whether it be Treaſon, and is not it as much that they Commit an innocent Perſon? So as if the Matter was Special.

December 2.

The Lords ſent down a Meſſage to the Commons by two Judges, to this Effect, That upon the Report made to them of the laſt Free Conference, they are not ſatisfied to Commit or Sequeſter from Parliament the Earl of Clarendon without the particular Treaſon be mentioned or aſſigned; who being withdrawn.

Lord Torring. (General M——cks Son) Moved not to part with any Privileges of the Commons of England, but adhere to the General Impeachment.

Sir Rob. How. The Matter before us, is of as great Concernment as ever came before us, if there ſhould be Malice ſuppoſed in a Nation againſt it ſelf; it might be exerciſed by giving a particular Charge, as well as a general, many of the Lords are convinced by the Reaſons we gave, and concur, thinking our Precedents good, and have enter'd their Proteſtation in the Lords Houſe, aſſerting the Rights of the Commons of England to Impeach generally: So that (excepting the Spiritual Lords) I think I may ſay the Major part of the Lords are for us; and ſhould we give up this, we may be wreſted out of all Right, and the Commons have no way to proceed to an Impeachment, but ſome Men to be ſo great, as not to be fairly reach'd. Therefore adhere.

Mr. Wall. The Lords are a Noble Eſtate, but whatever the Matter is, they have of late ſome Advice given them, which makes them proceed as they never did yet; for ſcarce any Thing happens betwixt us, but they incroach upon us. The Militia is now as burthenſom to the Fifty Pound Man in the Country, almoſt as all other Taxes, and the Lords have gotten this Advantage of us, that they touch not the Burthen of it with their Finger: So in time of the Plague, the Commons muſt be ſhut up, but not They, inſomuch that a good Act provided to that Purpoſe paſſed not; we Impeach'd the Lord Mordant, and could not bring him to the Bar (tho' formerly I have known an Earl and a Lord brought thither) you deſired a free Conference about it, but could not obtain one to this Day. Rome was at firſt modeſt, and only medled with Spirituals, but afterwards concerned themſelves ſo much with other Matters, That every Thing almoſt was made to be in Ordine ad Spiritualia, and many Kingdoms thereupon break from them. The Lords now inſiſt upon one Thing, becauſe they ſay 'tis in order to their Judicature, perhaps hereafter they will tell us we muſt come to them on our Knees, becauſe it is in order to their Judgment. Conſider therefore whether there be any hope of giving them Satisfaction; then, whether you will adhere, and what you will do afterwards; for the preſent my Motion is to adhere.

Mr. Vaugh. It is truly ſaid, the Buſineſs before you ſeems to be as great as hath been in Parliament; many of the Conſequences being inviſible, therefore before you Reſolve what to do take the whole Matter before you.

The difference between the Lords and us, is upon a general Impeachment of Treaſon; the Lords after a Free Conference, ſay, they will not Commit unleſs Special Treaſon be mentioned or aſſign'd, thoſe whom you employed to Manage the Conference were very unwilling to differ with them, but it ſeems it hath produced nothing, and I have nothing to make me believe, but that the Reaſon is, that the Lords were Reſolved (ſay what we would) not to be ſatisfied; for I know nothing which they Offer'd, but it was fully Anſwer'd, nor any thing left undone to ſatisfie them if they would have been ſatisfied; what I have to ſay now is to clear ſomething which the Lords may make much ſound of.

When we urged Precedents, and made them our principal Reaſon, we told them, the way to decide what was in Difference betwixt the Houſes, is, the Uſage of Parliaments; but to our Precedents we received no full Anſwer.

Then the Lords uſed this Reaſon, Namely, that they cared not for Precedents, becauſe it was againſt the expreſs Law of the Land.

I Anſwer'd them, we would join with them, if they could ſhew Law againſt it, and expected what they would Anſwer, but heard nothing: Much Diſcourſe there was, without Application, of the Great Charter, and of a Statute of 28 Ed. 3. but not applied; ſo that I thought Law in a Lord's Mouth, was like a Sword in a Lady's Hand, the Sword might be there, but when it comes to cut, it would be awkward and uſeleſs.

But I hear ſince, that their Meaning was this (which muſt be cleared by mentioning ſome Laws) that by Magna Charta, it is provided, That no Man ſhall be taken or Impriſoned, or Condemned, but by the Law; and thence they infer, That no Man may be Impriſoned, but it muſt be by his Peers, or by the Law of the Land.

Again, 5 Ed. 3. No Woman ſhall be attached upon Accuſation, or be adjudged of Life or Limb, but according to the Law.

25 Ed. 3. No Man ſhall be taken by a Petition to the King or his Council, unleſs by Indictment of lawful People, or by Proceſs of Writ at Common Law, and (ſay they) this Caſe is to none of theſe.

28 Ed. 3. No Man ſhall be Impriſoned without due Proceſs according to the Old Law of the Land: But this Caſe being neither by Preſentment nor Indictment, the Lords would not ſtand upon our Precedents, but relied on this, as if it were enough in Bar of all our Precedents.

Therefore to open this, and the Danger of the Conſequence, there are in the Land many different Laws, and Proceedings in theſe Laws, and Impriſonment upon them; and yet not one of them by Preſentment, Indictment, or Tryal by Peers, tho' the Lords thought this was the Law and there was no other.

1. It is known that the Crown-Law, or Prerogative, is diſtinct Law from that between Party and Party.

2. There

2. There is the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament, called a Law, ab omnibus quærenda, a multis ignorata, & a paucis Cognita.

3. Then the Canon-Law, (and it is much the Biſhops forgot that) and there is nothing in that Law, more than ſtanding in a White Sheet, which proceeds not by Indictment or Preſentment, yet there is Impriſonment even in that Law.

4. There is the Law of Admiralty, and the Articles of Oleron, where there is Proceedings of another Nature, and by Impriſonment.

5. The Law of Merchants, or of the Staple.

6. The Law of Arms, where is Impriſonment and Death, and yet different Proceedings from the Common-Law in the Great Charter: Now no Man thinks that all thoſe Courſes of Proceedings are taken away by the Common Law, and it is groſs Ignorance to think it.

7. The Law of the Forreſt, which is moſt different: So that to urge Magna Charta to this Purpoſe, as if all Proceedings in thoſe Caſes muſt be according to the Common-Law, is abſurd.

Then there are divers Writs in the Regiſter.

One, When a Man hath received the King's Money to ſerve him, and went not, then there is a Writ to Arreſt him upon a Certificate from the Captain under whom he was to ſerve.

Then the ordinary Writ, which belongs to the Law Eccleſiaſtick, de Excommunicato Capiendo.

Another, de Apoſtata Capiendo, to recover a Regular run away from his Convent.

Another, called ne exeat Regno, to Impriſon a Man, who will not give Security not to go out of the Kingdom, and this is not Traverſable any where, becauſe it ſuggeſts that he will Machinat ſomewhat hurtful to the Kingdom, and upon that Suggeſtion he is Impriſoned.

Another, when a Man hath a Leproſie.

Another, to burn Hereticks, which concern'd the Biſhops alſo, if they had pleas'd to think of it.

Theſe Proceedings are no way agreeable to thoſe mentioned in the Common-Law.

Then conſider how this Reſolution of the Lords ſtrikes at the Law of Parliaments.

1. It is certain that all Impriſonment by Parliament is not by Preſentment, Indictment, &c. So that by this means that Power is taken away.

2. Contempt againſt Parliamentary Authority, whoſoever he is to appear before them, and diſobeys them, they may Impriſon him in the Tower, and yet it is not againſt Magna Charta.

Whither therefore tends this?

The Concluſion muſt be, that no Impeachment by the Commons muſt go on, unleſs it be by Preſentment, and ſo there is an end of all that, for which the Parliament is principally called, unleſs we are part of thoſe 500 contemptible Ones, who are only fit to give Money: That may be reſerved for us, but nothing elſe; tho' 23 Ed. 3. ſaith, For Redreſs of Grievances in the Kingdom a Parliament ſhall be called every Year. I would know which Way we ſhould redreſs Abuſes, if we are ſo far from remedying in Parliament, that we muſt be ſhut out to the Common Courſes in other Courts?

Obj. The Lords may ſay, if you find the Statutes broken, and ſhort, you ſhall have New.

Anſw. And when theſe New Ones are broken, then we ſhall have a Remedy; ſo riſe up Remedy, and go to the Remedy, ad infinitum, for there is no more Reaſon to think that a Second Law ſhall be maintained more than the Firſt, and what Way a Miſchief ſhall be redreſſed, other than by Parliament, I know not.

So that by this Reſolution of the Lords, and denying to Commit upon this Ground (for they ſhew'd no other) every Thing for which a Parliament is uſeful is denied us.

After all this come to the very Caſe.

If a Treaſon be Committed, and the Fame is that A. B. is guilty of it, it is lawful to Apprehend him for it. If a Hue and Cry purſue a Man, tho' he be not of evil Fame, yet he may lawfully be Impriſoned: If it proves falſe, he hath his Remedy; but that obſtructs not the Law to bring him to Trial. Any Watchman may Arreſt a Night-walker, and hath a Warrant in Law for it, and this is as good Proceſs in Law, as any original Writ.

And after all this, Conſider with what kind of Colour, when there are weighty Reaſons why we ſhould not mention ſpecial Treaſon, and that mentioning it generally, anſwers the Petition of Right, the whole Commons of England (who are in no degree repreſented by the Lords, they only repreſent their own Perſons) ſhould be denied the Securing a Perſon Impeached unleſs a particular Charge be given, how prejudicial ſoever to the Kingdom.

Another thing, there is no Right which a Man hath in this Land, or any part of the World, but his Right is ſuch, that if it be kept from him, he hath a Means to come to it, otherways it is Damnum ſine Injuriâ; for where the Law gives no Remedy, there is but a Suppoſition of Right: By the ſame Meaſure it will follow, that there is no civil Wrong can be done to any Man, but the Law provides a Remedy, if that wrong be done; and if by the Law there is no Remedy, it is no Wrong, conſider then this Caſe.

There are in this Kingdom in the Civil State of it, three Eſtates, which the King hath then in making Laws: There are three Eſtates, whereof the King is Principal; ſometimes they are mention'd as the King's three Eſtates, and he none of them: The Eſtates in general are, the Commons of the Kingdom, (who are perfectly repreſented in this Houſe) the Lords another, and the King another; and theſe are ſuch, that there is no Petitory Action, nor the Laws directed to any one of them, but the Laws you make, are to diſtribute Juſtice in other Courts.

For Inſtance, If all the Commons of England (who are one of the Eſtates) ſhould Accuſe one of themſelves, the Party can have no Wrong, becauſe the Parliament can have no Action brought againſt them, nor can they be ſuppoſed to do any thing for Malice.

It is the ſame between the Body of the Lords and Commons; and there is no Law either to Vindicate the one or the other; but they ſtand as if there were no communicable Law betwixt them; but the Meaſure between them is that which is good for the whole; for they are the Makers of Laws for others, but no Laws can be fancied to reach the whole of the Commons, or of the Lords.

So that 'tis eaſily to be ſeen, how it hath been put upon us; ſo that now we are in ſuch a Caſe, we know not to what End we ſhall proceed upon this or any other Impeachment; for by this Judicial Power, you ſhall be excluded from any Proceedings by Laws of Parliaments, and ſo you take away the whole Right of the Kingdom.

Queſt. But now what ſhall you do?

Anſw. I ſee many Inconveniencies which may happen both ways, but I ſee ſo many this way, that if any Man gave ſuch Counſel as is charged upon the Earl of Clarendon, it is not ſo dangerous as the Caſe before you; for the Inconveniencies attending that Counſel would quickly ſhew it ſelf by the Miſery following: But this is a ſmall thing begun with, which, like a Canker, may eat till it be uncurable, and that is as abſolutely juſtifiable as this.

And now I have ſaid this, I am perplexed what to ſay more, for all can bear me witneſs, what Reſpect I have endeavoured to preſerve to the Houſe of Peers, but I am ſo ſenſible of this, that tho' I cannot forget my Reſpect to them, yet I muſt lament the Condition into which they have brought themſelves firſt, and us next, for they cannot think to avoid it.

The Houſe of Peers is but a new Stile, called ſo, as Jurors are called Peers, from the Word Par; for every Commoner hath his Peers as Lords have; and the whole Stile formerly was Arch-Biſhops, Biſhops, Dukes, &c. But Pares Regni is a new Stile. It is called the Upper Houſe, and is to be look't upon with Reverence. The Lords have a Juriſdiction; but in this Caſe, I muſt be plain, their granted Juriſdiction ariſeth from the Houſe of Commons, if you Impeach not there your Judicial Power will be very little. If a Lord be to be Tried for Treaſon, the Lords are but his Jurors; and tho' they Try him upon Honour, not upon Oath, yet they are no more his Tryers, than as out of Parliament: The Judge of Treaſon in the Lords Houſe, is Conſtituted by the King, as a Lord High Steward, and is no other Judge, therefore I know not the Judicature they ſpeak ſo much of.

There is another for Writs of Error, which are there determined, but the Juriſdiction of that is very little, for the Inconveniency of the Lords determining what could not be determined in other Courts, is ſo found out 25 Eliz. They are to be brought firſt into the Exchequer-Chamber.

There is another Way when Perſons carry Complaints to the Lords, which is a Queſtion, for Commoners ought not to carry Complaints there, except in ſome Caſes from Chancery; therefore this matter of Juriſdiction, which they talk of, is not ſuch a wonderful thing as they would make it.

Therefore whatever we ſhall do after it, your Rights being ſo much concerned, that you know not where the ſtay will be, it is neceſſary that you make a Committee to draw up a Proteſtation to be made by this Houſe concerning this Matter, The Invaſion of your Right in it, and the Danger to the Kingdom by it.

Mr. Colem. The Lords ſay, That committing upon a general Impeachment is againſt Law, and I think it will appear ſo; I deny not, but a Mittimus without ſpecial Cauſe is legal, and grounded upon the Petition of Right, the Reaſon of which is to ſecure Men againſt Commitment by a ſpecial Warrant, and a Judge ought not to diſcharge where Treaſon is alledged, but in this Caſe it is different; The Judges cannot diſcharge a Man Committed after Examination, but the Lords ought not to Commit a Man, except there be particular Treaſon.

If I come before a Juſtice of Peace, and ſay, I accuſe this Man of Treaſon, will any wiſe Man Commit him? he makes his Warrant indeed, but he that accuſeth muſt go farther and make it more particular, and the ſpecial Matter muſt appear before he Commits, and this is the preſent Caſe.

The Common-Law is, That no Man ought to be Committed without particular Cauſe; becauſe no Man can Commit in Capital Matters, without taking Examination before-hand, otherwiſe no Man can juſtifie a Commitment: Therefore I am not ſatisfied that the Lords had not reaſon to deny. The Commons are in the Nature of a Grand Jury to preſent, but the Lords are the Judges; Commitment is not the Judgment but in order to it, and the Lords have a diſcretionary Power in the Caſe: The Lords ſay not that they will not Commit, but that they are not ſatisfied to do it without ſpecial Matter, therefore we ought to ſend it up.

Sir Rob. How. I have attended the Reaſons given againſt making a Proteſtation, and whatever is ſaid, is but levelling a Houſe of Commons with every private Accuſer; a Juſtice of Peace (it is ſaid) muſt have Evidence before he Commit, and this Houſe has had Inducements to Impeach, and may not a Houſe of Commons Judge what is Treaſon as well as a Juſtice of Peace?

The Inconveniencies and Dangers laid before you, if you proceed, are nothing in compariſon of thoſe on the other ſide.

Had the Lords Impriſoned, they had before this had the particular Charge, and the Proteſtation is not to ſtop it, but to make way for it ſome other way; for it will reſolve into a Remonſtrance, by which you may give the Nation an Account of your Proceedings to come to a Trial of this Buſineſs.

Mr. Vaugh. By the Proteſtation ſpoken of, is meant to preſerve the Rights of this Houſe upon the whole Matter, and to give the Reaſons of your Proceedings.

Sir Tho. Meers. What is ſaid, not being explained; I know not what is meant by the Proteſtation, if it be but to enter it into our Books, I am not againſt it; if it be an Appeal to the Nation, pray conſider what you do.

Mr. Vaugh. This way of Proteſtation differs from entring in our Books, but the beſt way is to draw it up, and to bring it to you, and then any Man may take Exceptions againſt it; for the meaning is, that this Houſe claims its Rights.

Mr. Garraw. Firſt make your Proteſtation, and then Appeal to the King.

Mr. Vaugh. None can ſurmize that you mean an Appeal to the People by what is moved, for what is done, muſt be done to ſome part of the Parliament; the King, Lords, or your ſelves: And they who ſpeak of it (if it were done with evil intent) deſerve to be called to the Bar; when when it is brought before you for your Approbation, you may either retain, or reject it.

Sir Walt. Young. I desire that the House may know before hand to whom they are to Remonstrate, and on what ground, and therefore to Adjourn their Debate now.

Mr. Trev. What Appeal you make ought to be to the King, but bring it in hither and give it what Name you please.

Sir Rob. Atk. As I would be tender of your Privileges, so, of giving Offence to the Lords, therefore we shall endeavour to be Unanimous in this House; a Protestation is Named, I am a stranger to it, and would understand clearly what it is before we do it; That it is a Course warranted by Precedents and Proceedings of Parliaments, considering what effect it hath had in late times, therefore we may do well to adjourn the Debate and Consider of it.

Sir Tho. Lit. This Protestation will be like that in the Lord Maynard's Case, but somewhat longer, and ought to go no farther than to one of the Estates, and be kept within the Walls.

Mr. Swinf. You sent up a Charge to the Lords in general, desiring that the Earl of Clarendon should be secured, and in convenient time you would send up Articles; from that time it hath not been done, and the Lords have passed several Votes about it since, but you have not passed one.

First they Voted, that they had not complied with your Desires for want of particular Treason; Then you give them Reasons, they are not satisfied with them; then a Free Conference, they are still unsatisfied; and all this while you have not come to any Resolution: So that till you come to a Vote, no Man knows but that you are satisfied with their Answer; for when the Matter of the Protestation is brought in, we shall not be ready for it till we have resolved, that what the Lords Insist on, is an Obstruction of Justice, and you cannot agree with them without great Inconvenience to the Nation; Therefore put a Question, That the Lords, not having agreed to Secure the Earl of Clarendon upon the general Impeachment, have obstructed the Publick Justice of the Kingdom in Proceedings of Parliament, and is of dangerous Consequence: This is necessary, because the Lords have heard nothing from you, but endeavour to satisfie them.

Sir John Good. This Question will be a greater Accusation of the whole House of Lords, than the other is of the Earl of Clarendon. If you will go by way of Protestation, and keep it within your own Walls, I like it better than this Question.

Sir Rob. How. The putting this Question is no Charge upon the House of Lords; and therefore if that Gentleman thinks it so great an one, sure he thinks the Charge against the Earl of Clarendon to be a very small one. Is there any Obstruction to Justice? If not, Why do we not Comply? If there be, we cannot it seems complain without Charging the Lords. Keeping it within your own Walls, is but like a Man, when he is alone, muttering Arguments to himself, and Commending himself for it. If you meet with any Obstructions, pray first put the Question, whether you are obstructed.

Sir Rob. Atk. It is no light matter to Charge the Lords with Obstructing Justice; therefore the thing being new, pray adjourn it till to morrow, that we may be more of one Mind.

Then the Question was stated, Namely,

That the Lords not having complied with the desire of the Commons in Committing the Earl of Clarendon, and Sequestring him from Parliament upon the Impeachment from this House, is an Obstruction to the publick Justice of the Kingdom, and is a Precedent of evil and dangerous Consequence.

Resolved, That the Question be put,

And being put, Resolved in the Affirmative.

Resolved, That a Committee be appointed to draw up a Declaration to Vindicate the Proceedings of this House.

December 3.

A Message from the Lords by two Judges, That they have received a large Petition from the Earl of Clarendon, which Intimates that he is withdrawn.

Sir Tho. Tompk. Moved to take care to get the Sea-ports stopt.

Sir Tho. Lit. I believe he is now past stopping, but we should do it, tho' it have no effect; lest it look as tho' we would have him escape.

Sir Rob. How. The Lords seem now mistaken in their Opinion at the Conference, they said there was no fear of his Running away; and in our House it hath been Jested that he was not like to Ride Post. Besides the Expression in the Message is (withdrawn) which may be an inward Chamber, therefore 'tis fit to desire to see the Petition, and Command some Members to prepare something to Vindicate your selves in discharge of your Duty.

Mr. Seym. You cannot take Notice to the Lords of the Petition, unless they think good to Communicate it to you, but make the Declaration.

Mr. Vaugh. I look upon what the Lords say as doubtful, therefore beware lest you do something misbecoming you. They only say, that he is withdrawn, but not what is his Petition; for the saying that he is withdrawn, is not the Matter of a Petition. Perhaps he is gone into the Country, the Message seems light, and you are to take no notice of it. If it be of Moment, and they think us Concern'd, they should let us know it; and I cannot think so of the Lords, that they would use that word, if he were fled: therefore send a Message, to know whether fled or withdrawn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When a Delinquent signifies to his Judges, that he is withdrawn, it cannot signifie any thing, but that he is withdrawn from their Judgment. None but a mad Man will tell them that he is fled, fearing what may follow; it would be well if their Care would prevent his flying, but you cannot Answer it, if you hear they do nothing, and so seem to say, fare him well.

Upon all which Motions, Ordered,

That Sir Tho. Clifford. (Comptroller of the King's Houshold) be sent to the King, to desire the Ports may be stopped.

December 4.

The Lord Fitzharding makes Report from the King, that the Meſſage for ſtopping the Ports being delivered him, he had taken Care accordingly.

A Meſſage from the Lords to deſire a ſpeedy Conference:

From which Mr. Solicitor Reports.

We attended the Lords at the Conference, which was deliver'd by the Duke of Buck. who ſaid to this Purpoſe,

That the Lords had Commanded him to deliver to us that Scandalous and Seditious Paper ſent from the Earl of Clarendon, deſiring us to preſent it to you; and to deſire you in convenient time to ſend it to them again, for it had a Stile which they were in love with, and deſired to keep it.

Which ſaid Paper was read, and is as follows, viz.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament Aſſembled, the humble Petition and Addreſs of Edward Earl of Clarendon.

May it pleaſe Your Lordſhips,

I Cannot expreſs the unſupportable Trouble and Grief of Mind, I ſuſtain under the Apprehenſion of being Miſrepreſented to Your Lordſhips, and when I hear how much of your Lordſhips time hath been ſpent upon the mention of me, as it is attended with more Publick Conſequences, and of the Differences of Opinion which have already, or may probably ariſe between Your Lordſhips and the Honourable Houſe of Commons; whereby the great and weighty Affairs of the Kingdom may be obſtructed in the time of ſo general a Diſſatisfaction.

I am very unfortunate to find my ſelf to ſuffer ſo much under two very diſadvantagious Reflections, which are in no degree applicable to me.

The Firſt from the Greatneſs of my Eſtate and Fortune, collected and made in ſo few Years, which if it be proportionable to what is Reported, may very reaſonably cauſe my Integrity to be ſuſpected.

The Second, That I have been the ſole Manager and chief Miniſter in all the Tranſactions of State ſince the King's Return into England, to Auguſt laſt, and therefore that all Miſcarriages and Misfortunes ought to be imputed to me and my Counſels.

Concerning my Eſtate, Your Lordſhips will not believe, that after Malice and Envy hath been ſo inquiſitive and ſo ſharp ſighted, I will offer any thing to Your Lordſhips, but what is exactly true; and I do aſſure Your Lordſhips in the firſt place, That (excepting from the King's Bounty) I have never received nor taken one Penny but what was generally underſtood to be the juſt lawful Perquiſites of my Office, by the conſtant Practice of the beſt Times, which I did in my own Judgment conceive to be that of my Lord Coventry, and my Lord Elſmore; the Practice of which I conſtantly obſerved, altho' the Office in both their Times was lawfully worth double to what it was to me, and I believe now is.

That all the Courteſies and Favours which I have been able to obtain from the King for other Perſons in Church or State, or in Weſtminſter-Hall, have never been worth me Five Pounds: So that Your Lordſhips may be confident I am as innocent from Corruption as from any diſloyal Thought, which after near Thirty Years Service of the Crown, in ſome Difficulties and Diſtreſſes, I did never expect would be objected to me in my Age.

And I do aſſure Your Lordſhips, and ſhall make it very manifeſt, That the ſeveral Sums of Money, and ſome Parcels of Land, which His Majeſty hath Bountifully beſtowed upon me ſince his Return into England, are worth more than all I have amounts unto; ſo far I am from advancing my Eſtate by indirect Means. And tho' this Bounty of his hath very far exceeded my Merit, or my Expectation, yet ſome others have been as fortunate at leaſt in the ſame Bounty who had as ſmall Pretences to it, and have no great Reaſon to envy my Condition.

Concerning the other Imputation of the Credit and Power of being Chiefeſt Miniſter, and ſo cauſing all to be done that I had a mind to; I have no more to ſay, than that I had the good Fortune to ſerve a Maſter of a very great Judgment and Underſtanding, and be always join'd with Perſons of great Ability and Experience, without whoſe Advice and Concurrence, never any thing hath been done.

Before his Majeſty's coming into England, he was conſtantly attended by the then Marqueſs of Ormond, the late Lord Culpeper, and Mr. Secretary Nicholas, who were equally truſted with my ſelf, and without whoſe Joint Advice and Concurrence, when they were all preſent (as ſome of them always were) I never gave any Counſel. As ſoon as it pleaſed God to bring his Majeſty into England, he Eſtabliſhed his Privy Council, and ſhortly, out of them he choſe a Number of Honourable Perſons of great Reputation, (who for the moſt part are ſtill alive) as a Committee for Foreign Affairs, and Conſideration of ſuch things as in the Nature of them required much Secrecy, and with theſe Perſons he vouchſafed to join me: And I am confident this Committee never tranſacted any thing of Moment (his Majeſty being always preſent) without preſenting the ſame firſt to the Council-Board; and I muſt appeal to them concerning my Carriage, and whether we were not all of one Mind, in Matters of Importance.

For more than two Years I never knew any Differences in the Councils, or that there were any Complaints in the Kingdom, which I wholly impute to his Majeſty's great Wiſdom, and the intire Concurrence of his Counſellors, without the Vanity of aſſuming any thing to my ſelf; and therefore I hope I ſhall not be ſingly Charged with any thing that hath ſince fallen out amiſs. But from the time Mr. Secretary Nicholas was removed from his Place, there were great Alterations; and whoſoever knew any thing of the Court and Councils, know well how much my Credit hath ſince that time been diminiſhed, tho' his Majeſty graciouſly vouchſafed ſtill to hear my Advice in moſt of his Affairs: Nor hath there been, from that time to this, above one or two Perſons brought to the Council, or preferr'd to any conſiderable Office in the Court who have been of my intimate Acquaintance, or ſuſpected to have any Kindneſs for me; and moſt of them, moſt Notoriouſly known to have been very long my Enemies, and of different Judgment and Principles from me, both in Church and State, and have taken all Opportunities to leſſen my Credit with the King, and with all other Perſons, by Miſ-repreſenting and Miſ-reporting all that I ſaid or did, and perſuading Men I have done them ſome Prejudice with his Majeſty, or croſſed them in ſome of their Pretenſions. Tho' his Majeſty's Goodneſs and Juſtice was ſuch, that it made little Impreſſion upon him.

In my humble Opinion, the great Misfortunes of the Kingdom have proceeded from the War, to which it is notoriously known that I was always most averse, and may without Vanity say, I did not only foresee, but declare the Mischiefs we should run into, by entring into a War, before any Alliances made with the Neighbouring Princes. And that it may not be imputed to his Majesty's want of Care, or the Negligence of his Counsellors, that no such Alliances were entred into, I must take the boldness to say, his Majesty left nothing unattempted in order thereunto; and knowing very well, that France resolved to begin a War upon Spain, as soon as his Catholick Majesty should depart this World, which being much sooner expected by them, they had in the two Winters before been at great Charges in providing plentiful Magazines of all Provisions upon the Frontiers, that they might be ready for the War, his Majesty used all possible means to prepare and dispose the Spaniard with that Apprehension, offering his Friendship to that Degree, as might be for the Benefit and Security of both Crowns.

But Spain flattering it self, That France would not break with them, at least, that they would not give them any Cause by administring Matter of Jealousy to them, never made any real Approach towards a Friendship with his Majesty, but, both by their Embassadors here, and to his Majesty's Embassador at Madrid, always persisted, as Preliminaries, upon the giving up of Dunkirk, Tangier, and Jamaica.

Tho' France had an Embassador here, to whom a a Project of a Treaty was offered, and the Lord Hollis, his Majesty's Embassador at Paris, used all Endeavours to pursue and prosecute the said Treaty, yet it was quickly discerned, That the principal Design of France was to draw his Majesty into such a nearer Alliance as might advance their Design; without which, they had no mind to enter into the Treaty proposed.

And this was the State of Affairs when the War was entred into with the Dutch, from which time, neither Crown much considered the making any Alliance with England.

As I did from my Soul abhor the entring into this War, so I presumed never to give any Advice or Counsel for the way of managing it, but by opposing many Propositions, which seemed to the late Lord Treasurer and my self to be unreasonable, as the Payment of the Seamen by Tickets, and many other Particulars which added to the Expence.

My Enemies took all Occasions to enveigh against me, and making their Friendship with others out of the Council, of more licentious Principles, and who knew well enough how much I disliked and complained of the Liberty they took to themselves of Reviling all Councils and Counsellors, and turning all things Serious and Sacred into Ridicule. They took all ways imaginable to render me ungrateful to all sorts of Men, (whom I shall be compelled to name in my Defence) persuading those that miscarried in any of their Designs, that it was the Chancellor's doing; whereof, I never knew any thing. However, they could not withdraw the King's Favour from me, who was still pleased to use my Service with others, nor was there ever any thing done but with the joint Advice of at least the Major part of those who were consulted with. And as his Majesty commanded my Service in the late Treaties, so I never gave the least Advice in private, nor wrote one Letter to any one Person in either of those Negotiations but upon the Advice of the Council, and also after it was read in Council, or at least by the King himself, and some other; and if I prepared any Instructions or Memorials, it was by the King's Command, and the Request of the Secretaries who desired my Assistance; nor was it any Wish of my own, that any Embassador should give me any Account of the Transactions, but to the Secretaries, to whom I was always ready to advise; nor am I conscious to my self of ever having given Advice that hath proved mischievous or inconvenient to his Majesty; and I have been so far from being the sole Manager of Affairs, that I have not in the whole last Year been above twice with his Majesty in any Room alone, and very seldom in the two or three Years preceding.

And since the Parliament at Oxford, it hath been very visible, that my Credit hath been very little, and that very few things have been hearkned to, which have been proposed by me, but contradicted, eo nomine, because proposed by me.

I most humbly beseech Your Lordships to remember the Office and Trust I had for seven Years, in which, in Discharge of my Duty I was obliged to stop and obstruct many Mens Pretences, and refused to set the Seal to many Pardons and other Grants, which would have been profitable to those who procured them, and many whereof, upon my Representation to his Majesty, were for ever stopt, which naturally have raised many Enemies to me: And my frequent concurring, upon the Desires of the late Lord Treasurer, (with whom I had the Honour to have a long and vast Friendship to his Death) in representing several Excesses and Exorbitances, the yearly Issue so far exceeding the Revenues, provoked many Persons concerned, of great Power and Credit, to do me all the ill Offices they could. And yet I may faithfully say, That I never medled with any part of the Revenue or the Administration of it, but when I was desired by the late Lord Treasurer to give him my Assistance and Advice, having had the Honour formerly to serve the Crown as Chancellor of the Exchequer, which was for the most part in his Majesty's Presence. Nor have I ever been in the least Degree concerned, in point of Profit, in letting any Part of his Majesty's Revenue; nor have ever Treated or Debated it, but in his Majesty's Presence, in which my Opinion concurr'd alway, with the Major part of the Counsellors who were present.

All which, upon Examination, will be made manifest to Your Lordships, how much soever my Integrity is blasted by the Malice of those who I am confident do not believe themselves. Nor have I in my Life, upon all the Treaties, or otherwise, received the value of One Shilling from all the Kings or Princes in the World, (excepting the Books of the Louvre Print sent me by the Chancellor of France, by that King's Direction) but from my own Master, to whose intire Service, and the Good and Welfare of my Country, no Man's Heart was ever more devoted.

This being my present Condition; I do most humbly beseech Your Lordships to entertain a favourable Opinion of me, and to believe me to be Innocent from those foul Aspersions, until the contrary shall be proved; which I am sure can never be by any Man worthy to be believed: And since the Distempers of the Times, and the Difference between the Two Houses in the present Debate, with the Power and Malice of my Enemies, who gave out that I should prevail with his Majesty to Prorogue or Dissolve this Parliament in Displeasure, and threaten to expose me to the Rage and Fury of the People, may make me to be look'd upon as the Cause which obstructs the King's Service, and Unity and Peace of the Kingdom.

I most humbly beseech Your Lordships, that I may not forfeit Your Lordships Favour and Protection, by Withdrawing my self from so powerful a Persecution, in hope that I may be able, by such Withdrawing, hereafter to to appear and make my Defence, when his Majesty's Justice (to which I shall always submit) may not be Obstructed, or Controlled, by the Power and Malice of those who have sworn my Destruction.

CLARENDON.

Mr. Vaugh. I think it not convenient to loſe more time about this Paper, ſince the time of the Earl of Clarendon's Name being mention'd here, I had nothing to Charge him with till now, but moſt of the Heads of this Charge are ſo weighty, that I am confident, they will be eaſily and thoroughly proved, tho' I know not how; ſo that I admire at his Confidence, to Charge this Houſe, and ſo the Nation, as his Perſecutors, and that in ſuch a Condition, as he hopes to vindicate himſelf. Its the firſt time that ever I heard an Innocent Man run away under the greateſt Charge, with hopes to return again and vindicate himſelf.

Then mark one Expreſſion, he ſaith, he is as far from Corruption, as from Diſloyalty. If he ſaid he was guilty of neither, he had ſaid ſomething; but by that Expreſſion he may be guilty of both: So inſolent a Paper I never met with in this Kingdom, nor have I ever read the like in any other; ſo inconſiderable a part of the Nation as he is, to lay it upon the Nation, who, if innocent, might defend himſelf; if Guilty, why doth he Charge the Nation with perſecuting? Therefore without troubling your ſelves with it, do, as the Lords have done; who deliver it to you as a Scandalous and Seditious Paper; it hath Malice in it, and is the greateſt Reproach upon the King, and the whole Nation that ever was given by Man. Therefore put the Queſtion whether his Paper ſhall not have the Character, that it is a Scandalous and Malicious Paper, and a Reproach to the Juſtice of the Nation.

Reſolved upon the Queſtion.

That the Paper ſent to the Lords by the Earl of Clarendon, and by them ſent down to the Houſe of Commons, and now read, is Scandalous and Seditious, and doth Reproach the King and the Publick Juſtice of the Nation.

Sir Rob. How. You have voted this Paper Scandalous, and therefore it ſhould not live, wherefore I move it ſhould be burnt by the Hangman.

Mr. Garraw. The Paper is the Lords, and you muſt ſend it to them, but enter it into your Books, and your Vote upon it.

Reſolved, To have it burnt.

Sir Rob. Car. The Paper is the Lords, therefore move them to concur that it may be burnt.

Sir Rob. How. The meaning of my Motion is, becauſe the Duke of B——ks deſired the Paper again for the admirableneſs of the Stile, it is entered into their Books already, and they need it not to that End; therefore deſire the Lords Concurrence to burn it.

Reſolved, To ſend it to the Lords to that End.

December 5.

A Motion being made to ſend to the Lords in purſuance of the Vote about burning the Paper.

Mr. Vaugh. I am againſt ſending up to the Lords to that purpoſe, becauſe you have Ordered to enter the Paper into your Books, and when a Paper is burnt, it is not to ſtand upon Record, but ſhould be raſed out; which two Things are a perfect Contradiction, therefore let it reſt as it is; We have Voted it Scandalous, &c. The Lords tell us not that they have done any ſuch thing, tho' they ought to have done it firſt.

As for the Earl of Clarendon, he being now gone, if ſuch a like Occaſion ſhould fall out, we are in a worſe Condition than we were; for there is this Precedent againſt us, in a Caſe now manifeſt: And it becomes us to do ſomething in order to the Lords Concurring, that ſo a good Underſtanding may be got; therefore I ſhall propound this to you, to be ſent up to them to that End.

Namely, when any Subject ſhall be Impeached by the Commons before the Lords in Parliament with deſire to ſecure him, ſuch Perſon by the Law of the Land ought to be ſecured accordingly. This you have in effect Voted already, in ſaying the Juſtice of the Kingdom is obſtructed by their not doing it.

Secondly, when ſuch Impeached Perſons ſhall be ſecured, the Lords may limit a certain Time for bringing in the Charge, to prevent delay of Juſtice.

This may ſalve all, and prevent ſuch Ways as may be diſpleaſing to the Lords, and perhaps us alſo, in ſome Caſes hereafter.

Mr. Swin. I am perſuaded that according to Rules of Parliament, when you Charge by Impeachment generally, and promiſe in due time to ſend up your Charge, they ought to ſecure, but they not having done it, I queſtion whether you could do what you have; but the Earl of Clarendon flying, it is manifeſt Juſtice was obſtructed; for he might have been brought to his Trial, if the Lords had ſecured him; but now your Vote is made good, which ſeems to lay the Advantage on your ſide.

Sir Rob. How. I think this Meſſage to the Lords, will deſtroy the way of vindicating our ſelves by Declaration; therefore finiſh the Declaration, and then Reſolve before you publiſh it, whether to ſend up this Meſſage.

Mr. Vaugh. If the Lords agree with us, we may ſpare the Declaration, but if they agree not now, they will much leſs hereafter: Your Declaration can amount to no more but this, make a Narrative of the Invalidity of the Lords Precedents; but then you muſt of neceſſity do ſomething more, elſe your Labour is in vain; therefore this Meſſage with theſe Votes are neceſſary.

Sir Rich. Temp. I expected that when the Earl of Clarendon had been fled, the Lords would have deſired the King to iſſue out a Proclamation to Apprehend him, ſeeing they have been the Occaſion of his Eſcape; therefore now deſire their Concurrence to go to the King to that End, and if they Concur, they have upon the Matter granted Commitment upon a general Impeachment.

Mr. Vaugh. I thought it my Duty to offer you what I have done, if you like it not, I deſire to be excuſed in ſerving you in the Declaration, and that they who think it neceſſary would be pleaſed to take the Pains to do it.

Sir Tho. Lee. If you declare, it will beget an Anſwer, and where will that end? If you ſend up your Votes, and the Lords agree, your End is Anſwered; for it is a yielding that which they they have yet denyed; your declaring, and entring it upon the Journal, will be to no purpoſe. It is but like a Man, who having been beaten publickly, in the Chamber calls him who did it Rogue.

Mr. Hampd. I deſire that the Words (Law of the Land) may be left out, and the Words (Law of Parliament, or, Uſage of Parliament) put inſtead of them; for it hath been ſhewed us, that there are ſeveral ways of Impeachment beſides Common-Law.

Mr. Vaugh. Thoſe words were purpoſely put in, becauſe at the free Conference, when we preſſed the Law of Parliaments, the Lords preſſed the Law of the Land by way of Negative, as if the Law of the Land were otherwiſe, but rather than that ſhall be any obſtruction, put it by Law.

Mr. Stew. Leave out the Words (by Law) for if a Man be ſecured, it is Impiyed by them who do Commit that it is according to Law.

Then it being Moved to draw both Votes in one.

Sir Tho. Litt. Tho' you ſhould put both Votes into one, it will not Anſwer your end, for the Lords will not Concur with the firſt Part, and yet may make uſe of what Part you grant of it, that is the laſt, and ſo have advantage againſt you; but there is another Reaſon, why you ſhould forbear theſe Votes, Namely, Prudence.

The Earl of Clarendon being gone, there is an expectation that a Bill ſhould be prepared to do ſomething farther, wherein I hope both Houſes will join; if you ſend up this, you will give diſturbance to that Bill, and if you ſhould enter this in your Books, in Order to ſend it up hereafter, they will hear of it, as done to make them ſwallow their former Reſolves. Therefore defer it for the preſent.

Mr. Trev. Conſider whether the Matter betwixt you and the Lords is not well as it is: You have Voted, That when a Man is generally Impeached, he ought to be ſecured, and that the Lords not having done it, is an obſtruction to Juſtice; and what will it ſignifie to carry it to the Lords; what hath ſince fal'n out, juſtifies you, and lays the diſadvantage upon the Lords. The World expects now what you will do farther, and that muſt be by Concurring with the Lords.

Sir Tho. Cliff. We all agree to theſe Votes, in Order to juſtifie your Rights; but what is the uſe of it? You have already done it in your Books, and you cannot expect the Lords ſhould go ſo much againſt their own Votes, this therefore will but widen the Gap, it being telling them they muſt eat their Words.

Sir Tho. Litt. Thoſe, who have had a hand in the Charge againſt the Earl of Clarendon, have been thought ſometimes too Violent, ſometimes too Remiſs, as not able to make out the Charge: But what I ſpeak now, is for your Honour, which will be wrong'd in this Proceeding; I am for bringing the Impeachment to ſomething; and therefore againſt theſe Votes: Now you make a Declaration of your own Rights, and entring it upon your Books, that not only the Vote may appear, but the Ground of it, but not to declare to the Lords, which will beget an Anſwer and exaſperate. It is now unſeaſonable to make the Lords retract, therefore lay it aſide; for tho' I am confident that Gentleman did it to no ſuch end, yet if I would Deſign any Thing to the Earl of Clarendon's Advantage, I could not take a better way than this.

Mr. Vaugh. This is but the affirming all which hath been done already, and I am for none of thoſe, who are contriving for any Thing out of the Houſe.

Sir Will. Covent. This Queſtion is not now ſeaſonable, tho' it is a better expedient than the Declaration as Things now ſtand, and conſidering what hath paſt, I am apt to think the Lords may do it of their own accord, and you would not willingly have a Negative to your Votes. Therefore ſeeing your Votes may be of uſe hereafter, put no Queſtion at all, but adjourn the Debate to a proper Seaſon.

Mr. Vaugh. I am againſt the Adjourning of it, and have given Teſtimony, that I have done nothing to be thought to do that which is ſo much for the Advantage of the Earl of Clarendon, and ſhall take heed of doing any Thing hereafter to be ſo reflected on.

Sir Tho. Litt. I hope I avoided any ſuch Reflection, nor ſpeak any Thing to ſuch purpoſe, I do not believe, nor ever did think any ſuch Thing, and hope that Gentleman himſelf belives, that no Man in this Houſe hath more Honour for him than I.

Sir Job Charle. Let the World ſee that you do not intend to reſtrain your Proceedings to the Earl of Clarendon, but make it a general Care; and therefore are concerned in Honour to put the Queſtion.

Reſolved upon the Queſtion.

That the Queſtion be put.

Reſolved, That both the Queſtions propounded by Mr. Vaugh. and put ſingly in the Affirmative, be carryed up to the Lords.

December 13.

A Bill was brought from the Lords, to Baniſh the Earl of Clarendon, and read.

After reading, ſeveral Objections being made, and it being Alledged, that it was an abuſe put upon the Commons by the Lords, and that a Bill of Attainder being propounded, after ſome Debate, the Houſe paſs'd this Vote.

Reſolved, That this Houſe taking notice of the Flight of the Earl of Clarendon, being under an Impeachment of High Treaſon by this Houſe; the King's Majeſty be humbly deſired to Iſſue out his Proclamation for Summoning the ſaid Earl to appear by a Day, and to apprehend him in Order to his Trial.

Reſolved, To ſend to the Lords for their Concurrence to this Vote.

December 14.

A Meſſage from the Lords for a Conference, at which they deliver'd two Reaſons, why they could not Concur.

1. Firſt, for that they conceive a Proclamation in the way propoſed, would be ineffectual, ſince it is not ſub pœna Convictionis, which cannot be till particulars in Order to Trial be declared.

2. That

2. That what the House of Commons hath propoſed, and do propoſe at preſent, is intended in Order to a judicial way of Proceeding; but ſince the Earl of Clarendon's Flight, their Lordſhips upon Conſideration of the whole State of Affairs, and of the Kingdom, have upon Grounds of Prudence and Juſtice, thought fit, for ſecuring of King and Kingdom, to proceed in a Legiſlative way againſt the ſaid Earl, and have to that end, paſt and ſent down to them a Bill of Baniſhment and Incapacity againſt him, with which this Vote is inconſiſtent.

December 16.

The ſaid Reaſons from the Lords being Reported and Conſidered, and it being Moved that the Houſe would declare themſelves unſatisfied with them.

Sir Tho. Cliff. I am againſt paſſing a Vote at preſent upon the Lords Reaſons, but read the Bill ſent down from thence, and Summons him by it to appear by a Day.

Mr. Trev. Some are againſt the Bill, becauſe it goes too far, Condemning before Hearing, others would have it to go farther. Summons is in Order to Hearing, Trial, and Judgment; of thoſe he hath made himſelf incapable by Flight, and hath in his Paper told you, That he will neither be heard, nor Tried by you: Tho' you expected to have him ſecured by a general Accuſation, yet you never expected Judgment upon it. Then it is ſaid, This Baniſhment falls ſhort of Treaſon, but we are not to paſs Sentence for Crimes, but as a Council propound to the King what is neceſſary in this Caſe: Then conſider whether this Bill will Anſwer our Ends, and if it doth, delay will make it worſe. I think we ſhould make it reach them, what if he hath Life in other Parts, his Family Untainted, and his Children alive, and enjoy his Eſtate.

Sir Rob. Carr. You have Ordered to conſider the Reaſons from the Lords, therefore do it.

Mr. Hen. Covent. The Motion to read the Bill is not againſt your Order, becauſe part of the Reaſons given by the Lords is, That you have a Bill, and till you have read the Bill, you cannot lay by the Reaſons. The Earl of Clarendon is fled, you have a tye upon him in having his Innocent Relations, and by Proceeding farther, you make him deſperate, you are now in an even way with the Lords; therefore read the Bill.

Mr. Swinf. You may go upon the Reaſons, and yet not reject the Bill; for when you ſent to the Lords about a Proclamation, and went not upon the Bill, it was, becauſe what the Bill drives at, is the higheſt Puniſhment next to Death. Therefore Conſider what weight is in the Reaſons. One of them ſeeming to put you upon the Bill, they put you thereupon on a Legiſlative Way; they will neither Secure nor Summon him, but will Condemn him Unheard. They cannot Secure him upon a Charge of Treaſon, nor yet Summon him, but they can Condemn him; and this they put you upon, which is againſt Honour and Juſtice, eſpecially to do it upon Reaſon of State. The Legiſlative Power of Parliaments is great, it hath no bound, but the Integrity and Juſtice of Parliaments. If Reaſon of State be a Motive of Parliament to Baniſh one Man, ſo it may be for many. If you go in this Legiſlative Way, you bring upon your ſelves all the Diſhonour of the Buſineſs, but the Lords will have ſome Excuſe, which you cannot, for they look'd upon the Charge ſo ſlight, as not to Impriſon him, the Party is gone, becauſe he was not Secured, apprehending (he ſaith) fear of the Multitude, not of his Trial, ſo that the Lords not giving Credit to your Charge againſt him, he ſays, he flies not from Juſtice. Now, if upon this Bill you ſhall Baniſh him, it would be ſaid you could not make good the Charge; and therefore laid this Sentence upon him.

The Precedent is alſo dangerous: If having gone ſo far in a Judicial Way, you ſhould now go in a Legiſlative. If upon Reaſon of State, Lords may be Baniſhed, it may be by dozens: As you proceed Juſtly, ſo you will be Juſtified.

Nor is the Danger greater if the Lords go by Proclamation, and he be put into Cuſtody when he comes, if he can practiſe any Thing, will not he be leſs capable when under the Proclamation, than when this Bill is Paſſed, which Condemns him without Hearing, and I am not for any Puniſhment till Heard. In Cromwell's Caſe, who Moved in Hen. VIII. time, to Attaint a Lord Unheard, the Judges declared they might, and it would ſtand, afterward the ſaid Cromwell was Attainted and Condemned Unheard, and ſuch Counſel uſually falls upon thoſe that Counſell'd it.

Sir Rob. How. The Earl of Clarendon ſaith, That he doth not withdraw from your Juſtice, but fear of Tumults; but that Reaſon any Man may give for his flying, if it will be an Excuſe; but he might have ſecured himſelf from Tumults by rendring himſelf, and his Innocency upon his Trial would have cleared him. This at laſt may come to a free Conference, then you may be left to go along with the King; the Houſe riſeth and doth nothing, and then the World will ſee that this Buſineſs will aſſure the King of France, That he hath a Man with him ſo Great, as to hinder us from doing any Thing againſt him: Therefore as you ought to do ſomething againſt him, ſee whether it may not be done by the Bill by reſuming his Lands, &c. if he come not in by a Day.

An Exception may be againſt this way, Namely, That there is no Attainder, but if there had been ſuch a Bill, the Thing which ſhould ſway me ſhould be the Duke of York's Marriage: So that if you Commit this Bill, you may add all Severities, except that of Attainder, and if he come by a Day, then all to be void. If you go by Proclamation, the Lords may not Concur, and you loſe your Ends. By this Bill all Favour that he can expect is ſhewed, and this way will be the beſt Confutation of the Lords Reaſons; therefore Commit the Bill.

Mr. Secretary Morr. I am for Committing the Bill, tho' it be condemning Unheard; becauſe he could not but conclude it would be ſo. Et volenti non fit Injuria.

Sir Rich. Temp. You have proceeded againſt this Earl in all ordinary Ways, and have been baffled by the Lords. In Edward the Third's Reign, Adam de Berry fled, and a Proclamation went againſt him, and the Commons neither did, nor ever were bound to deliver their Articles till the Party appeared, and in that Caſe they delivered not their Articles till the laſt Day, when he not appearing was Convicted. When you would go by Attainder, they tell you, Deliver ſpecial Matter, and we will Summon mon him; when you ask a Proclamation, they tell you, Deliver ſpecial Matter: If you declare the Matter to the Court, it is upon Record, and all may know it. You have tried all ways Legal and Regular, and they will do you Juſtice in neither. Now what can you do? except you and the Lords combine in Juſtice together, he muſt eſcape, and if you can be made to differ, he goes away in a Smoak. If you go to the King for a Proclamation, you muſt return to the Lords for Juſtice. I am ſorry the Ivey hath been ſo near the Oak, that you cannot touch it, without touching that. There remains a Bill before you, and in that you are upon equal Terms with the Lords; therefore give him a Day to be heard, and if he come, let him, but then his Penalties are too low for his Crimes; therefore read the Bill, go higher, degrade him of Honours, forfeit his Lands, and whether you will go ſo far, I leave with you.

Mr. Soll. Gen. It is not poſſible to agree with the Lords in their Reaſons, but the Reaſon muſt be becauſe the Bill is good. But if any Man thinks it is good upon the Lords Reaſons, he is miſtaken; and therefore my Advice is to proceed upon the Bill, tho' not upon the Reaſons from the Lords. Some think the Puniſhment in the Bill too little for the Crime, others too much, becauſe not Summon'd; ſo that it muſt fall out, That a Perſon Impeached by the Houſe of Commons muſt ſee the Houſe riſe without any marks of Diſpleaſure upon him: Can any Man be heard, who will not be heard? Why ſhould not you proceed in ſuch a way againſt him, as whoſe very Flight amounts to a Confeſſion? And have you not burnt his Paper for reflecting upon the Houſe? and can you think he will appear who is departed in deſpair of the Court? and now you are contending to give him time.

Then conſider the Thing in it ſelf. Suppoſe the King had a mind to Attaint him, the King can do it without your help, for he may be Outlawed for High Treaſon; for tho' that be Reverſable at Common-Law, if he be beyond Sea, yet by two expreſs Acts of Parliament it is otherwiſe, but the King cannot Baniſh him without your Concurrence: Suppoſe him Fled and Attainted, ſo that the Queſtion is not upon his Life, but his Eſtate, ſuppoſe your Juſtice ſatisfied in that, is it not paſt all manner of Conſideration that the King cannot upon Application reſtore it, ſo, that all you lookt for by Attainder, is done by this Bill of Baniſhment, for his Life is ſaved by Flight, as would his Eſtate by Compaſſion; but there is ſomething in this Bill, which, without it, you can never get, that is, you put him under your Diſpleaſure, which, the King cannot Pardon; and will you have it thought abroad, that the Earl of Clarendon, fled as he is, hath been ſomething too hard for the Two Houſes?

Sir Tho. Litt. If there be a neceſſity of differing with the Lords, and I thought the difference would produce ſuch Effects, I ſhould not ſpeak, but they only tell you 'tis unneceſſary and ineffectual. You have Impeached, and are now told if you proceed, it will make difference; but I fear another greater Danger than this difference. The World will ſay you were willing he ſhould fly, becauſe you could not prove by flying he hath Forfeited his Eſtate, if the King give it him again it is his Mercy; but do you Juſtice: Therefore preſs for a Proclamation, for the Bill is inconſiſtent with your Honour.

Mr. Vaugh. I have liſtned with much Attention to this Diſcourſe, and underſtand it as little now as at the beginning, the Diſcourſe being nothing adequate to that End. You have Reaſons from the Lords why They agree not with you, and if you agree with the Reaſons, the Sum is to read the Bill; but if you agree not, you muſt deſire a Conference, and if they concur, you may have a Proclamation, if not (as I think they will not) you are where you were: We ſuppoſe him not to be in England, and if ſo, what is the Proclamation more than the King's Writ? it reacheth no Man out of the Kingdom. Its true, in ſome Caſes, if the Perſons are gone out of the Land they are Summon'd, and if they come not, their Lands are Seized, but it is not by Proclamation, which ſignifies nothing if the Party be gone.

Then go on, ſuppoſe the Lords join in deſiring a Proclamation, the end of which is Appearing and Apprehending, poſſibly you gain one part, that if he be apprehended, they do Impriſon him upon a general Impeachment; but if they agree not, what Benefit have you by it? None: But if he appears, to what is it? there is no Charge, if apprehended, to Anſwer the general Charge.

Then the Third Way is, if the Lords agree not, that you ſhould go to the King; and there is a more dangerous Rock in that, than in any thing; for we never heard of a Commitment per ipſum Dominum Regem, but per mandatum Domini Regis, becauſe againſt the King lies no Damages: What then muſt you do? many think it Injuſtice to proceed, if he be not called by Proclamation. But it is plain, if you proceed upon this Bill, you go not upon your Impeachment, but becauſe he is fled from the Juſtice of the Land, wherewith you have Charged him in burning his Paper; and it imports little, that he ſaith he is Innocent; for why then doth he fly? Shall we abate him of what he ought to ſuffer for his ſaying ſo? He is fled from the Juſtice of the Parliament, and therefore is proceeded with, and for what others ſay, you ought not to regard popular Reaſons, but to purſue your own; it is enough for you to hear ſome Proofs made: When was it known in any Court, that Proofs ſhould be taken only on one ſide? So that you cannot acquit your own Juſtice, nor bring him any ways to Anſwer, he being gone, nor can you have any Effect of the Proclamation, tho' the Lords join in it: Therefore unleſs you will have nothing done after all this, (for he may not be Guilty of all Charged, who yet hath made himſelf Guilty of what is Charged by flying) read the Bill.

At laſt the Queſtion was put, whether the Bill ſhould be Read and Committed.

December 18.

The Bill for Baniſhing the Earl of Clarendon was Reported from the Committee, and Read.

Sir Rob. How. I deſire that to the Preface of the Bill this Addition may be made.

That whereas the Earl of Clarendon was Impeached of Treaſon by the Commons, who deſired he might be ſecured, but was not, and thereupon is fled.

And this to the End the proteſting Lords may be gratified, who took ſo much Care of the Commons.

Sir. Rob. Carr. Seconds the Motion.

Sir John Talb. I cannot Concur with that Motion, becauſe we cannot take Notice of what the Lords do.

Sir Rich. Temp. We may take notice of Things in the Lords Books which are Records, and there the Proteſt is entered; and tho' not to gratifie them who owned our Right, yet we ought to take Care of our own Right: And that the World may ſee we have ſome Cauſe to Paſs this Bill, neither deal ſo modeſtly with a Man who flies from Juſtice, as to uſe his own Word (withdrawn) but call it flying.

Sir. Tho. Gow. Let the Words be, that having been Impeached, and moved to be Secured, hath withdrawn himſelf.

Mr. Sollicitor. The Word Moved, deſtroys the Bill it ſelf, the Word of the Bill is to unite the Two Houſes, and this Amendment tends to deſtroy that End, for the Addition to the Preface being inſiſted on, the Lords will add the Reaſons for not Committing, and ſo revive the whole Matter again.

Let the Lords add in their Books what they will, your Books will as much juſtifie you, as theirs them.

Sir Hum Win. Let the Words be added whether the Lords agree, or not, that it may appear upon our Books.

Mr. Hugh Boſcow. The Preface is but Hiſtory, yet add the Words, and let the Lords inſert what they pleaſe, I ſhould rather Concur with them, than leave out thoſe Words.

Mr Vaugh. Put no Queſtion upon theſe Words, but whether the Preface ſhall go as it is; The Bill in Probability is a ſafe Bill, becauſe it came from them: But if you begin an Alteration, you your ſelves render it unſafe; for if you put in theſe Words, then the Lords will add, for want of Special Matter, and ſo it will come to nothing.

Then the Bill was read the Third time.

Mr. Vaugh. I am againſt the Word Withdrawn, and for the Word Flight inſtead of it, and in regard the Juſtice of this Bill depends upon the Word (Flight) put it expreſly.

Sir Rob. Carr. I am againſt this Bill, tho' I was as earneſt in the Matter as any one while I thought there was Proof, but now none appearing, I am againſt the Bill, becauſe you are Confirming what the Lords have done.

Mr. Vaugh. Many Men wonder that no Reaſon is given for paſſing this Bill, but the Queſtion is miſtaken, the Bill is grounded upon his Flight after his Impeachment, and his flying implies ſome Guilt, if none, it is the ſafeſt Argument for any Man to run away, and then there is nothing to catch him. A Proclamation to a Man out of the Kingdom ſignifies nothing. But in the whole it is plain, that he ſaith, that finding the King's Juſtice obſtructed in Parliament, he is fled.

Obj. But it will be ſaid upon bare Flight, never was any Man puniſhed.

Anſw. If one Man kills another and flies, tho' upon his Tryal he ſhall be acquitted, yet he ſhall never recover his Goods becauſe of his Flight.

There has been ſeveral Acts of Baniſhment, Spencer, &c. And in this, is ſomething more ſevere than in them, Namely, that none ſhall Correſpond with him; then there is ſome Advantage, Namely, that if he come in by the Firſt of February, all ſhall be void; but when the Crime is laid, and his Flight makes him Guilty, he ought not to have a Day.

Then the Queſtion was put for paſſing the Bill.

65 For it.

And then the Houſe Adjourned.

Articles of High-Treaſon, and other Heinous Miſdemeanors, Exhibited againſt Edward Earl of Clarendon, Lord High-Chancellor of England, in the Houſe of Lords; on the 10th of July, 1663. By the Earl of Briſtol.

THAT being in Place of higheſt Truſt and Confidence with His Majeſty, and having arrogated a Supream Direction in all His Majeſty's Affairs, both at Home and Abroad, hath Wickedly, and Maliciouſly, and with a Traiterous Intent to draw Scandal and Contempt upon His Majeſty's Perſon, and to alienate from him the Affections of his Subjects, abuſed the ſaid Truſt in Manner following, viz.

That he hath Traiterouſly and Maliciouſly endeavoured to Alienate the Hearts of his Majeſty's Subjects from him, by Words of his own, and by artificial Inſinuations of his Creatures and Dependences, that His Majeſty was inclined to Popery, and had a Deſign to alter the Religion Eſtabliſhed in this Kingdom.

That in purſuance of that Traiterous Intent, he hath to ſeveral Perſons of His Majeſty's Privy-Council, held Diſcourſes to this Effect, viz.

That

That His Majeſty was dangerouſly corrupted in his Religion, and inclined to Popery.

That Perſons of that Religion had ſuch Acceſs, and ſuch Credit with him, that unleſs there were a careful Eye had unto it, the Proteſtant Religion would be overthrown in this Kingdom; and in purſuance of the ſaid Wicked and Traiterous Intent, upon His Majeſty's admitting Sir Henry Bennet to be Principal Secretary of State, in the Place of Mr. Secretary Nicholas, he hath ſaid theſe words, or words to this effect.

That His Majeſty had given 10000 l. to remove a zealous Proteſtant, that he might bring into that Place of High Truſt a concealed Papiſt, notwithſtanding, that the ſaid Sir Henry Bennet is known to have ever been both in his Profeſſion and Practice conſtant to the Proteſtant Religion.

That in purſuance of the ſame Traiterous Deſign, ſeveral near Friends and known Dependences of his, have ſaid aloud, that were it not for my Lord Chancellor's ſtanding in the Gap, Popery would be introduced in this Kingdom, or words to that effect.

That in purſuance of the aforeſaid Traiterous Deſign, he hath not only adviſed and perſwaded the King to do ſuch things contrary to his own Reaſons and Reſolutions as might confirm and encreaſe the Scandal, which he had endeavoured to raiſe upon His Majeſty as aforeſaid, of his favour to Popery, but more particularly to allow his Name to be uſed to the Pope and ſeveral Cardinals in the ſollicitation of a Cardinals Cap for the Lord Aubigny, one of his own Subjects, and great Almoner at preſent to his Royal Conſort the Queen.

That in purſuance of the ſame Wicked and Traiterous Deſign, he had recommended to be employed to the Pope one of his own Domeſticks, Mr. Rich. Bealing, a Perſon (tho' an avow'd Papiſt*) known to be truſted and employed by him in Diſpatches and Negotiations concerning Affairs of greateſt Concernment to the Nation.*

That in purſuance of the ſaid Traiterous Deſign, he being chief Miniſter of State, did himſelf write by the ſaid Mr. Rich. Bealing, Letters to ſeveral Cardinals, preſſing them in the King's Name to induce the Pope to Confer a Cardinal's Cap on the ſaid Lord Aubigny, promiſing, in Caſe it ſhould be attained, exemption to the Roman Catholicks of England from the Penal Laws in force againſt them; by which Addreſs unto the Pope for that Eccleſiaſtical Dignity for one of His Majeſty's Subjects and Domeſticks, he hath, as far as from one Action can be inferred, traiterouſly acknowledged the Pope's Eccleſiaſtical Soveraignty, contrary to the known Laws of this Kingdom.

That in purſuance of the ſame traiterous Deſign, he has called unto him ſeveral Prieſts and Jeſuits, whom he knew to be Superiors, of Orders here in England, and deſired them to write to their Generals at Rome, to give their help for the obtaining from the Pope the Cardinal's Cap for the Lord Aubigny, as aforeſaid, promiſing great Favour to Papiſts here, in Caſe it ſhould be effected for him.

That he hath promiſed to ſeveral Papiſts he would do his endeavour, and ſaid he hoped, to compaſs the taking away all Penal Laws againſt them, which he did in purſuance of the traiterous Deſign aforeſaid; to the end they might preſume and grow vain upon his Patronage, and by their publiſhing their hopes of a Tolleration, encreaſe the Scandal endeavoured by him, and by his Emiſſaries, to be raiſed upon His Majeſty throughout the Kingdom.

That in purſuance of the ſame traiterous Deſign, being intruſted with the Treaty betwixt His Majeſty, and His Royal Conſort the Queen, he concluded it upon Articles ſcandalous and dangerous to the Proteſtant Religion.

That in purſuance of the ſame traiterous Deſign, he concluded the ſame Marriage, and brought the King and Queen together, without any ſettled Agreement in what manner the Rights of Marriage ſhould be performed, whereby the Queen refuſing to be Married by a Proteſtant Prieſt, in caſe of her being with Child, either the Succeſſion ſhould be made uncertain for want of the due Rights of Matrimony, or elſe His Majeſty to be expoſed to a ſuſpicion of having been married in his own Dominions by a Romiſh Prieſt, whereby all the former Scandals endeavoured to be raiſed upon His Majeſty by the ſaid Earl, as to point of Popery, might be confirmed and hightned.

That having thus traiterouſly endeavoured to Alienate the Affections of His Majeſty's Subjects from him upon the ſcore of Religion, he hath endeavoured to make uſe of all the malicious Scandals and Jealouſies, which he and his Emiſſaries had raiſed in His Majeſty's Subjects, to raiſe from them unto himſelf the popular Applauſe of being the zealous Upholder of the Proteſtant Religion, and a promoter of new Severities againſt Papiſts.

That he hath traiterouſly endeavoured to Alienate the Affections of His Majeſty's Subjects from him, by venting in his own Diſcourſe, and by the Speeches of his neareſt Relations and Emiſſaries, opprobrious Scandals againſt His Majeſty's Perſon and courſe of Life, ſuch as are not fit to be mentioned, unleſs neceſſity in the way of Proof ſhall require it.

That he hath traiterouſly endeavoured to Alienate the Affections of his Highneſs the Duke of York from His Majeſty, by ſuggeſting unto him Jealouſies as far as in him lay, and publiſhing abroad by his Emiſſaries, that His Majeſty intended to Legitimate the D. of Monmouth.

That he hath Wickedly and Maliciouſly, contrary to the Duty of a Privy-Counſellor of England, and contrary to the perpetual and moſt important Intereſt of this Nation, perſwaded His Majeſty, againſt the Advice of the Lord General, to withdraw the Engliſh Garriſons out of Scotland, and to demoliſh all the Forts built there, at ſo vaſt a Charge to this Kingdom.

That His Majeſty having been graciouſly pleaſed to communicate the Deſires of the Parliament of Scotland for the remove of the ſaid Garriſons to the Parliament of England, and to ask their Advice therein, the ſaid Earl of Clarendon, not only perſwaded His Majeſty actually to remove thoſe Garriſons, without expecting the Advice of his Parliament of England concerning it, but did by Menaces of His Majeſty's diſpleaſure, deter ſeveral Members of Parliament from moving the Houſe, as they intended, to enter upon conſideration of that Matter.

That he had Traiterouſly and Maliciouſly endeavoured to Alienate His Majeſty's Affections and Eſteem from this his Parliament, by telling His Majeſty that there was never ſo weak and inconſiderable a Houſe of Lords, nor never ſo weak and ſo heady a Houſe of Commons, or words to that effect, and particularly, that it was better to ſell Dunkirk, than to be at their Mercy for want of Money, or words to that effect.

That he hath Wickedly and Maliciouſly, contrary to his Duty of Counſellor, and to a known Law made laſt Seſſions, by which Money was given, and particularly applyed for the maintaining of Dunkirk, adviſed and effected the Sale of the ſame to the French King.

That he hath contrary to Law, enriched himſelf and his Treaſures by the Sale of Offices.

That contrary to his Duty he hath wickedly and corruptly Converted to his own uſe, great and vaſt Summs of publick Money raiſed in Ireland by way of Subſidy, private and publick Benevolences, and otherwiſe, given and intended to defray the Charge of Government in that Kingdom. By which means a ſupernumerary and diſaffected Army hath been kept up there, for want of Money to pay them off, occaſion'd it ſeems to be becauſe of the late and preſent Diſtempers of that Kingdom.

That having arrogated to himſelf a ſupream Direction of all His Majeſty's Affairs, he hath, with a malicious and corrupt Intention, prevailed to have His Majeſty's Cuſtoms Farmed at a far lower Rate than others do offer, and that by Perſons, with ſome of whom he goes a ſhare in, that, and other Parts of Money reſulting from His Majeſty's Revenue.

July 10th, 1663. BRISTOL.

The Earl of Briſtol having Exhibited againſt the Lord Chancellor, Articles of High-Treaſon, and other Miſdemeanours. This Order was made by the Houſe of Peers.

Die Veneris, 10 July, 1663.

ORdered, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, That a Copy of the Articles or Charge of High-Treaſon Exhibited this Day by the Earl of Briſtol, againſt the Lord Chancellor, be deliver'd to the Lord Chief Juſtice; who, with all the reſt of the Judges are to conſider whether the ſaid Charge hath been brought in regularly and legally, and whether it may be proceeded in, and how, and whether there be any Treaſon in it or no, and make Report thereof to this Houſe on Monday next if they can, or elſe as ſoon after as poſſibly they may.

Whereupon, all the Judges met at Serjeants-Inn in Fleet-ſtreet, and my Lord of Briſtol repaired to us thither, deſiring to ſee the Order; which being read, he told us he came out of Reſpect to know of us whether we were informed how it came into the Houſe of Peers, whether as a Charge or not; but one of the Judges, who had been preſent when it was delivered in, ſaying, we were tied up by our Order, his Lordſhip took ſome Exception at the manner of his Expreſſion, as if his Lordſhip's Addreſs was unneceſſary at that time, and taking it as a Rebuke unto him, went away; but according to our Order, which ſuppoſed it to be a Charge of High-Treaſon, and not mentioning Miſdemeanor, we did upon Conſideration unanimouſly agree upon this enſuing Anſwer, which on Monday the 13th of July, the Lord Chief Juſtice Foſter did deliver in, viz.

We conceive that a Charge of High-Treaſon cannot by the Laws and Statutes of this Realm be originally Exhibited by one Peer againſt another unto the Houſe of Peers, and that therefore a Charge of High-Treaſon by the Earl of Briſtol againſt the Lord Chancellor, mentioned in the Order of Reference to us of the 10th of this Inſtant July, hath not been regularly and legally brought in, and if the Matters alledged in the ſaid Charge, were admitted to be true, altho' alledged to be traiterouſly done, yet there is no Treaſon in it.

Which Anſwer being given in, the Earl of Briſtol took ſome Exceptions at it, and ſome of the Lords inferred thence, that if it were Irregularly and Illegally brought in, it was a Libel; but we ſatisfied them that it was not under Conſideration of us, whether it came in as an Information or Charge; our Order required us to give Anſwer to it as a Charge.

Secondly, We did not meddle with any thing concerning accuſing him of Miſdemeanor, for our Order reached only to Treaſon.

Thirdly, It did not follow that if this Charge were Irregular, or Illegal, that therefore he was Criminal: There might be Precedents to give Colour to ſuch kind of Proceedings, for which, till it be declared or known that they are Illegal, they are Titular, and ought not to be puniſhed.

But it was much inſiſted on, That we ſhould deliver the Reaſon of our Opinions, the Lord of Briſtol and his Friends ſeeming unſatisfied.

We Replyed, That it was never known, that when the Juſtices to whom Queſtions were referred from Parliament had unanimouſly agreed in their Opinions, that Reaſons were required from them. Yet notwithſtanding, it being the deſire of the Lords, after ſome things premiſed, and a deſire that this ſhould not be drawn into an Example, (which the Lords aſſented unto as I took it, for no Order was entred concerning it, there being no Order as I think for delivering our Reaſons entred) and it was agreed amongſt us, that no Note ſhould be reduced, leſt we might be required to deliver our Reaſons in Writing; nor had I time to digeſt it in Writing, having only Monday Night after Conference with my Brethren to think upon it, I did on the next Tueſday, being the 14th of July, deliver the Reaſons of all the Judges, of their Opinions, by their Conſents. To the firſt Point, That a Charge of High-Treaſon cannot originally be Exhibited by one Peer againſt another unto the Houſe of Peers, the Emphaſis of the Word Originally was ſhewed.

For Firſt, an Indictment of Treaſon againſt a Peer may be removed up to the Lords Houſe to be tried, as it was in the 31 H. 6. in the Earl of Devonſhire's Caſe, but a Steward was then to be made.

Secondly, If an Impeachment came from the Houſe of Commons unto the Lords Houſe, we did not take upon us the Conſideration, whether this could be proceeded in or not, for it was not the Caſe to which we were required to give Anſwer.

We Replyed, Upon the Statute 1 H. 4. cap. 14. which recites the many great Inconveniencies and Miſchiefs by Appeals, and provides that all Appeals of Things within the Realm, ſhall be Tried and Determined by the good Laws of the Realm made and uſed in the time of the King's noble Progenitors, and Appeals of Things out of the Realm before the Conſtable and Marſhal: But we relied upon the Clauſe enſuing, and thereupon it is accorded and aſſented, That no Appeals be from thenceforth made, or in any wiſe purſued in Parliament in time to come. I ſhewed Appeals in this Statute, and Accuſations by ſingle Perſons were one and the ſame Thing, and that this Statute reached to all Appeals, Charges, Accuſations or Impeachments deliver'd in, in Parliament, whereupon the Perſon accuſed was to be put to his

Anſwer,

Anſwer, and that they were but ſeveral Names of the ſame Thing, I ſhewed firſt Hiſtorically, that the Appeals the 11 R. 2. and 21 R. 2. were but Accuſations by thoſe Lords of Felons againſt the other, and differed from the Caſe of the Duke of Hereford and Norfolk, which was to be tried as 21 R. 2. Pl. Cor. in Parl. No. 19. is by the Courſe of the Civil Law, and thereupon Battle was waged. That tho' it concerned H. 4. in Intereſt to confirm the 11 R. 2. and repeal the 21 R. 2. he being Appellant in the former, yet he ſaw the Miſchief ſo great, that he himſelf made Proviſion againſt them for the time to come; and indeed, the Miſchief was ſo great, that it ceaſed not after the Deſtruction of many Lords and Families (there being Lex talionis in that 21 R. 2. uſed towards moſt of thoſe Appellants in the 11 R. 2.) till it tumbled King R. 2. firſt out of his Throne, and then into his Grave.

That there were but two ſorts of Proceedings in Capitalibus, the Suit of the Party which was called an Appeal, or the Suit of the King, who ought to proceed by Indictment, and ſo to Trial by virtue of Magna Charta. Nec ſuper eam ibimus, &c. and that, in an Appeal, being the Suit of the Party, there was no Prerogative of Appearance if it were an Appeal at the Common-Law, 10 Ed. 4. Lord Gray's Caſe. That an Appeal was taken in our Law-Books frequently for an Accuſation by the Party, I cited Weſtm. the 1*ſt*, Cap. 14. where the Words Appeal reaches to Indictment. And 9 Cook, 119. Lord Zanchar's Caſe, that an Appeal of two Significations, one general and frequent in our Books for an Accuſation, and Stamford, 142. In Caſe of an Approver, the Felon after Confeſſion may Appeal, that is (ſaith he) accuſe others, Coadjutors with him to do the Felony. C. C. 189. Appellant, cometh from the French Word Appeller, which ſignifies to accuſe, or appeach, and C. C. 287. Appel ſignifieth an Accuſation; and therefore to Appeal a Man is as much as to accuſe, and in ancient Books he that doth Appeal a Man is called accuſator, vide 9 Ed. 2. Articuli Cleri, cap. 16. That I knew no reaſon why in thoſe tumbling Times of R. 2. (which cauſed this Statute, for the Statute-Roll is comant ad autermant eſte us en temps la darren Roy, R. 2.) They ſhould proceed by way of Appeal, but becauſe they were then allowed at the Suit of the Party, to accuſe any other of Treaſon, but at the King's Suit there ought to be an Indictment, and an Indictment could not be found but by Jury.

That in all other Caſes, an Appeal was to be brought by the Party concerned, the Wife or Heir, or Party robbed, &c. But in Caſe of Treaſon, any Man may Appeal another, and therefore in all Reaſon it muſt be underſtood of an Accuſation, and any Man might accuſe another of Treaſon; and if it can be proved by Witneſſes, it muſt not be Tried by Battle, as other Appeals may. I concluded that the 8 H. 6. No. 38. this Statute, the 1 H. 4. cap. 14. is recited, and deſired it ſhould be duly kept and put in Execution, which was granted, that Stamford 78. See Pl. Cor. 31. 132. agree that Appeals of High-Treaſons were not commonly uſed to be ſued in Parliament, till the 1 H. 4. cap. 14. Since which time his manner of Appeal hath gone out of uſe; and I ſaid, I had ſearched many Precedents, and tho' of late, there may be a Precedent (as it was of the Earl of Briſtol's Father againſt the Duke of Buckingham, of ſome kind of Impeachment) yet I did confidently believe there was not ſince that Statute, 1 H. 4. Cap. 14. any one Precedent of ſuch an Impeachment at the Party-Suit whereupon there was any Indictment: In truth in the Earl of Briſtol's Caſe, the Commons Houſe did Impeach the Duke of Treaſon, and ſo the Earl of Briſtol's Impeachment proceeded not.

For the Second Point, That there was no Treaſon in the Charge, tho' the Matters in it are alledged to be Traiterouſly done. I ſaid we had peruſed each Article ſeriatim, and we had found no Treaſon in them, the great Charge, which is endeavoured to be proved by many Particulars, was, That he did Traiterouſly, and Maliciouſly, to bring the King into Contempt, and with an intent to Alien the Peoples Affections from him, ſay, &c. ſuch and ſuch Words, &c.

And ſo it runs on, That in purſuance of the Traiterous Intent, &c. he did, &c. and that in farther purſuance of the ſaid Traiterous Deſign, &c. And in like manner was moſt of the Articles upon which the Characters of Treaſon ſeemed to be fixed. I ſaid that it is a tranſcendent Miſpriſion or Offence to endeavour to bring the King into Contempt, or to endeavour to Alienate the Peoples Affections from him, but yet it was not Treaſon. This Statute, 13 Car. 2. Cap. 1. makes Treaſon during the King's Life: But if a Man calls the King Heretick, or Papiſt, or that he endeavours to introduce Popery, (which is more in expreſs Terms than the Article of that kind inſinuates) or by Words, Preaching, Prayer, to ſtir up the People to hatred or diſlike of the Perſon of his Majeſty, or the Eſtabliſhed Government; the Penalty is only Diſability to enjoy any Place Eccleſiaſtical, Civil, or Military, and ſubject to ſuch Penalties as by the Common-Law or Statute of this Realm may be inflicted in ſuch Caſe, (which is Fine and Ranſom, with Impriſonment) and it limits a time and manner of Proſecution.

There was an Objection made yeſterday upon the 25 E. 3. That this being in Parliament, the King and Parliament had Power to declare Treaſon, and then we ought to have delivered our Opinions with a Qualification, unleſs it be declared Treaſon by Parliament where this Charge is depending; to this I Anſwer'd.

Firſt, 'Tis not Treaſon in præſenti, and if ſuch a Declaration ſhould be non conſtat, whether it would relate to the time paſt.

Secondly, That I conceived that the Statute as touching that Declaratory Power, extended but to ſuch Caſes as were clearly Felony, as ſingle Acts, if not Treaſon, (the Words being) Whether it be Treaſon or other Felony; but in reſpect of the doubts of Eſcheats, which, if Treaſon, belonged to the King; if Felony, to the Lords of the Fee, it was left to the Parliament. I did not ſay we Reſolved the Point.

Thirdly, That admitting the Declaratory Power did extended to other Caſes than ſuch as were before the Judges, and was not taken away by 1 M. Cap. or any other Statute, yet I read my Lord Cook's Opinion at large, Pl. Cor. Fol. 22. That this Declaration muſt be by the King, Lords and Commons, and by any two of them alone; and we were now in a judicial Way before fore the House of Peers only; and I did affirm as clear Law, that by this judicial Way no Treason could be declared nor adjudged, but as were expresly within the Letter of the 25 E. 3. and said, That Statute 25 E. 3. was a second Magna Charta, and that their Ancestors thought it their greatest Security to narrow, and not to enlarge Treason, and cited 1 H. 4. cap. 10. to which in the Parliament-Roll is added Rot. No. 17. (it coming of the King's Free Grace) That the Lords did much rejoice and humbly thank the King: And I read the Statute 1 M. cap. 1.

That the now Earl of Bristol in my Lord of Strafford's Case, was the great Assertor of the Law against Constructive and Accumulative Treason, which if admitted, their Lordships could better suggest unto themselves, than I express, how great a Door they would let open to other Inconveniencies and Mischiefs to the Peerage. I concluded with reading the Act, 14 Car. 2. for Reversing the Attainder of the Earl of Strafford; the first Part whereof I read to them, wherein is expressed, That they who Condemned him, did purposely make an Act of Parliament to Condemn him upon an Accumulative Treason, none of the pretended Crimes being Treason apart, and so could not be in the whole, if they had been proved.

After I had spoken to this Effect, the Earl of Bristol seemed to acquiesce, insomuch as concerned our Opinions as the Case was delivered to us, but it being to be put to the Question, whether the Lords did concur with the Judges Opinions, and himself being concerned in the Illative, that therefore the Charge was Illegal and Irregular; yet not being intended by him, as he said, as a Charge, but an Information, he desired (tho' as the Case was put to us, it was a good Inference) that the Voting of that might be spared till it was Resolved by the Lords whether he delivered it in as a Charge, or only as an Information for the Matter of the Charge if it should be thought fit for their Lordships to proceed in it: After some Debate upon the Question, the Lords Resolved the same Day according to our Opinions.

First, That a Charge of High-Treason cannot by the Laws and Statutes of this Realm be originally Exhibited by one Peer against another, unto the House of Peers.

Secondly, That in these Articles, if the Matters alledged in them were admitted to be true, there is no Treason in them, and because the Lords unanimously Concurred in them, (my Lord of Bristol freely as any other) it was by Order entred, that these Votes were Nemine Contradicente.

Note, That in Judge Hatton's Reports, Fol. the Resolution of the Judges is expressed to be, That a Peer cannot be Impeached but by Indictment, and Mr. Rushworth in his Collections, Fol. 272. expresses such an Opinion to be deliver'd by the Judges in 1 or 2 Car. but upon search it was found to be entred in the Journal of Parliament of that Time, but it was cautious referring to the Common-Law only. But that for Proceedings in Parliament it did not belong to them to determine, or to that Effect; but no mention of 1 H. 4. cap. 14. It hath been credibly reported that some of the Judges in my Lord of Strafford's Case, being asked some Questions, did with the like Caution deliver their Opinions, and did speak with Reservations, (as the Case is put) tho' they upon Hearing, did know the Case misput; which, after, troubled the Conscience of one of them, (ut audivi) being a grave Learned Man. Vide Peacock's Case, Cook Fol. But we having the Case referred to us in Parliament upon Articles exhibited in Parliament, did Resolve to deliver our Opinions without any such Reservation; and the Act of 1 H. 4. being expresst against Appeals in Parliament, (and of Acts of Parliaments after they are once made, none under the King, and without him are Interpreters but the Judges. See King's Answer printed in the Old Print of 3 Car. 1. at the end of the Petition.) And therefore did deliver these Opinions which I conceive of great Benefit to the Lords themselves, and a just Ground for farther Enquiry to be made, whether such Impeachments may be in the House of Peers for other Misdemeanors, without the King's Leave, or being exhibited by his Attorney.

And secondly to take into Consideration the Validity of Impeachments of Treason by the House of Commons, notwithstanding the late Precedents which yet ended in a Bill, and so in the Legislative, not Judiciary Way.

The

The Trials of Peter Meſſenger, Richard Beaſley, William Green, Thomas Appletree, John Earles, William Wilks, William Ford, Richard Farrell, Edward Cotton, Edward Bedle, Richard Latimer, John Sharpleſs, Richard Woodward, Thomas Limerick, John Richardſon, for HIGH TREASON, in tumultuouſly Aſſembling themſelves in Moorfields, and other Places, under Colour of pulling down of BAWDY-HOUSES, April 4. 1668.

UPON Eaſter-Monday laſt, being the 23d Day of March, in the 20th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, it being the uſual time of the Apprentices Liberty for their Civil Recreations, a rude Multitude of People met together in Moorfields; where being ſo Aſſembled, were inſtigated by ſome Factious Perſons amongſt them; who, to colour their Deſign, inſinuated into the Rabble the pulling down of Bawdy-Houſes: Under which colour of reforming Bawdy-Houſes, they at length raiſed a great Hubbub; and ſo increaſing in their Diſorders, in a tumultuous Manner committed many notorious Crimes. But by the Vigilancy of the Magiſtrates of the City, with the Aſſiſtance of his Majeſty's Guards, were at laſt reduc'd: Some of the Ringleaders whereof were apprehended, and committed to the Goal for their Offences, to receive their Trials according to the known Laws of the Land.

And having been ſeveral times examin'd, upon Confeſſion of ſome, and pregnant Proof againſt others, by a ſpecial Jury of ſeveral Knights, Eſquires and Gentlemen, of very great Worth and Eſteem, of the County of Middleſex.

Theſe Perſons following, to wit,

Peter Meſſenger,	Edward Cotton,
Richard Beaſley,	Edward Bedle,
William Green,	Richard Latimer,
Thomas Appletree,	John Sharpleſs,
John Earles,	Richard Woodward,
William Wilks,	Thomas Limerick,
William Ford,	John Richardſon,
Richard Farrell,

Were indicted of High-Treaſon, for levying of a Publick War againſt our Sovereign Lord the King: And at the Goal-Delivery of Newgate, held at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old Baily, London, Apr. 1. 1668, and continued till the fourth Day; on which ſaid fourth Day, in the Preſence of

Sir John Kelyng, Kt. Lord Chief Juſtice of his Majeſty's Court of King's-Bench, Sir Edward Atkins,

Sir Chriſtopher Turner,
Sir Richard Rainsford,
} Barons of his Majeſty's Court of Exchequer:

Together with Sir William Wild, Recorder of the City of London; theſe Priſoners following, viz.

Peter Meſſenger,	William Green,
Richard Beaſley,	Thomas Appletree,

Were firſt called to the Bar to receive their Trials; where, after Proclamation being made, they ſeverally pleaded to their Indictments, and put themſelves for their Trial upon their Country.

The Names of the Jury ſworn,

Anthony Hall,	Thomas Jennins,
William Knight,	John Nichols,
Henry Francis,	Ralph Bradſhaw,
John Baker,	John Saving,
Robert Shaw,	John Marſh,
Thomas Conſtable,	Henry Kent.

The Jury being ſworn, the Court proceeded to Trial.

King's Counſel, Mr. North. You Gentlemen of the Jury, theſe four, Peter Meſſenger, Richard Beaſley, William Green, and Thomas Appletree, ſtand indicted for High-Treaſon; having left their Obedience to our Sovereign Lord the King, and being inſtigated by the Devil, upon the 24th Day of March laſt paſt, did contrive a Deſign to levy War and Rebellion againſt the King, being at the Head of four or five Hundred arm'd and array'd. If this Matter be prov'd againſt them, you muſt find them Guilty.

2*d Counſel, Mr.* Pemberton. You Gentlemen of the Jury, theſe Priſoners at the Bar did contrive and levy War, and fell upon the King's Officers, and beat them, and broke the Priſon, and let out the Priſoners, ſome for Felony: Among the Multitude theſe were four of them, as we ſhall endeavour to prove.

The Names of the Witneſſes call'd and ſworn,

Richard Dowſon,	James Martin,
John Cowley,	Abraham Brookes,
Henry Ball,

The

The OATH.

THE Evidence you ſhall give between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoners at the Bar, ſhall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth. So help you God.

Counſel. Sir, pray tell my Lord what you ſee theſe do on Eaſter-Tueſday.

Witneſs. My Lord, I ſaw this Richard Beaſley at the Head of four or five Hundred; he had a Sword, and I took his Sword from him: he had Colours, a green Apron upon a Pole. I heard ſome of them cry, Down with the Redcoats; and I did ſee William Green there too, but not Appletree.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Did they go with the Multitude or no, or were they with them?

Witn. They were with them; but I cannot ſay they went along with them.

Counſ. Pray tell my Lord what the Multitude ſaid at that Time.

Witn. When we fell on them, they run away.

Ld. Ch. J. Did Beaſley lead them on?

Witn. They ſaid he was their Captain.

John Cowley Second Witneſs.

Counſ. Mr Cowley, tell my Lord what you ſaw.

Cowley. My Lord, he cut me and wounded me on the Hand. The Conſtable charg'd them to be gone, and diſperſe themſelves; with that they ſtruck at the Conſtable, and knock'd him down.

Ld Ch. J. Under what Pretence did they pull down any Houſe?

Witn. The Conſtable, and ſome more of us, beat them up Nightingale Lane; I know not what their Pretence was: I ſaw Appletree there, for he was the Firſt that ſtruck at the Conſtable. This was on Eaſter-Tueſday.

Ld Ch. J. Did you ſee Green there?

Witn. I cannot tell.

Ld Ch. J. Did you ſee them pull down any Houſe? What did you hear them ſay?

Witn. They ſaid, Down with the Bawdy-houſes.

Ld Ch. J. Did you hear them talk of the Redcoats there? Was Green amongſt them as one that help'd and acted with them?

Witn. I ſaw him in Moorfields on Monday, Tueſday, and Wedneſday, ſhout and throw up his Hat.

Third Witneſs.

Ld Ch. J. What did you ſee them do?

Witn. All that I ſaw, was, that Peter Meſſenger came along with the Colours in his Hand, and I took him and carry'd him to Priſon my ſelf: I did not hear them cry, Down with honeſt Houſes, but Bawdy-houſes: I did not ſee all thoſe, but only theſe two, (pointing to two at the Bar.)

Ld Ch. J. Ay, that was the Captain and the Enſign.

Fourth Witneſs, Henry Bull. My Lord, I ſaw this Beaſley and Meſſenger in Moorfields, pulling down Houſes on Monday, and on Tueſday at the Head of three Hundred; and at that time we routed them. On Wedneſday they came with four or five Hundred, and cry'd, Down with the Redcoats.

James Martin, Fifth Witneſs.

Ld Ch. J. What can you ſay?

Witn. All I know is, Beaſley made a Blow at our Enſign, and ſtruck at him with his Sword.

Ld Ch. J. What was their Pretence?

Witn. I cannot tell that.

Another Witn. I ſee Thomas Appletree help to pull down Peter Burlingham's Houſe, and broke another.

Serj. Wild. What Company had they?

Witn. About Three hundred.

Ld Ch. J. Had they any Colours? What did you hear them declare?

Witn. I heard them declare nothing, for I had like to have been knockt on the Head.

Ld Ch. J. to the Priſoner Beaſley; Well, what do you ſay for your ſelf? you hear it is ſworn againſt you, that you were at the head of this Rabble, and they call'd you Caprain, and you led them up; and when the Conſtable came to command Peace in the King's Name, you fell on him, and wounded him, ſo that he is hardly able to be here this Day: Why did you gather this Multitude together? It will behove you to make your Anſwer; what Reaſon had you for it?

Beaſley Priſ. I do not know the Reaſon.

Ld Ch. J. I ſpeak to you, that you ſhould give a Reaſon: After all this Trouble that we have had in this Nation, it is a ſad thing that a great Number of giddy-headed People muſt gather together, under Pretence of Reformation, to diſturb the Peace of the Nation again; if you can ſay no more for your ſelf, there will be little trouble with you.

Serj. Wilde. What was the meaning of your gathering together?

Beaſley Priſ. We went to pull down Bawdy-Houſes.

Ld Ch. J. How did you know which were Bawdy-Houſes? If you had known them, you might have indicted them, there is Law againſt them; but this is a ſtrange kind of Reformation, if a Rabble come, and ſays, This Man is a Papiſt, and this keeps a Bawdy-Houſe, and would pull it down; this is a mad Reformation.

Meſſenger Priſ. My Lord, that Man has ſworn I was out on Tueſday, it was Wedneſday before I came forth; but ſtaid at home with my Wife, becauſe I would not be among them.

Ld Ch. J. Did not you carry a green Apron on a Pole for your Colours?

Priſ. My Lord, as I paſs'd along by the Rout, they flung a Bottle at me, and had like to have knockt me down, and tore my Apron off, and charg'd me to carry it on a Pole; and I would fain have come away from them, and could not.

Ld Ch. J. Make this appear, that you would fain have got away, and that they did force you to do what you did, and I ſhall be glad of it.

Priſ. There is none of them here now that were there then.

Ld Ch. J. Then all that you ſay is of little uſe; for it is no great thing to make a Lye to ſave one's Life.

Priſ. God is my Witneſs.

Ld Ch. J. Have a care what you ſay.

A Conſtable Witneſs ſworn.

Ld Ch. J. What ſay you of theſe four at the Bar?

Conſt. My Lord, I heard they were pulling down Houſes, and I did what I could to preſerve the King's Peace; and that Day I did ſave a great many Houſes and Goods. The next Day they were near my own Houſe, and I did endeavour to do the ſame, and this Fellow with his Company did ſurprize my Men, and knockt me down; yet I commanded the Peace, and they beſet me round about, and cut me over the Hand: I do remember that Beaſley. We were in a Place where there were three Turnings, but they knockt me down, and beat me ſo, that I could not tell who it was that did hurt me.

Ld Ch. J. Do you know any more of this Company?

Conſt. No, my Lord: for if the Soldiers had not come, they would not have left till they had kill'd me.

Counſ. Had you your Staff?

Conſt. Yes; but they took it away from me.

Another Witn. I ſaw Meſſenger on Tueſday, tho' he ſays to the contrary.

Ld Ch. J. Meſſenger, you hear what is ſaid againſt you; you ſay you were not out on Tueſday: He hath ſworn you were at the Head of a Company, with a green Apron on a Stick, and led them up.

Priſ. I was not there.

Henry Bull, Witn. I ſaw him, my Lord, on Tueſday, he and Beaſley, about Eleven of the Clock in Moorfields, and they had gather'd a great Multitude of four or five hundred, and then they made an Attempt to come into our Pariſh, and they cry'd, Down with the Redcoats.

Meſſenger Priſ. Pray, my Lord, let my Witneſſes be called in, for they ſwear falſe.

Ld Ch. J. Your Witneſſes ſhall be call'd, a little of due Conſideration beforehand would have done you more good than now.

Mr. Glover, and Mr. Bennet, the Priſoner's Witneſſes.

Ld Ch. J. What ſay you concerning the Priſoner?

Glover. I can ſay, my Lord, he was till Five of the Clock on Wedneſday at Mr. Bennet's Houſe in Golden-Lane.

Ld Ch. J. Where was he on Monday and Tueſday?

Glover. I know not.

Bennet. On Wedneſday he was at a Kinſman's Houſe.

Ld Ch. J. Theſe two Witneſſes give no Account at all of you, where you were on Monday and Tueſday.

Ld Ch. J. Greene, what ſay you?

Greene. I was not among them.

Ld Ch. J. It is ſworn you were amongſt them, and threw up your Cap. Were you not knockt down?

Priſoner. Yes, my Lord.

Ld Ch. J. How could you be knockt down if you were not amongſt them?

John Cowley Witneſs.

Ld Ch. J. Did you not ſee Greene in the Multitude?

Cowley. I ſee him do nothing; but I ſee him with a Staff in his Hand, I did not ſee him act any thing but follow the Colours.

Greene Priſ. I was not among them but as I came home.

Ld Ch. J. You mean you did not take part with them, but you were there; it is ſworn you were upon Tueſday, following your Captain and the Colours; it is ſworn by Mr. Bull you were among the Rabble, and were knockt down: now if the Jury do not believe that you did act among them, we will leave it to them.

Ld Ch. J. Appletree, what ſay you?

Appletree. As I was paſſing along (my Lord) I ſaw a Croud, and I went to know what was the Matter, and there came a Company down, and ſome running after me did me a miſchief; I did not ſee the Conſtable, nor ſay, Knock him down.

Ld Ch. J. It is ſworn that you were the firſt Man that ſtruck the Conſtable, and that you were at the pulling down of Burlingham's Houſe.

Priſ. I did not offer to pull down his Houſe, nor ſtrike the Conſtable.

Abraham Brooks, Witn. My Lord, he was in Peter Burlingham's Houſe, and broke it down ſo that you might have riden a Horſe thro' it; I ſpake to him two or three times to leave off, and if I had not ſtoopt ſuddenly he had ſtruck me down with a Bedſtaff.

Cowley Witn. I did ſee him on Tueſday with their Company, and I did ſee him ſtrike at the Conſtable.

Ld Ch. Juſtice to the Jury. Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard what theſe ſay; the Priſoners are indicted for High Treaſon, for levying of War againſt the King. By levying of War is not only meant, when a Body is gathered together, as an Army is, but if a Company of People will go about any publick Reformation, this is High Treaſon, if it be to pull down Incloſures, for they take upon them the Regal Authority, the way is worſe than the thing. Theſe People do pretend their Deſign was againſt Bawdy-Houſes; now for Men to go about to pull down Houſes under the pretence of Bawdy-Houſes, with a Captain, and an Enſign, and Weapons; if this thing be indur'd, who is ſafe? It is High Treaſon, becauſe it doth betray the Peace of the Nation, for every Subject is as much wrong'd as the King; for if every Man may reform what he will, no Man is ſafe: therefore this thing is of deſperate Conſequence, we muſt make this for a publick Example: There is reaſon we ſhould be very cautious, we are but newly delivered from Rebellion, and we know that that Rebellion firſt began under the Pretence of Religion and the Law, for the Devil hath always this Vizard upon it; we know that that Rebellion began thus, therefore we have great Reaſon to be very wary that we fall not again into the ſame Error, but it ſhould be carried on with a watchful Eye. And becauſe Apprentices hereafter ſhall not go on in this Road, we will have the ſolemn Reſolution of all the Judges, and therefore you are to find it ſpecially. You muſt find the matter of Fact, and we will aſſemble all the Judges together in a ſober way, to give their Judgment, whether it be High Treaſon or no; not that we do doubt of it now, for we know it is High Treaſon, but for general Satisfaction. It is prov'd that Beaſley went as their Captain, with his Sword, and flouriſh'd it over his Head; Meſſenger was there with his Green Apron on a Pole in Moorfields on Tueſday, and on Wedneſday he was in the ſame Poſture again.

Priſoners. My Lord, we would have our Witneſſes heard.

Ld Ch. J. You ſhall have no Wrong done to you.

As for Green, it is prov'd he was with them ſhouting, and caſting up his Cap: now the Act that any one does in ſuch a Tumult is the Act of all, if they all join together. He was on Tueſday following there, and on Wedneſday he was taken. And then for Appletree, he was the firſt Man that ſtruck the Conſtable, and pull'd down Burlingham's Houſe.

Edmund Bedle, Richard Latimer, to the Bar.

Bill of Indictment. You that are now call'd, being mov'd thro' the Inſtigation of the Devil, and having not the Fear of God before your Eyes, have withdrawn your Obedience to our Sovereign Lord the King, and againſt him did imagine and contrive War and Rebellion the 24th Day of March, with four or five hundred Perſons in a Warlike Manner, array'd with long Pikes and other Arms, there met and aſſembled, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

Witneſſes ſworn.

William Badley, John Maldey,
William Riggs, John Williams.

King's Counſel. Gentlemen of the Jury, Bedle and Latimer ſtand indicted for High Treaſon; wanting that Love and Obedience that every Man ought to have of his King, did, the 24th of March, aſſemble themſelves together, to the Number of four or five hundred Perſons, to levy War and Rebellion: If we prove this, you muſt find them guilty of High Treaſon.

Goaler of Finsbury Priſon, Witneſs ſworn.

Counſ. Tell my Lord what you ſaw.

Witn. I can charge no particular Perſon, I was from home; and when I came home I found the Priſon-Doors open, and they had let out their own Company and two others; and I lock'd up the Priſon-Doors, and they gather'd together about the Priſon, and there came their Captain with his Half-Pike, and commanded me to open the Door. I told them I would not open the Door. They told me, we have been Servants, but we will be Maſters now; and if you will not open the Door, we will do your Buſineſs for you by and by. They had Swords, and Belts, and Half-Pikes, and they did puſh at me; and I came to a Parly with them when I ſaw there was no Remedy. I let their Captain in, and when he could find none of his Company there, he went away; but had it not been for the Company that ſtood without, I would have kept him faſt enough.

Another Witneſs ſworn.

Ld Ch. J. Were any of theſe that ſtand at the Bar, at Clerkenwell with a Stick in his Hand?

Witn. Yes, my Lord, I ſaw Latimer there knocking at the Gate, and the Priſon was broke open, and there came down Juſtice Welſh to them to diſperſe them; but they let out two of their own Rabble, and two of the Felons.

Another Witneſs ſworn. Nine of the Clock on Friday, I went to the Gate of the New Priſon, and they came and clapt a Bar in between the Gates to open them, and I ſaw Latimer throwing Stones at the Windows. Juſtice Welſh being there, would have taken ſome of them; and they cry'd out, One die, and all die.

William Riggs, Witneſs, ſworn. I ſaw Bedle, and took him; their number was about four or five hundred; and I got out two Files of Men, and took four Men more, whereof this Bedle was one of them.

Judg. What do you ſay to this?

Latimer. This Man hath a Spite againſt me, my Lord; for getting up behind the Coach, I let my Whip fall and gave him a Laſh.

Ld Ch. J. But what ſays the other againſt you? What made you there? And Bedle, what do you ſay for your ſelf?

Bedle Priſ. My Lord, I was in Southwark, and came from thence to Biſhopſgate-Street, and met with a Friend, and we drank four Flaggons of Beer, ſo that I got a little too much Drink in my Head, and I ſtood and look'd a while at the Priſoners in Biſhopſgate; and my Uncle coming along, I went with him a little way, and then turn'd about and left him. And there was a Man came and ſaid, Brother, will you not go and ſee what they do in the Fields? and it was my hard Fortune to be among them, but did not any hurt, bleſſed be God; but I follow'd them without doing any harm, and they went down Old-ſtreet to Clerkenwell; but I did not break the Priſon, nor do not know where the Priſon is: for there was a Company made up to them, and they began to run.

Ld Ch. J. What did you ſay when they run away? Did you not ſay, Face about?

Priſ. Your Lordſhip heard ſo, but I did not ſay, Face about.

Ld Ch. J. You Gentlemen of the Jury, you ſee what their Indictment is: They gather'd a multitude together at Clerkenwell, and they had a Captain with a Half-Pike, that came to the Priſon and forc'd open the Door, and brought out two of their own Crew, and two of the Felons; and they ſaid, they had been Servants before, but now would be Maſters; and they cry'd out, One die, and all die. And you have three Witneſſes that ſwear, that theſe two were there, Latimer eſpecially. The Keeper ſays, he was forc'd to come to a Parly with them, and took in their Captain, to give him Satisfaction that there was none other there of their Gang. Bedle ſays he was there but he was drunk, which is no ſufficient Excuſe.

Richard Cotton, Richard Farrel,
John Earles, William Ford, Call'd
William Wilde, to the Bar.

Their Indictment read.

Sir

Sir Philip Howard, Witneſs, ſworn.

Ld Ch. J. Sir Philip, ſpeak what you know of theſe Men.

Sir Ph. I deliver'd theſe men into the Conſtables Hands.

Counſ. Did not you ſee a multitude of theſe People gather'd together in a Warlike Way? if ſo, tell my Lord?

Sir. Ph. There came ſome ſober People and told me that the Tumult was greater than it was when my Lord Craven was there, and they did deſire my Aſſiſtance; and ſo I went into the Fields, and divided my Men half on the one ſide, and half on the other: and the People look'd upon us ſo contemptibly, that they told us we ſhould quickly be unhors'd; therefore I charg'd my Men not to let any Man come within my Arms.

Ld Ch. J. Had they any Colours?

Sir Ph. They had a Sheet for their Colours, and when they ſaw my Horſe they got into the Field, and ſtood as if they did not fear us; and I order'd ſome of my Men to go and take him that had the Colours, and ſo our Men did; and I call'd for a Conſtable, but there was no Conſtable to be found: and I thought my ſelf to govern them, and to bring them into better order. At length this Man came with his Watch, and I deliver'd them into his Hands, and I believe theſe are the Men that I deliver'd to the Conſtable.

Sir Edward Fiſh, Witneſs, ſworn.

Counſ. Pray, Sir, look upon the Priſoners, and ſee if you know any of them.

Witn. I cannot ſay that theſe were any of the Perſons that we did take, but there was a multitude of them gather'd together, and we did deſire them to go home; and they took up Brickbats in their Hands and ſaid, They had as much to do there as we had. I took a Hanger from one of them my ſelf, which is here in the Court.

Robert Hoydon, Witneſs, ſworn.

Counſ. Tell my Lord what you heard this Rabble of People ſay.

Witn. There came a Troop, and they thought it had been the Duke of York's Troop, and they ran with Brickbats in their Hands to them, and ſaid, That if the King did not give them Liberty of Conſcience, that May-day muſt be a bloody Day.

Another Witneſs ſworn.

Ld Ch. J. Speak what you know of theſe People.

Witn. My Lord, they ask'd if the Duke of York were there, and Anſwer was made, Yes, thinking they would have been ſatisfy'd and diſpers'd; but notwithſtanding they came up to the Windmills, and flung Stones amongſt us.

Capt. Wilding, Witneſs, ſworn. My Lord, we did deſire them, by fair means, to diſperſe themſelves, and go home; they told me No, They would be with us e're long at White-hall.

Another Captain ſworn. My Lord, I was forc'd to make ſome Reſiſtance, but they flung Stones very thick at us, ſaying, Theſe Life-Guard Rogues are but a few; and becauſe I commanded one of my Officers to ſeize on one of them, they cry'd, Knock down the Rogue.

Another ſworn. My Lord, I deſir'd them to go home; their Anſwer was, That we were Rogues and Dogs, and e're long they would come and pull White-hall down: and their Word was, Hey now or never.

Conſtable ſworn. My Lord, I had theſe three at the Bar; but Wilde was none of them, pointing to the third.

Ld Ch. J. You ſay the other were.

Conſtable. Yes.

Pike and Gillington, Witneſſes, ſworn.

Pike. I did ſee this Cotton breaking down Burlingham's Houſe.

Gillington. I can ſpeak of the tall Man Cotton, I will ſwear he was one of them.

Ld Ch. J. Sir Philip Howard ſays he deliver'd Five to the Conſtable, and the Conſtable ſays he does not know whether theſe be the Perſons or no, but it is the ſame thing if they were among thoſe that did it.

Serj. Wilde. Yea, the thing is the ſame.

Ld Ch. J. You hear your Indictment is for High Treaſon, you are Perſons of the ſame Company, what do you ſay for your ſelves?

Priſoners. We were not there.

Serj. Wilde. The Conſtable ſwears it.

Conſtable. I cannot ſay, theſe were they, but two of them, Farrell is one.

Priſ. I was walking to Iſlington, and I did march a little way with them, but did nothing.

Ld Ch. J. Where were you taken?

Priſ. By Hollawell-Lane, and I was all alone, and a Horſeman rode after me, and ask'd me, if I were not one of them.

Ld Ch. J. All the Conſtable can ſay is this, There were Men deliver'd to him from the Guard, and this Man does not deny but that the Guard took him, but he did nothing; but many People are walking abroad in the Holidays; it is pity to take away a Man's Life without ſufficient Evidence.

Ld Ch. J. Farrel, What do you ſay?

Farrel. I was with my Father and Mother all the Holidays.

Ld Ch. J. Cotton, What ſay you?

Cotton. I came through Moorfields about Noon, and I was taken by one of the Life-Guard.

Serj. Wilde. But you were pulling down a Houſe.

Witn. He was pulling down a Houſe on Monday, I was inform'd, and he was commonly among the Players at Pidgeon-holes; and after he had been pulling down a Houſe, he was looking about to ſee what he could light of.

Priſ. As I have a Soul to ſave he ſwears falſly.

Ld Ch. J. Have a care what you ſay.

You Gentlemen of the Jury, here are five Men more that are indicted for the ſame Diſorder that the reſt were, and we have now a little more Diſcovery of their Riſing, and we have diſcover'd other Colours,- for they thought the Duke of York had been in the Fields, and that enrag'd them the more, they taking Sir Philip Howard for the Duke of York; and when they did deſire them to diſperſe themſelves and go home, they ſaid, They would not for ſuch Rogues as the King's Life-Guard were, but they would ſoon be at White-hall: but you ſhall ſee what a Diſguiſe is put upon it, If the King will not give us Liberty of Conſcience, May-day ſhall be a bloody Day. This is, Gentlemen, to give us an Alarm, that we may not be too ſecure: And this muſt be puniſh'd as High Treaſon, elſe we do deſtroy all. I think no body would have the Innocent to ſuffer: I had rather a guilty Perſon ſhould eſcape, than a guiltleſs Perſon ſuffer. You hear the Conſtable cannot ſwear that all thoſe were the Men, and ſome others, becauſe in ſuch a Hurry a particular Perſon cannot be known: Except you know any of them by ſight, I cannot ſee how you can find them guilty; God forbid.

John Richardſon, Richard Woodward,
Thomas Limberick, to the Bar.

Counſ. You Gentlemen of the Jury, theſe three that were call'd laſt to the Bar ſtand indicted as the others, for levying War and Rebellion in Holbourn; you ſhall hear the Evidence, and if we make good the Evidence, you muſt find them guilty.

William Rogers, ſworn Witneſs. My Lord, I found this Man at the head of a Party, and I took him, and committed him to the charge of a Company.

Ld Ch. J. Was he leading them on? Are you ſure he was there?

Witn. He will not deny that he was there, but he made no Reſiſtance at all; for we had three or four Companies ready to ſurpriſe them.

Mrs. Burlingham, Witneſs, ſworn. My Lord, this was the firſt Man that laid hands to pull down my Houſe.

Serj. Wilde. Miſtreſs, was yours a Bawdy-houſe?

Mrs. Burlingham. No; but they dragg'd me out of it.

Ld Ch. J. Was your Houſe pull'd down?

Husband's Anſw. Yes: and all my Goods deſtroy'd, and Ten Pounds in Gold taken out of my Wife's Pocket.

Another Witneſs ſworn.

Judg. What can you ſay of Woodward?

Witn. I cannot ſay he did take any thing out of the Houſe that I know of.

Ld Ch. J. I do not ask you that; But did he go along with them, or had he a Staff in his Hand?

Witn. That John Richardſon, my Lord, is a Tapſter; I heard him ſay he had made Work for us, for he had help'd to pull down a Houſe.

John Hand, Witneſs, ſworn. My Lord, on Saturday laſt at ſix of the Clock, I heard him in the red Hair ſay, I have made Work for you all; I do not know what he is.

Ld Ch. J. What do you ſay for you ſelf?

Limerick Priſoner. My Lord, I went up to ſee what the Tumult was doing, for I lodg'd hard by; and when they had pull'd down the Houſe, ſome run one way, and ſome another; and I was going to Weſtminſter, and as I was walking up Holbourn, the reſt of them were at my Heels.

Ld Ch. J. That was becauſe you was their Captain, and dragg'd the Woman out of the Houſe that ſays ſhe hath loſt all ſhe had. Woodward, what ſay you?

Woodward. My Lord, Mr. Brooks gave me a black Pot to drink, and I ſtaid no longer than the drinking of that.

Ld Ch. J. What do you ſay that Richardſon pull'd down the Woman's Houſe?

Priſ. My Lord, there was a Whore that clapped hands on me, and I wrung my ſelf from her, and told her that her Houſe ſhould be pull'd down.

Ld Ch. J. Truly I ſee ſcarce an Apprentice among you all, and I am glad of it there is no more.

Witn. I dogg'd him home to his Maſter's Houſe, but did not lay hold on him.

Priſ. I am very innocent of any thing of hurt that I did.

Ld Ch. J. Prove it.

Priſ. I was alone, How can I prove it? I was not all the Holidays abroad.

The Apprentice's Maſter. All Monday he was at home, and on Tueſday he was at home.

Serj. Wilde. It is impoſſible for him to be one of them, you might miſtake.

Ld Ch. J. You Gentlemen of the Jury, in this Caſe take notice: As for Woodward, they ſay he was there with a Stick in his Hand. I would have you take notice that there is but one Witneſs: for the other you have his own Brags, if you will believe him, that he pull'd down a Houſe, you have no other; if you will believe him to be a bragging Fool, you may. And now for Limerick's Witneſs, he ſhall be heard.

The Priſoner's Witneſs.

Ld Ch. J. What do you know of the Priſoner at the Bar?

Witn. This Man, my Lord, did lie in my Houſe, and he did never ſtay out after Nine or Ten of the Clock: He was at home every Night betimes, and did give me all his Money to lay up, and he did earn Sixteen Pence a Day.

Another Woman, Witneſs, ſworn.

Ld Ch. J. What can you ſay?

Witn. My Lord, I can ſay nothing but that he is a very honeſt Man.

John Sharpeliſſe, Priſoner at the Bar.

His Indictment read.

Counſ. Gentlemen, he at the Bar ſtands indicted for High Treaſon, and ſtirring up Rebellion in Poplar at the Head of Five hundred Perſons, and pulling down Houſes in Ratcliff-Highway, which we ſhall endeavour to prove.

John Harding, Owen Maxum, Witneſſes call'd, but came not in againſt the Priſoner.

Ld Ch. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, you know for Matter of Fact you are Judges: if you are not ſatisfied in the Evidence, then you cannot find them guilty. Conſider who thoſe Perſons are, where the Evidences have not given ſufficient Satisfaction.

The Sum of the Jury's Verdict.

THE Jury being diſmiſs'd to conſider of their Verdict, after a ſhort ſtay they return'd, and found as to Meſſenger, Appletree, Beaſly, and Greene, that according to the Time in the Indictment mention'd, they were met together in a riotous manner in East Smithfield in Middleſex, ſex, and about Moorfields, under colour to pull down the Bawdy-Houſes. That their Captain was Beaſley, who led them on with his Sword drawn, and that they had their Enſign carry'd by Meſſenger, which was an Apron carry'd upon a Pole, and ſo they march'd with their Conductor. That they reſiſted the Conſtable who charg'd them in the King's Name to keep the Peace, and ſtruck him, and took away his Staff; and that theſe ſeveral Perſons were Abetters in that Tumult.

And as to Bedell and Latimer, they found that a great Number of People were met together arm'd with Swords, Clubs and Staves, &c. at Clerkenwel-green, to break New-Priſon there; and had their Commander, who had a Pike in his Hand, and came to New-Priſon, and releas'd the Priſoners, ſome whereof were committed for Felony; and that when they were commanded to be gone, they cry'd out that they had been Servants, but now they would be Maſters; and that theſe Perſons were ſeen acting in the Tumult, and there taken.

As for Cotton, they found, that the riotous Perſons were met together upon the 24th of March with a great Number of People arm'd with their Swords, and ſuch like warlike Weapons, for pulling down Bawdy-houſes: that when Sir Philip Howard with the King's Guards came up to them, and commanded them to depart, they refus'd; and when it was given out that Sir Philip Howard was the Duke of York, thinking thereby they would be appeas'd, they were enrag'd the more, and declar'd, that if the King would not give them Liberty of Conſcience, thay would make May-day a bloody May-day, theatning to pull down White-hall; and very contemptuouſly ſlighted the King's Guards, becauſe they were but a ſmall Number: and this Cotton was prov'd to be one of them in the Action, and all along acting in the Riot.

And further, as to Limerick, he was met with the ſame Pretence of pulling down of Bawdy-houſes, being arm'd as the reſt were, and was own'd by the Rabble to be the Captain of their Company: that he with his Companions pull'd down the Houſe of Peter Burlingham, and ſtole his Goods. The reſt were found Not guilty.

The Jury having thus found it ſpecially, my Lord Chief Juſtice commanded the Priſoners again to the Bar, to whom he ſpoke to this Effect: That we all now ſee what great Cauſe we have to bleſs God, that we live under ſo merciful a Prince, and ſo good a Law as we now find we do live under; and that not only one Prince hath been ſo merciful, but ſuch has been the Graciouſneſs of other former Kings of England, that we ſhall rarely find any Severity us'd in the execution of Penal Statutes, where any fair means (which conſtantly hath been us'd) could have any Effect at all. That our Juſtice is not privately but publickly adminiſtred in the ſight of all People, like a Beacon that gives warning to all; ſo that all might take notice thereof, and avoid the like Danger that others have fallen into. That the Priſoners more eſpecially ought to bleſs God, and ſeriouſly to reflect within themſelves this great Mercifulneſs of our King and Law: for hereby they ſee they have not been ſerv'd ſo as they have ſerv'd others (for then upon the very apprehending of them they might have receiv'd their Execution) but contrariwiſe, they have had a fair Trial, not by Strangers, but by their own Country and Neighbours, having had the Liberty to ſpeak what they could for themſelves, and Witneſſes for them, ſo that if it were poſſible all might have been found innocent; and he heartily wiſh'd all could have been ſo found; and that ſome bleſſed be God, are not found Guilty, and to them he hop'd this would be a ſufficient Warning, &c.

Now as to all theſe Eight, againſt whom the Verdict was ſpecially found, the Court took further time (becauſe they would adviſe thereof) before they would give their Judgment whether High Treaſon or no, it being declar'd by my Lord Chief Juſtice to be Matter of Law; and in the mean time theſe Perſons are to remain in ſafe Cuſtody in his Majeſty's Goal at Newgate.

And for the other Six, viz.

John Earls,	Richard Farrel,
William Wilks,	John Richardſon,
Richard Woodward,	William Ford;

The Jury found them Not guilty, and ſo acquitted them of the Offence whereof they ſtood charg'd, who after ſeveral Admonitions by the Court for their future good Behaviour, were diſcharg'd.

The Lord Chief Juſtice KELING'S Report of the Judgment of the Judges in relation to the aforeſaid Trial.

Meſſenger, Appletree, Beaſly, Green, and others, indicted for levying War and pulling down Bawdy-Houſes, and breaking open Priſons.

Memorandum, That at the Seſſions at the Old Baily, after Eaſter, in the Twentieth Year of K. Charles II. ſeveral diſſolute Perſons having on Eaſter-Tueſday and Wedneſday next before, aſſembled together, and led by Perſons whom they call'd Captains, and having Colours, viz. Aprons, &c. on Staves, went to ſeveral Places on pretence to pull down Bawdy-Houſes, and break open Priſons and ſet Priſoners at Liberty; and having actually pull'd down ſome Houſes, and broke up the Priſon at Clerkenwell, and let out four Priſoners there, were by the Direction of the King's Counſel, viz. Mr. Attorney, Sir Jeffery Palmer, having Order to proceed againſt them, he directed four Indictments to be preferr'd againſt them, who were taken, viz. one Indictment againſt Peter Meſſenger, Richard Beaſly, William Green, and Thomas Appletree, and another Indictment againſt Edward Cotton, and a third againſt Edward Bedell and Richard Latimer, and a fourth againſt Thomas Limerick. All the Indictments were, that they with other Perſons to the Number of 500, unknown to the Jurors, being arm'd in a warlike Manner with Swords, Half-pikes, Halberts, long Staves, and other Arms offenſive and defenſive, with Force and Arms, unlawfully and traiterouſly aſſembled themſelves together, and levied War againſt the King; &c. And firſt I told them they had not done well to make ſo many ſeveral Indictments, for by that means the King's Evidence would be broken; whereas if all had had been put into one Indictment, the Evidence as to the main Deſign would have been intire againſt all: and then the aſſembling in ſeveral Places to the ſame Intent had made the Matter more foul, and would have been aptly given in Evidence againſt them all to the ſame Jury, and the ſeveral Acts which each of them did, would have come in better. But however we proceeded upon the Indictments as they were; and after the Evidence given againſt the four in the firſt Indictment, when I came to give Directions to the Jury, I told them that altho' I was well ſatisfy'd in my own Judgment, that ſuch aſſembling together as was prov'd, and the pulling down Houſes on pretence they were Bawdy-houſes, was High-Treaſon, becauſe they took upon them Regal Power, to reform that which belong'd to the King by his Law and Juſtices to correct and reform; and it would be a ſtrange Way and miſchievous to all People to have ſuch a rude Rabble without an Indictment to proceed in that manner againſt all Perſons Houſes which they would call Bawdy-houſes, for then no Man were ſafe; therefore as that way tore the Government out of the King's Hands, ſo it deſtroy'd the great Privilege of the People, which is not to be proceeded againſt, but upon an Indictment firſt found by a Grand-Jury, and after upon a legal Trial by another Jury, where the Party accus'd was heard to make his Defence; yet I told them, becauſe the Kings of this Nation had oftentimes been ſo merciful, as when ſuch Outrages had been heretofore done, not to proceed capitally againſt the Offenders, but to proceed againſt the Offenders in the Star-Chamber, being willing to reduce their People by milder Ways if it were poſſible to their Duty and Obedience; yet that Lenity of the King in ſome Caſes did not hinder the King when he ſaw there was need to proceed in a ſeverer way, to take that Courſe which was warranted by Law, and to make greater Examples, that the People may know the Law is not wanting ſo far to the Safety of the King and his People, as to let ſuch Outrages go without capital Puniſhment, which is at this time abſolutely neceſſary, becauſe we our ſelves have ſeen a Rebellion rais'd by gathering People together upon fairer Pretences than this was: For no ſuch Perſons uſe at firſt to declare their wickedeſt Deſign; but when they ſee that they may effect their Deſign, then they will not ſtick to go further, and give the Law themſelves, and deſtroy all that oppoſe them. But yet becauſe there was no body of the Long Robe there but my Brother Wilde, then Recorder of London, and my ſelf, and that this Example might have the greater Authority, I did reſolve that the Jury ſhould find the Matter ſpecially, and then I would procure a Meeting of all the Judges of England, and what was done ſhould be by their Opinion, that ſo this Queſtion might have ſuch a Reſolution as no Perſon afterwards ſhould have reaſon to doubt the Law, and all Perſons might be warn'd how they for the time to come mingle themſelves with ſuch Rabble on any kind of ſuch Pretences: and thereupon the Jury as to the firſt four in the firſt Indictment gave a Special Verdict to this Effect, viz.

A Special Verdict as to Meſſenger, Appletree, Beaſly, and Green.

They find that the 24th of March laſt, a great Number of Perſons to the Number mention'd in the Indictment, were aſſembled in Eaſt-Smithfield and Moorfields, in the County of Middleſex, with Arms mention'd in the Indictment, on pretence of pulling down Bawdy-houſes; that Beaſly led them, and was called their Captain, and had in his Hand a naked Sword which he brandiſh'd over his Head; and that Meſſenger had a piece of green Apron on a Staff, which he flouriſh'd as Colours in the Head of the Company; and that Beaſly and he led the Company as their Leaders; that they did the like on Wedneſday the 25th of March, and were breaking down Houſes. That Peverell, one of the Conſtables of Middleſex, having a Conſtable's Staff in his Hand, came to them with other Perſons to aid him, and charged them to depart and keep the Peace, and thereupon Beaſly with his Sword ſtruck him, and wounded him; and ſeveral Perſons aſſembled with him, ſtruck him down, and took away his Conſtable's Staff. That the ſaid William Green was among them, caſting up his Cap, and hollowing, with a Staff in his Hand; and that whilſt he was amongſt them he was knock'd down by a Party of the King's Soldiers that came to ſuppreſs them, and was then taken. That Beaſly ſtruck at the Enſign that led thoſe Soldiers. That the ſaid Appletree was amongſt them both Days, and was the firſt that ſtruck at Peverell the Conſtable, and was amongſt them at Burlingham's Houſe on Saffron-hill in the County of Middleſex, and pull'd part of the Houſe down, and the next Houſe to it, and ſtruck at one that admoniſh'd him to be quiet. And if upon the whole Matter, it ſhall ſeem to the Court that they are guilty of the Offence mention'd in the Indictment, then they find them Guilty, &c.

Special Verdict alſo as to Cotton.

On the Second Indictment as to Cotton alone, the Jury did find that at the Time and Place mention'd in the Indictment, a great Number of Perſons, to the Number mention'd in the Indictment, met together arm'd with Swords, Clubs, Staves, and other Weapons, under pretence of pulling down Bawdy-houſes, and had a Cloth on a Staff for an Enſign carry'd before them. And that Sir Philip Howard, with a Troop of the King's Guards, found them arm'd in ſuch a ſeditious Manner, and commanded them to diſperſe; that they refus'd ſo to do, and threw Stones at him; that ſome of them enquir'd who it was that led thoſe Guards, whether it was the Duke of York? and being told it was, they preſently threw Stones at Sir Philip Howard who led the Horſe; and ſome of them ſaid, that unleſs the King would give them Liberty of Conſcience, May-day ſhould be a bloody Day; others bid kill the Guards, and others ſaid, that they would come and pull down Whitehall; and others ſaid, they would be with them at Whitehall, (the King's Capital Palace) and that they car'd not for the Guards, for they were but Two or Three hundred, and they could eaſily knock them on the Head; that they continu'd many Hours till they were diſpers'd by the Guards. That Cotton who was indicted, was one of them aſſembled in this Manner, and that Cotton was amongſt them the next Day when they were aſſembled in the ſame Manner, and was pulling down a Houſe in the Pariſh of St. Leonard Shoreditch in the County of Middleſex; and if on the whole Matter, &c.

On

Special Verdict on the third Indictment, Bedell and Latimer.

On the third Indictment againſt Bedell and Latimer, the Jury find that the Day and Place mention'd in the Indictment, a great Number of Perſons to the Number mention'd in the Indictment, armed as in the Indictment, did meet together on Clerkenwell-Green in the County of Middleſex, on pretence of breaking open Priſons, and releaſing Priſoners; that one of them who had a Halfpike in his Hand, own'd himſelf to be their Captain; that they came ſo aſſembled together to a Place there call'd the New Priſon, being a publick Priſon of the County of Middleſex, and then and there ſaid, that they came to ſearch for Priſoners; and brake open the Priſon-Doors, and let out four Priſoners, two whereof were committed thither for Felony, and two for other Offences; and that they being charg'd to depart, reply'd, they had been Servants long, but now they would be Maſters; that ſome being taken, they cry'd, One die, and all die. That Latimer was amongſt them, and active in breaking of the Priſon, and was with the reſt in the Priſon after it was broken open; and that Bedell was there, and being purſu'd by one of the King's Soldiers, call'd out to the reſt of the Company to face about, and not to leave him: And if on the whole, &c.

Special Verdict as to Limerick.

On the fourth Indictment againſt Limerick the Jury find, that the Day, Year and Place in the Indictment mention'd, a great Number of Perſons to the Number, &c. aſſembled together on pretence of pulling down of Bawdy-houſes; and being arm'd prout in the Indictment, they marched in warlike Manner, and the ſaid Limerick led them as their Captain with a Club in his Hand, and was own'd by the Company to be their Captain: That the ſaid Limerick had the ſaid Perſons to the Houſe of Peter Burlingham, and they pull'd down the ſaid Houſe, and deſtroy'd and took away divers Goods of the ſaid Burlingham's, to the Value of 30 l. And if on the whole Matter, &c.

And in Eaſter Term following, all the Judges met at my Chamber, there being then but Eleven. My Lord Bridgeman, who was Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, being then Lord Keeper, the Judges were my ſelf, Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench, Sir M. Hale the Chief Baron, and my Brother Atkins, Brother Twiſden, Brother Tyrell, Brother Turner, Brother Wyndham, Brother Archer, Brother Rainsford, Brother Morton, and Brother Wyld.

And on the whole Matter the Chief Baron Hale deliver'd his Opinion, that there was no Treaſon in the Caſe, becauſe he ſaid that the Stat. 1 Q. Mary, cap. 12. is, That if any Perſons, to the Number of Twelve, or more, aſſemble to the Intent to pull down Incloſures, &c. with force, and continue together an Hour after Proclamation made for their Departure, it ſhall be Felony; and if thoſe Actions had been Treaſon at Common Law, it had been to no purpoſe to make it Felony.

But all the other Judges anſwer'd, That this was the Objection made by ſome Judges in the Caſe of Bradſhaw and Burton, which is reported by Popham in his Reports, pag. 122. and there it was reſolv'd, that if any Perſons aſſembled with Force to alter the Laws, or to ſet a Price on Victuals, or to lay violent Hands on the Magiſtrate, as on the Mayor of London, and the like, and with Force attempt to put the ſame in Execution, this is Rebellion and Treaſon at the Common Law; and they there reſolv'd, that that Statute of 1 Mary was to be intended, where Perſons, to the Number of Twelve, or more, pretending any or all of them to be injur'd in particular, as by reaſon of their Common, or other Intereſt in the Land inclos'd, and the like, aſſemble to pull it down forcibly in Caſes where they have an Intereſt, or where in particular they are annoy'd or griev'd, that is not Treaſon: But in caſe their Act goeth generally to pull down Incloſures, in which they, or any of them, are not particularly concern'd, this Act, if it be put in Execution by Force, is Treaſon at Common Law. And it was agreed by us all, that the Statute of 13 Eliz. which maketh the Intention in many Caſes Treaſon, extends to nothing, but where if the Act had been done, it had been Treaſon at the Common Law.

And therefore all the reſt of the Judges did unanimouſly agree, that this Riſing, with Intent to pull down Bawdy-houſes in general, or to break open Priſons in general, and let out Priſoners, and putting their Intention in Execution by Force, any of theſe Inſtances was a levying War againſt the King, and High Treaſon at Common Law, within the Declaration of the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. and for that, beſides the Reſolution in Popham's Reports before cited, we conſider'd the Caſe of the Apprentices, reported in the ſecond Part of Anderſon's Reports, p. 4, 5. where it was reſolv'd, that by the Statute of 13 Eliz. if any intend to levy War for any thing, which the Queen by her Laws and Juſtice ought to do, and reform in Government as Queen, this ſhall be an Intendment to levy War againſt the Queen within that Statute of 13 Eliz. And as we ſaid before, nothing can be Treaſon by the Intention within the Statute, which had not been Treaſon by the Common Law, if it had been actually put in Execution. And ſee the ſame Book of Anderſon, Part II. pag. 66. and by the Caſe of ſeveral Perſons in Oxfordſhire riſing to pull down Incloſures in general, reſolv'd accordingly; in which Caſe it was alſo reſolv'd, that if any Perſons riſe and aſſemble together, with intent to levy War, the Juſtices of the Peace and Sheriffs may uſe Force to ſuppreſs ſuch Rebels, without any ſpecial Commiſſion or Warrant, and this by the Common Law. And ſee Popham's Reports, p. 121. and a Reſolution of all the Judges, 39 Eliz. that any Juſtice of the Peace, Sheriff, or other Magiſtrate, or any other Subject of the King, may, by the Common Law, arm themſelves, to ſuppreſs Riots, Rebellions, or reſiſt Enemies, and endeavour themſelves to ſuppreſs ſuch Diſturbers of the Peace: But they ſaid the moſt diſcreet way was for every one to attend and aſſiſt the Juſtices in ſuch Caſe, or other Miniſters of the King in doing it: And Cook, Pl. Cor. 9. If any levy War to expulſe Strangers, to deliver Men out of Priſon, to remove Counſellors, or to any other End pretending Reformation on their own Heads without Warrant, this is a levying of War againſt the King, becauſe they took upon them Royal Authority. And Moor's Reports, pag. 620, 621. in the Caſe of the Earl of Eſſex, in which, amongſt other things, it was reſolv'd, that his Attempt with Force to remove the Queen's Counſellors was High Treaſon; and likewiſe that the Earl of Southampton, who adher'd to him, altho' he knew of no other Purpoſe of the Earl of Eſſex, but a private Quarrel againſt ſome of the Queen's Servants, yet this was Treaſon in him, the Act of the Earl of Eſſex being Rebellion and Treaſon; and ſo it was alſo reſolv'd, that all thoſe who went with him out of Eſſex-Houſe in aid of him, it was Treaſon in them, whether they knew any thing of his Intent or not. And Cro. Part I. p. 583. in Benſtead's Caſe, it was reſolv'd by all the Judges, That going to Lambeth-Houſe in warlike Manner with Drums, and a Multitude, as in the Indictment, to the Number of Three hundred, &c. to ſurprize the Archbiſhop, who was a Privy Counſellor, was Treaſon. And, 2*dly*, it was reſolv'd that the Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, may ſit, enquire and try Priſoners all in one Day. 3*dly*, It was reſolv'd, that the breaking of a Priſon, wherein Traytors were in durance, and cauſing them to eſcape, was Treaſon, altho' the Parties did not know that Traytors were there. And ſo to break a Priſon whereby Felons eſcape, this is Felony, tho' they do not know them to be in Priſon for ſuch Offence. Note, That Reſolution as to breaking a Priſon where Felons, &c. are, muſt (as I think) be intended only where the Intent was only to break open one Priſon, and no more; for if the Deſign was to break open Priſons in general, and they put that in Execution as to one Priſon, that is High Treaſon according to the Books beforecited; but then on the Evidence it muſt be prov'd that their Intent was ſuch, and by ſuch Proof as ſatisfieth the Jury.

After this Reſolution in general, we went to conſider the particular Caſes as they were found upon the ſeveral Special Verdicts; and thereupon it was agreed by all of us, except the Chief Baron, who ſaid he doubted on the main; That as to Meſſenger and Beaſly in the firſt Verdict, and to Cotton in the ſecond Special Verdict, and as to Limerick in the fourth Special Verdict, that the Matter, as it was found againſt theſe four, was High Treaſon in them all, and accordingly they had Judgment, and were Executed: But as to Appletree in the firſt Special Verdict, and as to Latimer in the third Special Verdict, there was difference in Opinion amongſt us, whether the Verdict was ſufficiently found againſt them to judge it High Treaſon or not. For beſides the Chief Baron, who was againſt all, my Brother Atkins, Tyrell, Windham, and Wyld, held that the Verdict was not ſufficient againſt thoſe two, for to give Judgment that they were guilty of Treaſon; becauſe, they ſaid, it was not expreſly found that they were aiding and aſſiſting. But my ſelf, Brother Turner, Twiſden, Archer, Raynsford, and Moreton, thought the Verdict, as it was found againſt them, to be as full and plain as any of the reſt. For firſt as to Appletree, the Verdict firſt finds in general, that the Number in the Indictment were aſſembled, as in the Indictment, with an Intent to pull down Bawdy-houſes: That Beaſly led them as their Captain; that Meſſenger had a green Apron upon a Staff, which he flouriſh'd as Colours; and then that Appletree, the Perſon now in queſtion, was amongſt them both the Days, and was the firſt that ſtruck at Peverell the Conſtable, and was amongſt them at Burlingham's Houſe at Saffron-Hill, and pull'd part of that Houſe down, and the next to it, and ſtruck at one that admoniſh'd him to be quiet; ſo that here are ſeveral Acts of Force found to be actually committed by him in purſuance of their Deſign, and then there is no need to find him to be Aiding and Aſſiſting: for that Clauſe, we ſaid, was only neceſſary to be found where the Jury find a Perſon was there among them, and find no particular Act of Force done by him, but only his Preſence, there it is neceſſary that they find he was preſent Aiding and Aſſiſting. And for the ſame Reaſons we held the Verdict to be full alſo againſt Latimer, becauſe it was firſt found that the Multitude was aſſembled, as in the Indictment, on pretence of breaking Priſons and releaſing Priſoners in general, which is agreed by all (except the Chief Baron) to be Treaſon; and then they find that Latimer was amongſt them, and active in breaking open the Priſon at Clerkenwell (where Priſoners, ſome for Felony, and others were let looſe) and that he was with the reſt in the Priſon after it was broken open, and ſo an Act fix'd upon him. But altho' ſix of us were well ſatisfy d in our Judgments as to them, yet when I waited on the King, I acquainted him there was ſome Difference in Opinion as to thoſe two upon finding of the Special Verdict; and altho' the greater Number of us were of Opinion, that the Verdict was well found as to thoſe alſo, yet I intreated his Majeſty to make uſe of that difference in Opinion to ſhew his Mercy towards them, the rather becauſe we had agreed, that as to four of them the Verdict was clearly good as to proceed to Judgment againſt them, and that I hop'd would be Example enough to deter others from the like Practices; and beſides it would appear an Inſtance of his Majeſty's great Mercy, that he would not proceed to the laſt Extremity againſt any, where there was not a full Concurrence of all his Judges: which his Majeſty was pleas'd to take very graciouſly, and order'd me to proceed accordingly, and ſo they two were ſpar'd. But as to Green in the firſt Special Verdict, and Bedell in the third Special Verdict, we all agreed that the Verdict was not full enough as to them for us to judge it Treaſon in them, becauſe the Verdict only finds that they were preſent, and finds no particular Act of Force committed by them, and doth not find that they were Aiding and Aſſiſting to the reſt; and it is poſſible one may be preſent amongſt ſuch a Rabble only out of Curioſity to ſee: and whether they were Aiding and Aſſiſting is Matter of Fact, which ought to be expreſly found by the Jury, and not be left to us upon any colourable Implication; and accordingly theſe two were diſcharg'd.

The

The TRIAL of ROBERT HAWKINS, Clerk, late Miniſter of Chilton, at Ailesbury, 11 March, 1668.

UPON Tueſday, being the 9th of March 1668, I went to Ailesbury, and got thither about Four of the Clock in the Afternoon, and about the ſame time came in the Reverend Judges, viz.

Sir Matthew Hale, Knt. (then Lord Chief Baron of his Majeſty's Court of Exchequer, but now) Lord Chief Juſtice of England; and Hugh Windham, Serjeant at Law. And upon Wedneſday the 10th of March the Aſſizes began, and in the Afternoon of the ſame Day, Larimore (by the Advice of Sir John Croke, who had then got Leave to come to the Aſſizes) carried his Bill of Indictment againſt me, to the Grand Jury: Their Names were as followeth, John Hill, Gent.

Samuel Grange, Gent.
Richard Cokeman, Gent.
Jacob Sale, Gent.
Thomas Redding, Gent.
Thomas Berringer, Gent.
Clement Summerford, Gent.
John Winter, Gent.
John Burnham, Gent.
Ralph Rice, Gent.
Jonathan Tomlins, Gent.
William Barret, Gent.
John Butterfield, Gent.
William Pedder, Gent.
John Fosket, Gent.
John Sare, Gent.
John Merydale, Gent.
Robert Worrel, Gent.
George Wells, Gent.
In all Nineteen.

Theſe were the Gentlemen of the Grand Inqueſt for the Body of the County of Buckingham, and unto them the foreſaid Larimore exhibited his Bill of Felony againſt me; the Sum, and Subſtance of it, was as followeth:

The Grand Inqueſt for our Sovereign Lord the King upon their Sacred Oaths preſent, that Robert Hawkins, late of Chilton, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk, did upon the 18*th of* September, in the 20*th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord* Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. with Force, and Arms, &c. at Chilton aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, two Gold Rings, each of them at the Value of Ten Shillings; one white Holland Apron, of the Value of One Shilling Six Pence; two pieces of Gold, each of them at the Value of Ten Shillings, and Nineteen Shillings in Silver, of the Goods and Chattels of Henry Larimore, in the Pariſh and County aforeſaid, then and there being found, then and there Felonioufly he did ſteal, take, and carry away, contrary to the Peace, &c.

This Bill was Signed by the Grand Jury, Billa Vera, and returned to my Lord Chief Baron Hale, who then ſat on the Crown's ſide, (or upon Life and Death) about Six of the Clock at Night.

Upon Thurſday the 11th of March 1668, my Lord Chief Baron came to the Hall about Eight of the Clock in the Morning, and the Court being ſet, I rendred my ſelf willing to by tryed according to the Laws of this Kingdom. And when the Clerk of the Aſſizes ſaw me bow to the Court, he then inform'd my Lord (and ſaid) this is Mr. Hawkins, who ſtands indicted for Felony; and then the Clerk of the Arraigns read the Bill, which was ſign'd and return'd, as beforeſaid; and then I was ſet to the Bar, without any other Priſoners.

Clerk of the Arraigns ſaid, Robert Hawkins, hold up thy Hand, which I then did, and then the Clerk read the Indictment againſt me as followeth.

YOU ſtand indicted in Ailesbury, in the County of Bucks, by the Name of Robert Hawkins, late of Chilton in the County aforeſaid, Clerk, for that you the ſaid Robert Hawkins (not having the Fear of God before your Eyes) upon the 18*th of* September, in the 20*th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord* Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. With Force and Arms, &c. at Chilton aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, into the Dwelling-houſe of one Henry Larimore, Feloniouſly did enter, and two Gold Rings at the Value of Ten Shillings each of them; one white Holland Apron, of the Value of One Shilling and Six Pence; two pieces of Gold, each of them at the Value of Ten Shillings, and Nineteen Shillings in Silver, of the Goods and Chattels of him, the ſaid Henry Larimore, then and there being found, then and there Feloniouſly you did ſteal, take, and carry away, contrary to the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, his Royal Crown and Dignity, &c.

How ſay'ſt thou, Robert Hawkins, art thou Guilty of the Felony whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not Guilty?

Robert Hawkins. Not Guilty, my Lord.
Clerk. How wilt thou be tried?
Rob. Hawk. By God and the Country.
Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.
Court. Call the Jury, which the Clerk did.

Cryer, Call theſe, viz.

Richard Lambourne.
James Reynolds, Jun.
Robert Hoare, I challeng'd him.
L. C. B. Set him by.
Edward Butler.
Tho. Coles, I challeng'd him.
L. C. B. Set him by.
Richard Hearneſe.
Thomas Sanders of Chilton was challeng'd by Larimore, contrary to Cuſtom.
Edward Carter.
John Goodwyn.

William Porter.
John Ringham.
William Cannon, Jun.
William Welch.
Edward Cope.
Francis Ruſhell.

All theſe being in Number Fifteen, but three of them were challeng'd, two of them by me (I being inform'd they were no Friends to the Church of England) and for the third, viz. Mr. Tho. Sanders, he was challeng'd by Larimore contrary to Cuſtom, without ſhewing any Reaſon, he being a Neighbour that knew us both, and the Buſineſs better than any of the reſt of the Jurors. The other Twelve were ſworn as followeth,

Clerk. Rob. Hawkins, Hold up thy Hand, which I did.

Marſhal. Richard Lambourne, Lay thy Hand upon the Book; look upon the Priſoner.

YOU ſhall well and truly Try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in Charge according to your Evidence, So help you God: Kiſs the Book. And ſo were all the reſt ſworn.

Clerk. Cryer, count theſe. Richard Lambourne, James Reynolds, two, &c. Twelve good Men, and true, ſtand together, and hear your Evidence.

Clerk. Cryer, make a Proclamation.

O Yes, &c.

IF any Man can inform my Lords, the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney, of any Murders, Felonys, or Treaſons, done, or committed by the Priſoner at the Bar, before this Inqueſt be taken, between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard, for now the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands upon his Deliverance. And all others bound by Recognizance to give in Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, come forth and give your Evidence, or elſe you will forfeit your Recognizances.

Clerk. Cryer, call the Witneſſes.

Henry Larimore, Sen. the Proſecutor.
Richard Mayne, Jun. Conſtable.
Tho. Beamſly, Tythingman (Brother in Law to the ſaid Larimore.)
Dodſworth Croke, Eſq; (Sir John Croke's eldeſt Son.)
John Cox.
Henry Larimore, Jun. (Son to the ſaid Larimore, near Twenty Years old and not Baptized.)
Mary Keen.
Joan Beamſly (Siſter to the ſaid Larimore.)
Margaret Larimore (Wife to the ſaid Larimore.)
John Chilton.
William Croke, Gent. (Son to Sir John Croke.)
John Boyſe.
Thomas Welch.
Samuel Salter.
John Stop (Sir John Croke's Man.)
Francis Luce.
William Mantill, alias Miles (Nephew to the ſaid Larimore.)
Richard Mantill, alias Miles (Brother-in-Law to the ſaid Larimore.)
Tho. Croxtone, of Weſton on the Green, in the County of Oxon, Yeoman.
Nicholas Sanders.
Chriſtopher Bethum.
Edward Good, of Long Crendon, Clerk, (a Perſon that committed a Riot and forcible Entry upon my Church at Chilton.)

All theſe (being in Number 22.) were Witneſſes procur'd (by Sir John Croke and Larimore) and ſworn againſt me.

Clerk. Rob. Hawkins, Hold up thy Hand. Which I did.

Here the Indictment was again Read.

The Clerk ſpeaks to the Jury thus, Look upon the Priſoner you that be ſworn. You ſhall underſtand that the Priſoner at the Bar hath been Arraign'd upon this Indictment, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and the Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is, to enquire whether the ſaid Robert Hawkins be guilty of this Felony (in Manner and Form as he ſtands indicted) or not Guilty; if you find him Guilty, you ſhall enquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements he had at the Time of committing this Felony, or at any time ſince; if you do find him Not Guilty, you ſhall enquire if he fled for the ſame; if you do find that he fled for the ſame, you ſhall enquire what Goods and Chattels as if you had found him Guilty: If you find him Not Guilty, and that he did not flee for the ſame, you ſhall ſay ſo, and no more, and hear the Evidence.

Henry Larimore, the Proſecutor, was ſworn as followeth. Mr. Larimore, lay your Hand upon the Book, look upon the Priſoner.

THE Evidence that you ſhall give unto the Court, and to the Jury, between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, ſhall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth. So help you God. Kiſs the Book.

Here I took Pen, Ink and Paper, to take Notes at the Bar.

Larimore ſaid, May it pleaſe your Honour, my Lord, upon Friday the 18th of Sept. in the Year of our Lord 1668, between Twelve and One a Clock at Noon, I lock'd my Doors faſt, and left no body in my Houſe, putting the Keys in my Pocket. I went to a Hemp-plot, about two Furlongs from my Houſe, to pluck Hemp; where I, and the reſt of my Family, continued till an Hour and half of Sun-ſet, and then coming home, found my Doors wide open: So I went in, and run up the Stairs into my Chamber (or upper Loft, over my inward Chamber where I lie) I then hearing a Noiſe in the Chamber where I lie, juſt under me, I peeped down through ſome of the Chinks of the Loft-boards, there I ſaw this Mr. Hawkins (pointing with his Left-hand towards me, but having his Face all that time towards the Judge) ranſacking and rifling of a Box, in which Box was then, amongſt other Goods, one white Holland Apron, a Purſe, and in that Purſe was, at that time, time, two Gold Rings, each of them of the Value of 10 s. two Ten-Shilling-Pieces of Gold, and Nineteen Shillings in Silver, all the which ſaid Gold Rings, Gold and Silver (except one ſmall Piece of Silver or two) I then ſaw this Mr. Hawkins that is now the Priſoner at the Bar, take, and turn out of this very Purſe, which I do now ſhew unto your Honour; and he did then ſteal and carry away all the foreſaid Rings and Money, with the ſaid Holland Apron. All theſe Things, my Lord, I ſaw him take out of my Box and Purſe, for I was all that time looking through the Chinks of the Board. And when Mr. Hawkins heard ſome Noiſe above, I further ſaw the Priſoner now at the Bar go out of my ſaid Lower Room where my Box was, and glanc'd by the Stair-foot Door, and ſo run out of my Houſe, with a great Bunch of Keys in his Hand, down my Yard, and hid himſelf in a Cloſe where there were ſome Beans and Weeds. All this, my Lord, I ſaw with my own Eyes. Moreover, my Lord, I having a Warrant from Sir Richard Pigott to ſearch for the ſaid Rings and Money, &c. I did upon the next Day (it being Saturday, and the 19th of September) after Mr. Hawkins had robbed me, call Richard Mayne, Jun. the Conſtable, and Mr. Tho. Beamſly, Tythingman, with ſome others of our Town, to ſearch Mr. Hawkins's Houſe for my ſaid Money and Goods, which the Day before I ſaw him ſteal from me: But he refuſing to open his Doors, or to let us ſearch; when we ſaw that, the Conſtable broke open his Doors, and then we went in, and ſearching his Houſe I did then find in an inward Room below Stairs, in a Basket hanging on a Pin (put amongſt Papers and Rags, and other Trumpery) this Gold Ring, and this Five-Shilling-Piece of Silver. And I do ſwear, that this Ring and Piece of Silver is one of the ſame Rings, and Pieces of Silver which the Day before I ſaw the Priſoner now at the Bar take out of this very Purſe, it being Friday the 18th of September, and an Hour and half before Sun-ſet. This was the Sum and Subſtance of Larimore's Evidence, whereupon my Lord Chief Baron asked Larimore theſe Queſtions.

Lord Chief Baron Hale. Are you ſure, Larimore, that you left your Doors lock'd, when you went out to pluck Hemp.

Larimore. Yes, my Lord, I am ſure I did.

L. C. B. When?

Lar. Between Twelve and One of the Clock at Noon, my Lord.

L. C. B. Upon what Day was it?

Lar. It was upon the 18th of September laſt paſt, my Lord.

L. C. B. Upon what Day of the Week was it?

Lar. It was upon Friday, my Lord.

L. C. B. In what Year was it?

Lar. It was in the Year of our Lord 1668, my Lord.

L. C. B. Are you ſure that your Chamber-Door where your Box ſtood was lock'd at that time?

Lar. I cannot certainly tell, my Lord.

L. C. B. Was the Box lock'd at that time?

Larimore to this Queſtion paus'd a while, and gave no Anſwer.

Marſhal. My Lord deſires to know whether your Box was lock'd at that time when you loſt your Money, and Goods out of it.

Lar. It was lock'd, my Lord.

Clerk. Was it at that time lock'd, by the Oath you have taken.

Lar. It was lock'd, if it ſhall pleaſe your Honour.

L. C. B. Were the Locks of the Doors and Box broken?

Lar. My Lord, I cannot certainly tell, but I do believe that they were pickt open with ſome pick-lock or falſe Key.

L. C. B. Did you ſee him, that is now the Priſoner at the Bar, in your Houſe at that time, and in that Poſture, by the Oath you have taken.

Lar. I did then ſee him that is now the Priſoner at the Bar in my Houſe, my Lord, as I ſaid before.

L. C. B. At what time of the Day was it that you ſaw him in your Houſe?

Lar. It was an Hour and half before Sun-ſet.

L. C. B. Said to me, Sir, will you ask Larimore any Queſtions before we call more Witneſſes?

Hawkins. Yes, my Lord, if I may have leave.

L. C. B. Sir, you may proceed to your Queſtions.

Hawkins. I humbly thank your Honour.

Hawkins. I pray, my Lord, ask Larimore if he be ſure that I am the Perſon that robbed him.

L. C. B. Larimore, anſwer to the Queſtion.

Lar. Yes, my Lord, I am ſure he is the Perſon that robbed me, for I know him very well.

Hawk. Why did you ſay before Sir John Croke, when I was before him, that you could not ſay that I had ſtollen them.

Lar. I ſaid no ſuch thing, this all that were there can juſtifie.

Hawk. My Lord, I deſire to know of Larimore if he be ſure that it was upon a Friday, and the 18th of September 1668, and an Hour and half before Sun-ſet, when he ſaw me in his Houſe robbing him.

Lar. Replied, that it was upon that Day and Time, as near as he could gueſs.

Hawk. Why (when Larimore found his Doors open, which he expected to have found lock'd) did not he call ſome of his Neighbours to aſſiſt him in ſearching his Houſe, and to ſecure me, or any other Perſon which he might find robbing him, rather than to run up Stairs by himſelf to alarm any Perſon that was in his Houſe, and thereby giving them opportunity to eſcape?

Larimore ſaid, he did not then ſo well conſider of it as now; but being willing, ſeeing his Doors open, ran up the Stairs to know what the Matter was, and looking through the Chinks of the Loft, ſaw me in his Houſe, as aforeſaid.

Hawk. Larimore, did you ſpeak to me when you ſaw me, or endeavour to ſtay me?

Lar. Replied, that he was for that time ſo amazed, that he could not ſpeak to me.

Hawk. My Lord, I think he is ſtill in great Amazement.

Hawk. Was my Houſe the firſt, or the only Houſe you ſearched?

Lar. Replied, No.

Hawk. If you ſaw me commit the Robbery in your Houſe, why then did you ſearch other Houſes for the Goods which you ſaw me ſteal?

Lar. Replied to this, that he had been robbed at ſeveral other times.

Hawk. Why did not you then rather ſend out Hue and Cries to apprehend my Perſon, than to ſearch my Houſe; and why did not you charge me with flat Felony before Sir Richard Pigott, of whom you had your Warrant? if you ſaw me rob you.

Lar. To theſe Queſtions made no direct Anſwer.

L. C. B. Mr. Hawkins, will you ask Larimore any more Queſtions?

Hawk. No, my Lord, not at preſent; but when I come to my Defence, I hope I ſhall be heard.

L. C. B. You ſhall be heard at large, and ſo ſhall they.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour.

Clerk. Aſſ. Larimore, who ſhall be next called?

Lar. Call Henry Larimore the younger.

Clerk. Cryer, call Henry Larimore the younger: who anſwered, here, Sir.

Marſhal. Lay your Hand upon the Book, look upon the Priſoner.

Hawk. My Lord, may I be heard a Word.

L. C. B. Yes Sir, you may go on.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour.

Hawk. My Lord, is it uſual to admit Perſons that are not Baptized to give Evidence upon a Trial of Life and Death? for that Perſon which is now about to be ſworn (I ſuppoſe) is not Baptized.

L. C. B. Sir, a Perſon that is not Baptized, may be ſworn, and give Evidences in Caſes of Felony.

Hawk. My Lord, I ſubmit, but am not fully ſatisfied in it, and if occaſion be I ſhall crave Counſel in that Point, it being Matter of Law, and not of Fact.

L. C. B. The Jury may conſider of it.

Hawk. My Lord, I doubt not but they will weigh of what Validity the Oath, and Evidence of ſuch a Perſon is.

Mar. Larimore the younger, Lay your Hand upon the Book, look upon the Priſoner.

The Evidence that you ſhall give to the Court, between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, ſhall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth. So help you God. Kiſs the Book.

Larimore Jun. My Lord, upon the 18th of September, I came home a little after my Father, and coming in the Yard, I ſaw this Mr. Hawkins (that is now at the Bar) run out of my Father's Houſe, with a great Bunch of Keys in his Hand, and run down my Father's Yard, and hid himſelf in a Cloſe with Beans and Weeds, and when I came into my Father's Houſe, I asked him what Mr. Hawkins did there: He anſwer'd me, that he had done too much there, for he had robbed him.

L. C. B. What Day of the Week was it.

Lar. Jun. It was upon a Friday.

L. C. B. In what Year was it?

Lar. It was this laſt September, my Lord.

L. C. B. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Hawk. Yes, my Lord, if I may be permitted.

L. C. B. You may proceed to your Queſtions.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour.

Hawk. Larimore, are you ſure that I am the Perſon which you ſaw run out of your Father's Houſe?

Lar. Yes, I am ſure that you are the ſame Perſon that I then ſaw run down my Father's Yard.

Hawk. What time of the Day was it when you ſaw me?

Lar. It was an Hour and an half before the Sun was down.

Hawk. Was your Father within when you came there?

Lar. He was within when I came there, and I asked him as aforeſaid.

Hawk. Did your Father ſay no more to you, than what you have related? and did not he enquire which way I ran, or went?

Lar. He ſaid no more, but that you had robbed him.

Hawk. My Lord, and you of the Jury, Is it likely, that when the Father had ſeen me commit a Robbery in his Houſe, and the Son coming in immediately upon it, that the Father would not ask of him which way I went?

Hawk. My Lord, I have done with him at preſent.

Lar. Sen. My Lord, pray let Joan Beamſly be called next.

Clerk. Cryer, call Joan Beamſly.

Cryer. Joan Beamſly. She anſwer'd, here Sir.

Joan Beamſly, Lay your Hand upon the Book, look upon the Priſoner. The Evidence that you ſhall give ſhall be the Truth, &c.

Joan Beamſly. May it pleaſe your Honour, my Lord, upon Friday the 18th of September laſt paſt, about an Hour and half before Sun-ſet, as I was going to Milking in the Street (near Larimore's Houſe) I met Henry Larimore the younger, and being at that time much troubled with the Tooth-ach, I told him of it, deſiring him to help me to ſome hot Water, for I believed that might give me Eaſe; Larimore reply'd, that if I would go with him to his Father's Houſe, he would help me to ſome: So going both together, we ſaw this Mr. Hawkins (that is now the Priſoner at the Bar) run out of Larimore's Houſe, with a great Bunch of Keys in his Hand, and run down Larimore's Yard into a Cloſe of Beans and Weeds, and there hid himſelf; and when we came into Larimore's Houſe, I there heard young Larimore ask his Father what Mr. Hawkins did there; Larimore told his Son that he had done too much there, for he had robbed him. When my Lord Chief Baron Hale heard how theſe three Witneſſes agreed in their Evidence, he ſaid, here is enough ſworn (if believed) to hang twenty Men.

Hawk. I doubt not but to clear my ſelf, notwithſtanding their Evidence, if I may be heard.

L. C. B. You ſhall be heard.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour.

L. C. B. Larimore, have you any more Witneſſes?

Lar. Yes, if it may pleaſe your Honour, a great many more.

L. C. B. Who are they? call them.

Lar. Call Richard Mayne, Conſtable.

Clerk. Cryer, call Richard Mayne, Conſtable; who anſwered, here, Sir. And being ſworn, ſaid as followeth.

Mayne. My Lord, upon Saturday the 19th of September laſt paſt, came Henry Larimore Sen. to me, and giving me a Warrant from Sir Richard Pigott to ſearch, commanding me (amongſt others) to ſearch Mr. Hawkins for ſome Money and Goods, which he had loſt; and when I ſaw his Warrant, I went to Tho. Beamſly, Tythingman, and charged him, with three or four others, thers, to assist me, and coming to Mr. Hawkins's House, he denying to open his Doors, I broke them open, and I went into his House, and Henry Larimore Sen. did find in a Basket this Gold Ring, and Five-shilling-piece of Silver (Mr. Hawkins himself being by whilst he found them) so we had him before Sir John Croke, who committed him to Prison, and so on Sunday Morning we brought him to Ailesbury. This also was sworn by Dodsworth Croke, Esq; Tho. Beamsly, and young Larimore.

L. C. B. Said to me, will you ask these Witnesses any Questions?

Hawk. Yes, my Lord, if I may be permitted.

L. C. B. You may go on to your Questions.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour.

Hawk. Mayne Constable, did Larimore desire you to search my House alone, and did he then tell you, that he saw me rob him the Day before?

Constable. Larimore did desire me to search several Houses, but did not say to me that he saw you rob him.

Hawk. Where is the Warrant upon which you broke open my House? I desire to see it.

Const. Here it is.

Hawk. Was it Larimore himself that found the Ring and Five-shilling-piece?

Const. It was Henry Larimore the elder that found it.

Hawk. Was I in the same Room when he found them?

Const. You were in the same Room when he found them.

Hawk. This was proved false, by Mr. Charles Wilcox and Nicholas Faulkner, which Persons kept me in the Hall, whilst they pretended to find them in the Buttery.

Hawk. Constable, why did you compel me to go before Sir John Croke, which you knew was my Adversary?

Const. We did not force you before him.

Hawk. This I proved to be so, by Michael Reed, Gent. Mr. Tho. Saunders, Mr. Wilcox, Mr. Goulder, Robert Casemore, and many others that saw it.

Hawk. Constable, why did you advise the Jaylor, Mr. Burch, to load me well with Irons?

Const. I did not advise him to do so.

Hawk. Pray, my Lord, ask the Jaylor, Mr. Burch, what the Constable said to him when he brought me thither.

Clerk. Mr. Burch, inform the Court what the Constable said to you, when he brought Mr. Hawkins to you as a Prisoner.

Jaylor. My Lord, when the Constable delivered Mr. Hawkins to me, on Sunday Morning, he said, that Mr. Hawkins was a notorious Pick-lock, and that he was confident he could pick every Lock about the Prison, and therefore he advised me to watch him narrowly, and load him well with Irons.

Thomas Beamsly being sworn, his Evidence being the same in Effect with the Constable's, for Brevity sake I omit; but I craved leave to ask him a Question or two, which being granted were as followeth.

Hawk. Beamsly, Pray what Discourse had you with Mr. Wilcox upon the 19th of September, presently after my House was broken up, concerning the time when (as your Brother pretended to you) he lost the Ring and Five-shilling-piece of Silver?

Beamsly. He did not remember that he had any Discourse with Mr. Wilcox about that.

Hawk. Did you not say to Mr. Wilcox, that your Brother Larimore told you that he had lost the Stone Ring, and Five-shilling-piece of Silver, which (as he pretended was found in my House) before the difference began betwixt me and your Brother; and moreover that your Brother said he had an intent to search for the same a Month before?

Beamsly replied, that he did not remember any such Discourse.

Hawk. My Lord, may I be heard a Word or two.

L. C. B. You may go on.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour.

Hawk. My Lord, I suppose that I can prove these Particulars.

1. That Larimore told Beamsly that he had lost this Gold Ring and Five-shilling-piece of Silver now in Question, before there was any difference between Larimore and my self, which began in Michaelmas Term 1667. This was proved by Mr. Wilcox.

2. And that Larimore confess'd upon his Oath before Sir John Croke (upon the 19th of Sept.) when I was committed, that he lost the said Ring and piece of Silver about a Month before, which must be about Aug. 19. This was proved by Mr. Browne, Faulkner, and others.

3. I can prove that Larimore told Sir Richard Pigott, when he went for his Warrant to search, that he did suspect several Persons for robbing him of this Gold Ring and Five-shilling-piece, and that I was only one of the suspected Persons. This Sir Richard Pigott did acknowledge to be true.

But now he swears that he saw me steal the Gold Ring and Five-shilling-piece out of his House on Friday the 18th of September, an Hour and half before Sun-set, 1668.

Hawk. I pray, my Lord, and you that are of this Jury, take notice of this, and compare the times out of his own Mouth; but more of this when I come to make my Defence.

L. C. B. Larimore, have you any more Witnesses?

Lar. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. B. Call them, who are they?

Lar. Call Margaret Larimore.

Clerk. Cryer, call Margaret Larimore, the Wife of Henry Larimore.

Cryer. Margaret the Wife of Henry Larimore. She being sworn, said, that when she was a Servant to Larimore, which now is her Husband; she had seen Mr. Hawkins, at several unseasonable Hours in the Night (when her Master was in bed) lying lurking in and about her Master's House, Yard, Windows, and Doors, and said that she believed he lay there for no good Intent.

Hawk. My Lord, may I ask this Woman a Question or two?

L. C. B. You may do so, if you please.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour. I'll promise you to be brief.

Hawk. At what time was it, Margaret Larimore, that you saw me lurking in your Master's Yard, as you have said?

Marg. Lar. It was in the Night-time.

Hawk. But how long may it be since?

Marg.

Marg. Lar. I can't tell, it might be about the time that my Maſter was robbed..

Here Larimore prompts his Wife, which I told my Lord, for which he checked him.

Hawk. Did you ſpeak, or call to me when you ſaw me there?

Marg. Lar. No, for I was affrighted at it. This ſame was alſo ſworn by Richard Mantill, alias Miles, Son-in-Law to the ſaid Larimore, and alſo by William his Son, which for brevity ſake I omit farther to relate.

L. C. B. Larimore, Have you any more?

Lar. Yes, my Lord, to prove that this Ring and Five-ſhilling-piece is mine.

L. C. B. Call them, who are they?

Lar. Eſq; Dodſworth, Sir John Croke's eldeſt Son, and Mr. Good, Miniſter of Long Crendon, my Lord.

Clerk. Cryer, call Dodſworth Croke, Eſq; and Edward Good of Long Crendon, Clerk, both anſwer'd, here Sir. They both being ſworn, Mr. Dodſworth Croke ſaid as followeth, (taking the Ring in his Hand, turned it up and down, and looked very narrowly upon it within and without, and put it upon his Finger, and pulling it off ſeveral times in the Face of the Court and Country, he then inform'd my Lord) That he was confident, that this was Larimore's Ring; and for his Proof and Credit, tells the Court that he had pawned it to Larimore.

Mr. Good took the Five-ſhilling-piece into his Hand, and ſwore, that he being at Buckingham Seſſions laſt, about ſome Trouble which I had put him to, he then wanting ſome Money, did pawn a Five-ſhilling-piece to this Larimore for other Money; and he deſiring of him to take care that he had the ſame Piece again, Larimore told him that he put a Mark upon it: So ſeeing a Mark upon this Five-ſhilling-piece, he ſwore that he did verily believe that this was the ſame Five-ſhilling-piece which he had pawned to Larimore at the Seſſions before.

L. C. B. Said to me, Sir, if you will ask the Witneſſes any Queſtions, you may.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour for that Freedom; but I do humbly conceive that the proving of the laſt point, viz. that the Ring and Five-ſhilling-piece was either Larimore's own Goods, or pawn'd to him, is not much material to my Caſe; for I am free to confeſs (as much as I can have ground to believe) which is, that Larimore might have the Ring and Five-ſhilling-piece of Silver in his Poſſeſſion, but the Charge againſt me is, that I ſtole them from him, which I do flatly deny, and do not doubt of clearing my ſelf when I come to my Defence, if I may be heard.

L. C. B. Sir, you need not queſtion but you ſhall be heard.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour, and crave leave to be heard a Word or two (if it be not unſeaſonable.)

L. C. B. You may go on.

Hawk. May it pleaſe your Honour, and the Jury, to take notice that Mr. Good ſwears he believes this to be the Five-ſhilling-piece that he pawned to Larimore laſt Seſſions at Buckingham, but I deſire to know if Larimore ſwears that this is that Piece which Mr. Good pawned then to him, for he beſt knows.

L. C. B. Larimore, what ſay you to that?

Lar. My Lord, I do ſwear that this is the ſame Five-ſhilling-piece which Mr. Good pawned to me, the laſt Seſſions at Buckingham.

Hawk. Then, my Lord, and the Jury, be pleaſed to obſerve, That Seſſions was held upon the 9th and 10th of July, 1668. but the Difference between me and Larimore (for Tythes) was begun in Michaelmas-Term, 1667. which is near nine Months before that Seſſions; and notwithſtanding Larimore did ſay to his Brother Beamſly, upon the 19th of September, that he had loſt this very Ring and Five-ſhilling-piece of Silver before the Difference began, which is impoſſible, my Lord, as appears by the Oaths of Larimore and Mr. Good; for how could he be robbed of that Five-ſhilling-piece nine Months before he had it? And that he did ſay the very Words to his Brother Beamſly we have already proved, by the Teſtimony of Mr. Wilcox.

L. C. B. ſaid, Mr. Hawkins, was this Suit for Tythes begun by you againſt this Larimore before the time that Larimore ſwears this Felony was committed?

Hawk. Yes, my Lord, for I began that Suit for Tythes in Michaelmas-Term, 1667. and Larimore ſwears that I robb'd him upon the 18th of September, 1668. which is, my Lord, about a Year after. My Lord, it is an eaſie way thus for the Fanaticks to pay Tythes; if they can but hang up the Clergy, they may ceaſe all their future Pleading for Liberty of Conſcience.

Now Larimore began to ſtumble, and ſhew his Malice in proſecuting me unjuſtly, by his multiplying of feigned Felonies, wherewith he did then endeavour to load me, of which I appeared innocent.

L. C. B. Larimore, have you any more?

Lar. Yes, my Lord, Pray call John Chilton.

Clerk. Cryer, call John Chilton.

Cryer. John Chilton, who anſwer'd, here, Sir; and being ſworn, my L. C. B. ſaid to him, come Chilton, what can you ſay to this Buſineſs?

John Chilton ſaid, My Lord, I can ſay nothing, but that I am paid for my Boots.

L. C. B. What Boots?

Chilt. My Lord, I am paid for my Boots.

L. C. B. Our Buſineſs is not now about Boots, but however, come, and tell me what thou meaneſt by them?

Chilt. My Lord, Mr. Hawkins brought me a pair of Tops, to put new Legs to them, which I did; and he coming by my Shop, told me he wanted his Boots; I reply'd, they were done: but I being then about to go out, did promiſe Mr. Hawkins to lay them in my Window, ſo that he might take them as he went home, which accordingly he did; and when I came home, I went to Mr. Hawkins, who at that time was at Sir John Croke's Houſe, where he contented me for my Work before we parted: And this is all that I can ſay, my Lord.

L. C. B. What is this to the purpoſe, can you ſay any more Chilton? if you can, go on.

Chil. My Lord, Mr. Hawkins paid me honeſtly for the Boots: But as ſoon as he began to demand the Tythes of Chilton, and did ſue for them, then they lay at me Night and Day to have me charge Mr. Hawkins with flat Felony, for ſtealing the ſaid Boots out of my Shop; but I told them, that I laid them in my Shop-Window for him, and did bid him take them as he came back, and he paid me for my Work, and therefore I cannot ſay he ſtole them.

L. C. B. Who were they that deſired you to charge Mr. Hawkins with the ſtealing of your Boots?

Chil.

Chil. This Larimore, Mr. Dodſworth Croke, Richard Mayne the Conſtable, Miles and John Sanders (who is ſince dead, my Lord.) ---- Larimore here interrupted Chilton, and ſaid, My Lord, I have five or ſix Witneſſes that can prove that all this is falſe which Chilton hath ſworn.

L. C. B. Call them, for I'll hear all, if I ſit till Night.

Then Larimore call'd Dodſworth Croke, William Croke, John Stop, Thomas Welch, Samuel Salter, and William Sanders; all theſe being ſworn, the Sum and Subſtance of their Evidence was to this Effect.

That they had heard John Chilton ſay that I had ſtollen a pair of Boots from him, to which Chilton (being then upon his Oath) ſaid, that Mr. Hawkins did no otherwiſe than what before I have ſworn; and he further added, that he never ſaid that I had ſtollen any thing from him, for he had no reaſon for it.

L. C. B. Did this Larimore deſire you to charge this Mr. Hawkins with Felony? and when did he deſire you to do ſo?

Chilton. My Lord, Larimore, and the reſt that I have named, deſired me to charge Mr. Hawkins with flat Felony, for ſtealing the ſaid Boots, as ſoon as he demanded the Tythes of Chilton; and they would have forced me to fetch a Warrant from a Juſtice of Peace to ſearch for them, and did further threaten me, in caſe I would not do it, that Sir John Croke would indict me at the Aſſizes, as one acceſſary to the ſtealing of my own Goods.

L. C. B. Was Larimore one of them?

Chil. Yes, my Lord, and he ſaid, that he would make me ſwear that Mr. Hawkins had ſtole my Boots, and for that End did ſerve me with a Subpœna to be here. —— Here Larimore the ſecond time interrupted Chilton, and ſaid, My Lord, this Fellow (pointing at John Chilton) is hired by Mr. Hawkins to ſwear this.

Chil. Reply'd, No, my Lord, I am not hired by Mr. Hawkins to ſwear, but I might have been hired, or born out, if I would but ſwear that Mr. Hawkins ſtole my Boots, by one Croxſtone.

L. C. B. How! what is that! hired, or born out to ſwear? by whom, and how, tell me the Story?

Chil. My Lord, I am not hired to ſwear by Mr. Hawkins, but if I would ſwear that he ſtole my Boots out of my Shop, I might have been born out in ſo doing. For Tho. Croxſtone, of Weſton on the Green, in the County of Oxon, told me upon Monday laſt, it being the 8th of March 1668, that if I would but ſwear what he would have me againſt Mr. Hawkins (viz. that he ſtole my Boots) he would bear me harmleſs; but I replied, that it went againſt my Conſcience to do it. I added farther, that if I ſhould be ſo wicked as to ſwear it, Mr. Hawkins can prove the contrary by Mr. William Croke and others; to which Larimore replied, that I need not fear what Mr. Croke knew in that caſe, for he is one of us, and will not juſtifie any thing that may tend to our prejudice. I farther told him that I durſt not do it; for if I ſhould, Mr. Hawkins might make me fly the Country, as Smart did Wheeler: To which Croxſtone replied, that if I would ſwear it, he would bear me out againſt the ſaid Mr. Hawkins as far as an Hundred Pound would go, and if that would not do, as far as Five Hundred Pound would go.

L. C. B. How! bear you out to ſwear! what Croxſtone is this that would do ſo? this is not likely to be true.

Tho. Croxſtone ſaid, My Lord, I ſaid no ſuch thing.

L. C. B. I do not believe it to be true.

Chilton run in, and ſaid, As I live and breath, my Lord, Croxſtone did ſay, if I would ſwear that Mr. Hawkins had ſtole my Boots, he would bear me out, as I ſaid before, and if I made any doubt of it, he would give me Bond to make good his Promiſe.

L. C. B. ſaid, This is ſtange.

Croxſtone, My Lord, I ſaid I would bear him out in ſpeaking the Truth, and no otherwiſe.

Hawk. My Lord, may I be heard?

L. C. B. Yes, you may go on.

Hawk. I thank your Honour. My Lord, pray let me ask Mr. Croxſtone two or three Queſtions.

L. C. B. So you may, go on.

Hawk. Mr. Croxſtone, do you confeſs that you did promiſe to bear out Chilton (as you ſaid before) in ſwearing the Truth?

Croxſtone. Yes, Sir, I did, and no otherwiſe.

Hawk. Was it not about the Boots?

Croxſtone, Yes, Sir, it was ſo.

Hawk. Did not you deſire Chilton to ſwear that I had ſtollen his Boots, after that he had told you I had paid him for them, and thereupon promiſe to bear him out againſt me, in 100 or 500 l?

Croxſtone. I think you cannot prove it againſt me.

Hawk. I pray, my Lord, and you of this Jury, conſider that this Chilton is one of Larimore's Witneſſes, and ſwears for the King, yet he ſwears that he had given me Orders to take thoſe Boots, and that I then paid him for Legging of them, and that he had repeated this to Larimore and Croxſtone ſeveral times; and after all this, Larimore and Croxſtone, with others, us'd their utmoſt Endeavours to perſuade Chilton to charge me with Felony for ſtealing them, and Croxſtone promiſed him to bear him out in ſo doing, as far as 100 l. would go, and if that would not do, as far as 500 l. and give him Bond for his Security, &c. My Lord, if this amounts not to a Subornation, I am miſtaken. But, my Lord, I have two Witneſſes more to prove the ſame againſt Mr. Croxſtone, and I pray that they may be heard.

L. C. B. Who are they?

Hawk. Ann Scoly, and John, the Son of Mr. Tho. Sanders. Both theſe being called, juſtified in Court what Chilton had ſworn againſt Mr. Croxſtone: Upon which my Lord Chief Baron ſaid to Croxſtone, Come, you did ill to ſollicite Perſons to ſwear theſe things which you knew were falſe; and 'tis farther added, that this made not for the King, but rather for the Priſoner at the Bar. After all this, a rude Fellow (Thomas Welch) came in, and ſaid, My Lord, I did hear Chilton ſay, that Mr. Hawkins had ſtole a pair of Boots from him.

L. C. B. What, more Boots ſtill? Come, Larimore, have you any more.

Larimore ſaid, Yes, my Lord, one Mr. Boyce, who being ſworn, ſaid, That at a certain time, he coming into a Houſe at Chilton, found this Mr. Hawkins, now the Priſoner at the Bar, and one James Noble (which Noble was then drunk, and aſleep upon a Bed) and I ſaw Mr. Hawkins have his Hand in Noble's Pocket, and the ſaid Noble told me, that at that time he loſt a Gold Ring and a piece of Gold out of his Pocket.

L. C. B.

L. C. B. ſaid to me, Sir, what ſay you to that?

Hawk. My Lord, I deſire to know if there be any Bill or Indictment againſt me for it.

Clerk. There is none, my Lord, that I do know of.

Hawk. I deſire, my Lord, that Noble may be ſworn, if he be here.

Lar. He is not here, my Lord.

L. C. B. Why was not that Noble here himſelf to proſecute?

Lar. I could not find him, my Lord.

Hawk. I deſire to know whether Boyce came hither of his own accord, or if he be Subpœna'd to be here; (if ſo) by whom, and who bears his Charges.

Boyce. I was Subpœna'd by Larimore, and he bears my Charges, my Lord.

Hawk. How long was it ſince, Mr. Boyce, that you ſaw my Hand in Noble's Pocket, as you ſaid before?

Boyce. It may be near two Years ago, my Lord.

Hawk. Did you ſee me pick (or take) out of the ſaid Noble's Pocket, the ſaid Ring, or piece of Gold, or any thing elſe.

Boyce. I ſaw your Hand in Noble's Pocket, but did not ſee you take any thing out of it.

Hawk. Did Noble ever tell you, that I had pick'd his Pocket of the ſaid Ring, or piece of Gold, or any thing elſe.

Boyce. No; but ſaid, he loſt them at that time.

Hawk. But you ſay that Noble was drunk at that time, and if ſo, it's poſſible he might be miſtaken.

Boyce. So he was drunk, and aſleep likewiſe.

L. C. B. I think you were all drunk.

Hawk. Boyce, you might have done well, to have told Mr. Noble of this, when he told you that he had loſt his Ring and piece of Gold; but can you ſay any thing touching Larimore's being robb'd, or do you know that I am the Perſon that robb'd him?

Boyce. No not I, my Lord, I cannot charge him.

Hawk. But you ſay that Larimore Subpœna'd you to be here, and that he bears your Charges.

Boyce. Yes, my Lord, and ſo he does.

Hawk. Mr. Boyce, if this be all you can ſay for Larimore, you will hardly requite his Charges.

Hawk. My Lord, may I be heard, as to the Evidence of Boyce.

L. C. B. You may go on.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour.

Hawk. This Boyce ſwears, My Lord, that about two Years laſt paſt he ſaw my Hand in Noble's Pocket, and that Noble told him, he then loſt a Gold Ring and piece of Gold. My Lord, I think (with Submiſſion to your Honour and the Court) I am not bound to anſwer to this Charge, becauſe there is no Indictment exhibited againſt me for it, nor is Noble himſelf here to proſecute, or can Boyce ſwear that I pick'd Noble's Pocket, or that Noble ever told Boyce I did (as he himſelf ſwears.) But, my Lord, I obſerve in this the Malice of Larimore's Heart, as well as in that of the Boots; for Boyce ſwears that he can ſay nothing to Larimore's Bill of Robbery, and yet he forces him to come from London hither, to ſtart a ſenſleſs Story about Noble's Ring and Gold, which is of near two Years ſtanding. My Lord, if there had been any Truth in it, why was not Noble himſelf here to proſecute? and why did he let it reſt ſo long? I ſay again, my Lord, if it had been true that I had pick'd Noble's Pocket, and if Larimore had known it, I pray, my Lord, and you of the Jury, what had that concern'd Larimore; but, my Lord, I am as clear of picking Noble's Pocket as I am of ſtealing Chilton's Boots, and as clear of both theſe, as I am of robbing this Fellow Larimore, that now calls my Life in queſtion: Nay, if he can fairly prove me guilty of one, I am willing to ſuffer as guilty of all.

My Lord, I am bold to appeal to your Honour, whether it be a fair Proſecution in Larimore, to ſtir up Chilton falſly to charge me with Felony in ſtealing his Boots, when I had not only a Right in them, but alſo Leave from him to take them, and paid him for his Work, which Larimore himſelf knows. Nay, my Lord, if I had never paid Chilton for his Legs, the Tops being mine, by Law it had not been Felony, but a Treſpaſs, becauſe I had leave from him to take them, and a Right in them, the Tops being mine. And again, my Lord, I appeal to your Honour, whether it be fair in Larimore for him to ride up and down City and Country, to bring a Multitude of Witneſſes together that can ſay nothing to his Bill (as Boyce ſwears he cannot:) If this doth not diſcover Malice in a Proſecutor's Heart, I know not what doth; and if that appears to your Honour and the Jury, to be in him, how far that ought (as well by Law as Equity) to fruſtrate his Evidence, I am willing to leave to your Honour and the Jury, and ſo I have done as to Boyce's Evidence.

L. C. B. Larimore, have you any more?

Larimore. Yes, my Lord, John Cox, and Francis Lucy. They being both ſworn.

John Cox ſaid, My Lord, I being in Mr. Hawkins's Company not long ſince, one asked him, how he thought to come off at the Aſſizes: Mr. Hawkins reply'd, he cared not much for this Plot (tho' he ſhould be Convicted,) for they could but burn him in the Hand for it, and that he could bite out.

Lucy being ſworn, ſaid, that he heard Mr. Hawkins confeſs, that he owed Larimore 15 s. but becauſe he had dealt ſo unjuſtly with him, he would make it coſt Larimore fifteen times 15 s. before he would pay him.

L. C. B. ſaid, This makes little to the purpoſe.

Come Larimore, Have you any more?

Lar. I think not, my Lord.

L. C. B. If you have any more Witneſſes, call them, and they ſhall be heard, and do not ſay, when I am gone, that your Witneſſes could not be heard.

Lar. My Lord, I confeſs they have been fully heard, and I have no more to ſay.

L. C. B. ſaid to me, Sir, you have heard the Indictment againſt you, and the Evidence to prove it; you have heard the Charge, now ſay what you can for your own Defence, and you ſhall be heard.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour; and I hope, my Lord, becauſe the Evidence is large, I ſhall have the more time allowed me to make my Defence; and if ſo, I doubt not but fully to open this Conſpiracy.

L. C. B. Do not fear that; for as they have been heard at large, ſo ſhall you likewiſe (God forbid elſe.)

Hawk.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour, and do promiſe to be as brief as conveniently I can: And as I intend to offer nothing but the naked Truth, ſo I will ſay no more (if I am not miſinform'd) than I can prove to be true. And, my Lord, becauſe it may ſeem neceſſary for me to offer many Things by way of Defence, in anſwer to ſo great a Charge; to ſave time, I pray that it may not be expected by your Honour, or the Jury, that I ſhould call Witneſſes to prove every Particular: But when I offer ſuch Things as are moſt material, if either your Honour, or the Jury, be not fully ſatisfied touching the Truth of ſuch material Points, I do humbly pray, that I may be called upon to prove them; for when I am not called upon for Proof, I ſhall, under Favour, my Lord, take it for granted that I am believed. And for Method herein, if I may have leave, I do intend this.

1. In General, to ſhew how improbable it is, that I ſhould be guilty of this Robbery, and alſo deliver ſome Hints to move the Court and Jury to queſtion whether this Proſecutor (Larimore) was robbed at all, or no.

And 2*dly*, More particularly to examine the Evidence, as to Matter of Fact.

L. C. B. Go on, Sir, to your Defence.

Hawk. May it pleaſe your Honour, and you of this Jury, I begin with the firſt part of my Defence, which is, to hint how unlikely it is, that I ſhould be guilty of robbing this Larimore.

1. Larimore is generally known to be a notorious Anabaptiſt, and an Enemy to the Church of England, and a Hater of the Miniſtry in general; but more particularly, he is moſt envious and malicious againſt my ſelf, becauſe I ſued him for Tythes, and cauſed him to be indicted for not coming to Church, or Baptizing his Children: For which Reaſon his Malice againſt me hath appeared notorious ſeveral Ways, as, amongſt others,

1. By diſſuading all that owed me any Money, not to pay me.
2. By his inducing thoſe to whom I owed Money, to Arreſt and trouble me.
3. By diſſuading thoſe that I ſued for Tythes, not to agree with me; he promiſing them, that Sir John Croke and himſelf would force me to run the Country e're long.
4. By his continual tormenting, and vexing me with his falſe Arreſts, and illegal Indictments.
5. By his conſtant Endeavour to diſſuade my Friends from any ways relieving me, or mine, in my greateſt Wants and Neceſſities, adviſing them to ſtarve us.

My Lord, and this Jury, if you are not fully ſatisfied in any of theſe Particulars that I have alledged, I am ready to prove them; but if this be granted, they are no doubt ſufficient Arguments to prove the Malice of his Heart. Again, I ſay, that it is no ways poſſible that Larimore was robbed at all; and of this Opinion are moſt of his Neighbours round about him, as may appear by this Certificate, which followeth.

WE do humbly Certifie, That Henry Larimore of Chilton, in the County of Bucks, Labourer, is a notorious Anabaptiſt, an Enemy to the Church of England, and a perfect Hater of all Miniſters of the ſame, but in particular, moſt Inveterate and Malicious againſt Robert Hawkins, Clerk, late Miniſter of the Church of Chilton aforeſaid; for that he doth not only ſeek, and deſign utterly to ruin the ſaid Mr. Hawkins himſelf, but makes it his Buſineſs, and daily Practice, to inſtigate others to do the like, and for no other Cauſe, as he hath often confeſſed himſelf, but for that the ſaid Mr. Hawkins hath cauſed him to be Indicted for not coming to Church, and Sued him for Tythes; And we do verily believe, and are fully ſatisfied in our Conſciences, that the ſaid Mr. Hawkins is not at all guilty of the pretended Felony, in ſtealing the Ring, and piece of Silver, which the ſaid Larimore hath charged him with, but that it is a meer Contrivance inchoated, and ſet on foot by the ſaid Larimore, Sir John Croke, and others, on purpoſe to revenge themſelves. And we do alſo believe, that the ſaid Mr. Hawkins is a very honeſt Man, and that he is a very able Miniſter, and a true and faithful Labourer in God's Word, and never heard that he was ever ſuſpected in the leaſt of Felony, till this Malicious Proſecution, which is by the ſaid Larimore, and others, whom the ſaid Mr. Hawkins ſueth for Tythes,

By this Certificate, which you ſee ſubſcribed with above an Hundred Names, wherein, many others (for brevity ſake) are omitted, altho' I made no uſe of it upon my Trial; yet the World may ſee what an Opinion Larimore's Neighbours had concerning him, and his (pretended) Robbery; which Certificate I have for that Purpoſe here inſerted.

2. It is not likely that Larimore was robb'd, becauſe he did not declare it to his Neighbours immediately, which doubtleſs he would have done, had any ſuch thing befallen him.

3. Nor is he certain (as to the time,) when he was Robbed.

For 1. He told his Brother Beamſly, that he had loſt the Ring and Five-ſhilling-piece (in Queſtion) before there was any difference between him and I: As may appear by this Certificate, under Mr. Willcox's own hand, which is as followeth.

THeſe are to Certifie all whom it may concern, that Thomas Beamſly of Chilton, Tything-man, told me, Charles Willcox of Long Crendon (upon September 19. in the 20th Year of his Majeſty's Reign, An. Dom. 1668.) That the Five-ſhilling-piece of Silver, and the Stone-ring, which Larimore pretended he found in Mr. Hawkins's Houſe, were both loſt before there was any difference between the ſaid Larimore, and the ſaid Mr. Hawkins; and he further added, that his Brother Larimore told him, that he had an intent to ſearch for the ſame Ring, and Five-ſhilling-piece above a Month before he did. This I can, and will depoſe, whenſoever I ſhall be thereunto required.

Witneſs my Hand
Octob. 1. 1668. Charles Willcox.

By this Certificate, it appears (by Larimore's own Confeſſion to his Brother Beamſly) that he had loſt this Ring, and Five-ſhilling-piece, before there was any difference between him, and I, and ſeeing I began my Suit for Tythes in Michaelmas Term, 1667. againſt him, and others, as it is well known to the Inhabitants of Chilton, (and alſo may appear by the Records of the Exchequer.)

This is the firſt time, that Larimore ſaid he had loſt the Ring, and Five-ſhilling-piece.

And that this is falſe, muſt needs appear, by what Mr. Good, and Larimore have already ſworn in open Court, viz. that Mr. Good pawned the Five-ſhilling-piece to Larimore at Buckingham Seſſions laſt, (which Seſſions were held upon the 9th and 10th of July, 1668.) which is near nine Months after the difference began.

And moreover, Larimore confeſſed upon his Examination before Sir John Croke, when I was Committed, (which was upon the 19th of September, 1668) that he had loſt the Ring, and Five-ſhilling-piece a Month before, which muſt (conſequently) be about the 19th of Auguſt, 1668. And if ſo, how is it poſſible that he could have loſt them before the difference began betwixt us, which was above ten Months before?

3. He now ſwears in open Court, that he ſaw me ſteal the ſaid Gold Ring, and Five-ſhilling-piece of Silver, out of his Houſe upon Friday the 18th of Sept. 1668. (preciſely) an Hour and half before Sun-ſet; all which times being compared together, can no ways be poſſible; for which, I dare appeal to all that hear it. Nor is it likely, in caſe he could prove that he was robb'd, (which I am confident, he never can) that I am the Perſon that robbed him; as may appear upon theſe conſiderations, amongſt others.

1. Is it likely that I ſhould commit a Robbery in my own Pariſh, (in the day time) where all that ſaw me, muſt needs know me, and at the Houſe of ſuch a Perſon as this Larimore is, that had ſolemnly ſwore (but a little before) that he would take away my Life, as may appear, by what his Son ſaid to Anne Scholy?

2. Is it probable, that if I were Guilty, I would not have made my eſcape, having twenty four Hours time, and four or five Hours notice after they firſt attempted to ſearch my Houſe; or that in all that time, I could find no better place to conceal a Ring, and Five-ſhilling-piece, than in a little Basket with two or three Eggs, (which all that time was hanging upon a Pin.)

Again, if Larimore ſaw me rob him upon the 18th Day of Sept. 1668. (as he ſwears he did) why did not he then ſecure me? He ſwears I ran away, why did not he ſend out Hue and Crys, to diſcover, and apprehend me? But the ſaid Larimore was ſo far from doing it, that he never declared it to any of his Neighbours, nor to the Conſtable, when he commanded him to ſearch, as may appear as well by the ſearch it ſelf, (in that they ſearched other Houſes before they ſearched mine) as by the Conſtable's Oath, who ſwears, that Larimore ſaid not any thing to him, that he had ſeen me rob him, nor did the ſaid Larimore declare it to Sir John Croke; for if he had, Sir John (no doubt) would have inſerted it in the Mittimus, which he hath not done; Nor did he declare it to Sir Richard Pigott, from whom he fetch'd his Warrant to ſearch, as may appear by the Contents of it. Whereupon, my Lord Chief Baron Hale calling to the Conſtable for the Warrant, (which being deliver'd) the Judge (himſelf) immediately eſpied, that the ſaid Warrant, bore date a Day before the Robbery was committed, which, when my Lord obſerved, he asked Larimore if he fetched this Warrant to ſearch for this Ring, and Five Shilling-piece; to which Larimore replied, he did, and then my Lord asked Larimore upon what Day he was Robbed, he replied, upon Friday, the 18th of September, 1668.

L. C. B. How comes it then to paſs, Larimore, that the Warrant bears date the 17th Day, and you ſwear, that the Priſoner at the Bar did not Rob you till the 18th Day? This is likely to be true.

Larimore to this replied, that he was robbed at ſeveral other times.

Hawk. (My Lord) may I be heard a word?

L. C. B. You may go on.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour. And I hope the Jury will take notice how Larimore hath enſnared himſelf, by the date of the Warrant, which my Lord firſt diſcovered. And whereas Larimore replies, that he was Robbed at ſeveral other times, he may have credit, (but by thoſe only that can believe all that he hath ſaid and ſworn;) For he ſaith that he was robbed before he and I differed, which muſt be before October, 1667. and he told Sir John Croke likewiſe (when I was committed,) that he was robbed of the foreſaid Goods but a Month before, which which muſt needs be about the 19th. of Auguſt, 1668. but now he ſwears in Court, that he ſaw me ſteal theſe Goods on Friday, the 18th of September, 1668. which muſt needs be impoſſible, that I ſhould rob him at three ſeveral times of the ſame Ring and Five-ſhilling-piece; and beſides this, it is improbable, that he ſhould be robbed before, October, 1667. and again in Aug. 1668. becauſe he never declared any of theſe Robberies to any Perſon, before the 16th. of Sept. 1668. (upon which Day, he, and Sir John Croke concluded upon this Conſpiracy, as hereafter we ſhall make appear; And moreover Larimore (himſelf) confeſſed even now, that he fetch'd this Warrant to ſearch for this very Ring and Five-ſhilling-piece (which now he denies.) By this, all may ſee, how notoriouſly he contradicts himſelf.

L. C. B. ſaid to Larimore, Thou art very cunning, to be provided with a Warrant, a day before you was robbed. It ſeems you knew upon the 17th day, that you ſhould be robbed on the 18th day, and alſo, that this Perſon (now at the Bar) ſhould Rob you. Surely, you can Divine. Here the People began to cry out ſhame on Larimore.

L. C. B. ſaid to me, Sir, but if you were innocent of this Robbery, why did you refuſe to open your Doors, or to have your Houſe Search'd?

Hawk. My Lord, I had ſeveral reaſons, that moved me ſo to do.

1. In General, moſt of thoſe Perſons that were preſent, were my inveterate Enemies, and ſeveral of them had threatned to ruine me, and my Family; and therefore, I had reaſon to ſuſpect, that they came to injure me, either in my Poſſeſſion, or Goods; For the firſt, Sir John Croke, and Larimore, had often threatned to pull down my Houſe, and for that end, had hired ſeveral Perſons, to make a Forcible Entry upon it, and particularly, they had lately hired Faires the Son of Leonard Styres of Thame, (in the County of Oxon) by a Ladder to climb up, and run down my Chimney, and open my Doors, when we were all Abroad: And about the ſame time they alſo contracted with one Chriſtopher Tyler of Chilton for the ſame purpoſe. And 2. I feared the ſeizing of my Goods by the ſaid Perſons, becauſe they had then a Writ of Levary (or Execution) to ſeize them, which Larimore's Son had a few days before in part executed, and he was then preſent; And if theſe reaſons are not ſufficient, I have more to juſtifie my act, in refuſing to have them ſearch my Houſe, which was all (my Lord) I ever denied, for I then declared my ſelf willing that Mr. Sanders the other Conſtable, (he being then at the next Door) might charge whom he pleaſed, and ſearch as narrowly as he could.

L. C. B. ſaid, Mr. Hawkins, can you prove what you have ſaid?

Hawk. Yes, my Lord, which particular ſhall I prove?

L. C. B. Prove that about the Ladder, if you can.

Hawk. I pray my Lord, call John Acreman: He being called, did fully juſtifie what I ſaid concerning their intended Forcible Entry, and added farther, that he did help to ſet up the Ladder for that purpoſe, being called by Sir John Croke's own Sons, they and Larimore ſtanding by all that time to watch. And touching the ſecond Particular, concerning the ſeizing of my Goods, Mr. Sheriff himſelf can juſtifie, that they had then in their Hands ſuch a Writ: (my Lord) he is in Court, if your Honour pleaſe to call him.

And for the 3d particular, that I ſhewed my ſelf willing that Mr. Sanders ſhould Search, I can prove (my Lord) by theſe Witneſſes following, viz. Michael Reed, Gent. Mr. Thomas Sanders, Mr. Henry Golder, Robert Caſemore, Mr. Charles Willcox, and ſeveral others that were preſent. My Lord Chief Baron hearing theſe Reaſons fully proved, commended my Diſcretion, in not opening my Doors, and he added further, that he ſhould have done as much himſelf, ſaying it was a foul buſineſs, and the Judge (then looking towards Sir John Croke with an angry Countenance,) ſaid to me, Sir, is this Sir John Croke concerned in this buſineſs?

Hawk. If it may pleaſe your Honour (my Lord) with permiſſion, I ſuppoſe that Sir John Croke is deeply concerned in this Conſpiracy, and I doubt not but to make it appear to the World, (if I may be heard.)

L. C. B. You need not fear that, for you ſhall have time; go on.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour; and I crave leave to call two Witneſſes, viz. Mr. Charles Willcox, and Mr. Samuel Browne; both theſe being called, Mr. Willcox ſaid, If it may pleaſe your Honour, my Lord, upon Friday the 18th of September, 1668. I was at Larimore's (Houſe in Chilton, from Noon till it was near Night) with Larimore, a driving of ſome bargain about Tyles, and other things; and, my Lord, Mr. Hawkins was not at Larimore's Houſe all that Afternoon, nor did I hear any thing at all then, that Larimore was robb'd, which (my Lord) I muſt needs have done, if he had been robbed that Afternoon, for I was there.

L. C. B. At what time came you to Larimore's Houſe, Mr. Willcox? take heed what you ſay.

Willcox. Before Noon, my Lord.

L. C. B. Mr. Willcox, how long did you ſtay there?

Mr. Willcox. Until it was near Night, my Lord.

L. C. B. Was Larimore with you all that time?

Mr. Willcox. Yes, my Lord, for we were about to bargain for ſome Tyles, and other things.

L. C. B. Are you ſure that it was upon the 18th of September that you was at Larimore's Houſe?

Mr. Willcox. I am ſure, my Lord, that it was upon the 18th of September that I was there, and the Day before Mr. Hawkins's Houſe was broke open.

L. C. B. What Day of the Week was it upon?

Mr. Willcox. It was upon a Friday, my Lord, and Mr. Hawkins's Houſe was broken open on the next Day, it being Saturday.

Lar. It was upon Thurſday, my Lord, that Mr. Willcox was at my Houſe, it was not upon that Day that my Houſe was robb'd, but the Day before.

Sir Ralph Verney replied, No, no, Larimore, it could not be on the Thurſday, that Mr. Willcox and you were together at your Houſe, for that was the 17th Day of September, and that was the Day you was buſied in fetching your Warrant from Sir Richard Pigott.

L. C. B. It is well obſerved Sir, and ſo he was, and therefore it could not be on the Thurſday that Mr. Willcox was with him at his Houſe.

Sir Richard Pigott replied, I am ſure (my Lord) that Larimore, and that Fellow the Conſtable were both at my Houſe upon the 17th of September, as my Warrant teſtifieth.

L. C. B. At what time was it, Mr. Willcox, when you came that Day from Larimore's Houſe?

Mr. Willcox, It was about Sunſet, my Lord, for it was dark by that time I got to my Houſe at Crendon.

L. C. B. How far is it from your Houſe at Crendon, to Larimore's Houſe?

Mr. Willcox, It is about a Mile and half, my Lord.

L. C. B. Were not the ways bad at that time?

Mr. Willcox. No, my Lord, the ways were very good.

L. C. B. Did not you ſtop, or ſtay, or meet with ſome body by the way that might hinder you?

Mr. Willcox. No, my Lord, I went a good pace, it being near Night, my Lord, I was afraid of being benighted, and yet it was dark by that time I got home.

L. C. B. You that are of the Jury, do you know this Mr. Willcox, of what credit is he?

Jury. We have known him a long time, and we know no harm by him.

L. C. B. He looks with an honeſt Face, and you Larimore, do you know what that honeſt Man, Mr. Willcox ſays? do you know him; and did you ever ſee him at your Houſe?

Lar. Yes, my Lord, I know him well.

L. C. B. Larimore, do not you remember that he was at your Houſe on Friday the 18th of September, 1668.

Larimore replied, No, my Lord, ſure it was not upon that Day that I was robbed.

My L. C. B. Hale Replied, Larimore, No, in my Conſcience thou ſay'ſt well, for it ſeems you were not robbed upon the ſame Day, that you have ſworn you ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar commit this Robbery.

Hawk. My Lord, or upon any other Day, (as I do verily believe.) And here many of the People cryed out, that they believed as much.

L. C. B. If that Man Mr. Willcox ſpeaks true, then all is falſe that Larimore, his Son, and Siſter, hath ſworn, &c.

Come Mr. Hawkins, ſaid my Lord Chief Baron, have you any more to ſay?

Hawk. I have one Witneſs more, that I deſire may be called, viz. Mr. Samuel Browne.

L. C. B. Yes, yes, call him, come Mr. Brown, what can you ſay?

Mr. Brown ſaid, My Lord, I can ſay ſomething, but I dare not ſpeak.

L. C. B. Why dare you not? Come, ſpeak the Truth; and ſpare not, and ſay no more.

Mr. Brown ſaid, I dare not ſpeak, for Sir John Croke, and this Larimore have threatned me, that if I came down to this Aſſizes, to teſtifie what I heard about this Plot, Sir John Croke ſaid, he would fling me in the Goal, and load me with Action upon Action of 1000 l. and ruine me and my Family.

When the Judge, and the Juſtices heard Mr. Brown relate this, every Eye began to be fixt upon Sir John Croke, and the People asked which was that Sir John Croke? Then my Lord Chief Baron Hale commanded the Clerk of the Aſſizes to give Mr. Brown a Writ of Privilege, to protect him home again; which being immediately done in Court, my L. C. B. ſaid, Come Mr. Brown, let us now hear what you can ſay to this buſineſs?

Mr. Brown ſaid; If it may pleaſe your Honour, (my Lord) upon Wedneſday, the 16th of Septemb. laſt paſt, (early in the Morning) as I lay in my Bed at Sir John Croke's Houſe in Chilton, hearing a great Noiſe, (I being then entruſted by Sir John Lentall as Keeper to Sir John Croke, which is a Priſoner at the King's Bench,) I fearing that they were contriving ſome way for him to eſcape, I ſtarted ſuddenly out of Bed, (having nothing on but my Shirt,) and ſtood at the Dining Room Door behind the Hangings, and then, my Lord, I heard this Larimore tell Sir John Croke that he had undone him, by cauſing him to contend with the Parſon. Sir John Croke asked him why? Larimore replied, becauſe this Hawkins will undoe me, for he hath entered me into moſt Courts of England, and ſummoned me into the Crown-Office and Chancery, and I cannot maintain ſo many Suits: Sir John Croke replied, is that all? Come Brother Larimore, be contented, we will have one Trick more for Hawkins yet, which ſhall do his work. Larimore replied, Sir John, you have put me upon too many Tricks already, more than I can manage, and the Parſon is too hard for us ſtill. Sir John replied, [If thou wilt but Act, I will hatch enough to hang Hawkins.] Larimore replyed, but how ſhall we bring this to paſs? Sir John Croke made Anſwer, [Canſt not thou convey ſome Gold, or Silver into Mr. Hawkins his Houſe, and have a Warrant ready to ſearch his Houſe, and then our Work is done.] Larimore replyed, Sir, if we could but bring this to paſs, it might do well, but I know not how. Sir John Croke ſaid to Larimore, Do you but go to Sir Richard Pigott, and inform him, that you have loſt ſome Money, and Goods, and deſire his Warrant to ſearch for them, (which Sir Richard neither can, nor will deny you) and then take Dick Mayne the Conſtable, (who is one of us, and will do whatever we deſire him,) and go and ſearch Mr. Hawkins's Houſe, and there you will find theſe things; and then Charge him with flat Felony, and force him before me, and no other Juſtice, and I'll ſend him to Goal without Bail, [And we will hang him at the next Aſſizes.] Come, ſaid Sir John Croke, Brother Larimore, let us go and drink our Mornings draught, and we will conſult more about this buſineſs. And ſo, my Lord, I heard no more for that time. But——

L. C. B. That was enough, and too much too, but however, Mr. Brown, go on.

Mr. Brown. So upon Saturday next, (being the 19th of Sept. 1668.) I having been abroad (and towards Night) coming up the Town, I was informed that Mr. Hawkins (as Larimore pretended,) had robbed him: I then began to think more ſeriouſly upon what I had heard paſs the Wedneſday before, between Sir John Croke and this Larimore, and coming to Sir John's Houſe, I ſaw a Paper lying upon the Hall-Table full of Writing, and Larimore with the Conſtable, and ſeveral others, had brought Mr. Hawkins before Sir John Croke, who Committing Mr. Hawkins for Robbing Larimore, as he pretended, took up the the ſaid Paper and read it to the Conſtable, and ſaid, that it was Mr. Hawkins's Mittimus, which ſaid Mittimus was written before Mr. Hawkins came to Sir John Croke, as all that were there can juſtifie. And on Sunday Morning I went to an Alehouſe, where they had kept Mr. Hawkins all Night, and there I ſaw Mr. Hawkins go to the Goal, and then my Heart began to tremble, and yet I durſt not diſcover any thing of what I had heard; but coming home, I ſaid to Sir John Croke, Sir, What, they have carried the poor Parſon to the Goal. Sir John Croke replied, [Yes, let him go, and the Devil go with him, and more ſhall follow after;] have I not often told you, that if my Brother Larimore and I, did but lay our Heads together, none are able to ſtand againſt us? I replied, Yes, Sir John, I have often heard you ſay ſo, but I never believed it until now.

L. C. B. Mr. Brown, is all this true which you have related?

Mr. Brown. Yes, my Lord, all that I have ſaid is true, and there ſits Sir John Croke (pointing to him with his Finger) who knows, that every Word that I have ſaid is true.

L. C. B. If but ever a Word that Mr. Brown ſays be true, it is as foul a Conſpiracy as ever was heard of.

About this time Sir John Croke ſtole away from the Bench, without taking his Leave of my Lord Chief Baron, or any of the Juſtices.

My L. C. B. ſaid, Is this Sir John Croke a Gentleman, and contrives ſuch Plots as this? I never in all my Days heard of the like: but I think once in this Place, I met with one ſomething like it, but this far exceeds that, if this be true that Mr. Brown hath ſaid.

But you of this Jury, there is an honeſt Man, ſaid my Lord, pointing to Mr. Wilcox, he overthrows all; if that be true which he ſaid, then all that is falſe which Larimore, his Son, and Siſter hath ſworn.

Larimore ſaid, My Lord, what I have ſworn as to Mr. Hawkins is true.

My L. C. B. reply'd, Come, Larimore, thou art a very Villain.

Larimore ſaid, I wiſh that the Ground may open, and ſwallow me, if any thing that I have ſworn againſt Mr. Hawkins is falſe.

L. C. B. replied, Come, come, Larimore, thou art a very Villain; nay, I think thou art a Devil.

Hawk. I hope your Honour, and this Jury, are by this time fully convinc'd, that Sir John Croke is concerned in this Plot; for, my Lord, he hath appeared all along to be the Grand Contriver of it, as appears by Mr. Brown's Teſtimony, and by what he ſaid to Larimore before me and others. See their Charge in thoſe Words.

L. C. B. Hales replied, I am fully ſatisfied, and ſo (I think) are all that heard it; And he ſaid to the Juſtices, Gentlemen, where is this Sir John Croke? They reply'd, he is gone.

L. C. B. Is Sir John Croke gone? he ſaid, Gentlemen, I muſt not forget to acquaint you (for I thought that Sir John Croke had been here ſtill) that this Sir John Croke ſent me this Morning two Sugar-Loaves for a Preſent, praying me to excuſe his Abſence yeſterday. I did not then know, ſo well as now, what he meant by them, but to ſave his Credit, I ſent his Sugar-Loaves back again. Mr. Harvey, did you not ſend Sir John his Sugar-Loaves back again?

Clerk of the Aſſize. Yes, my Lord, they were ſent back again.

L. C. B. I cannot think that Sir John Croke believes that the King's Juſtices come into the Country to take Bribes, I rather think, that ſome other Perſon (having a deſign to put a Trick upon him) ſent them in his Name. And ſo taking the Letter out of his Boſom, ſhewing it to the Juſtices, ſaid, Gentlemen, do you know this Hand? To which ſome of them replied, they believed it might be Sir John Croke's own Hand, which Letter being compared with his Mittimus (for he had no Clerk) and ſome other of his Writings there, it plainly appeared to be his own Hand. So my L. C. B. ſeeing that, (putting up the Letter again into his Boſom) ſaid, he intended to carry that to London; and he added farther, that he would relate the Foulneſs of the Buſineſs as he found Occaſions fit for it.

L. C. B. ſaid, Mr. Hawkins, have you any more?

Hawk. My Lord, I hope that the Jury, and your Lordſhip is fully ſatisfied as to my Innocency, if ſo, my Lord; but if not, I humbly deſire to know wherein I have not given full Satisfaction, and if any thing elſe ſhall be alledged againſt me, I humbly crave time and leave to anſwer it; for, my Lord, I am confident, I can give a fuller Satisfaction, if what I have ſaid already be too ſhort.

L. C. B. You of the Jury, what do you think? The Priſoner at the Bar deſires to know whether you are ſatisfied as to the Indictment; if not, you may do well to declare wherein you are not ſatisfied.

Jury. It is a very plain Caſe, my Lord.

L. C. B. And I think ſoo too, but it is a very foul one.

L. C. B. ſaid to me, Sir have you any more?

Hawk. My Lord, I humbly thank your Honour and the Court, for that great Patience, and Liberty I have had, and intend to ſay no more, but with Quintilian I conclude, Innocentia melior eſt quàm Eloquentia, Innocence is better than Eloquence.

My Lord Chief Baron Hale's Directions to the Jury were to this Effect.

L. C. B. ſaid, You that are of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted for Robbing this Larimore, and you have heard at large both the Proſecutor's Evidence to prove him Guilty (which if you do believe) I never heard a fuller. And 2dly. You have alſo heard the Priſoner's Defence, wherein (as I think) he hath as fully anſwered the ſame Charge. I ſhall Firſt, repeat the Evidence againſt him, which conſiſts of two Branches; the firſt is the Proſecutor's Proof of this Indictment; and ſecondly, his charging him with other Crimes of the like Nature, as the ſtealing of Chilton's Boots, and the picking of Noble's Pocket.

1. For to prove him guilty of Robbing him, he obſerves this Method:

Firſt, He himſelf ſwears that he ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar commit the Robbery.

Secondly, His Son and Siſter ſwears that they ſaw him run out of the Houſe at the ſame time.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, He brings in four or five Perſons that ſwear the Gold Ring, and the Five-ſhilling-piece, was found in the Houſe of him that is now the Priſoner at the Bar.

Fourthly and Laſtly, He proves by two Witneſſes, that the Gold Ring and Five-ſhilling-piece was pawned to him.

And for the Firſt of theſe, Larimore ſwears that upon Friday the 18th of September laſt paſt, he lockt his Doors, between Twelve and One of the Clock at Noon, and went out, (leaving no body at home,) to pluck Hemp, about two Furlongs from his Houſe, where he ſtay'd with the reſt of his Family till within an hour and a half of Sunſet; at which time, he coming home, found his Doors open, and ran up into his Chamber, and there through the Chinks of the Loft-boards, he ſwears that he ſaw the Priſoner, now at the Bar, ranſacking, and rifling of a Box, in the which was at that time a Holland Apron, and a Purſe, in which Purſe was two Gold Rings, two pieces of Gold, and nineteen Shillings in Silver, all which ſaid Rings, Gold, and Silver, with the ſaid Apron, he ſwears that he did ſee the Priſoner now at the Bar, turn out of the ſaid Purſe, take, and Felonioufly carry away, except one piece or two of the Silver, and ſhews the very Purſe out of which he ſaw him take them. If you compare the Evidence with the Indictment, you may ſee the Policy of the Proſecutor, For, he would gladly ſeem a moderate Proſecutor, by Indicting him for Felony only, as the ſtealing of Rings and Money, &c. But by his Evidence, he would as gladly charge him with Burglary alſo, for he ſwears, he broke open, or pick'd the Locks of his Doors, and Box, which by Law is the ſame.

And Secondly, To corroborate this his Evidence, he brings in two Witneſſes more, viz. his Son, and Siſter Beamſly, and they ſwear that they did, at the ſame time, ſee the Priſoner that is now at the Bar, run out of Larimore's Houſe, with a great bunch of Keys in his Hand, and he hid himſelf amongſt Beans and Weeds: And note the Keys, to intimate that by the help of thoſe, he pick'd Larimore's Locks.

Thirdly, He brings in his Son, Dodſworth Croke, the Conſtable, and Tything man, which all ſwear that they found this Gold Ring, and Five-ſhilling-piece of Silver in a Basket hanging upon a Pin, in the Houſe of the Priſoner at the Bar, with a few Eggs, which the Priſoner at the Bar the Day before had ſtollen from him.

And Fourthly and Laſtly, He brings in one of Sir John Croke's Sons, and Mr. Good, who ſwear, that the one pawn'd the Ring, the other the Five ſhilling-piece to Larimore.

Thus Larimore ſwears he ſaw the Priſoner rob him, his Son and Siſter ſwear that they ſaw him run out of the Houſe, the ſame time four more ſwear, that they found the Ring, and Five-ſhilling-piece in his Houſe upon ſearch; And Laſtly, two ſwear that the Ring and Five-ſhilling-piece was pawned to him. If all this be true, he muſt needs be guilty, and if ſo, altho' I have a great reſpect for his Calling yet that ſhall no ways excuſe him, but rather aggravate his Crime.

And thus much touching the Indictment.

And Secondly, He ſeems to charge him with other Acts of the like nature; as

1. He brings in one Chilton to ſwear that the Priſoner at the Bar did ſteal a pair of Boots from him, and four or five Perſons ſwear, that they did hear Chilton ſay he did.

2. He brings one Boyce from London, a Perſon I think, of no great Credit, he ſwears that he ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar, about two Years ago, have his Hand in the Pocket of one James Noble, and that Noble ſaid, that he loſt a Gold Ring, and piece of Gold at the ſame time. This, (if true) would render the Priſoner now at the Bar obnoxious to any Jury. Thus far the Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar.

Now we come to the Priſoner's Defence, which becauſe it is ſo full, I ſhall be the briefer in it. The parts of his Defence were two, as himſelf obſerved.

1. He ſhews how too improbable it is.

And 2. How impoſſible that he ſhould be guilty of this Charge.

Firſt, That it is not likely that Larimore was robbed at all, becauſe he did not declare it to any of his Neighbours, as ſoon as he ſaw the Robbery Committed; again, he varies as to the time when it was done, for that he told his Brother Beamſly, that he had loſt the Ring and Five-ſhilling-piece, before there was any difference between him, and the Priſoner at the Bar, as appears by Mr. Willcox, and that difference began in Michaelmas Term, 1667. And before Sir John Croke he confeſſed that he had loſt this a Month before the Priſoner (viz. Mr. Hawkins) was committed, which muſt be about the 19th of Auguſt, 1668. And in Court he ſwears that he ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar Rob him of the ſame Gold Ring, and Five-ſhilling-piece of Silver, upon Friday the 18th of September 1668. an Hour and half before Sunſet, all this cannot be true; and for the Warrant, that bears date a Day before the Robbery was committed: Whereupon the Judge ſaid to Larimore, Come, thou art a cunning Fellow, for thou went'ſt to Sir Richard Pigott for a Warrant upon the 17th Day, and waſt not robb'd until the 18th Day, Larimore thou kneweſt it ſeems, upon the 17th Day that thou ſhould'ſt be robbed on the 18th Day, that the Priſoner now at the Bar ſhould rob thee: Surely thou canſt Divine, if all this be true. Again, is it likely, that when the Priſoner at the Bar was charged with flat Felony at his own Doors, the Conſtable likewiſe threatning to break open his Houſe to ſearch, if he had been guilty, his Wife and himſelf, having the opportunity of going abroad after they had ſo Charged him, while they were gone to conſult with Sir John Croke, as the Priſoner at the Bar ſufficiently proved they did, by the Teſtimony of ſeveral Witneſſes, (as Mr. Reed, Mr. Sanders, and others) that in all that time he would not have made his eſcape, or at leaſt found a more convenient place to convey a Ring, and Five-ſhilling-piece, than to let it remain all that time in a little Basket with a few Eggs, hanging on a Pin? Again, who came firſt into the Room where this Egg-Basket hung? Why Larimore; and who took down the Basket? Larimore; who turn'd out the Eggs? Larimore. And who had the dreſſing of the Eggs? Larimore. He is a ſpecial Cook; you Gentlemen of the Jury, it is an eaſie thing for Larimore to juggle a Ring and Five-ſhilling-piece into a Basket, he being the firſt that came into the Room, as he put up his Hand to take down the Basket, he might with eaſe enough, convey ſuch things as thoſe were into it. All this, and many more, are probable Circumſtances to move you, and me to believe, that it is not poſſible that the Priſoner at the Bar is guilty of this Robbery; But that I muſt leave to you to conſider of.

Again, The Priſoner at the Bar proves the whole Buſineſs to be but a meer Contrivance of Sir John Croke's, and this Larimore's, on purpoſe to ruin him, as is fully made manifeſt by the Teſtimony of Mr. Brown, who juſtifies, that upon Wedneſday the 16th of September laſt paſt, and but two Days before this pretended Robbery, he heard Sir John Croke adviſe this Larimore to fetch a Warrant to ſearch the Houſe of the Priſoner at the Bar, and then to convey Gold and Silver into it; which having done, charge him with flat Felony, and bring him before the ſaid Sir John Croke, and no other Juſtice, he then promiſing to the ſaid Larimore to Commit him to the Goal without Bail, and hang him at the next Aſſizes, which is now: And, as I take it, they do aim at it. You of this Jury, if you do believe what Mr. Brown ſaith, it is as foul a Conſpiracy, as ever was heard of: And I am apt to think it may be probable, becauſe that Sir John Croke and Larimore did threaten to caſt this Mr. Brown into Priſon, and ſo ruin him, if he came down and teſtified his Knowledge about this Buſineſs, which thing is of a very ill Conſequence. Again, it ſeems likely that Mr. Brown may be credited, if you compare their Actions with the Times; for upon Tueſday Sir John Arreſted the Priſoner upon a feign'd Action of an 100 l. Upon Wedneſday the Plot was concluded upon by Sir John Croke and Larimore, as may appear by Mr. Brown's Teſtimony. On Thurſday they procured of Sir Richard Pigott the Warrant to ſearch. On Friday, Larimore pretends that he was robbed (tho' in Truth there appears no ſuch thing.) Upon Saturday, the Priſoner's Houſe was broke open, and he apprehended; and upon Sunday he was carried to the Goal: It was a good Week's Work. But there is an honeſt Man, ſaid my Lord Chief Baron (pointing at Mr. Willcox) he knocks down all; for he juſtifies, that he came to Larimore's Houſe upon Friday the 18th of September laſt paſt (it being the ſame Day that he ſwears he ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar robbing him, and an Hour and half before Sun-ſet) and there continued till it was near Night; and he further ſaith, that Larimore was with him all that Afternoon. And he ſaid, that Larimore was not robbed that Afternoon, nor was Mr. Hawkins there at that time. If this that Mr. Willcox ſaith be true, then all that Larimore, his Son, and Siſter hath ſworn, muſt needs be falſe.

And as touching the Boots, Chilton ſwears that he had legg'd a pair of Boots for the Priſoner at the Bar, and laid them in his Shop-window, for him to take along with him as he went by, which he did, and paid him for his Work, and yet this Larimore, Sir John Croke, Croxſtone, and others, did uſe their utmoſt Endeavours, to ſtir up this Chilton to indict the Priſoner at the Bar for ſtealing of them (Croxſtone promiſing him to bear him out in it.) This can argue nothing elſe but Malice in thoſe Perſons: And for that which Boyce ſwears, is a Story that can argue nothing elſe; for neither is Noble here to proſecute, nor can Boyce ſwear that the Priſoner at the Bar did pick his Pocket, or that Noble ever ſaid he did.

Thus I have repeated the Evidence to prove him Guilty, and have not I think omitted any thing in it that is material. Which if you do believe, he muſt needs be Guilty. And alſo the Priſoner's Defence, which I think is ſufficient. It is a plain Caſe, and I ſuppoſe you need not go from the Bar, but that I leave to you.

And ſo the Jury not ſtirring from the Bar, which the Clerk obſerving, he called the Jury, who ſeverally anſwered to their Names; which being done, the Clerk of the Arraigns asked whether they were all agreed upon their Verdict.

Jury. Yes, we are all agreed.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jury. Our Fore-man.

Clerk. Robert Hawkins, Hold up thy Hand. Which I did.

Jury. Look upon the Priſoner at the Bar, How ſay you? Is he guilty of the Felony whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Fore-man of the Jury ſaid, Not Guilty, my Lord.

L. C. B. Hale ſaid to the Jury, You have found like Honeſt Men: I do believe, that he is Not guilty. And he ſaid to Larimore, thou art a very Villain.

Jaylor ſaid, Is Mr. Hawkins, my Lord, diſcharged of his Impriſonment.

L. C. B. reply'd, Yes, yes, he is diſcharged, paying his Fees.

Hawk. May it pleaſe your Honour, my Lord, I am poor; and this, with other Troubles, which they have unjuſtly occaſion'd, hath coſt me a great deal of Money already.

L. C. B. I cannot help that, nor can I give away other Mens Rights; if they will not remit their Fees, you muſt pay them.

Hawk. I humbly thank your Honour, and ſhall obſerve your Lordſhip's Commands.

And ſo the Court aroſe, there being no other Buſineſs but my Trial the whole Morning, which laſted from Eight until One. So as ſoon as my Trial was over, Sir John Croke, Larimore, and the reſt of that Crew, fled privately out of Ailesbury, and durſt not ſtay.

The

The TRIAL of William Penn and William Mead, at the Seſſions held at the Old Baily in London, the 1*ſt*, 3*d*, 4*th*, and 5*th of* September, 1670. Done by themſelves.

Tho. Bludworth, Alderm.	John Smith,	Sheriffs.
William Peak, Alderm.	James Edwards,
John Robinſon, Alderm.	Richard Browne.

Cryer. O Yes, Thomas Veer, —— Buſhel, John Hammond, Charles Milſon, Gregory Walklet, John Brightman, William Plumſted, Henry Henley, Thomas Damask, Henry Michel, William Lever, John Baily.

The Form of the OATH.

" You ſhall well and truly Try, and true Deliverance make betwixt our Sovereign " Lord the King, and the Priſoners at the Bar, according to your Evidence. So help " you God.

THAT William Penn, Gent. and William Mead, late of London, Linnen-Draper, with divers other Perſons to the Jurors unknown, to the Number of 300, the 14th Day of Auguſt, in the 22d Year of the King, about Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon, the ſame Day, with Force and Arms, &c. in the Pariſh of St. Benret Gracechurch in Bridge-Ward, London, in the Street called Gracechurch-Street, unlawfully and tumultuouſly did Aſſemble and Congregate themſelves together, to the Diſturbance of the Peace of the ſaid Lord the King: And the aforeſaid William Penn and William Mead, together with other Perſons to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, then and there ſo Aſſembled and Congregated together; the aforeſaid William Penn, by Agreement between him and William Mead before made, and by Abetment of the aforeſaid William Mead, then and there, in the open Street, did take upon himſelf to Preach and Speak, and then and there did Preach and Speak unto the aforeſaid William Mead, and other Perſons there, in the Street aforeſaid, being Aſſembled and Congregated together, by Reaſon whereof a great Concourſe and Tumult of People in the Street aforeſaid, then and there, a long time did remain and continue, in contempt of the ſaid Lord the King, and of his Law, to the great Diſturbance of his Peace; to the great Terror and Diſturbance of many of his Leige People and Subjects, to the ill Example of all others in the like Caſe Offenders, and againſt the Peace of the ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

What ſay you, William Penn and William Mead, are you Guilty, as you ſtand indicted, in Manner and Form, as aforeſaid, or Not Guilty?

Penn. It is impoſſible, that we ſhould be able to remember the Indictment verbatim, and therefore we deſire a Copy of it, as is cuſtomary in the like Occaſions.

Recorder. You muſt firſt plead to the Indictment, before you can have a Copy of it.

Pen. I am unacquainted with the Formality of the Law, and therefore, before I ſhall anſwer directly, I requeſt two Things of the Court. Firſt, that no Advantage may be taken againſt me, nor I deprived of any Benefit, which I might otherwiſe have received. Secondly, that you will promiſe me a fair hearing, and liberty of making my Defence.

Court. No Advantage ſhall be taken againſt you; you ſhall have Liberty; you ſhall be heard.

Pen. Then I plead Not guilty in Manner and Form.

Clerk. What ſayeſt thou, William Mead, art thou Guilty in Manner and Form, as thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not guilty?

Mead. I ſhall deſire the ſame Liberty as is promiſed William Penn.

Court. You ſhall have it.

Mead. Then I plead Not guilty in Manner and Form.

The Court adjourn'd until the Afternoon.

Cryer. O Yes, &c.

Cler. Bring William Penn and William Mead to the Bar.

Obſerv. The ſaid Priſoners were brought, but were ſet aſide, and other Buſineſs proſecuted. Where we cannot chooſe but obſerve, that it was the conſtant and unkind Practices of the Court to the Priſoners, to make them wait upon the Trials of Felons and Murderers, thereby deſigning, in all probability, both to affront and tire them.

After

After five Hours Attendance, the Court broke up and adjourned to the third Inſtant.

The third of September 1670, the Court ſate.

Cryer. O Yes, &c.

Cler. Bring William Penn and William Mead to the Bar.

Mayor. Sirrah, who bid you put off their Hats? Put on their Hats again.

Obſer. Whereupon one of the Officers putting the Priſoners Hats upon their Heads (purſuant to the Order of the Court) brought them to the Bar.

Record. Do you know where you are?

Pen. Yes.

Record. Do not you know it is the King's Court?

Pen. I know it to be a Court, and I ſuppoſe it to be the King's Court.

Record. Do you not know there is Reſpect due to the Court?

Pen. Yes.

Record. Why do you not pay it then?

Pen. I do ſo.

Record. Why do you not pull off your Hat then?

Pen. Becauſe I do not believe that to be any Reſpect.

Record. Well, the Court ſets forty Marks a piece upon your Heads, as a Fine for your Contempt of the Court.

Pen. I deſire it might be obſerved, that we came into the Court with our Hats off (that is, taken off) and if they have been put on ſince, it was by Order from the Bench; and therefore not we, but the Bench ſhould be fined.

Mead. I have a Queſtion to ask the Recorder, Am I fined alſo?

Record. Yes.

Mead. I deſire the Jury, and all People to take notice of this Injuſtice of the Recorder; who ſpake to me to pull off my Hat? and yet hath he put a Fine upon my Head. O fear the Lord, and dread his Power, and yield to the Guidance of his Holy Spirit, for he is not far from every one of you.

The Jury ſworn again.

Obſer. J. Robinſon, Lieutenant of the Tower, diſingenuouſly objected againſt—— Buſhel, as if he had not kiſs'd the Book, and therefore would have him ſworn again; tho' indeed it was on purpoſe to have made uſe of his Tenderneſs of Conſcience in avoiding reiterated Oaths, to have put him by his being a Jury-man, apprehending him to be a Perſon not fit to anſwer their Arbitrary Ends.

The Clerk read the Indictment, as aforeſaid.

Clerk. Cryer, Call James Cook into the Court, give him his Oath.

Cler. James Cook, lay your Hand upon the Book.

The Evidence you ſhall give to the Court, betwixt our Sovereign the King, and the Priſoners at the Bar, ſhall be the Truth, and the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth. So help you God.

Cook. I was ſent for, from the Exchange, to go and diſperſe a Meeting in Gracechurch-Street, where I ſaw Mr. Penn ſpeaking to the People, but I could not hear what he ſaid, becauſe of the Noiſe: I endeavoured to make way to take him, but I could not get to him for the Crowd of People; upon which Capt. Mead came to me, about the Kennel of the Street, and deſired me to let him go on; for when he had done, he would bring Mr. Penn to me.

Court. What Number do you think might be there?

Cook. About three or four Hundred People.

Court. Call Richard Read, give him his Oath.

Read being ſworn was ask'd, What do you know concerning the Priſoners at the Bar?

Read. My Lord, I went to Gracechurch-Street, where I found a great Crowd of People, and I heard Mr. Penn preach to them; and I ſaw Capt. Mead ſpeaking to Lieutenant Cook, but what he ſaid, I could not tell.

Mead. What did William Penn ſay?

Read. There was ſuch a great Noiſe, that I could not tell what he ſaid.

Mead. Jury, obſerve this Evidence, He ſaith he heard him Preach, and yet ſaith, he doth not know what he ſaid.

Jury, take notice, he ſwears now a clean contrary thing to what he ſwore before the Mayor when we were committed: For now he ſwears that he ſaw me in Gracechurch-Street, and yet ſwore before the Mayor, when I was committed, that he did not ſee me there. I appeal to the Mayor himſelf, if this be not true. But no Anſwer was given.

Court. What Number do you think might be there?

Read. About four or five hundred.

Penn. I deſire to know of him what Day it was?

Read. The 14th Day of Auguſt.

Pen. Did he ſpeak to me, or let me know he was there; for I am very ſure I never ſaw him.

Cler. Cryer, call———— into the Court.

Cour. Give him his Oath.

—— My Lord, I ſaw a great Number of People, and Mr. Penn I ſuppoſe was ſpeaking; I ſee him make a Motion with his Hands, and heard ſome Noiſe, but could not underſtand what he ſaid. But for Capt. Mead, I did not ſee him there.

Rec. What ſay you, Mr. Mead, were you there?

Mead. It is a Maxim in your own Law, Nemo tenetur accuſare ſeipſum, which if it be not true Latin, I am ſure it is true Engliſh, That no Man is bound to accuſe himſelf: And why doſt thou offer to enſnare me with ſuch a Queſtion? Doth not this ſhew thy Malice? Is this like unto a Judge, that ought to be Counſel for the Priſoner at the Bar?

Rec. Sir, Hold your Tongue, I did not go about to inſnare you.

Pen. I deſire we may come more cloſe to the Point, and that Silence be commanded in the Court.

Cry. O yes, All manner of Perſons keep Silence upon Pain of Impriſonment———Silence in the Court.

Pen. We confeſs our ſelves to be ſo far from recanting, or declining to vindicate the Aſſembling of our ſelves to Preach, Pray, or Worſhip the Eternal, Holy, Juſt God, that we declare to all the World, that we do believe it to be our indiſpenſable Duty, to meet inceſſantly upon ſo good an Account; nor ſhall all the Powers upon Earth be able to divert us from reverencing and adoring our God who made us.

Brown. You are not here for worſhipping God, but for breaking the Law; you do your ſelves a great deal of Wrong in going on in that Diſcourſe.

Pen. I affirm I have broken no Law, nor am I guilty of the Indictment that is laid to my Charge; and to the End the Bench, the Jury, and my ſelf, with theſe that hear us, may have a more direct Underſtanding of this Procedure, I deſire you would let me know by what Law it is you proſecute me, and upon what Law you ground my Indictment.

Rec. Upon the Common Law.

Pen. Where is that Common Law?

Rec. You muſt not think that I am able to run up ſo many Years, and over ſo many adjudged Caſes, which we call Common Law, to anſwer your Curioſity.

Pen. This Anſwer I am ſure is very ſhort of my Queſtion, for if it be Common, it ſhould not be ſo hard to produce.

Rec. Sir, will you plead to your Indictment?

Pen. Shall I plead to an Indictment that hath no Foundation in Law? If it contain that Law you ſay I have broken, why ſhould you decline to produce that Law, ſince it will be impoſſible for the Jury to determine, or agree to bring in their Verdict, who have not the Law produced, by which they ſhould meaſure the Truth of this Indictment, and the Guilt, or contrary of my Fact?

Rec. You are a ſawcy Fellow, ſpeak to the Indictment.

Pen. I ſay, it is my place to ſpeak to Matter of Law; I am arraign'd a Priſoner; my Liberty, which is next to Life it ſelf, is now concerned: You are many Mouths and Ears againſt me, and if I muſt not be allowed to make the beſt of my Caſe, it is hard. I ſay again, unleſs you ſhew me, and the People, the Law you ground your Indictment upon, I ſhall take it for granted your Proceedings are meerly Arbitrary.

Obſer. At this time ſeveral upon the Bench urged hard upon the Priſoner to bear him down.

Rec. The Queſtion is, whether you are guilty of this Indictment?

Pen. The Queſtion is not whether I am guilty of this Indictment, but whether this Indictment be legal. It is too general and imperfect an Anſwer, to ſay it is the Common Law, unleſs we knew both where, and what it is: For where there is no Law, there is no Tranſgreſſion; and that Law which is not in being, is ſo far from being Common, that it is no Law at all.

Rec. You are an impertinent Fellow, will you teach the Court what Law is? It's Lex non ſcripta, that which many have ſtudied thirty or forty Years to know, and would you have me to tell you in a Moment?

Pen. Certainly, if the Common Law be ſo hard to be underſtood, it's far from being very Common; but if the Lord Cook, in his Inſtitutes, be of any Conſideration, he tells us, That Common Law is Common Right, and that Common Right is the Great Charter-Privileges: Confirmed 9 Hen. 3. 29. 25 Edw. 1. 1. 2 Edw. 3. 8. Cook Inſtit. 2. p. 56.

Rec. Sir, you are a troubleſome Fellow, and it is not for the Honour of the Court to ſuffer you to go on.

Pen. I have asked but one Queſtion, and you have not anſwer'd me; tho' the Rights and Privileges of every Engliſhman be concerned in it.

Rec. If I ſhould ſuffer you to ask Queſtions till to Morrow Morning, you would be never the wiſer.

Pen. That is according as the Anſwers are.

Rec. Sir, we muſt not ſtand to hear you talk all Night.

Pen. I deſign no Affront to the Court, but to be heard in my juſt Plea: And I muſt plainly tell you, that if you will deny me Oyer of that Law, which you ſuggeſt I have broken, you do at once deny me an acknowledged Right, and evidence to the whole World your Reſolution to ſacrifice the Privileges of Engliſhmen to your ſiniſter and Arbitrary Deſigns.

Rec. Take him away. My Lord, if you take not ſome Courſe with this peſtilent Fellow, to ſtop his Mouth, we ſhall not be able to do any thing to Night.

Mayor. Take him away, take him away, turn him into the Bale-dock.

Pen. Theſe are but ſo many vain Exclamations; Is this Juſtice or true Judgment? Muſt I therefore be taken away becauſe I plead for the Fundamental Laws of England? However, this I leave upon your Conſciences, who are of the Jury (and my ſole Judges) that if theſe Ancient Fundamental Laws, which relate to Liberty and Property, and (are not limited to particular Perſuaſions in Matters of Religion) muſt not be indiſpenſibly maintained and obſerved. Who can ſay he hath Right to the Coat upon his Back? Certainly our Liberties are openly to be invaded, our Wives to be raviſhed, our Children ſlaved, our Families ruined, and our Eſtates led away in Triumph, by every ſturdy Beggar and malicious Informer, as their Trophies, but our (pretended) Forfeits for Conſcience ſake. The Lord of Heaven and Earth will be Judge between us in this Matter.

Rec. Be ſilent there.

Pen. I am not to be ſilent in a Caſe wherein I am ſo much concerned, and not only my ſelf, but many ten thouſand Families beſides.

Obſer. They having rudely haled him into the Bale-dock, William Mead they left in Court, who ſpake as followeth.

Mead. You Men of the Jury, here I do now ſtand, to anſwer to an Indictment againſt me, which is a Bundle of Stuff, full of Lyes and Falſhoods; for therein I am accuſed, that I met Vi & armis, illicite & tumultuoſe: Time was, when I had Freedom to uſe a carnal Weapon, and then I thought I feared no Man; but now I fear the Living God, and dare not make uſe thereof, nor hurt any Man; nor do I know I demeaned my ſelf as a tumultuous Perſon: I ſay, I am a peaceable Man, therefore it is a very proper Queſtion what William Penn demanded in this Caſe, An Oyer of the Law, on which our Indictment is grounded.

Rec. I have made Anſwer to that already.

Mead. Turning his Face to the Jury, ſaith, You Men of the Jury, who are my Judges, if the Recorder will not tell you what makes a Riot, a Rout, or an unlawful Aſſembly, Cook, he that once they called the Lord Cook, tells us what makes a Riot, a Rout, and an unlawful Aſſembly bly——A Riot is when three, or more, are met together to beat a Man, or to enter forcibly into another Man's Land, to cut down his Graſs, his Wood, or break down his Pales.

Obſer. Here the Recorder interrupted him, and ſaid, I thank you Sir, that you will tell me what the Law is, ſcornfully pulling off his Hat.

Mead. Thou mayſt put on thy Hat, I have never a Free for thee now.

Brown. He talks at random, one while an Independent, another while ſome other Religion, and now a Quaker, and next a Papiſt.

Mead. Turpe eſt doctori cum culpa redarguit ad ipſum.

May. You deſerve to have your Tongue cut out.

Rec. If you diſcourſe on this Manner, I ſhall take Occaſion againſt you.

Mead. Thou didſt promiſe me, I ſhould have fair Liberty to be heard; Why may I not have the Privilege of an Engliſhman? I am an Engliſhman, and you might be aſhamed of this dealing.

Rec. I look upon you to be an Enemy to the Laws of England, which ought to be obſerved and kept, nor are you worthy of ſuch Privileges, as others have.

Mead. The Lord is Judge between me and thee in this Matter.

Obſer. Upon which they took him away into the Bale-dock, and the Recorder proceeded to give the Jury their Charge, as followeth.

Rec. You have heard what the Indictment is, It is for preaching to the People, and drawing a tumultuous Company after them, and Mr. Penn was ſpeaking; if they ſhould not be diſturbed, you ſee they will go on; there are three or four Witneſſes that have proved this, that he did preach there; that Mr. Mead did allow of it: after this, you have heard by ſubſtantial Witneſſes what is ſaid againſt them: Now we are upon the Matter of Fact, which you are to keep to, and obſerve, as what hath been fully ſworn, at your Peril.

Obſer. The Priſoners were put out of the Court into the Bale-dock, and the Charge given to the Jury in their Abſence, at which W. P. with a very raiſed Voice, it being a conſiderable diſtance from the Bench, ſpake.

Pen. I appeal to the Jury, who are my Judges, and this great Aſſembly, whether the Proceedings of the Court are not moſt Arbitrary, and void of all Law, in offering to give the Jury their Charge in the Abſence of the Priſoners; I ſay, it is directly oppoſite to, and deſtructive of, the undoubted Right of every Engliſh Priſoner, as Cook in the 2 Inſtit. 29. on the Chap. of Magna Charta, ſpeaks.

Obſer. The Recorder being thus unexpectedly laſh'd for his extra-judicial Procedure, ſaid, with an inraged Smile.

Rec. Why, ye are preſent, you do hear, do you not?

Pen. No thanks to the Court, that commanded me into the Bale-dock; and you of the Jury take notice, that I have not been heard, neither can you legally depart the Court, before I have been fully heard, having at leaſt ten or twelve material Points to offer, in order to invalid their Indictment.

Rec. Pull that Fellow down, pull him down.

Mead. Are theſe according to the Rights and Privileges of Engliſhmen, that we ſhould not be heard, but turned into the Bale-dock, for making our Defence, and the Jury to have their Charge given them in our Abſence; I ſay theſe are barbarous and unjuſt Proceedings.

Rec. Take them away into the Hole: To hear them talk all Night, as they would, that I think doth not become the Honour of the Court, and I think you (i. e. the Jury) your ſelves would be tired out, and not have Patience to hear them.

Obſer. The Jury were commanded up to agree upon their Verdict, the Priſoners remaining in the ſtinking Hole. After an Hour and half's time eight came down agreed, but four remained above; the Court ſent an Officer for them, and they accordingly came down. The Bench uſed many unworthy Threats to the four that diſſented; and the Recorder, addreſſing himſelf to Buſhell, ſaid, Sir, You are the Cauſe of this Diſturbance, and manifeſtly ſhew your ſelf an Abettor of Faction; I ſhall ſet a Mark upon you, Sir.

J. Robinſon. Mr. Buſhel, I have known you near this fourteen Years; you have thruſt your ſelf upon this Jury, becauſe you think there is ſome Service for you: I tell you, you deſerve to be indicted more than any Man that hath been brought to the Bar this Day.

Buſhel. No, Sir John, there were threeſcore before me, and I would willingly have got off, but could not.

Bloodw. I ſaid, when I ſaw Mr. Buſhel, what I ſee is come to paſs, for I knew he would never yield. Mr. Buſhel, we know what you are.

May. Sirrah, you are an impudent Fellow, I will put a Mark upon you.

Obſer. They uſed much menacing Language, and behaved themſelves very imperiouſly to the Jury, as Perſons not more void of Juſtice than ſober Education: After this barbarous Uſage, they ſent them to conſider of bringing in their Verdict, and after ſome conſiderable time they returned to the Court. Silence was call'd for, and the Jury call'd by their Names.

Cler. Are you agreed upon your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cler. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jury. Our Fore-man.

Cler. Look upon the Priſoners at the Bar; How ſay you? Is William Penn Guilty of the Matter whereof he ſtands indicted in Manner and Form, or Not guilty?

Fore-m. Guilty of Speaking in Gracechurch-Street.

Court. Is that all?

Fore-m. That is all I have in Commiſſion.

Rec. You had as good ſay nothing.

May. Was it not an unlawful Aſſembly? you mean he was ſpeaking to a Tumult of People there?

Fore m. My Lord, This is all I had in Commiſſion.

Obſer. Here ſome of the Jury ſeemed to buckle to the Queſtions of the Court; upon which, Buſhel, Hammond, and ſome others, oppoſed themſelves, and ſaid, they allowed of no ſuch Word, as an unlawful Aſſembly in their Verdict; at which the Recorder, Mayor, Robinſon and Bloodworth took great occaſion to villifie them with moſt opprobrious Language; and this Verdict not ſerving their Turns, the Recorder expreſs'd himſelf thus.

Rec. The Law of England will not allow you to part till you have given in your Verdict.

Jury. We have given in our Verdict, and we can give in no other.

Rec. Gentlemen, you have not given in your Verdict, and you had as good ſay nothing; therefore go and conſider it once more, that we may make an end of this troubleſome Buſineſs.

Jury. We deſire we may have Pen, Ink and Paper.

Obſer. The Court adjourn'd for half an Hour; which being expired, the Court returns, and the Jury not long after.

The Priſoners were brought to the Bar, and the Jury's Names called over.

Cler. Are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jur. Yes.

Cler. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jur. Our Fore-man.

Cler. What ſay you, look upon the Priſoners: Is William Penn Guilty in Manner and Form, as he ſtands indicted, or Not guilty?

Fore-m. Here is our Verdict, holding forth a piece of Paper to the Clerk of the Peace, which follows;

WE the Jurors, hereafter named, do find William Penn to be Guilty of Speaking or Preaching to an Aſſembly, met together in Gracechurch-Street, the 14*th of* Auguſt laſt, 1670. And that William Mead is Not guilty of the ſaid Indictment.

Fore-m.	Thomas Veer,	Charles Milſon,
	Edward Buſhel,	Gregory Walklet,
	John Hammond,	John Baily,
	Henry Henley,	William Lever,
	Henry Michel,	James Damask,
	John Brightman,	Wil. Plumſted.

Obſer. This both Mayor and Recorder reſented at ſo high a rate, that they exceeded the Bounds of all Reaſon and Civility.

May. What will you be led by ſuch a ſilly Fellow as Buſhel? an impudent canting Fellow? I warrant you, you ſhall come no more upon Juries in haſte: You are a Fore-man indeed, addreſſing himſelf to the Fore-man, I thought you had underſtood your Place better.

Rec. Gentlemen, you ſhall not be diſmiſt till we have a Verdict, that the Court will accept; and you ſhall be lock'd up, without Meat, Drink, Fire, and Tobacco; you ſhall not think thus to abuſe the Court; we will have a Verdict, by the help of God, or you ſhall ſtarve for it.

Pen. My Jury, who are my Judges, ought not to be thus menaced; their Verdict ſhould be free, and not compelled; the Bench ought to wait upon them, but not foreſtall them. I do deſire that Juſtice may be done me, and that the Arbitrary Reſolves of the Bench may not be made the Meaſure of my Jury's Verdict.

Rec. Stop that prating Fellow's Mouth, or put him out of the Court.

May. You have heard that he preach'd, that he gathered a Company of tumultuous People, and that they do not only diſobey the Martial Power, but Civil alſo.

Pen. It is a great Miſtake; we did not make the Tumult, but they that interrupted us: The Jury cannot be ſo ignorant, as to think, that we met there, with a Deſign to diſturb the Civil Peace, ſince (1ſt.) we were by Force of Arms kept out of our lawful Houſe, and met as near it in the Street, as their Soldiers would give us leave; and (2dly.) becauſe it was no new thing (nor with the Circumſtances expreſs'd in the Indictment) but what was uſual and cuſtomary with us; 'tis very well known that we are a peaceable People, and cannot offer Violence to any Man.

Obſer. The Court being ready to break up, and willing to huddle the Priſoners to their Goal, and the Jury to their Chamber, Penn ſpoke as follows.

Pen. The Agreement of Twelve Men is a Verdict in Law, and ſuch a one being given by the Jury, I require the Clerk of the Peace to record it, as he will anſwer it at his Peril. And if the Jury bring in another Verdict contradictory to this, I affirm they are perjur'd Men in Law: And looking upon the Jury, ſaid, You are Engliſhmen, mind your Privilege, give not away your Right.

Buſh. &c. Nor will we ever do it.

Obſer. One of the Jury-men pleaded Indiſpoſition of Body, and therefore deſired to be diſmiſt.

May. You are as ſtrong as any of them; ſtarve them; and hold your Principles.

Rec. Gentlemen, You muſt be contented with your hard Fate, let your Patience overcome it; for the Court is reſolved to have a Verdict, and that before you can be diſmiſt.

Jury. We are agreed, we are agreed, we are agreed.

Obſer. The Court ſwore ſeveral Perſons, to keep the Jury all Night without Meat, Drink, Fire, or any other Accommodation; they had not ſo much as a Chamber-pot, tho' deſired.

Cry. O Yes, &c.

Obſer. The Court adjourns till Seven of the Clock next Morning (being the 4th Inſtant, vulgarly call'd Sunday) at which time the Priſoners were brought to the Bar: The Court ſat, and the Jury called to bring in their Verdict.

Cry. O Yes, &c.----Silence in the Court, upon pain of Impriſonment.

The Jury's Names called over.

Cler. Are you agreed upon your Verdict?

Jur. Yes.

Cler. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jur. Our Fore-man.

Cler. What ſay you? Look upon the Priſoners at the Bar; Is William Penn Guilty of the Matter whereof he ſtands indicted, in Manner and Form as aforeſaid, or Not guilty?

Fore-m. William Penn is guilty of Speaking in Gracechurch-Street.

May. To an unlawful Aſſembly?

Buſh. No, my Lord, we give no other Verdict than what we gave laſt Night; we have no other Verdict to give.

May. You are a factious Fellow, I'll take a Courſe with you.

Blood. I knew Mr. Buſhel would not yield.

Buſh. Sir Thomas I have done according to my Conſcience.

May. That Conſcience of yours would cut my Throat.

Buſh. No, my Lord, it never ſhall.

May. But I will cut yours ſo ſoon as I can.

Rec. He has inſpired the Jury; he has the Spirit of Divination, methinks I feel him; I will have a poſitive Verdict, or you ſhall ſtarve for it.

Pen. I deſire to ask the Recorder one Queſtion, Do you allow of the Verdict given of William Mead?

Rec.

Rec. It cannot be a Verdict, becauſe you were indicted for a Conſpiracy, and one being found Not guilty, and not the other, it could not be a Verdict.

Pen. If Not guilty be not a Verdict, then you make of the Jury and Magna Charta but a meer Noſe of Wax.

Mead. How! is Not guilty no Verdict?

Rec. No, 'tis no Verdict.

Pen. I affirm, that the Conſent of a Jury is a Verdict in Law; and if William Mead be Not guilty, it conſequently follows, that I am clear, ſince you have indicted us of a Conſpiracy, and I could not poſſibly conſpire alone.

Obſer. There were many Paſſages, that could not be taken, which paſt between the Jury and the Court. The Jury went up again, having received a freſh Charge from the Bench, if poſſible to extort an unjuſt Verdict.

Cry. O Yes, &c. Silence in the Court.

Cour. Call over the Jury. Which was done.

Cler. What ſay you? Is William Penn Guilty of the Matter whereof he ſtands indicted, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, or Not guilty?

Fore-man. Guilty of ſpeaking in Gracechurch-Street.

Rec. What is this to the Purpoſe? I ſay, I will have a Verdict. And ſpeaking to Edw. Buſhel, ſaid, You are a factious Fellow; I will ſet a Mark upon you; and whilſt I have any thing to do in the City, I will have an Eye upon you.

May. Have you no more Wit than to be led by ſuch a pitiful Fellow? I will cut his Noſe.

Pen. It is intolerable that my Jury ſhould be thus menaced: Is this according to the Fundamental Laws? Are not they my proper Judges by the great Charter of England? What hope is there of ever having Juſtice done, when Juries are threatned, and their Verdicts rejected? I am concerned to ſpeak and grieved to ſee ſuch Arbitrary Proceedings. Did not the Lieutenant of the Tower render one of them worſe than a Felon? And do you not plainly ſeem to condemn ſuch for factious Fellows, who anſwer not your Ends? Unhappy are thoſe Juries, who are threatned to be fined, and ſtarved, and ruined, if they give not in Verdicts contrary to their Conſciences.

Rec. My Lord, you muſt take a Courſe with that ſame Fellow.

May. Stop his Mouth; Jaylor, bring Fetters, and ſtake him to the Ground.

Pen. Do your Pleaſure, I matter not your Fetters.

Rec. Till now I never underſtood the Reaſon of the Policy and Prudence of the Spaniards, in ſuffering the Inquiſition among them: And certainly it will never be well with us, till ſomething like unto the Spaniſh Inquiſition be in England.

Obſer. The Jury being required to go together to find another Verdict, and ſtedfaſtly refuſing it (ſaying they could give no other Verdict than what was already given) the Recorder in great Paſſion was running off the Bench, with theſe Words in his Mouth, I proteſt I will ſit here no longer to hear theſe Things; at which the Mayor calling, Stay, ſtay, he returned, and directed himſelf unto the Jury, and ſpoke as followeth:

Rec. Gentlemen, we ſhall not be at this trade always with you; you will find the next Seſſions of Parliament there will be a Law made, that thoſe that will not conform ſhall not have the Protection of the Law. Mr. Lee, draw up another Verdict, that they may bring it in ſpecial.

Lee. I cannot tell how to do it.

Jur. We ought not to be return'd, having all agreed, and ſet our Hands to the Verdict.

Rec. Your Verdict is nothing, you play upon the Court; I ſay you ſhall go together, and bring in another Verdict, or you ſhall ſtarve; and I will have you charted about the City, as in Edward the Third's time.

Fore-m. We have given in our Verdict, and all agreed to it; and if we give in another, it will be a Force upon us to ſave our Lives.

May. Take them up.

Offic. My Lord, they will not go up.

Obſer. The Mayor ſpoke to the Sheriff, and he came off of his Seat, and ſaid.

Sher. Come, Gentlemen, you muſt go up; you ſee I am commanded to make you go.

Obſer. Upon which the Jury went up; and ſeveral ſworn to keep them without any Accommodation, as aforeſaid, till they brought in their Verdict.

Cry. O yes, &c. The Court adjourns till to Morrow Morning, at ſeven of the Clock.

Obſer. The Priſoners were remanded to Newgate, where they remained till next Morning, and then were brought unto the Court, which being ſat, they proceeded as followeth.

Cry. O yes, &c. Silence in the Court, upon pain of Impriſonment.

Cler. Set William Penn and William Mead to the Bar. Gentlemen of the Jury, anſwer to your Names; Tho. Veer, Edw. Buſhel, John Hammond, Henry Henly, Henry Michell, John Brightman, Charles Milſon, Gregory Walklet, John Baily, William Leaver, James Damask, William Plumſtead. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jur. Yes.

Cler. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jur. Our Fore-man.

Cler. Look upon the Priſoners. What ſay you? is William Penn Guilty of the Matter whereof he ſtands indicted, in Manner and Form, &c. or Not guilty?

Fore-man. Here is our Verdict in Writing, and our Hands ſubſcribed.

Obſer. The Clerk took the Paper, but was ſtopt by the Recorder from reading of it; and he commanded to ask for a poſitive Verdict.

Fore-man. That is our Verdict; we have ſubſcribed to it.

Cler. How ſay you? is William Penn Guilty, &c. or Not guilty?

Fore-man. Not guilty.

Cler. How ſay you? is William Mead Guilty, &c. or Not guilty?

Fore-man. Not guilty.

Cler. Then hearken to your Verdict; you ſay that William Penn is Not guilty in Manner and Form as he ſtands indicted; you ſay that William Mead is Not guilty in Manner and Form as he ſtands indicted, and ſo you ſay all?

Jur. Yes, we do ſo.

Obſer. The Bench being unſatisfied with the Verdict, commanded that every Perſon ſhould diſtinctly anſwer to their Names, and give in their Verdict, which they unanimouſly did, in ſaying, Not Guilty, to the great Satisfaction of the Aſſembly.

Rec. I am ſorry, Gentlemen, you have followed your own Judgments and Opinions, rather than the good and wholſome Advice, which was

was given you; God keep my Life out of your Hands; but for this the Court Fines you forty Mark a Man; and Impriſonment till paid. At which Penn ſtept up towards the Bench, and ſaid.

Pen. I demand my Liberty, being freed by the Jury.

May. No, you are in for your Fines.

Pen. Fines, for what?

May. For contempt of the Court.

Pen. I ask, if it be according to the Fundamental Laws of England, that any Engliſh-Man ſhould be Fined or Amerced, but by the Judgment of his Peers or Jury; ſince it expreſly contradicts the fourteenth and twenty-ninth Chap. of the great Charter of England, which ſay, No Free-Man ought to be amerced, but by the Oath of good and Lawful Men of the Vicinage.

Rec. Take him away, Take him away, take him out of the Court.

Pen. I can never urge the Fundamental Laws of England, but you cry, Take him away, take him away. But it is no wonder, Since the Spaniſh Inquiſition hath ſo great a place in the Recorder's Heart. God Almighty, who is juſt, will judge you all for theſe things.

Obſer. They haled the Priſoners into the Bale-dock, and from thence ſent them to Newgate, for Non-payment of their Fines; and ſo were their Jury.

The CASE of ANTHONY Earl of SHAFTSBURY; as it was Argued before His Majeſties Juſtices of the King's-Bench, the 27th and 29th of June, in Trin. Term. 29 Car. 2. 1677.

THIS Day the Earl of Shaftsbury was brought to the Bar upon the Return of an Alias Hab. Corp. directed to the Conſtable of the Tower of London; the Effect of the Return was, that Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury, in the Writ mentioned, was Committed to the Tower of London. 16. Feb. Anno Dom. 1676, By Virtue of an Order from the Lords Spiritual and Temporal then in Parliament aſſembled: the Tenor of which Order followeth in hæc verba.

Ordered, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Aſſembled, That the Conſtable of His Majeſty's Tower of London, his Deputy or Deputies, ſhall receive the Bodies of James Earl of Salisbury, Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury, and Philip Lord Wharton, Members of this Houſe, and keep them in ſafe Cuſtody, within the ſaid Tower, during His Majeſty's Pleaſure, and the Pleaſure of this Houſe; for High Contempts committed againſt this Houſe: And this ſhall be a ſufficient Warrant on that Behalf.

To the Conſtable of the Tower, &c.

J. Browne Cler. Par.

The Earl of Shaftsbury's Council prayed that the Return might be Filed, and it was ſo, and Friday following appointed for debating the Sufficiency of the Return, and in the mean time directions were given to his Council to attend the Judges and Attorney General, with their Exceptions to the Return, and my Lord was remanded till that Day; and it was ſaid, that tho' the Return was filed, the Court could remand or Commit him to the Marſhalſea at their Election.

On Friday the Earl was brought into Court again, and his Council argued the Inſufficiency of the Return.

Williams ſaid, That the Cauſe was of great Conſequence, in regard that the King was touched in his Prerogative; the Subject was touched in his Liberty, and this Court in its Juriſdiction.

1ſt. The Cauſe of Commitment which is returned, is not ſufficient, for the general Allegations of high Contempts is too uncertain, for the Court cannot judge of the Contempt, if it doth not appear in what act it conſiſts.

2dly. It is not known where the Contempts were committed, and in favour of Liberty, it ſhall be intended they were committed out of the Houſe of Peers.

3dly. The time is uncertain, ſo that, peradventure, it was before the laſt Act of General Pardon.

4thly. It does not appear whether the Commitment were on a Conviction or Accuſation only.

It cannot be denyed, but that the Return of ſuch a Commitment, by any other Court, would be too general and uncertain, More. 893, Aſtwiſh was Bailed on a Return, quod commiſſus fuit per mandatum. N. Milit. Dni. Cuſtod. Magn. Sigil. Angliæ virtute cujuſdem contemptus in curia facti, and in that Book, that divers other Perſons were bailed on ſuch general Returns, and the Caſes have been lately affirmed in Buſhel's Caſe, reported by the late Lord Chief Juſtice Vaughan, where it is expreſly ſaid that ſuch Commitment and Return being too general and uncertain, the Court can't believe in an implicite manner, that in truth the Commitment, was for Cauſes particular and ſufficient.

Vaughan's Reports, 140. Accord. 2 Inſt. 52, 53, & 55. and the 1 Rolls. 218. and though the Commitment of the Jurors was for acquitting Penn and Mead, contra plenam & manifeſtam evidentiam: It was reſolved to be too general, for the Evidence ought to appear as certainly to the Judge of the Return, as it appears before the Judge authorized to Commit. Ruſh. Caſe. 137.

Now

Now this Commitment being by the Houſe of Peers will make no difference; for in all Caſes where a Matter comes in Judgment before this Court, let the queſtion be of what nature it will, the Court is obliged to declare the Law, and that without diſtinction, whether the queſtion began in Parliament or no. In the Caſe of Geo. Binion in C. B. there was a long Debate, Whether an Original Writ might be Filed againſt a Member of Parliament, during the time of Privilege; and it was urged, that it being during the Seſſion of Parliament, the termination of the Queſtion did belong to the Parliament: But it was reſolved that an Original might be filed; and Bridgman then Chief Juſtice, ſaid, that the Court was obliged to declare the Law in all Caſes that came in Judgment before them. H. 4. Ed. 4. Rut. 4. 7. 10. in Scacc. In Debt by River verſus Couſin, the Defendant pleads that he was ſent of a Member of Parliament, & Ideo Capi ſeu areſtant non debet, and the Plantiff prays Judgment, and afterwards by Advice of all the Judges the Judgment was entered. Videtur Baronibus quod tale habetur Privilegium quod Magnates, &c. Et eorum familiares capi ſeu areſtare non debent ſed nullum habetur privilegium quod non debent Implantare ideo reſpondet Noſter. So in Triviniard's Caſe, a queſtion of Privileges was determined in this Court. Dyer. 60. in 14. Ed. 3. in the Caſe of Sir John and Sir Jeoffry Stanton, which was cited in the Caſe of the Earl of Clarendon, and is entred in the Lords Journal.

An Accord of Waſt, depended between them in the Common-Pleas, and the Court was divided and the Record was Certified into the Houſe of Lords, and they gave direction that the Judgment ſhould be Entred for the Plaintiff; afterwards on a Writ of Error brought in this Court that Judgment was Reverſed, notwithſtanding the Objection, that it was given by Order of the Houſe of Lords; for the Court was obliged to proceed according to the Law in a matter that was before them in point of Judgment. Not long ſince the Earl of Briſtol Exhibited an Accuſation againſt the Earl of Clarendon to the Houſe of Lords, and it contained divers matters, whereof ſome did ariſe out of Parliament, and it was referred to the Judges to conſider whether that Procedure was Parliamentary; and the 4th of July 1663. it was reſolved by the Judges, that the Lords ought not to proceed only upon an Impeachment by the Commons, when the matters ariſe out of the Houſe.

The Conſtruction of all Acts of Parliament are given to the Courts of Weſtminſter, and accordingly they have Judges of Validity of Acts of Parliament, they have ſearched the Rolls of Parliament, Hub. 109. Lord Hunſdon's Caſe, they have determined whether the Journal be a Record, Hub. 110. When a point comes before them in Judgment, they are not forecloſed by any Act of the Lords, but ought to Judge according to the Law, by which the Realm is Governed, and not by the Lords: If it appears that an Act of Parliament be made by the King and Lords without the Commons, that Act is Felo-de-ſe, and the Courts of Weſtminſter ought to judge it void, 4. H. 7. 18. Hub. 111. and accordingly they ought to do, if this Return contain in it that which is fatal to it ſelf. It hath been a queſtion often reſolved in this Court when a Writ of Error in Parliament, ſhall be a Superſedeas, and this Court hath determined that ſhall be ſaid to be a Seſſion of Parliament, 1. Rolls. 29. and if the Law were otherwiſe there would be a failure of Juſtice. If the Parliament were diſſolved, there would be no queſtion but the Priſoner ſhould be diſcharged on a Habeas Corpus, and yet then the Court muſt examine the Cauſe of Commitment, and by Conſequence a matter Parliamentary, and the Court may now have Cognizance of the matter, as clearly as when the Parliament is diſſolved. The Party would be without remedy for his Liberty, if he could not find it here, for it is not ſufficient for him to procure the Lords to determine their Pleaſure for his Impriſonment, for before his Enlargement he muſt have the Pleaſures of the King to be determined, and that ought to be in this Court, and therefore the Priſoner ought firſt to reſort hither.

Let us ſuppoſe (for it does not appear in the Return, and the Court ought not to Enquire of any matter out of it,) that the ſuppoſed Contempt was a thing done out of the Houſe; it would be hard for this Court to remand him: Suppoſe he were removed to a Foreign Priſon, during the Pleaſure of the Lords: No doubt, but that would have been an Illegal Commitment againſt Magna Charta and the Petition; there the Commitment would have been expreſly Illegal, and it may be this Commitment may be no leſs; for if it had been Expreſly ſhewn, and if he be remanded, he is Committed by this Court, who are to anſwer for his Impriſonment.

But 2. The limitation of the Impriſonment during the Pleaſures of the King and the Houſe is Illegal and uncertain; for ſince it ought to determine in two Courts, it can have no certain Period, a Commitment until he ſhall be Diſcharged by King's Bench and Common Pleas is Illegal; for the Priſoner can't apply himſelf in ſuch a manner as to obtain his Diſcharge. If a Man be Committed to further order, Cook ſaith, he is Baylable preſently, for that Imports till he ſhall be delivered in good courſe of Law, and if this Commitment have not that Senſe, it is Illegal, for the Pleaſure of the King is that which ſhall be determined according to Law in his Courts, as where the Stat. of Weſtminſter, 1 Chap. 15. declares that he is not reprovable, who is taken by Command of the King, who ought not to extend to an Extrajudicial Command but in his Courts of Juſtice, to which all matters of Judicature are delegated and diſtributed. 2 Inſt. 186. and 187.

Wollop, To the ſame purpoſe, cited Buſhel's Caſe, Vaughan, 137. that the Return for high Contempts was not ſufficient, and the Court that made the Commitment in this Caſe makes no difference in the Caſe, for otherwiſe one may be Impriſoned by the Houſe of Peers Unjuſtly, for a matter relievable here, and yet ſhall be without any manner of relief, by ſuch a return; for on Suppoſition that this Court ought not to meddle where the Perſon is Committed by the Peers, any Perſon at any time and for any Cauſe may be ſubject to a perpetual Impriſonment at the Pleaſure of the Lords.

And the Law is otherwiſe, for the Houſe of Lords is the Supream Court, yet their Juriſdiction is limited by the Common and Statute-Law, and their Exciſes are examinable in this Court, for there is a great difference between the Errors and Exciſe in and of a Court between an Erronious Proceeding without Juriſdiction, which is void and a meer Nullity, 4 H. 7. 18. 6. in in the Parliament the King would have one attain it of Treaſon, and loſe his Lands, and the Lords aſſented, but nothing was ſaid of the Commons, wherefore all the Juſtices held clearly that it was no Act, and he was reſtored to his Land, and without doubt in the ſame Caſe if the Party had been Impriſoned, the Juſtices might have made the like Reſolution that he ought to have been diſcharged.

It is a Solæciſme that a Man ſhall be Impriſoned by a limited Juriſdiction, and it ſhall not be examinable, whether the Cauſe were within their Juriſdiction or not, if the Lords without the Commons ſhould grant a Tax, and one that refuſed to pay it ſhould be Impriſoned, the Tax is void; but by a general Commitment the Party ſhall be remedyleſs if ſo be the Lords ſhould award a Capias for Treaſon or Felony.

By theſe Inſtances it appears that their Juriſdiction was reſtrained by the Common Law, and it is alſo reſtrained by divers Acts of Parliament, 1 Hen. 4. Chap. 14. no Appeals ſhall be made, or any ways purſued, or where a Statute is made a Power is Implicitly given to this Court by the Fundamental Inſtitution, which makes the Judges Expoſitors of Acts of Parliament; and peradventure if all this caſe appeared upon the return, this might be a Caſe in which they were reſtrained by the Stat. 4. Hen. 8. Chap. 8. That all the Suits, Uſements, and Condemnations, &c. Many time from henceforth, at any time to be put or had upon any Members for any Bill ſpeaking or reaſoning of any matters concerning the Parliament to be Communed or Treated of, ſhall be utterly void and of no effect, now it does not appear, but this is a Correction and Puniſhment Impoſed upon the Earl, contrary to the Statute, there is no queſtion now made of the Power of the Lords, but it is only urged that it is neceſſary for them to declare by Virtue what Power they proceed, otherwiſe the Liberty of every Engliſh Man ſhall be ſubject to the Lords, whereof they may deprive any of them againſt an Act of Parliament, but no uſage can juſtify ſuch a proceeding. Elſmore's Caſe of the Poſt, Nati. 19. The Duke of Suffolk was Impeached by the Commons of High Treaſon, and Miſdemeanors, the Lords were in doubt whether they ſhould proceed upon ſuch a general Impeachment to Impriſon the Duke, and the advice of the Judges being demanded, and their Reſolution given in the Negative, the Lords were ſatisfied. This Caſe is mentioned with deſign to ſhew the reſpect given to the Judges, and that the Judges have determined the higheſt matters in Parliament. At a Conference held between the Lords and the Commons, 3d. April, 4. Car. concerning the Right and Privilege of the Subject, it was declared and agreed, that no Freeman ought to be Committed or reſtrained by Commitment of the King or Privy-Council, or any other (in which the Houſe of Peers is included) unleſs ſome Cauſe of Commitment, Reſtraint, or Detainor be ſet forth, for which by Law he ought to be Committed, &c.

Now if the King, who is the Head of the Parliament, nor the Privy-Council who is a Court of State, to which Secrecy is ſo neceſſary, may not Impriſon without ſhewing Cauſe, a fortiori, the Lords in Parliament can't, which are a Court of Law as well as a Court of State, and therefore ought not to proceed in an Illegal manner, 'tis true in 1. Rolls. 192. Ruſhworth's Caſe, Cook is of Opinion that the Privy Council may Commit without ſhewing Cauſe, but in his more Mature Age, he was of another Opinion, and accordingly the Law is declared in the Petition of Right.

Smith argued to the ſame purpoſe, and ſaid a Judge cannot make a Judgment unleſs the Fact appears to him, and on an Habeas Corpus, the Judge can only take notice of the Fact returned; it is lawful for any Subjects that finds himſelf agrieved by any Sentence or Judgment to Petition the King in an humble manner for redreſs, and where the Subject is reſtrained of his Liberty, the proper place for him to apply himſelf unto is this Court, which hath the Supream Power as to this purpoſe, over all Courts, and on an Habeas Corpus iſhuing hence, the King ought to have an Account of his Subject, Rolls. Hab. Corp. 64 Witherlies Caſe, and though the Commitment be by the Lords, yet if it be Illegal, this Court is obliged to diſcharge the Priſoner, as well as if he had been Illegally Impriſoned by any other Court; the Houſe of Peers is a high Court, but the King's Bench hath ever been Intruſted with the Liberty of the Subject, and if it were otherwiſe in caſe of Impriſonment by the Peers, the Power of the King was leſs abſolute than the Power of the Lords.

It does not appear but that this Commitment was for Breach of the Privilege, but nevertheleſs if it were, this Court might give relief, as appears in Sir George Bigmore's Caſe before cited, and Mich. 12. Ed. 4. Rut. 20. for the Court which has Power to judge what is Privilege, has alſo Power to judge what is Contempt of Privilege; if the Judges may judge of an Act of Parliament, a fortiori, they may judge of an Order of the Lords, 20. Ed. Butcher's Caſe, where he in Reverſion brought an Action of Waſt, and dyed before Judgment, and his Heirs brought an Action for the ſame Waſt, and the King and the Lords determined that it did lie, and commanded the Judges to give Judgment accordingly for the time to come; but by Ryley. 39. it appears that it is only an Order of the King and the Lords, and that was the cauſe the Judges conceived that they were not bound by it, but 39 3. 13. and ever ſince have Judged the contrary if it be admitted. For that for Breach of Privilege may Commit, yet it ought to appear on the Commitment that that was the Cauſe, for otherwiſe that may be called a Breach, which is only a refuſal to anſwer to a matter whereof the Houſe of Lords is reſtrained to hold Plea by the Stat. of the 1ſt. of Hen. 4. and for a Contempt committed out of the Houſe they cannot Commit, for the Word Appeal in the Statute extends to all Miſdemeanors, as it was reſolved by the Judges in the Earl of Clarendon's Caſe, July, 1663. If the Impriſonment be not lawful, the Court cannot remand him to his wrongful Impriſonment, for that would be an Act of Injuſtice, to Impriſon him, De novo, Vaughan. 156. It does not appear whether the Contempt was a Voluntary Act, or an Opinion, or an Inadvertency, and he has now ſuffered five Months Impriſonment already; falſe Impriſonment is not only where the Commitment is unjuſt, but where the Petition is too long. 2 Inſt. 53. In this Caſe if this Court cannot give Remedy, peradventure the Impriſonment ſhall be perpetual; for the King, as the Law is now taken, may Adjourn the Parliament for 10 or 20 Years.

But all this is ſaid on Suppoſition that this Seſſion has continuance, I conceive that the King's giving his Royal Aſſent to ſeveral Laws which has been Enacted, the Seſſion is determined, and then their order for the Impriſonment is alſo determined, Brook Parliament. 86. Every Seſſion in which the King Signs Bills is a Day of it ſelf, a Seſſion of it ſelf, 1 Car. 1. 7. A Special Act is made, the giving the Royal Aſſent to ſeveral Bills, ſhall not determine the Seſſion. ('Tis true, 'tis there ſaid to be made for the avoiding all Doubts.) In the Stat. 16 Car. 1. There is a Promiſe to the ſame purpoſe, and alſo 12 Car. 2. 1. and 22. and 23. Car. 2. 2. 1. 11. Ro. 2. No. 12.

By the Opinion of Cook. 4 Inſt. 27. the Royal Aſſent does not determine, but the Authorities on which he relies, don't Warrant his Opinion, for firſt in the Parliament, Roll. 1. H. 7. It appears that the Royal Aſſent was given to the Act, for the reverſal of the Attainder of the Members of Parliament; the ſame Day it was given to the other Bills, and the ſame Year the ſame Parliament Aſſembled again, and then 'tis Probable, that the Members which had been attainted were preſent and not before, 8 R. 2. No. 13. is only a Judgment in Caſe of Treaſon, by Virtue of a Power reſerved to them on the Statute, 25 Ed. 3. Rot. Parliament. 7 H. 4. No. 29. is not an Act of Parliament, 14 Ed. 3. N. 789. The Act is firſt entred on the Roll, but on Condition the King will grant their other Petitions, the Inference my Lord Cook makes, that the Act for the Attainder of Queen Katherine, 33 H. 8. was paſſed before the determination of the Seſſion, yet it was on a Judgment given againſt by the Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer, and the Subſequent Act is only an Act of Confirmation; but Cook ought to be excuſed for all his Notes and Papers were taken from him, ſo that this Book did not receive his laſt Hand, but 'tis obſervable he was one of the Members of the Parliament, 1 Car. 1. When the ſpecial Act before mentioned, and was made, and no Inſtance can be given where an Act was paſſed; and afterwards the Parliament did proceed in that Seſſion only where [redacted] a precedent Agreement between the King and the Houſes; ſo I conclude that the Order is determined with the Seſſion, and the Earl of Shaftsbury ought to be Diſcharged.

Ayres to the ſame effect argued, That the Warrant is not ſufficient; for it does not appear that it was made by the Juriſdiction is deſired in the Houſe of Peers; for that is coram Rege in Parliamento, ſo that the King and the Commons are preſent in ſuppoſition of Law, and the Writ of Error in Parliament is Inſpecto Recordo nos conſilio & adviſamento Spiritualium & Temporalium, & Communitatum in Parliamento prædict' exiſtent', &c. it would not be difficult to prove that anciently the Commons did aſſiſt there, and now it ſhall be intended that they were preſent; for there can be no Averment againſt the Record. The Lords do ſeveral Acts as a diſtinct Houſe, as the Debating Bills, the Enquiring of Breaches of Privileges, and the Warrant in this Caſe being by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, cannot be intended otherwiſe, but that it was done by them in their diſtinct Capacity, and then the Commitment being during the Pleaſure of the King and the Houſe of Peers, it is manifeſt that the King is Principal, and His Pleaſure ought to be determined in this Court.

If the Lords ſhould commit a great Miniſter of State, whoſe Advice is neceſſary for the King and the Realm, it cannot be imagined that the King ſhall be without remedy for his Subject, but that he may have him Diſcharged by his Writ out of this Court.

This preſent Receſs is not ordinary Adjournment; for it is entred in the Journal that the Parliament ſhall not be Aſſembled at the Day of Adjournment, but Adjourned or Prorogued to another Day, if the King do not ſignifie his Pleaſure by Proclamation.

Some other Exceptions were made to the Return.

1. That no Commitment is returned, but only a Warrant to the Conſtable to receive him.

2. The Return does not anſwer the Mandate of the Writ; for that it is to have the Body of A. E. of S. and the return of Warrant for the Impriſonment of A. Aſhley E. of S.

Serjeant Maynard argued to maintain the Return; The Houſe of Lords is the Supream Court of the Realm; 'tis true this Court is ſuperior to all Courts of ordinary Juriſdiction, If this Commitment had been by any Inferior Court, it could not have been maintained; But the Commitment is by a Court that is not under the Controul of this Court; and that Court is in Law ſitting at this time, and therefore the expreſſing the Contempt particularly, is a Matter that continues in the Deliberation of that Court: 'Tis true, this Court ought to determine what the Law is in every Caſe that comes before them, and in this Caſe the Queſtion is only whether this Court can judge of a Contempt committed in Parliament during the ſame Seſſion of Parliament, and diſcharge one committed for ſuch Contempt. When a Queſtion of Privilege ariſeth in an Accord depending in this Court, the Court may determine it; but now the Queſtion is, Whether the Lords have capacity to determine their own Privileges, and whether this Court can controul their Determination, and Diſcharge during their Seſſion a Peer committed for Contempt. The Judges have often demanded what the Law is, and how a Statute ſhould be expounded of the Lords in Parliament, as on the Statute of Amendments, 40 Ed. 3. 34. 6. 8. Co. 157. and 158. a fortiori. The Court ought to demand their Opinion, when a Doubt ariſeth on an Order made by the Houſe of Lords now ſitting.

As to the Determination of the Impriſonment, doubtleſs the Pleaſure of the King is to be determined in the ſame Court where the Judgment was given.

As to the Determination of the Seſſion, the Opinion of Cooke is good Law, and the Addition of Promiſes of many Acts is only in Majorem cautelam.

Sir Will. Jones, Att. Gen. To the ſame Effect, as to the uncertainty of the Commitment, it is to be conſidered that this Caſe differs from all other Caſes in two circumſtances: 1. The Perſon which is committed is a Member of the Houſe by which he is committed (I do not take upon me to ſay that the Caſe would be different if the Perſon committed were not a Peer.) 2. The Court that does commit is Superior to this Court, and therefore if the Contempt had been particularly ſhewn, of what Judgment ſoever this Court ſhould have been as to the Contempt, yet they would not have diſcharged the Earl, and thereby take upon them a Juriſdiction over the Houſe of Peers.

The Judges in no Age have taken upon them the Judgment of what is Lex & conſuetudo Parliamenti; but here the Attempt is to engage the Judges to give their Opinion in a matter whereof they might have refuſed to have given it. If it had been demanded in Parliament, 'tis true, if a Writ be brought where Privilege is pleaded, the Court ought to judge of it as an Incident to the Suit whereof the Court was poſſeſs'd; but this will be no Warrant for this Court to aſſume a Judgment of an Original Matter ariſing in Parliament, and that which is ſaid of the Judges Power to expound Statutes, cannot be denied.

But it is not applicable to this Caſe; by the ſame Reaſon that this Commitment is queſtion'd, every Commitment of the Houſe of Commons may be likewiſe queſtion'd in this Court. It is objected, that there would be a Failure of Juſtice if the Earl ſhould not be diſcharged; but the contrary is true; for, if he be diſcharged, there would be a Failure of Juſtice for Offences in Parliament, and therefore the Earl would be diſcharged from all Manner of Puniſhment for his Offence, if he be diſcharged (for he muſt be diſcharged or remanded; for the Court cannot Bail but where they have a Juriſdiction of the Matter) and ſo deliver'd out of the Hands of the Lords, who only have Power to puniſh him.

It is objected, that the Contempt is not ſaid to be committed in the Houſe of Peers, but it may well be intended to be committed there; for it appears he is a Member of that Houſe, and that the Contempt was againſt the Houſe; and beſides, there are Contempts whereof they have Cognizance, tho' they are committed out of the Houſe. It is objected, that 'tis poſſible this Contempt was committed before the General Pardon; but ſurely ſuch Injuſtice ſhall not be ſuppoſed in the Supream Court, and it may well be ſuppoſed to be committed, during the Seſſion in which the Commitment to Priſon was.

It would be great difficulty for the Lords to make their Commitments ſo exact and particular, when they are employ'd in the Arduous Affairs of the Realm; and it has been adjudged on a Return out of Chancery, of a Commitment for a Contempt againſt a Decree that it was good, and yet the Decree was not ſhown.

The Limitation of the Impriſonment is well, for if the King or the Houſe determine their Pleaſure, he ſhall be diſcharged, for then 'tis not the Pleaſure of both that he ſhould be detained, and the Addition of thoſe Words during the Pleaſure, is no more than was before implied by the Law; for if thoſe Words had been omitted, yet the King might have pardon'd the Contempt, if he had but expreſs'd his Pleaſure under the Broad Seal. If a Judgment be given in this Court, that one ſhall be Impriſon'd during the King's Pleaſure; his Pleaſure ought to be determined by Pardon, and not by any Act of this Court, ſo that the King would have no Prejudice by the Impriſonment of a great Miniſter, becauſe he could diſcharge him by a Pardon. The double Limitation is for the Benefit of the Priſoner, who ought not to complain of the Duration of his Impriſonment, ſince he has neglected to make Application for his Diſcharge in an orderly way.

I confeſs by the Determination of the Seſſion, the Orders made the ſame Seſſion are diſcharged, but I ſhall not affirm whether this preſent Order will be diſcharged or no, becauſe it is a Judgment. But this is not the preſent Caſe, for the Seſſion continues notwithſtanding the Royal Aſſent given to ſeveral Bills, according to the Opinion of Cook and all the Judges. Hutton. 61, 62. Every Proviſo in an Act of Parliament is not a Determination of what was the Law before; for they are often added for the Satisfaction of thoſe that are ignorant of the Law.

Turner Solicitor Gen. To the ſame Effect, in the great Caſe of Mr. Selden, 5 Car. 1. the Warrant was for notable Contempts committed againſt us and our Government, and ſtirring up Sedition; and altho' that be almoſt as general as that in our Caſe, yet no Objection was made to it for that Cauſe in any of the Arguments, Ruſhworth's Collections, 18, and 19. in the Appendix. But I agree that this Return could not have been maintained if it were out of an Inferior Court, but during the Seſſion this Court can take no Cognizance of the Matter, and the Inconvenience would be great if the Law were taken otherwiſe; for this Court might Judge one way, and the Houſe of Peers another: which doubtleſs would not be for the Advantage and Benefit of the Subject. For the avoiding of this Miſchief, it was agreed by the whole Court in the Caſe of Barnardiſton and Somes, that the Accord for the double Return could not be brought in this Court until the Parliament had determined the Right of Election, leſt there ſhould be a difference between the Judgments of the Courts.

When a Judgment of the Lords comes to this Court, tho' it be of a Reverſal of a Judgment of this Court, the Court is obliged to execute it; but their Judgment was never examined or corrected here. In the Caſe of the Lord Hollis, it was reſolved that this Court had no Juriſdiction of a Miſdemeanor committed in Parliament; when the Parliament is determined, the Judges are the Expoſitors of the Acts, and are intruſted with the Lives, Liberties and Fortunes of the Subject, and if the Seſſion were determined, the Earl might apply himſelf to this Court, for the Subject ſhall not be without a Place, where he may reſort for the Recovery of his Liberty, but this Seſſion is not determined: For the moſt part the Royal Aſſent is given the laſt Day, as ſaith Plowden, Partridge's Caſe; yet the giving the Royal Aſſent, does not make it the laſt Day of Parliament without a ſubſequent Reſolution or Prerogative, and the Court judicially takes notice of Prorogation and Adjournments of Parliament. Cro. Jac. 111. Ford verſus Hunten, and by Conſequence no Order is diſcontinued, but remains as if the Parliament were actually Aſſembled. Cro. Jac. 342. Sir Chr. Hauden's Caſe, ſo that the Earl ought to apply himſelf to the Lords, who are his proper Judges.

It ought to be obſerved, That this Attempt is Primæ Impreſſionis, and though Impriſonment upon Contempt hath been frequent by the one and the other Houſe, till now no Perſon ever ſought Inlargement here: The Court was obliged in Juſtice to grant the Habeas Corpus, but upon the whole Matter being diſcloſed, it appears upon the Return, that the Cauſe belongs ad aliud examen; they ought to remand the Party.

As

As to the Limitation of the Impriſonment, the King may determine his Pleaſure by a Pardon under the Great Seal of England, as in the Caſe of Reinger and Flagoſſa, Plowden 20.

As to the Exception that no Commitment is returned, the Conſtable can only ſhew what concerns himſelf, which is the Warrant to him directed; and the Writ does not require him to return any thing elſe.

As to your Exception, that he is otherwiſe named in the Commitment than in the Writ: The Writ requires to have the Body of A. Earl of S. Quocunque nomine Cenſeatur in the Commitment.

After this, my Lord Shaftsbury made a Speech; the Subſtance thereof followeth.

My Lords,

'I DID not intend to have ſpoke one Word 'in this Buſineſs, but ſomething hath been 'objected and laid to my Charge by the King's 'Council, Mr. Attorney and Mr. Solicitor, that 'enforceth me to ſay ſomething for your better 'Satisfaction. They have told you that my 'Counſel in their Arguments ſaid, That this 'Court was greater than the Houſe of Peers, 'which I dare to appeal to your Lordſhips and 'the whole Court, that it was never ſpoken by 'them, I am ſure was not by any Directions of 'mine. What is done by my Counſel, and by 'me, is, That this is the moſt proper Court to 'reſort unto, where the Liberty of the Subject 'is concerned. The Lords Houſe is the Supream Houſe of Judicature in the Kingdom; 'but yet there is a Juriſdiction that the Lords 'Houſe does not meddle with. The King's 'Counſel hath mention'd, as a Wonder, That 'a Member of the Lords Houſe ſhould come 'hither to diminiſh the Juriſdiction of the 'Lords. I acknowledge them to be Superior to 'this, or any other Court, to whom all Appeals and Writs of Error are brought; and yet 'there are Juriſdictions that they do not challenge, and which are not natural to them, or 'proper for them. They claim not to meddle 'in Original Cauſes, and ſo I might mention 'in other things; and I do not think it a Kindneſs to any Power or Body of Men, to give 'them ſome Power that are not natural or proper to their Conſtitution. I do not think it a 'Kindneſs to the Lords to make them abſolute 'and above the Law, for ſo I humbly conceive 'this muſt do, if it be adjudged that they by a 'general Warrant, or without any particular 'Cauſe aſſigned, do commit me, or any other 'Man, to a perpetual and indefinite Impriſonment: And, my Lords, I am not ſo inconſiderable a Perſon, but what you do in my 'Caſe, muſt be Law for every Man in England.

'Mr. Attorney is pleaſed to ſay, I am a Member of the Lords Houſe, and to lay weight on 'the Word Member. It is very true, I am one 'of them, and no Man hath a greater Reverence or Eſteem for the Lords than my ſelf: 'but, my Lords, I hope my being a Peer, or a 'Member of either Houſe, ſhall not loſe my 'being an Engliſhman, or make me to have leſs 'Title to Magna Charta and the other Laws of 'Engliſh Liberty.

'My Opinion is not with one of my Counſel, who argued very learnedly, That the paſſing an Act by the King's Royal Aſſent can make a Seſſions, becauſe the uſual Promiſe was not in it. It was without any Inſtruction of mine to mention that Point.

'The King's Counſel tells your Lordſhips of the Laws and Cuſtoms of Parliament; and if this was ſo, I ſhould ſubmit: But this Caſe of mine is Primæ Impreſſionis, and is a new way, ſuch as neither Mr. Attorney nor Mr. Solicitor can ſhew any Precedent of, and I have no other Remedy nor Place to apply to than the Way I take.

'Mr. Attorney confeſſeth that the King's Pleaſure may pleaſe me without the Lords. If ſo, this Court is Coram Rege. This Court is the proper Place to determine the King's Pleaſure. This Court will and ought to judge of an Act of Parliament void, if it be againſt Magna Charta, much more may judge an Order of the Houſe, that is put in Execution to deprive any Subject of his Liberty. And if this Order of Commitment be a Judgment, as the King's Counſel affirms, then it is out of the Lords Hands, and properly before your Lordſhips, as much as the Acts which were lately paſſed, which I preſume you will not refuſe to judge of, notwithſtanding that the King's Attorney General ſaith that this Parliament is ſtill in Being. I take it ſomething ill that Mr. Attorney tells me I might have applied elſewhere.

'My Lords, I have not omitted what became my Duty towards the King; for beſides the Oath of Allegiance I took as a Peer, or an Engliſhman, there is ſomething in my Breaſt that will never ſuffer me to depart from the Duty and Reſpect that I owe him; but I am here before him, he is always ſuppoſed to be here preſent, and he alloweth his Subjects the Law.

'My Lords, they ſpeak much of the Cuſtom of Parliament; but I do affirm to you, there is no Cuſtom of Parliament that ever their Members were put out of their own Power; and the Inconveniences of it will be endleſs.

'Mr. Attorney was pleaſed eaſily to anſwer the Objection of one of my Counſel; If a great Miniſter ſhould be ſo committed, he hath the Cure of a Pardon, a Prorogation, or a Diſſolution: but if the Caſe ſhould be put, why forty Members, or a greater Number, may not as well be taken away without Remedy in any of the King's Courts, he will not ſo eaſily anſwer; and if in this Caſe there can be no Relief, no Man can foreſee what will be hereafter.

'I deſire your Lordſhips well to conſider what Rule you make in my Caſe, for it will be a Precedent that in future Ages may concern every Man in England.

'My Lords, Mr. Attorney ſaith you can either releaſe or remand me; I differ from him in that Opinion. I do not inſiſt upon a Releaſe: I have been a Priſoner above five Months already, and come hither of Neceſſity, having no other Way to get my Liberty, and therefore am very willing to tender your Lordſhips Bail, which are in or near the Court, good as any are in England, either for their Quality or Eſtate, and I am ready to give any Sum or Number.

'My Lords, this Court being poſſeſt of this 'Buſineſs, I am now your Priſoner.

The Court deliver'd their Opinion Seriatim.

Sir Tho. Jones, Juſtice. Such a Return made by an Ordinary Court of Juſtice, would have been ill and uncertain; but the Cauſe is different when it comes before this High Court, to which ſo much Reſpect has been paid by our Predeceſſors, that they have deferred the Determination of Doubts conceived on an Act of Parliament, until they have received the Advice of the Lords: and now, inſtead thereof, it is demanded of us to control the Judgment of all the Peers, and given on a Member of their own Houſe, and during the Continuance of the ſame Seſſion. The Caſes where the Courts of Weſtminſter have taken Cognizance of Privilege, differ from this Caſe: for in thoſe it was only an Incident to the Caſe before them, which was of their Cognizance; but the direct Point of the Matter is now the Judgment of the Lords.

The Courſe of all Courts ought to be conſider'd, for that is the Law of the Court, Lane's Caſe, 2 Reſt. and it has not been affirmed, That the Uſage of the Houſe of Lords has uſed to expreſs the Matter more particularly on Commitments for Contempts, and therefore I ſhall take it to be according to the Courſe of Parliament. 4 Inſt. 50. It is ſaid that the Judges are Aſſiſtants to the Lords, to inform them of Common Law; but they ought not to judge of any Law, Cuſtom, or Uſage of Parliament.

The Objection as to the Continuance of the Impriſonment, has received a plain Anſwer, for it ſhall be determined by the Pleaſure of the King, or of the Lords: and if it were otherwiſe, yet the King could pardon the Contempt under the Great Seal, or diſcharge the Impriſonment under the Privy Seal.

I ſhall not ſay what would be the Conſequence (as to this Impriſonment) if the Seſſion were determined, for that is not the preſent Caſe: but as the Caſe is, the Court can neither Bail nor Diſcharge the Earl.

Wild Juſtice. The Return no doubt is illegal; but the Queſtion is of a Point of Juriſdiction, Whether it may be examined here? This Court can't meddle with the Tranſactions of the moſt High Court of Peers in Parliament, during the Seſſion, which is not determined; and therefore the Certainty or Uncertainty of the Return is not material, for it is not examinable here: but if the Seſſion had been determined, my Opinion would be, that he ought to be diſcharged.

Rainsford Chief Juſtice. This Court has no Juriſdiction of the Cauſe, and therefore the Form of the Return is not conſiderable. We ought not to extend our Juriſdiction beyond its due Limits, and the Actions of our Anceſtors will not warrant us in ſuch an Attempt.

The Conſequence would be very miſchievous if this Court ſhould deliver a Member of the Houſe of Peers and Commons who are committed, for thereby the Buſineſs of Parliament may be retarded; for it may be the Commitment was for evil Behaviour, or undecent Reflections on other Members, to the diſturbance of the Affairs of Parliament.

The Commitment in this Caſe is not for ſafe Cuſtody, but he is in Execution of the Judgment given by the Lords for the Contempt; and therefore if he ſhould be Bailed, he would be delivered out of Execution; for a Contempt in facie Curiæ there is no other Judgment or Execution.

This Court has no Juriſdiction, and therefore he ought to be remanded. I deliver no Opinion whether it would be otherwiſe in Caſe of a Prorogation.

Twiſden Juſtice was abſent, but he deſired Juſtice Jones to declare that his Opinion was, That the Party ought to be Remanded.

And ſo he was Remanded by the Court.

Intran' Mr. JAMES MITCHEL, Priſoner.

INDYTED and Accuſed, foraſmuch as be the Common Law and Law of Nations, and the Law of this Kingdom, Murder and the Aſſaulting and Attempting upon any Perſon or Perſons be way of Forethought Felonie & per inſidias & induſtriam, of purpoſe and deſign to Kill, are moſt atrocious and deteſtable Crymes, deſtructive to and againſt the Being of Humane Society, and is ſeverly puniſhable, but eſpecially when the ſamen are committed upon the Perſons of Counſellors and other Officers who doe repreſent Authoritie, and are lyable to the Miſtakes and Malice of wicked Perſons for doing their Duty, or when the ſamen are committed upon the Perſons of Churchmen, Biſhops, or Miniſters, who are of the Sacred Function; who be the Laws of all Nations are priviledged and ſecured, as much as can be, from the Malice and ſacrilegious Attempts of wicked Perſons. And particularly, it is Statute be the fourth Act of the ſixteenth Parliament of King James the Sixth, That whatſoever Perſon invades or perſues any of the Lords of Seſſion, ſecret Council, or any of his Majeſties Officers, for doing of his Majeſties Service, ſhall be puniſhed with Death. And be the ſeventh Act of the firſt Parliament of his Majeſties Royal Father, in Anno 1633. intitulat, Anent the invading of Miniſters, it is Statute that the ſame ſhall be extended to all Arch-Biſhops, Biſhops, and Miniſters whatſoever. And be the fourth Act of his Majeſties ſecond Parliament, and ſecond Seſſion of the ſame, it is Statute, That whatſoever Perſons ſhall be guilty of the Aſſaulting the Lives of Miniſters, that they ſhall be puniſhed with the pain of Death and Confiſcation of their Moveables. And be the Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom, the Mutilation and Diſmembration of any of his Majeſties Subjects, be way of Forethought Felonie, is ane high and capital Crime, and puniſhable with the pain of Death. Nevertheleſs, it is of Veritie, That ye having ſhaken off all Fear of God and Conſcience, Reſpect and Regard to his Majeſties Authoritie and Laws, and conceiving a deadly Hatred and Malice againſt a Reverend Father in God, James Arch-Biſhop of St. Andrews (a Perſon who had never known or ſeen you, ſo as to take notice of you, and much leſs had given you any Offence) without any Ground or Quarrell, and upon Account only that he was advanced and promoted to be Archbiſhop, and to be of his Majeſties Privie Council, and did ſerve God and his Majeſtie faithfullie in the ſaids Stations and Offices; you did dayly contrive, reſolve and deſign the Murder and Aſſaſination of the ſaid Arch-Biſhop: And in order thereto, having provyded yourſelf with a pair of long Scots Iron Piſtols near Musket bore, you did upon the Nynth Day of July 1668. or ane of other of the Days of the ſaid Moneth, proceed and take the Opportunity to execute and goe about your horrid and cruel Deſign, when the ſaid Archbiſhop in the Afternoon of the ſaid Day did come down his own Stair, and was going to his Coach, being to go abroad upon his Occaſions with a Reverend Father in God, Andrew Biſhop of Orkney. And you having a charged Piſtol with Powder and Ball, did moſt cruellie and felloniouſly Aſſault the ſaids Biſhops, and did fire, diſcharge, and ſhot the ſaid Piſtol upon them, being within the ſaid Coach; and God of his Goodneſs having preſerved the Archbiſhop whom you intended to Murder, you did by the ſaid Shot grievouſlie Wound the Biſhop of Orkney, to the great hazard and danger of his Life; ſo that having for a long tyme, and with great Pain, Torture, and expence of Blood, languiſhed of the ſaid Wound, being in a moſt dangerous Place in the joyning of the Hand and Arm, where there is a Confluence of Nerves and Fibres, he never did recover his Health to that meaſure and Vigour that he had, or might have had if he had not gotten the ſaid Wound. And he was mutilat and diſmembred as to his Arm and Hand, ſo that he could make no uſe of the ſame, but languiſhed thereof until he dyed. And after you had attempted and committed the ſaid Aſſaſination and Villanie tanquam inſidiator & per induſtriam, and be way of Forethought Felonie, ye did goe away and eſcape throw the Multitude and Throng that had gathered upon the Noiſe of the ſaid Shot, having another charged and bended Piſtol in your Hands, of purpoſe and deſign to have killed any Perſon who ſhould have offered to take and apprehend you. The foreſaid Attempt and Villanie nie being without any Parallel, the Circumſtances being conſidered, viz. That it was committed by one who profeſſed to be of the Reformed Religion, and who did pretend to be and ſerve as a Chaplain in ſeveral Families; that it was committed upon Perſons of the Sacred Function and Fathers of the Church, and that it was committed to the great Scandal and Diſadvantage of Chriſtian Religion, and eſpecially of the Proteſtant Reformed Religion, the Profeſſors and Preachers of the ſame having ſo much declared againſt, and be their Preaching and Wrytting having expreſt their Deteſtation of ſuch Attemps and Practices committed by Perſons, and ouned by Wrytters of the Roman Profeſſion: And that it cannot be inſtanced that any of the Proteſtant Religion was guilty of any Attempt upon the Account of Religion: And that the worſt of Men being aſhamed to commit ſuch Villanies; for covering of the ſame, and for their Security, doth take the Opportunitie of Darkneſs and Solitude, in Corners and ſolitary Places; Your Malice was ſo implacable, that you was prodigal of your own Lyfe to be Maſter of the Lyfe of the ſaid Archbiſhop; and in the High Street of Edinburgh, and in the Day-light, and in the face of the Sun, and before many Witneſſes, near or at a litle diſtance from the ſaid Coach, where you could not but expect to be preſently ſeaſed upon, you did devote your ſelf and did adventure to commit the ſaid moſt villanous and wicked Attempt. Yet notwithſtanding of all the ſaids Aggravations and Circumſtances of Horror and Remorſe, you did continue in your implacable Malice, and did converſe and keep Correſpondence with Robert Cannon of Mondrogatt, and with —— Welſh of Cornlie, and ——— Mac Cleland of Barſcop, declared and excepted Rebells and Traitors; had divers Meetings with them, and upon Diſcourſe concerning the ſaid Attempt, every one of the ſaids Perſons putting it upon one another, when it was put to you, you ſaid and uttered theſe or the like Speeches, Shame fall the miſſe, and that ye ſhould make the Fire hotter: And after the tyme and Attempt forſaid in the Year 1668, and ſubſequent Years, Moneths, and Days of the ſaids reſpective Years, and in ane or other of them, your guilty Conſcience diſquieting and perſuing you, you did rove and go abroad ſeveral tymes to Holland, England and Ireland, until Divine Juſtice did drive and bring you back to this Kingdom, that Juſtice might be ſatisfied and vindicat in ſome meaſure where you had committed ſo great Villanies. After your Return you did proceed to that height of Boldneſs and Confidence, or rather Impudence, that you did repair to and live in Edinburgh, and was married there with your Wyfe, who is yet living, by Mr. John Welſh, who is a declared and excepted Traitor, and Forefault for his Acceſſion to the Rebellion 1666. And your Boldnes was ſo great in out-daring both God and Authoritie, that for a long tyme ye have been lodged and has kept a Shop near that Place where the Archbiſhop doth and is in uſe to lodge when he is in Edinburgh, until at length ye was diſcovered and apprehended, having upon you when you was taken the ſame Piſtol which ye ſhot when ye committed the ſaid Attempt, which was found under your Coat charged with Powder and three Ball, of purpoſe to attempt again and execute you bloodie Deſign againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop, at leaſt againſt any Perſon who ſhould offer to take you. From all which Premiſes, it is evident that ye are guilty of the ſaids attrocious Crymes of Murder and Aſſaſinat be way of forethought Fellonie, and is a Percuſſor & ſiccarius, and of Mutilation, and of the other Crymes above-mention'd: And therefore the ſaids Pains ought to be inflicted upon you as ane Murderer and Aſſaſinat, and as guiltie of the Crymes forſaids, in ane exemplarie manner to the Terror of others.

Perſuer,	Proctors in Defence.
Sir George Mac Kenzie of Roſebaugh, our Soveraign Lord's Advocate.	Sir George Lockhart.
	Mr. John Eleis.

His Majeſties Advocate produced ane Warrand from his Majeſties Privy Council for perſueing the ſaid Mr. James Mitchel, whereof the Tenor follows. Edinburgh, the ſixth Day of December 1677. The Lords of his Majeſties Privie Council do hereby grant, order, and warrand to Sir George Mac Kenzie of Roſebaugh, his Majeſties Advocate, to raiſe and perſue a Criminal Proceſs before the Lords Commiſſioners of Juſticiary againſt Mr. James Mitchel for the Aſſaſination attempted by him upon the Archbiſhop of Saint Andrews and the Biſhop of Orkney. Extract be me ſic ſubſcribitur, Al. Gibſone.

Maſter John Eleis Advocate produced ane Act of his Majeſties Privy Council impowering Sir George Lockhart and him, to appear for the Pannals Defence, whereof the Tenor follows. Edinburgh the third Day of January, 1678. the Lords of his Majeſties Privie Council, having conſidered a Petition preſented in behalf of Mr. James Mitchel Priſoner, repreſenting, that he is upon Munday next to undergo a Tryal before the Juſtices at the inſtance of his Majeſties Advocate, as the alledged Perſon who ſhot a Piſtol at the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews: Yet no Advocat will undertake to appear for him, without they be ſpeciallie commanded ſo to do. And therefore ſupplicating, that Sir George Lockhart and Mr. John Eleis, Advocates, may be ordered to that Effect, the ſaids Lords doe hereby order and recommend the ſaid Sir George Lockhart and Mr. John Eleis to appear and plead for the Supplicant before the Juſtices, in the Cauſe abovementioned, upon Munday next, and other Dyets of that Proceſs, and appoints Intimation to be made hereof to the ſaid Sir George Lockhart and Mr. John Eleis, and to the Petitioner. Extract by me, ſic ſubſcribitur, Al. Gibſone.

His Majeſties Advocate declares he paſſes from my Lord Juſtice General as a Witnes in this Cauſe.

Mr. John Eleis, Advocate, as Proctor for the Pannal, declares, that they ſuſtain my Lord Juſtice General to be a Judge in this Cauſe notwithſtanding of his being cited as a Witnes both by Perſuer and Defender.

Mr. James Mitchel Pannal denyes the Dittay, and any pretended Confeſſion alledged emmitted be him.

Mr. John Eleis for the Pannal alledges, that he cannot paſs to the Knowledge of ane Aſſyſe: And the Concluſion that the Pannal has committed Murder, cannot be inferred from the

Sub-

Subſumption of the Lybell, becauſe be the Laws of this Kingdome, the Civil Law, the common Opinion of Doctors, the Law and general Cuſtom of all Nations, Nudus conatus & affectus ſine effectu, even in the moſt attrocious Crymes, except Treaſon, Parricide, and other excepted Crymes, is not puniſhable by Death. And it were againſt all Reaſon, ſeeing Puniſhments ought to be proportional to the Crymes, that a naked and ſimple Deſign of Murder ſhould be puniſhed as Murder that had taken Effect. Et in criminibus gravioribus & graviſſimis, viz. Adulterium, Furtum, Sodomie, &c. the naked Deſign is not puniſhed pœna ordinaria, even by the Civil Law. And tho' Lex Cornelia de ſiccariis by ane extraordinary ſtretch does declare ſi quis cum telo ambulaverit, yet it is but a Statutory Law, and deregot to by the Law of Nations, and the ſpecial Laws of our Nation, in ſua far as Murder in our Law is defined to be, and has only place in Interfectis per felloniam, and theſe who were killed upon forethought Fellonie. (2*do*) In ſua far as the Lybell concludes him guilty of Aſſaſination, the ſame is no ways relevant, it being both a Term and a Cryme unknown in our Law. And be the Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Nation, the Subjects of Scotland are to be governed by the Laws of Scotland. And tho' the Cryme of Aſſaſination were a Point of Dittay by our Law, as it is not; yet it is not, nor cannot be pretended he was hyred for that Effect, nor is it lybelled. (3*tio.*) In ſua far as the Lybell concludes the Pain of Death for Mutilation of the Biſhop of Orkney; it is anſwered, that the ſame is no ways relevant. And the ſaid Concluſion cannot be inferred from the Subſumption, becauſe the Act of Parliament does only declare Demembration to be puniſhed as Slaughter. (2*do.*) The ſaid Act declares Demembration to be only puniſhed as Slaughter when it proceeds upon forethought Fellonie. (3*tio.*) The ſaid Act requires another Qualification, viz. That it be perſued be the Partie: None of which can be ſubſumed upon in this Caſe, becauſe it is not lybelled that the Biſhop was diſmembred, or had his Hand cut off, but only had a Wound in the Hand. And the Lybell does expreſslie bear, That the Biſhop of Orkney got the Shot in the Hand accidentallie, when the Deſign was againſt the Biſhop of Saint Andrews, and ſo was not upon forethought Fellonie as to him. And laſtlie, the Biſhops neareſt of Kine does not concurr nor perſue, which is a ſpecial Requiſite in the ſaid Act of Parliament. Like as the ſaid Act is exclet, and in no Regiſter can it be made appear that any Perſon was capitallie puniſhed for Diſmembration: But upon the contrary, many accuſed and condemned in Arbitrarie Puniſhments. So that the Lybell is no ways relevant as to that Article, for the Reaſons foreſaids; ſpeciallie ſeeing Diſmembration is not ſo much here as lybelled or pretended. And whereas it is inſinuat, that the Biſhop did languiſh and dye of the ſaid Wound: It is anſwered, that the Lybell is no ways relevant, he conceived, becauſe it is not lybelled that the Wound was ex ſua natura lethal or mortal. And it is offered to be proven, that the Biſhop did live ſeveral Years thereafter, and go about his ordinary Function as a Biſhop, by Preaching, &c. which is a ſufficient Ground of Exſculpation and Defence.

4*to.* In ſua far as the Lybell is founded upon the Act of Parliament anent invading of Counſellors, it is anſwered, That this preſent Caſe does not fall under the Compaſs of the ſaid Act of Parliament, becauſe it is not lybelled that the Cauſe of the pretended Invaſion of the Archbiſhop was upon the account he was in the Proſecution of his Majeſties Service; but upon the contrar it may appear ſtrange to any rational Man Quorſum & cui bono he could have done it.

5*to.* As to the Acts anent invading of Miniſters, they import no capital Puniſhment, but only Confiſcation of Moveables. And as to which the ſaids Acts are opponed, and as to the Act 1670, it is poſterior to the Fact lybelled.

In ſua far as the Lybell ſeems to be founded on a Confeſſion; and in ſua far as the Confeſſion may be made uſe of as a ſole or conjunct Probation, the Pannal does object againſt the ſamen upon the Grounds and Reaſons following. Primo, If any ſuch Confeſſion was emmitted by the Pannal, which he has abſolutlie denyed in Preſence of your Lordſhip (no ways acknowledging the Lybell) no reſpect can be had thereto: And it is not probatorie, becauſe the ſamen is extrajudicial & extra Bancam, in regard it is not made in Preſence of the Aſſyſe, who are Judges to the Probation, which is expreſslie contrar to the 90. Act, 7. Parliament, King James 6. which requires the hail Probation to be led in Preſence of the Aſſyſe and Partie. And which Act of Parliament was not only made for Securitie of Pannals, as to a juſt and legal Procedure againſt them; but alſo that the Aſſyſers to whom the Truſt of the Lives of the Subjects of this Kingdom is committed, as to the Point of Probation, might not proceed upon Fame and Report, but upon a clear Probation before them. For if that were not, the Aſſyſe would be altogether deprived to know how the Confeſſion was emmitted, if ſpontaneouſly or ex conſtantia vel trepidatione, or ſpe veniæ. And the moſt that ever was ſuſtained in this Caſe, was, that the Aſſyſe did find a Partie guilty upon a Confeſſion emmitted before a Quorum of the Juſtices in a fenced Court. Eſto the ſaid pretended Confeſſion ſhould be ſuſtained probative, as for the Reaſons above-repreſented (the Pannal with all Submiſſion to your Lordſhips humbly conceaves) it cannot: Yet, if any ſuch Confeſſion was, it is null becauſe it was elicete ſpe veniæ & immunitatis. And for proving thereof, the Pannal does repeat his Exculpation, which he conceaves is relevant in Law; and craves the Witneſſes therein to be examined upon the Contents thereof. (2*do.*) The ſaid Confeſſion being emmitted extra Judicium & ſpe veniæ, as ſaid is, eſt in ſe nulla, and cannot be confirmed or validitat by the Teſtimonie of any Witneſſes whatſomever. And to evidence that the Pannals Lyfe was never intended to be taken upon the ſaid pretended Confeſſion: The ſame (if any was) is opponed; by which it evidently appears that he was examined upon Oath, as to the moſt material part of the Cryme, viz. his Complices, which makes it more than evident, that it being in materia criminale & Capitale, in which Oaths cannot be taken by Law, renders the Confeſſion null and invalidat, at leaſt makes it evident that the Lybell has been reſtricted ad civiles effectus.

My

My Lord Advocat insists in the first Place upon the fourth Act of the sixteent Parliament, James 6. By which nudus conatus attempting and invading, tho' nothing follow, is found relevant to inferr the pain of Death. But so it is that the said Mr. James Mitchell did attempt the killing the Archbishop of Saint Andrews, a Privy Councellour; which Attempt devenit ad actum proximum, the said Mr. James having done all that was in his Power. And as to the Quality adjected in the Act, insinuating the Defence, that it must be proven that it was for doing of his Majesties Service; it is replyed, That this Qualitie is inferred, and cannot, nor requires not to be otherways proven, than by a presumed Inference. For the Design of the Attempter being ane Act of the Mind and the Secret of the Heart, it cannot be otherways proven, but simplie by the attempting a Secret Counsellour, or any of his Majesties Officers, against whom the Pannal could have no Quarrel, but for doing of his Duty, and therefore the Law still concludes the same, except the Pannal will offer to condescend upon another relevant Reason, viz. any private Fead; for, if it were otherways, the Act would be absolutlie useless, since any Person might attempt or kill a Privie Counsellour, it being impossible to prove what was the Designe. And this Act was designed meerly to make all Attempts against Privie Counsellors punishable by Death; for otherwise it could be no Fence nor Protection for Privie Counsellours, if it were onlie granted to them under a Qualitie which were impossible to be proven. Nor can this seem hard, since the Subjects have only themselves to blame, who attempt against the Lives of Privie Counsellours. And it were very ridiculous to think, that if the Brother of a Pannal should attempt to kill the Judge or King's Advocate immediatlie after a Process, that it were necessar to prove the Designe otherways than by the natural Contingencie which obviously aryses from the Qualitie and Circumstances of the Perpetration: But in this Case as Mr. James Mitchel is a Person who can condescend upon no private Offence betwixt the Archbishop and him, they being absolute Strangers to one another; so besides the Presumption of Law above-specified, it is offered in Fortification of the Act, That, Primo, the said Mr. James ownes himself to be of a Profession who hates and execrates that Hyerarchie, and of which Sect the unhallowed Penman of Nephtalie declares it lawful to Kill those of that Character. 2*do.* It is notour and offered to be proven, that Mr. James himself defended that it was lawful to kill such, and indeavoured by wrested Places of Scripture to defend himself, and gain Proselytes thereby. And if need were, as there is none, it is specificklie and distinctly offered to be proven, that he acknowledged that the Reason why he shot at the Archbishop, was, because he thought him a Persecuter of the nefarious and execrable Rebels who appeared on Pentland-Hills: Nor can Designs nor Acts of the Mind be otherways proven than by such emmitted Declarations, Arguments and Acknowledgements. Likeas in the whole Course of our Law, the invading or attempring any of that Sacred Function is still declared equivalent to Killing: And tho' the last Act be posterior, yet it is sufficient to demonstrate and clear. And, 3*tio.* By the Common Law conatus and indeavour is in criminibus attrocissimis punishable by Death, ubi reus devenit ad actum proximum & omne quod in se erat fecit, which is in it self most reasonable, since the Attrocitie of the Cryme should put the same even beyond ane Attempt. And there can be nothing more just than that the Extraordinaryness of a Cryme should have ane extraordinarie Allowance. And Guilt attempted in attrocious Crymes, such as sacrilegious Assasination, is in the Eye of the Law as great and greater than the stealing ane Horse or Cowe, speciallie where Securitie from the Effect proceeded from no Innocencie in the Committer, who did all he could; But from the special Providence of God disappointing the Effect of a Cause he so much hated. And Carpsovius requires only three Qualifications to make Indeavour punishable by Death: Primo, Quod eventum erat ad actum morti proximum. (2do.) Quod non stetit per Assasinum quin consummaretur delictum. (3tio.) Quod occidendus fortuito casu tantum Evaserit; all which concurr but too well here. And that in omnibus criminibus atrocissimis Conatus is punishable, is clear from Gothofred. tit. de Conatu, from Covarivius in Clementina, Si furiosus, num. 6. And particularlie in the Cryme of Assasination totidem verbis, by Matheus de Siccariis, num. 3. Assasinus tamen nihil prodesse debet soluso; conatus capite puniendus, a great Instance whereof is given in a Decision by Gothofred in the Senate of Savoy, where Death was inflicted upon a Person who but struck with a Batton. And whereas it is pretended that Assasination is no Cryme in our Law, and that it is only inferred where the designe of Murdering proceeds from the Committers taking Money: It is answered, that this part of the Defence is most groundless: And our Nation would be more barbarous than those of Lapland or the Tartars, if the lying in wait with a constant designe to Kill clandestinely & per insidias any Person who had never offended us, should not be raised to a higher Degree of Detestation than ordinar Murder. For, though the Law does not always punish a meer Indeavour when designed against such as have offended us, when Nature pleads some Excuse from the greatnes of Passion and Resentment, or where the Partie killed gave some Occasion by doing the Wrong, or where the suddenness of the Design allowed no tyme to consider or repent; yet where a Person after mature Deliberation ryppens his own Villanie, and resists the Motions of Reason and the Inspirations of God Almighty, by lying in wait to kill a Person who never offended, the Law thinks the Common Wealth can never be secured as long as such a Viper is alive, who wants nothing but Opportunitie to kill Mankind one by one. And the Specialitie of taking Money is only demonstrative, and not restrictive, since the Guilt in this, and such like Cases, is greater and more dangerous than that of taking Money. For, he who takes Money will not kill but in Darknes, and where he may escape; but the Sun, and the Cross, and the Confluence of all the World, cannot secure against Murders, where the Partie imagines that the Cryme deserves Heaven, or at least where he thinks that these of his Perswasion will rise in a Tumult upon the Streets for his Defence. Likeas since the Law has inferred Death ob conatum in the Crymes of Raptus robbrie, &c. much more should it inferr Death in this unparalleled and execrable Cryme.

As

As to what is alleadged againſt the Acts of invading Miniſters; it is anſwered, That the firſt Act appoints that it ſhall be puniſhed with all Rigor. And the 7. Act, King Charles 1. and the laſt Act is ſufficient, tho' poſterior to the Cryme, to declare what was the meaning of that General of puniſhed with all Rigor. And ſince our Law makes the Attempting of ſuch as are doing his Majeſties Service Capital, that General ought to be extended to Death, ſince leſſer Crymes and other Crymes are for the ſame Reaſons which are applicable to this, puniſhable by Death: Nor can there be any Hazard in this, ſince there is a Law for the future. And no Man ſhall ever dye for ſo great a Cryme in our Nation.

Whereas it is alleadged, that here the Pannal did only confeſs upon hopes of Lyfe: It is replyed, that Primo, The Promiſe of Lyfe from a Judge, who could not grant the ſame, cannot defend, eſpeciallie where no threatning preceeded; and where it is clear that what was confeſt was founded on other Preſumptions & indicia. Nor is this relevant, except the Pannal could offer to prove, Firſt, Threatning, to the Fear whereof he yeelded; 2do. That he expreſslie pactioned that this Confeſſion ſhould not operate againſt him, which is very clear from Boſſius, tit. De confeſſis per torturam, Num. 12. where he ſtates the Caſe, and concludes, that a ſpontaneous Confeſſion, though Lyfe were promiſed, does not defend: Nor is the Guilt leſs, nor the Truth leſs, that a Judge promiſe. And if this were ſufficient, every Judge might make himſelf King, and grant Remiſſions at his Pleaſure. And though this might weigh with the Judge who promiſed; yet the Law conſiders the Partie confeſſing ſtill guiltie, and ſo does never ſecure him. Et quod poteſt condemnari tenent, Cinus Cod. de iis qui ad Eccleſiam effugiant, Alciad. lege de verborum ſignificatione; and Clarus himſelf ſayes, That Ego ſuſpicor opinionem Ceni eſſe majus communem; but giving his own Opinion rather as a private Man than as a Lawyer, he ſayes, Ego tamen non condemnarem ad mortem niſi aliis indiciis fuerit gravatus, Ergo reus indiciis gravatus eſt morte plectandus, which is moſt juſt and reaſonable. For, though the Law be jealous where a meer ſillie Innocent confeſſes to a Judge, who may terrifie him, or have ane Intereſt in cauſing him confeſs to lay the blame off his Friends, yet where the Confeſſion proceeded from a Perſon ſuſpect by all the World, by a Perſon who publictly in all Places ſince has owned the Deed; who fled upon that Account; who was taken with unlawful Weapons, unfit for his Profeſſion, and the ſpecifick Weapons which committed the Attempt; who condeſcended upon all the Circumſtances, and declared that he gloried in being a Martyr upon that Account: In being ſeen run away immediatly upon doing of the Deed with a Piſtol in his Hand; in being found out in a thouſand Lies and Prevarications when he was examined; in having renewed his Confeſſion publictly: It were but to ſcorn the Law and Maſſacre Mankind, to think that a Confeſſion ſo adminiculat ſhould not bind the Confeſſor, who can alleadge nothing of any Threatning uſed againſt him by the Judge to whom he confeſſed. And Lawyers do in that Caſe conſider the qualitie of the Judge as ſevere, unjuſt, rigid or partial: but the Confeſſion is alleadged to be made here upon Promiſe of Lyfe given by my Lord Chancellor, whoſe benign, gentle Temper frees him from all Suſpition. And the proponing of Exculpation acknowledges the Deed to be done by Mr. James Mitchel the Pannal, againſt which the Proteſtation denying the Lybell cannot be ſuſtained, being Contraria facto, as is evident to any rational Man; and that the Pannal cannot either pretend alibi, nor any other pretence of Error, for excuſeing his Retractation: ſo his Majeſties Advocate oppones his Confeſſion, bearing no Qualification. And though he is very ſecure that the Exculpation cannot be proven, yet ſince it is notorly known that he is the Committer, and that this may be a Preparative to other Pannals, againſt whom no Probation is ordinarlie had, but Confeſſions elicite by Judges, with fair and gentle Promiſes, he mordicus adheres to the Relevancie. For, as Boſſius ſays, Et ſi Judex dixerit nihil mali eveniet tibi vel etiam promittat ut liberabitur Majus tamen communis eſt opinio Confeſſionem valere quia Judex etiam poterat ita fingere ad veritatem inveniendam. And as this is moſt advantagious to the Common Wealth and Mankind, ſo there can be no Hazard to a private Pannel, ſince if he can but aſtruct his own Innocencie, or the reaſon of his Error, by alleadging that he was alibi, or that there was ſevere Threatnings or Torture uſed, the ſame will ſtill be allowed to qualifie his Confeſſion. But the general Preſumption lies, that a Judge will not damn his own Soul, ſtain his Function, ruin his Fame, expoſe himſelf to the Terrors of God Almightie, by alluring a Confeſſion from a poor Innocent.

As to what is objected againſt the Confeſſion as extrajudicial and before ane incompetent Judge: It is replyed, That Confeſſions are of all Probations the moſt infallible, ſince Witneſſes may, but it cannot be preſumed a Man will wrong himſelf: And the Riſe of that Maxime, That extrajudicial Confeſſions are not relevant, was only to exclude Probation upon Confeſſions emmitted where there was no Judge nor no deſign of Inquirie. But the Confeſſor being louſe and inconſiderate, and under no Reaſon of Advertance, did at random own a Deed of which they were moſt innocent, either for Oſtentation or to pleaſe the Companie, or in Raillerie: But, to ſay that a Man ſhould not be judged by what he deliberatlie confeſſes, where he knows the Deſigne is to inquire into the Cryme, and that the Event muſt be a Criminal Tryal, is without all Foundation or Probability of Reaſon: Nor can Judges or Aſſyſers be ſo much convinced by what Witneſſes will ſay, who may have Malice, or be brybed, or miſtaken; as what proceeds from a Man's own Breaſt deliberatlie and in cold Blood, which in Effect is oft tymes the Inſpiration and Influence of Almightie God, who to ſhow his Love to Juſtice and Kindnes to Mankind, draws even from the greateſt of Malefactors the cleareſt Confeſſions. And ſince Men do not uſe to bring Witneſſes when they commit Crymes, nor can the Nature of the Thing allow Probation by Wrytt, to cut of Confeſſions in theſe Caſes were to make Crymes for ever paſs unpuniſhed, and to make Law, which is founded upon Principles of Reaſon, and the good of the Common Wealth, evaniſh in meer Terms of Art and hard Words, contrar to the Deſigne of Lawyers and the ſolid Principles of ſincere Truth.

That this Confeſſion is then Judicial is clear, being taken by Authoritie of the Privie Councill, the Supream Judicatorie of the Nation, and where the Deſign was to expiſcate this Truth. And the Pannal knew that he was upon a Tryal for his Lyfe: Nor can the Incompetencie of that Judicatorie be here alledged, ſince as the Seſſion is a Judicatorie meerly Civil, ſo the Councill is a Judicatorie above both, comprehending the Power of both. And being ſo far competent in the Cognition of Crymes, that they take Precognitions in criminal Cauſes; they modifie and qualifie the Sentences of the criminal Court; they determine intricate Caſes remitted to them be the Juſtices in Point of Law. And the King, and the greateſt part of the Criminal Court being there; it were abſurd to think, that a Confeſſion emitted before them ſhould not prove. And if in a Precognition a Partie ſhould confeſs, and ſo the Tryal there ceaſe, what could be more abſurd than to think that this Confeſſion ſhould not bind, eſpeciallie ſeeing Confeſſions emitted before the Lords of Seſſion in Caſes of Improbation, and Decreets following thereupon, are a ſole, a final, and plenarie Probation before the Juſtice Court? Likeas that Principle in Law, That Confeſſio coram Judice incompetente does not hold, is, where Judex eſt incompetens tam ad Inquiſitionem quam ad accuſationem, as, in forum penitentiæ, ſuch as Kirk Seſſions, or forum mere civile, Neither of which can be ſaid in this Caſe where the Judge before whom the Confeſſion was emitted is the ordinary Judge of Inquiſition, and Tryal in Criminal Cauſes & Judex non ſolum Juriſdictionis prerogabilis; but a Judge who originallie and generallie examines all the Pannals of Scotland. Likeas this Confeſſion was made in Preſence of his Majeſties Privie Councill and the King's Commiſſioner, in whom all the Judicatories of the Kingdom doe eminentlie reſide. And who might have ſent the Pannal to the Scaffold without ane Aſſyſe ſeeing in confitentem nullæ ſunt partes Judicis.

Whatever favour may be allowed to Retractation of Confeſſions facta ex Incontinenti, ubi poteſt docere de errore; yet what Reaſon can there be where a Pannal denies without ſhewing of Proofs of his Innocencie? And therefore Boſſius, tit. de Confeſſis, Num. 64. concludes Eſt etiam neceſſarium allegare errorem cæterum ſi ſimpliciter revocaverit Confeſſus non eſt audiendus. And Num. 70. he adds, Quia fateor quod quis non auditur ſimpliciter dicendo poſt confeſſionem: Non eſt verum quod confeſſus fui, tamen ſi per teſtes conſtare poteſt de innocentia majus attenditur veritas quam confeſſio. And ſince Minors in Law are oblieged docere de errore, when they revock, it were abſurd to think that the Law would be ſo ridiculous, that a Man confeſſing before a grave Judicatorie ſhould have Libertie to retract without ſhewing any Reaſon of his Retractation: And the Guilt rather grows per inficiationem, and by that impudent Lye, than is leſſened by the Retractation.

In the Caſe likeways where Debates are concerning the Validity of a Confeſſion, Lawyers conſider whether what was confeſt was or can be adminiculat by other collateral Probation, Argumenta & indicia, and whether the Probation be veri ſimilis; whereas here this Confeſſion is adminiculat by many other Circumſtances, ſuch as Perſons who ſaw him run away, by his owning of the Principle ſince, by his fleeing, &c. So that here neither can he inſtruct why he retracts, and the thing confeſt is adminiculate & circumſtantiis & indiciis. As to the Objection founded upon the Act of Parliament, that the Probation muſt be in Preſence of the Aſſyſe: It is replyed, that the whole Frame of that Act is groſslie miſtaken; for the Deſign of that Act was to correct a barbarous Cuſtom, whereby Accuſers were allowed to ſoliſt and to produce to them ſuch Wryte and Witneſſes as they pleaſed for Probation of the Cryme, to preclude the Pannal of what he could ſay againſt the ſame, ſince falſe Papers might be thrown in as Confeſſions and Proofs: But that cannot reach in this Caſe, where a Confeſſion is produced before a Pannal and his Proctors, and they heard to object againſt the ſame. Nor can it be urged from this Act that no Paper can be relevant but what is owned by the Pannal in Preſence of the Aſſyſe; for we daylie ſee that Letters produced under the Pannal's Hand, though he ſhould deny his Subſcription, will be ſuſtained: And it will be ſufficient to prove by Witneſſes, that he did ſubſcryve, or by compariſon of Letters. Likeas this Act of Parliament does not exclude that Confeſſions before the Lords of Seſſion in Matters of Falſhood, and Decrees following thereupon, may not probative before the Juſtices. Likeas Confeſſions taken before the Juſtices, tho' no Aſſyſe be preſent, do without all Controverſie and Debate prove the Cryme: Yet neither can the Juſtices condemn without ane Aſſyſe, nor does that Act of Parliament militate more againſt that Caſe than againſt this. And in the Caſe of Finlay Mac Gibbon, a Confeſſion taken in the Tolbooth without a fenced Court, and before one Judge, was found ſufficient to inferr the pain of Death both by the Council and Juſtices. And it is admired how it can be thought that Preſumptions can be ſuſtained as the Foundation of a criminal Sentence, as we dayly ſee; and that Witneſſes which in effect are but preſumptive, and a Man's own Confeſſion emitted ſeriouſlie and in cold Blood, ſhould not be ſufficient. And as there could be nothing more dangerous to the Common-wealth, than that Crymes ſhould be thus rendered unſearchable; ſo what Hazard can there be to the People on the other hand, or the Pannal, when they are made their own Judges. And to take off all poſſibilitie of Danger, it ſhall be allowed to them to prove Error, Force, Innocence, or Miſtake. And this Probation has been in all Ages and Nations ſuſtained as uncontraverted, as, David ordained the Perſon who ſaid he had killed Saul immediatlie to be execute without further Inquirie, giving as the undoubted Reaſon that he had condemned himſelf out of his own Mouth; and which is regiſtrate in Scripture, to ſecure the Image of God againſt thoſe who would deface it. And if ſuch Confeſſions ſhould be ſuſtained in any Caſe, much more in this, where the Nature of the Cryme is attrocious, and the manner of the Diſcovery extraordinarly difficult. And if either Attrocitie or Difficultie prevails with Lawyers to remitt ſomething of its ordinarie Rigor in exacting clear Probation, as we ſee in criminibus exceptis & criminibus domeſticis, much more where both theſe concurr, ought a Man's own Confeſſion to be admitted. And whereas ordinarly Pannals are penitent firſt when examined, the Horror of the Crymes ſoftning their Hearts; that their Confeſſions then ſhould not prove,

prove, is very ſtrange: And it were impoſſible and fruitleſs to expect, that after they are impriſoned amongſt a Company of other Malefactors, and after they have a kind of Men towards the Law to teach them the Art of Retractation, and that their Conſcience turns Callus, and acquainted with the Idea of their own Cryme, a ſincere Confeſſion may be then expected from them.

My Lord Advocat declares, he does not inſiſt againſt the Pannal for converſing with Rebels at this tyme, and upon the ſhooting at a Biſhop or Miniſter before the late Act of Parliament, Anno 1670. to inferr ane Arbitrary Puniſhment: And inſiſts upon Mutilation as Capital upon the Act of Parliament anent Demembration, which is reddere membrum inutile. And a Man is as much diſmembred when he has ane uſeleſs Hand, as if he had no Hand; and inſiſts upon the 28 Act Parl. 3 James 4. wherein Slaughter and Mutilation upon forethought Fellonie are equiparate. And the Pannal declared to be puniſhed by Death in both theſe Caſes, but referrs the Puniſhment of Mutilation to be qualified by the Juſtices, according to what ſhall be found here proven, and to what has been the Cuſtome of the Juſtice Court formerlie in ſuch Caſes.

Sir George Lockhart duplyes, That the Lybell is no ways relevant, as founded upon the fourth Act 16. Parl. King Ja. 6. And the Defence is no ways eleided by the Alleadgances, contained in the Reply. For, Primo, The Lords of Juſticiarie would be pleaſed to take Notice, that there is no Specialitie in the Caſe of this Act of Parliament, as to Privie Counſellours; but that it extends to all his Majeſties Officers, and conſequently the meaneſt Officer being invaded in the Terms and under the Qualification contained in the Act of Parliament, might plead the Benefite thereof. And if the Lybell ſhould be ſuſtained in general Terms without the expreſs Qualification in the Act of Parliament, the ſimple Act of Invaſion of a Lyon Herauld, though neither Death nor Wound followed on it, would inferr the pain of Death; but that no ſuch thing is the meaning, nor can ſubſiſt with the Act of Parliament, is ſo clear and evident, as it was impoſſible for the Witt of Man to expreſs the Qualification to be lybelled and poſitively proven in more plain and direct Terms than is ſett down in the ſaid Act. In ſua far as the Act of Parliament requires be way of Proviſion and Condition in the Statutory part thereof in thir Termes; it being verifyed and proven, that any of the ſaids Counſellours, Seſſioners, and Officers, was perſued and invaded for doing of his Highneſs Service, ſhall be puniſhed to the Death. And there is great Reaſon and Neceſſitie for this Qualification, becauſe the Act of Parliament intending contrary to the general Cuſtom of Nations, and of this Kingdom, in all other Crymes that Conatus & attentatum, which is only relevant in the Cryme of Treaſon, ſhould be reputed Crimen conſummatum in caſe of Invaſion of any of his Majeſties Officers. Therefore the Law requires this Qualification in Matter of Fact, That it be verified that the Perſon invaded, was doing his Majeſties Service; in which Caſe the Cryme had a reſpect in the Conſtruction of Law, as done againſt his Majeſties Authoritie, which he was then executing. And this Qualification in Matter of Fact, that it was for doing of his Majeſties Service, is not here ſo much as lybelled. And in the common Opinion of all Lawyers, as may appear by Julius Clarus, §. Aſſaſinium, Num. 2. Ubi agitur de imponenda pœna alicujus Conſtitutionis ſpecialis requiritur quod concurrent omnes qualificationes de quibus in ipſa Conſtitutione. And Queſt. 85. Num. 9. he has the ſame Words, Ubi agitur de imponenda pœna alicujus ſpecialis Conſtitutionis opportet quod in eo caſu verificentur omnes qualitates in ipſa Conſtitutione expreſſas, alias pœna non committitur, & hæc (ſayes he) eſt doctrina communiter ab omnibus recepta, and moſt eſpeciallie when it is not ane extrinſick Qualitie and Aggravation, but where it is a Qualification required by Law it ſelf as intrigans delicti, and as Gomeſ. ſayes, it is alterativum pœne, and therefore it muſt be totidem verbis lybelled and poſitivly proven.

And as to that Pretence that it is preſumed and inferred from the Circumſtances, and the Way and Manner of the committing of the Fact it ſelf, and that Propoſitum and Deſign cannot be otherways proven niſi per indicias & conjecturas. It is duplyed, That the Qualification required by the Act of Parliament is toto cœlo different from the Deſigne: For, if a Perſon did invade any of his Majeſties Officers in doing of his Majeſties Service, and would pretend that he had no Deſign to invade, certainly the Pretence were abſurd. And in that Caſe the Deſigne preſumitur ex natura attentati: But the diſcharging of his Majeſties Service is not a Deſign, but a Matter of Fact, which conſiſts in ane extrinſick Action, and muſt be proven, and may and does often occurr. As for Inſtance, If a Magiſtrat ſhould be invaded in the actual Execution of his Majeſties Authoritie, or if the Invader ſhould be ſo tranſported with Rage, as when he invades a Judge, to tell him, that it was becauſe he has unjuſtlie decerned. Theſe and the like Caſes are indeed the Terms of the Act of Parliament. And there ſimple Invaſion, though no Wounds followed, being directlie levelled againſt his Majeſties Authority, Nudus conatus & affectus delinquendi reputatur pro effectu. And as this is clear from the expreſs Words of the Act of Parliament, and which being in materia correctoria & criminale, is ſtrictly to be interpret; ſo it is unanſwerablie evidenced from the Act of Parl. K. Ch. 1. of bleſſed Memorie, by which it is provyded, that the Invaſion and Violence done to Miniſters is puniſhable, conform to the Act of Parliament 1587. to which it relates, which is Confiſcation of Moveables, and declares that the ſaid Act is to be extended to Archbiſhops and Biſhops, from which the Pannal's Proctors argue thus: If by the poſterior Act of Parliament in Anno 1633. the Invaſion and Violence done to Archbiſhops and Biſhops is not puniſhable with the Pain of Death, but only ane Arbitrary Puniſhment, how is it poſſible that the 4 Act Parl. 16 Jam. 6. ſhould inferr the pain of Death upon the Invaſion, as it is circumſtantiat and lybelled, wherein nothing is lybelled, but that the Archbiſhop was invaded, who was a Privie Counſellour, and not the Qualification that is required by the Act of Parliament, that it was for doing of his Majeſties Service.

As to that Alleadgance, That the Pannal cannot condeſcend upon any private Ground of Quarrel or other Reaſon why he did invade the Archbiſhop: It is anſwered, if this Alleadgance were ſuſtained, it were contrar to the Act of Parliament lybelled upon, which does not require the Pannal to prove, but ſays that it muſt be tryed and verified, that the Invaſion was for doing of his Majeſties Service; and ſo his Majeſties Advocate muſt prove the ſamen by a clear and poſitive Probation, as a Point in Matter of Fact.

As to that Pretence that the Pannal did glorie that he had committed the Fact and Invaſion lybelled, and indeavoured to juſtifie the ſame, and perſwade others that it was lawful: It is duplyed, That as the ſaids Qualifications are altogether diſowned, ſo they are no ways the Qualifications in Matter of Fact required by the Act of Parliament, viz. That the Invaſion and Violence was for doing of his Majeſties Service, which is indiſpenſibly required upon the Reaſons abovementioned, otherways the Act of Parliament ſhould have ſaid no more, But that all Invaſions of his Majeſties Privie Counſellours, or other Officers, ſhould be puniſhed with the pain of Death; whereas the Act of Parliament thought it fit, neceſſar and juſt for all Mens Securitie, that a ſingle Act of Invaſion of any of his Majeſties Officers, however it might be puniſhed pœna arbitraria, yet ſhould not import or inferr the pain of Death.

In ſua far as the Dittay is founded upon the Common Law, and that it is Aſſaſinium, in which Conatus & attentatum habentur pro crimine conſummato. It is anſwered, the Dittay is noways relevant, becauſe it is not founded upon any Law or Act of Parliament of this Kingdom. And the Common Roman Law cannot be the Foundation of criminal Dittays, whereby to draw in Hazard the Lives of any of his Majeſties Subjects. Likeas there is clear, expreſs and poſitive Acts of Parliament to the contrar, as the 48 Act Parl. 3 Ja. 1. Act 79. Parl. 9 Ja. 4. Declaring that the Laws of no other Realm are to be regarded, eſpeciallie whereupon to found Criminal Indytments. And albeit by the Common Law Conatus in homicidio eſpeciallie where it was homicidium doloſum, and deſigned to be committed proditorie & per inſidias was puniſhed as crimen Conſummatum; yet all Lawyers agree, as may appear by Julius Clarus, Queſt. 102. Farm. Queſt. 80. and by the Authorities by them cited, That by the general Cuſtom of all Nations, in omni genere homicidii affectus conatus & attentatum is not puniſhable pœna ordinaria delicti, and ſo cannot inferr a capital Puniſhment or pain of Death, as is concluded in this Indytment. As to that Pretence that the Cryme lybelled is the Cryme of Aſſaſination, in which Nudus conatus is ſufficient, eſpeciallie ſi devenerit ad actum proximum: It is anſwered, Primo, That all Lawyers agree in this, that crimen Aſſaſinii is only where a Perſon does hyre or conduce another to commit the ſame interveniente prætio. And for which Julius Clarus, §. Aſſaſinium, where he ſo deſcryves the Cryme. And Matheus de Criminibus does ſo deſcryve the ſame, and does expreſslie aſſert that unleſs Money or Reward interveen, the Cryme of Aſſaſination cannot be committed, where the Words are, Crediderem tamen niſi merce certa & ſceleri propoſita & conſtituta fuerit ſive in ſpecie ſeu corpore ſive in pecunia numerata non poſſe enim videri aſſaſinium. And there is no Lawyer extant did ever otherways deſcryve the Cryme; and there is great Reaſon why Money or Reward ſhould be conſidered in the Conſtitution of this Cryme, becauſe the Law did conſider the Cryme with Reſpect to the Hazard; and the Hazard lay where Perſons were hyred or conduced by Infidels giving Money or other Reward to kill Chriſtians. And albeit even in the proper Cryme of Aſſaſination it ſelf in ſome particular Nations, where the ſaid Cryme was too frequent, as in Italie, Conatus is puniſhable: Yet Julius Clarus in the ſame §. and others does mantaine, that by the general Cuſtome of moſt Nations, in the preciſe Cryme of Aſſaſination, Conatus ſeu attentatum is not puniſhable with the Pain of Death. But the Pannal has no Reaſon to inſiſt upon this; the Matter of Fact lybelled being no ways the Cryme of Aſſaſination, but only that which Lawyers call a Deſigne to commit Murder proditorie & per inſidias. In which all aggree, that by the Cuſtom of all Nations Conatus faciendi non reputatur pro facto.

As to that Point of the Dittay founded upon the Mutilation of the deceaſt Biſhop of Orkney, conform to the 28 Act Parl. 3 James 4. It is anſwered, that denying that the deceaſt Biſhop of Orkney was mutilate ſo, albeit it could be proven, it cannot inferr the pain of Death; Firſt, becauſe it is clear by the ſaid Act of Parliament, that it is not in the Caſe of Mutilation, but Demembration. And it were a ſtrange Imagination to think that if a Partie were mutilate, or loſt a Finger, that the pain of Death could be inferred. And there is a great difference betwixt Mutilation and Demembration: Mutilation being onlie ane Inabilitie or Privation of the Uſe; whereas Demembration is the intire Loſs of the Member. And it is a Principle in Law, that Acts of Parliament, eſpeciallie in caſu criminale & capitale, cannot be extended de caſu in caſum etiam ex veritate vel paritate rationis; and that Cortici verborum adherendum eſt & Caſus ommiſſus habetur pro ommiſſa. And here there is no Paritie of Reaſon, both the Prejudice and Deformitie being far greater in Demembration than Mutilation.

And whereas it is pretended, That though the Pannal's Confeſſion had been elicite ſub ſpe impunitatis, that yet it is not ſufficient whereupon to liberate from capital Puniſhment, becauſe a Judge cannot remitt a Cryme: And that Boſſius and others are clear. That notwithſtanding of any ſuch Confeſſion upon Promiſe of Impunitie, yet a Judge might and ought to condemn ad pœnam ordinariam delicti; it is anſwered, The Pretence does not eleid the Defence, becauſe, ſuppoſing it ſhould be proven that the Confeſſion was elicite ſub ſpe veniæ, and upon Aſſurance of Lyfe. Such a Confeſſion ſo elicite, cannot be a Ground whereupon to violate the Faith and Impunity given; and far leſs can ſuch a Confeſſion (though any could be proven) being retracted be conſidered as a Confeſſion: And as to which Law and Lawyers are very clear and poſitive. The Law is, Lex 3. Cod. de Cuſtode reorum, and Lawyers, as may appear by Matheus de Criminibus, Queſt. 16. where his expreſs Words are, Quærunt an Confeſſio promiſſa Impunitate & ſpe veniæ elicita ſufficiet ad condemnandum? Reſpondendum, Non ſufficere, tametſi enim in Judicis poteſtate non ſit promittere impunitatem adeoq; ex promiſſione non obligatur, tamen dolo extorta eſt, & per hanc fraudem etiam Innocentes illaqueari poſſunt. And Boſſius in that Title De Confeſſis, after he has ſtated the Caſe, reſolves it thus, Tutius tamen eſt ut dicamus requirere perſeverantiam & eſt ex mente Doctorum & cum ratione quin negari non poteſt quin talis Confeſſio ſit obumbrata, and ſays, it were a-gainſt Humanitie it ſelf to condemn ad pœnam ordinariam delicti in ſuch a Caſe. And Julius Clarus, cited be his Majeſties Advocate, ſayes, Ego non condemnarem ad mortem, and which is indeed the conſtant and irrefragable Opinion of all Lawyers, and Practice of all Criminal Tribunals. And whereas it is pretended, that Julius Clarus ſubjoins theſe Words, Niſi aliis indiciis ſit gravatus, and his Majeſties Advocat condeſcends upon ſeveral Preſumptions. It is anſwered, that if his Majeſties Advocat will lay aſide the Confeſſion, and adduce ſuch a preſumptive Probation, whereupon the Pannal may be condemned, then he may plead the Benefite of that Qualification: But the Preſumptions condeſcended upon are remote Conjectures, and no ways concluding; and the Pannal after the alleadged committing of the Fact, did return and live peaceablie for ſeveral Years, and denys the Fact, and cannot otherways be convict thereof. And if any pretended Confeſſion ſhould be made uſe of, either per ſe, or in modum adminiculi, it cannot be divided from the Qualitie under which it was granted, which the Pannal offers to prove, was upon expreſs Aſſurance. And whereas it is pretended, that the granting of ane Aſſurance and Impunitie is upon the Matter a Remiſſion which no Inferior Judge can grant, but that notwithſtanding he may and ought to condemn; it is anſwered, Primo, it will appear by the Probation of what Character and Qualitie the Granter of the Aſſurance was.

As to what is pretended, that though this Confeſſion be not emitted before the Lords of Juſticiarie, yet it was not extrajudicial or revocable, becauſe it was deliberatlie given, and before a Committee, who had Authoritie from the Lords of his Majeſties Privie Council: It is anſwered, this Point is of extraordinarie Importance and Conſequence, as to the Lives and Fortunes of his Majeſties Subjects, and as to the Lords of Juſticiarie and the Procedure of the Inqueſt, who are Judges to the Probation; and therefore it is repreſented in behalf of the Pannal, That admitting any pretended Confeſſion ſhould be produced, yet if it was not emmitted before the Lords of Juſticiarie, it is not a judicial, but ane extrajudicial Confeſſion, & fidem non facit, as to the Probation of the Cryme. As to which, Primo, There is an univerſal Concord in the Opinion of all Lawyers, and in the Practiſe and Cuſtoms of Criminal Judicatories, and as to which the Lords of Juſticiarie are deſyred to caſt their Eye upon all who have wrytten upon this Point. And as Clarus ſays, Non invenies diſſentientem in Mundo; and it is ſtrange that all Lawyers and the Cuſtom of all Nations ſhould have hallucinat in this Point. For which the Pannal's Proctors cite Julius Clarus, Queſt. 55. Farin. Queſt. 81. and many others.

2*do*. Lawyers are likeways clear, that Confeſſions emitted Coram Judice competente ſed non ſedente pro Tribunali is but ane extrajudicial Confeſſion, and much more where it is Confeſſio emiſſa coram Judice incompetente. And when the Queſtion is, who is to be repute Judex incompetens; it is poſitivelie reſolved, That omnis Judex is incompetens who could not proceed ad Condemnandum, as to the Cryme anent which the Confeſſion is emmitted. And certainly though any Confeſſion were produced emmitted before a Committee of the Lords of Privie Council, they have no criminal Juriſdiction ſo as to proceed ad condemnandum in crimine capitale; that being clear by Craig dieg. 8. that ex eorum Statutis nec periculum vitæ, hæreditatis aut omnium fortunarum ſubire poſſe. And whereas it is urged that the Lords of Privie Council have a mixed Juriſdiction, and may proceed be way of Precognition & per modum Inquiſitionis, and may reſolve doubtful Caſes and qualifie Sentences. It is anſwered, That it is not denyed but the Lords of Privie Council have and doe very well deſerve that Juriſdiction; but as to criminal Juriſdiction in capital Crymes, it is only competent to the Lords of Juſticiary: And the Precognitions, or previous Inquiſitions, tend not ad Condemnationem, but only as to this, whether to ſtop or remitt to the Lords of Juſticiarie. And nothing is conſidered as a judicial Confeſſion, but where there is formatus proceſſus, and where a Partie is called coram Judice competente, and is ſub inſtante periculo vitæ, and knows that the infallible Import of his Confeſſion is to that very Effect for his Condemnation, none of which can be pretended where the Confeſſion is emmitted coram Judice incompetente ad Condemnandum.

And whereas it is alleadged, That a Confeſſion in the Opinion of Lawyers cannot be retracted, unleſs the Partie could docere de errore, and purge his Innocencie, and did it ex incontinento. It is anſwered, the Alleadgance is groundleſs; for though Confeſſion were emmitted coram Judice competente pro Tribunali, it might be retracted ex incontinenti if he were able docere de errore: And there is no Lawyer ever required it in other Terms. But where the Confeſſion is emmitted coram Judice incompetente fidem non facit quoad probationem delicti, and may be retracted either ex incontinenti or ex intervallo, and without ſhowing of any Error or purging of Innocence, ſuch Confeſſions in Law amount not to any Probation, no more than as Lawyers argue if the Depoſitions of Witneſſes taken in uno Judicio would fidem facere either in Caſu civile aut criminale in alio Judicio. And certainly there is leſs Reaſon for Confeſſions where Parties diſown the ſame, and retracts them if emmitted; and much more here where the pretended Confeſſion was elicite ſub ſpe veniæ, ſo far was the Pannal from thinking that the emitting of this Confeſſion was in order to Condemnation, ſpeciallie ſeeing it neither is, nor can be proven, that the ſaid pretended Confeſſion was ſo much as judiciallie given in face of Privie Council, where his Grace the Duke of Lauderdale, being then his Majeſties Commiſſioner, was preſent: And though it were, the Pannal's Proctors will not debate the Import of his Grace's Commiſſion, but remitts the ſame to the Commiſſion it ſelf in Caſe it be offered to be proven, that the Confeſſion was emitted emitted before him and the Lords of Privie Council.

And whereas it is alleadged that the Act, 9 Parl. King James 6. ordaining all Probation to be led in Preſence of the Aſſyſe does not concern the Caſe, and is miſunderſtood, ſeeing here the Confeſſion will be produced in Preſence of the Aſſyſe: It is anſwered, The Act of Parliament is clear to the contrar, and can admit of no ſuch Interpretation. For albeit the Narrative of the Act of Parliament was onlie cauſa impulſiva, and the Statutorie Part of the Act of Parliament is clear and poſitive, that all Probation ſhould be adduced in preſence of the Aſſyſe, who are Judges of the Probation. And of all other Probation there is the greateſt Reaſon that the verie Act of Confeſſion ſhould be in preſence of the Aſſyſe, who are Judges to the Probation, and who are to proceed upon Oath, and whoſe Conſciences are to be ſatisfied and inſtructed as to the Way, Manner, Conditions and Terms whereupon ſuch Confeſſions were elicite; all which are concealed where there is nothing produced to them but a Confeſſion taken without their Preſence, eſpeciallie ſeeing the Pannal alleadges and offers to prove that ſeveral Points of Fact and other Particulars, were condeſcended upon and declared, none of which are mentioned in this pretended Confeſſion; all which ſhould have been inſert, and could not be divided, as being in Articulo connexo.

And whereas it is pretended that Decreets pronounced before Lords of Seſſion, is Probatio probata; whereupon Aſſyſers may and ought to condemn: It is anſwered, the Argument is in materia diſparata, and does not concern the Matter of Confeſſion, and is only in the ſpecial Caſe of Falſhood, and that upon a ſpecial Reaſon, becauſe the Inveſtigation of Falſhood depended upon a Tryall and Concourſe of many and violent Preſumptions, which may require a long Tract of Tyme and Examination of Parties and Witneſſes. It were impoſſible that ſuch Tryalls could be adduced before ane Inqueſt; theſe depending ſeveral Years many tymes before the Seſſion before they can be brought to a cloſe: And therefore Law and Cuſtom in that Caſe has ſuſtained a Decreet of the Lords of Seſſion as a Probation in Judicio criminale; but it is abſolutlie denyed that it would in any other Cryme. And certainlie if the Cryme of Theft were perſued civillie before the Lords of Seſſion ad damnum & intereſſe, though the Theft ſhould be proven or confeſt before the Lords of Seſſion, it would not fidem facere in Judicio criminale, as is evident by the Authoritie of Lawyers, who agree, that acta probatoria in uno proceſſu fidem non facit in alio: Nay, which is more, acta probatoria in uno proceſſu fidem non facit in alio proceſſu coram eodem Judice. And as to the Inſtance of the Practiq; of Mac Nabb, the Pannal oppones the ſame, wherein there were Depoſitions of Witneſſes; and though many tymes in the Adjournal-Bookes, the Caſes of Confeſſions emitted has been obtruded, yet it cannot be inſtanced that ever the Lords of Juſticiarie did by Interloquitor ſuſtaine the ſame as Probation; but on the contrar it does appear in the Caſe of Fraſer, in the Year 1641. That Sir Thomas Hope being then his Majeſties Advocate, declared, that a Confeſſion emitted before a Shirref Depute, who has a Criminal Juriſdiction in ſome Caſes in the Terms allowed by Law, and who beyond all doubt is Judge competent per modum Inquiſitionis; yet ſo convinced was he, that it was ane extrajudicial Confeſſion, that he only inſiſted therein in modum adminiculi, and joyned it with the other Probation mentioned in that Practiq; which was per ſe convincing and ſufficient: As alſo ſince his Majeſties happy Reſtauration in the Caſe of one Robertſone, allthough the Confeſſion was emmitted before one of the Lords of Juſticiarie and his Majeſties Advocate for the tyme; yet he was ſo convinced of the Inſufficiencie of the ſame, that after it was produced per modum probationis; he took up the ſamen even in that State of the Proceſs when the Aſſyſe was ſworn. And as to the Inſtance of Divinitie in David's Practice, it does not concern the Point of Law, and cannot be made appear that the Partie retracted his Confeſſion; and it is a Practiq; that either nimium or nihil probat. In reſpect whereof, &c.

The Lords Commiſſioners of Juſticiarie continue the advyſing of this Debate till the Nynth Day of this Inſtant, at two a Clock in the Afternoon; And ordaines Aſſyſers and Witneſſes to attend ilk Perſon under the Pain of ane hundreth Merks.

INDYTED and Accuſed for the Crymes of Aſſaſination, invading of Privy Counſellours, Miniſters and others, ut in die precedente.

Perſuer,

Perſuer,	Proctors in Defence.
Sir George Mac Kenzie of Roſeh-ugh, our Soveraign Lord's Advocate.	Sir George Lockhart. Mr. John Eleis. Mr. John Stewart.

The Lords Commiſſioners of Juſticiarie having conſidered the Dittay and Debate relating thereto, find that Article of the Dittay founded upon the fourth Act, 16 Parl. King James 6. bearing the Pannal's invading by ſhooting and fyring of a Piſtol at his Grace the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, a Privie Counſellour, for doing of his Majeſties Service, relevantlie lybelled, his Majeſties Advocate proveing the Preſumption in his Replye, viz. That the Pannal ſaid that he did make the ſaid Attempt and Invaſion becauſe of the Archbiſhop his perſecuting thoſe that were in the Rebellion at Pentland, or ſome Words to that purpoſe, relevant to inferr the Paine contained in the forſaid Act of Parliament, and remitt the ſame to the Knowledge of ane Aſſyſe.

And likeways find that part of the Dittay anent the invading of Biſhops and Miniſters, relevant to inferr ane arbitrary Puniſhment, and remitt the ſamen to the Knowledge of an Aſſyſe.

And ſiclike that Article of the Dittay anent the invading, wounding and mutilating of the Biſhop of Orkney, relevant to inferr ane arbitrary Puniſhment, and remitt the ſamen to the Knowledge of ane Aſſyſe.

And alſo having conſidered that part of the Debate anent the Pannal's Confeſſion made and emitted before ane Committee appointed be Authoritie of Council to receive it, and thereafter adhered to and renewed in Preſence of his Majeſties high Commiſſioner and Lords of Privie Council conveened in Council, find it is Judicial and cannot be retracted.

And alſo having conſidered the Debate and Defence againſt the ſaid Confeſſion, viz. That the ſame was emmitted upon Promiſe or Aſſurance of Impunitie of Lyfe and Limb, find the ſamen relevant to ſecure the Pannal as to Lyfe and Limb, reſerving to the Commiſſioners of Juſticiary to inflict ſuch arbitrary Puniſhment as they ſhall think fit, in caſe the Defence ſhall be proven, and remitts the ſamen to the Knowledge of ane Aſſyſe.

The Aſſyſe lawfullie ſworn, no Objection in the contrar.

His Majeſties Advocate for Probation adduced the Pannals own Confeſſion, with the Witneſſes after deponing; of the whilk Confeſſion, the Tenor followes.

Edinburgh, 10 February 1674. In Preſence of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Regiſter, Lord Advocate, and Theſaurer Depute, Mr. James Mitchel, Priſoner, being called, did freelie confeſs he was the Perſon who ſhot the Piſtol at the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, when the Biſhop of Orkney was hurt thereby, in the Year 1668. and depones upon Oath, that no living Creature did perſwade him to it, or was upon the Knowledge of it. Sic ſubſcribitur, James Mitchel,

Rothes,
A. Primroſe,
John Nisbet.
Ch. Maitland.

Maſter William Paterſon, Advocate, purged of partial Counſel, and ſolemnly ſworn, depons, he met a Man with a Piſtol in his Hand in Black-frier Wynd, immediatlie after the Piſtol was ſhot at the Archbiſhop, but knows not the Pannal, nor if he was the Perſon that ſhot. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.
Will. Paterſon, A. Primroſe, J. p. d.

Patrick Vanſe, Keeper of the Tolbuith of Edinburgh, purged of partial Counſel, and ſolemnly ſworn, depon's, That a Day or two before or after the Pannal was examined be the Council, he confeſt to the Deponent, that he ſhot a Piſtol at the Archbiſhop of Saint Andrews, and eſcaped down Black-frier Wynd, and went up the Cowe-gate and into Mr. Robert Ferguſon's Houſe, and patt on a Pitivick, and then came to the Street and ſearched for the Man that ſhot the Piſtol. Being demanded if he heard Mr. James Mitchel juſtifie the Deed; he depon's, he remembers it not, Sic ſubſcribitur,
P. Vanſe. A. Primroſe, J. p. d.

Mr. John Vanſe, Son to the Keeper of the Tolbuith, purged and ſworn: Being interrogate, if he heard the Pannal acknowledge the Deed of ſhooting at the Biſhop, or defend it, depon's, That being in Conference with the Pannal in the Priſon-houſe, he inquired at him how he or any Man could be accefſorie to ſo impious ane Act, as to kill a Man in cold Blood who had not wronged him; he ſaid it was not in cold Blood, for the Blood of the Saints was reiking at the Croſs of Edinburgh. Sic ſubſcribitur, John Vanſe, A. Primroſe, J. p. d. Com.

John Biſhop of Galloway, being purged of partial Counſel, ſworn and examined, depon's, That the firſt tyme he ſaw the Pannal was in Sir William Sharp's outter Roume, where he ſaw a Piſtol, which was ſaid to be taken from him, out of which (as he ſuppoſes) there were three Balls taken; and that the Piſtol was like to the Piſtol produced. Depon's, that at that tyme the Pannal did not confeſs any Guilt, but ſeemed to be in a great Conſternation, and fell a trembling. And that the Deponer hearing that he had made a Confeſſion, went to Priſon to ſpeak to him about it, who acknowledged to the Deponent, that he had made Confeſſion of that Attempt againſt the Archbiſhop before the Chancellor, and ſome others of the Council; and and that he had hopes of Lyfe, and desired the Deponent to interceed for him. And the Deponer having asked him how he could do such a Deed against ane innocent Man: He answered, that he thought him ane Enemy to the Godlie, and that they could not be in Securitie so long as he was alive. And the Deponer having inquired of him if he was sorry for it; he did not say he was sorry for it, but if it were to doe again he would not do it. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God. Sic subscribitur, Jo. Gallovidien, A. Primrose, J. p. d.

Doctor Christopher Irvin, purged of partial Counsel, and solemnly sworn, depon's, that he was the first Chirurgeon that came to the Bishop of Orkney after he receaved the Shot, and that he did see a Ball fall out of his Sleeve, so that he knew that it was with a Shot, and that the Bones were fractured, and that they cured him so as he was able to lift his Hand towards his Head; but there was still Scales coming out of the Orifice of the Wound. Depon's, the Bishop said he got the Wound when he was laying his Hand upon the Archbishop's Coach. Sic subscribitur, Irvin, A. Primrose, J. p. d.

John Fossie, Chirurgeon, purged, sworn and examined, depon's, That he was called to the Bishop of Orkney's Cure, and that he had a Wound betwixt the Wrest and the Elbow, which did cast out several small Bones at the two small Orifices; and that the Bishop was able to lift his Hand towards his Head. Sic subscribitur, Fossie, A. Primrose, J. p. d.

William Borthwick, Chirurgeon, purged of partial Counsel, solemnly sworn and examined, depon's, conformis to John Fossie in all things. Sic subscribitur,

Will. Brothwick.

John Earle of Rothes, Lord High Chancellor of Scotland, being sworn, and the Confession under Master James Mitchel's Hand being shown to him, depon's, he was present and saw Mr. James Mitchel subscryve that Paper; and depones that he heard him make the Confession contained therein, and that he thereafter heard him ratify the same at the Council-Bar, in presence of the King's Commissioner and Lords of Privie Council sitting in Council, and that his Lordship subscryved the said Confession. Depones, That his Lordship, the Advocate, and Thesaurer Depute, were appointed by the Privie Council to examine Mr. James Mitchel. And being interrogate, if after they had removed the Pannal to the Council-Chamber, whether or not his Lordship did offer to the Pannal upon his Confession to secure his Lyfe in these Words, Upon his Lordship's Lyfe, Honour and Reputation. Depon's, that he did not at all give any Assurance to the Pannal for his Lyfe; and that the Pannal never sought any such Assurance from him: And his Lordship does not remember that there was any Warrand given be the Council to his Lordship for that effect; and if there be any Expressions in any Paper which may seem to inferr any thing to the contrary, his Lordship conceaves it has been insert upon some Mistake. Sic subscribitur, Rothes, A. Primrose, J. p. d.

Charles Maitland of Hatton, Lord Thesaurer Depute, being sworn, and the Confession under Mr. James Mitchel's Hand being shewen unto his Lordship, depon's he was present when Mr. James Mitchel made that Confession, and his Lordship first heard him make it verballie, and then he saw him subscryve it; and that his Lordship subscryved it also, and at that tyme there was nothing spoken of any Assurance: But when the Pannal was asked by some of the Committee, upon what Account he committed that Fact; he seemed at first unwilling to answer, but thereafter said, it was becaus the Archbishop is ane Enemie to the good People or Godlie People in the West. Depon's, that within few Days thereafter, at a Meeting of the Council, where the Duke Lauderdale then his Majesties Commissioner was present, the Pannal being brought to the Bar, and the Confession produced being shewen to him, he acknowledged the same to be his Hand Wrytt; adhered unto and renewed the same in presence of his Majesties Commissioner and Council: And depones that he did not hear the Pannal either seek Assurance of his Lyfe, or any other Person offer the same to him. Sic subscribitur, Ch. Maitland, A. Primrose, J. p. d.

John Duke of Lauderdale, being sworn, depon's, That his Grace was present, as the King's Commissioner in Council, when Mr. James Mitchel was brought to the Bar. Depons his Grace saw the Pannal's former Confession made at the Committee of Council shewen to him, and he acknowledged it to be his Confession, and that he did adhere thereto and renew the samen in presence of his Grace and the Council. His Grace heard no Assurance given to him, and that his Grace did not give him any Assurance, nor gave Commission to any others to give him any Assurance, and could not do it, having no particular Warrand from his Majestie for that effect. Sic subscribitur, Lauderdale, A. Primrose, J. p. d.

James Archbishop of Saint Andrews, being sworn, depon's, That that Day that the Pannal did fire a Pistol at his Grace, he had a Wiew of him passing from the Coach and crossing the Street, which had such Impression upon his Grace, that upon the first sight he saw of him after he was taken, he knew him to be the Person who shot the Shot. Depon's, his Grace saw him at the Council-Bar in presence of his Majesties Commissioner and the Council acknowledge his Confession made before the Committee, and heard him adhere thereto and renew the samen; and that there was no Assurance of Lyfe given him, nor any sought be him there. Depon's, that his Grace himself did never give him any Assurance, nor gave Warrand to any others to doe it; only he promised at his first taking, that if he would freelie confess the Fault, and express his Repentance for the same at that tyme, without farder troubling Judicatories therein, his Grace would use his best Indeavour to favour him, or else leave him to Justice: But that he either gave him Assurance, or gave Warrand to any to give it, it is a false and malicious Calumny; and that his Grace made no Promise to Nicoll Somervel other than that it was best to make a free Confession. And this is the Truth,

as

as he ſhall anſwer to God. Sic ſubſcribitur,
St. Andrews, A. Primroſe, J. p. d. Com.

The Pannal, Mr. James Mitchel, after ſwearing of the Aſſyſe, produced ane Copie of ane pretended Act of Council, and craved that the Regiſter of Council containing the ſaid Act might be produced. And after the Examination and Depoſitions of the Witneſſes upon the Dittay and Exculpation, the Pannal and his Proctors farder urged, that the Regiſter of Council might be produced. Seeing the Pannal produced ane Inſtrument againſt Mr. Thomas Hay, one of the Clerks of Council, for giving ane Extract thereof; and the Pannal and his Proctors alleadged, that the Regiſter of Council containing the ſaid Act was produced in Court the Day before, and that the ſaid Act was read be ſeveral Members of Court; and being once produced, and ane Inſtrument taken againſt one of the Clerks of Council, who with the other Clerk were cited as Witneſſes be his Majeſties Advocate, the Clerks ought to be ordained either to give ane Extract or produce the Regiſter containing the forſaid Act; and the Pannal and his Proctors deſyre to be heard in Wrytt upon the ſaid Act of Council.

His Majeſties Advocate anſwers, That he was not obleidged to produce a Regiſter for the Pannal; and if any ſuch pretended Act was, he ſhould have uſed a Diligence and cited the Clerks of Council for producing of the Regiſters, or giving ane Extract; which the Pannal not having done, he cannot be allowed a Diligence in this State of the Proceſs. And if any ſuch Act of Council was, it was unwarrantable and could not be made uſe of, after the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Lauderdale, the Lord Theſaurer Depute, and other Lords of Council had deponed that there was no ſuch Aſſurance given, as is either pretended by the Exculpation, or inſinuate by the pretended Act of Council. And be the Coppie produced it is evident, That the Deſigne thereof is to take from the Pannal any pretended Favour he pleads; and if the Act be founded one, it cannot be divided; ſo that ane meer Narrative muſt prove, and the Statutorie Words ſhould not prove; eſpeciallie ſeeing there is nothing more notour and ordinary, then for the Council not to conſider a Narrative if the Statutory Words be Right. And as the Pannal pretends that his Confeſſion cannot be divided from the Aſſurance given, but that it muſt be taken with the Qualitie; ſo much leſs muſt this Act be divided. And the pretended Act is long poſterior to the Pannal's Confeſſion, and even poſterior to a former Dyet in the Juſtice Court appointed for the Pannal's Tryal for the ſaid Cryme. And farder, no ſuch Aſſurance could have been granted, ſeeing none but his Majeſtie can grant Remiſſions.

The Pannal and his Proctors deſyred the Copie produced to be read.

His Majeſties Advocate conſents to the Reading of the pretended Coppie of the Act of Council, and which being publictlie read, is of the Tenor following.

Edinburgh, 12 March, 1674.

'THE Lord Commiſſioner his Grace, and 'the Lords of his Majeſties Privie Council having appointed a Committee of Council to examine Mr. James Mitchel, Priſoner in the Tolbuith of Edinburgh; the ſaid Mr. James being brought before the ſaid Committee, did make a free and voluntarie Confeſſion of his Acceſſion to the Rebellion, and riſing in Arms in the Weſt; and that after he had Notice of the ſame, he went from Edinburgh with Collonel Wallace and others, and joyned with the Rebels there, and from thence came alongs and was with them until the Night before the Fight at Pentland-hills; and that at the Deſyre of Captain Arnot, he came then to Edinburgh to ſpeak to ſome Perſons there concerning them. And being examined upon the Attempt made upon the Perſon of the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, and who ſhot the Piſtol at the ſaid Archbiſhop, when the Biſhop of Orkney was hurt in the Moneth of July 1668. He did declare that at that tyme, and the Day that the ſaid Attempt was made he was in the Town of Edinburgh; and that he had bought the Piſtol, which was about him, charged with three Balls when he was apprehended, about that tyme when the Biſhop was ſhot, from Alexander Logan, Dage-maker in Leithwynd: But refuſed that he was the Perſon that made the ſaid Attempt, until having retired a pace with one of the ſaid Committee, he did confeſs upon his Knees that he was the Perſon, upon Aſſurance given him by one of the Committee, as to his Lyfe, who had Warrand from the Lord Commiſſioner and the Council to grant the ſame. And did thereafter confeſs freelie, before all the Lords that was upon the ſaid Committee, That he ſhot the forſaid Piſtol at the ſaid Archbiſhop, and did ſubſcryve his Confeſſion in Preſence of the ſaid Committee, which is alſo ſubſcryved by them. And therefter the ſaid Mr. James in preſence of the Commiſſioner his Grace and Council, did renew and adhere to the ſaid Confeſſion, both as to the Acceſſion to the Rebellion and the Attempt forſaid; and acknowledged he made the ſaid Attempt becauſe he thought that the ſaid Archbiſhop had ane Hand in troubling and perſecuting theſe that were in the Rebellion. And nevertheleſs, being brought before the Lords Commiſſioners of the Juſticiarie, and asked if he did own the Confeſſion forſaid, he did altogether refuſe to anſwer and adhere to his ſaids Confeſſions, notwithſtanding he was told by the Lords Commiſſioners of Juſticiarie and his Majeſties Advocate, that if he would adhere to his ſaids Confeſſions, he ſhould have the Benefite of the ſaid Aſſurance; and if otherways, that he ſhould loſe the ſame. Therefore the Lord Commſſioner his Grace, and the Lords of his Majeſties Privie Council, do declare, That they are free, and that the ſaid Mr. James ought not to have the Benefite of any ſuch Promiſe or Aſſurance, and that the ſame is altogether void; and that the Lords of the Juſticiarie and the Aſſyſe ought to proceed without any Reſpect to the ſame. And farder do declare, That the ſaid Mr. James Mitchel is the Perſon intended and meaned in the Proclamation in the Years 1666 and 1667. diſcharging any Intercomoning with the Rebels therein mentioned, and excepting the ſaid Mr. James, and the other Perſons therein, from his Majeſties Favour and Indempnitie,

'and no other under the Name of Mr. James 'Mitchel, though there had been any other of 'that Name involved in the ſaid Rebellion.

The Pannal and his Proctors renew their Deſyre, and crave to be heard to debate upon the Act of Council in Wrytt.

The Lords Commiſſioners of Juſticiarie conſidering that the Copie of the pretended Act of Council produced was never urged, nor made uſe of, nor any Diligence craved for producing the Regiſters of Council, until this Afternoon that the Aſſyſe was ſworne, after which no Diligence can be allowed nor granted in this State of the Proceſs be the Law of the Kingdom, and Practique of this Court; eſpeciallie, ſeeing it appears be the ſaid Coppie, that the Deſigne was to take away any Aſſurance that the Pannal could have pleaded; and that the Truth of the Narrative of the Coppie founded upon inſinuating that there was ane Aſſurance, is cancel'd be the Depoſitions of the Duke of Lauderdale, then his Majeſties Commiſſioner, the Lord Chancellor, and other Members of the Committee and Council: The ſaids Lords therefore ordaine the Aſſyſe to incloſe and return their Verdict to Morrow at Two a Clock in the Afternoon.

The ſaid Day the Perſons who paſt upon the Aſſyſe of Maſter James Mitchel, returned their Verdict in preſence of the ſaids Lords: Whereof the Tenor followes.

As to the firſt part of the Lybell, founded upon the 4 Act, 16 Parl. King James 6. The Chancellor and whole Aſſyſe, with one Voice, find it proven conform to the Lords Interloquitor.

As to the Invading of Biſhops and Miniſters, and Wounding the Biſhop of Orkney, ſiclike proven with one Voice.

As to the third part of the Lords Interloquitor concerning his Confeſſion, firſt before a Committee, and thereafter before his Majeſties High Commiſſioner and Council, the whole Aſſyſe with one Voice find it proven conform to the Lords Interloquitor.

As to the fourth and laſt part of the Interloquitor concerning the Exculpation, the whole Aſſyſe with one Voice find it no ways proven. And furder concerning the Exculpation, when the Pannal was preſſing it ſtronglie upon my Lord Chancellor, the whole Aſſyſe heard his own Confeſſion and Acknowledgment of the Fact. Sic ſubſcribitur, Jo. Hay, Chancellour.

After opening and reading of the whilk Verdict of Aſſyſe, the Lords Commiſſioners of Juſticiarie, by the Mouth of Adam Auld, Dempſter of Court, Decerned and Adjudged the ſaid Mr. James Mitchel to be taken to the Graſs Mercat of Edinburgh, upon Fryday the Eighteenth Day of January Inſtant, betwixt Two and Four Aclock in the Afternoon, and there to be Hanged on ane Gibbet till he be Dead, and all his Moveable Goods and Gear to be Eſcheat and inbrought to his Majeſties Uſe; which was pronounced for Doom.

The

The TRIAL of PHILIP Earl of PEMBROKE and MONTGOMERY, before the PEERS in Weſtminſter-Hall, on Thurſday the 4*th of* April 1678.

ABOUT Nine of the Clock the Priſoner with his Guard came from the Tower, with the Ax before him, and went into the Room appointed for him. Between the hours of Eleven and Twelve at Noon, the Lords, Judges, and Aſſiſtants of the Houſe, came in order, two and two, from the Houſe of Lords, to the Court erected in Weſtminſter-Hall, with four Maces before them, and before the Lord High-Steward four more, beſides his own Serjeant and Purſe-bearer, with Garter King at Arms, and the Deputy Black-rod bearing the White Staff. After Obeiſance made to the Throne, each Lord, and the others, took their places, the Serjeants, with their Maces erect, kneeling, four on each ſide of the Throne.

Then the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the right hand, and the Clerk of the Crown in the Kings-Bench on the left hand, making three Reverences to the Lord High-Steward, came up to his Seat, and there both kneeling, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery delivered the Commiſſion for the Office of High-Steward (pro hac vice) to his Grace, who delivered it to the Clerk of the Crown in the Kings-Bench to read, and then they both in the ſame manner went back to their Seats at the Table.

Then the Clerk of the Crown in the Kings-Bench ſaid as followeth.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. O yes, O yes, O yes: My Lord High-Steward of England ſtraitly chargeth and commandeth all manner of perſons here aſſembled, to keep ſilence, and give ear to his Majeſties Commiſſion, unto my Lord High-Steward his Grace directed, upon pain of Impriſonment.

Then all the Peers and Aſſiſtants ſtanding up, and uncovered, he read the Commiſſion in hæc verba.

Clerk of the Crown. Carolus, &c.

Serjeant. God ſave the King.

Then Garter and the Uſher that held the Staff, making three Reverences to his Grace, Garter on his knees preſented him the white Staff, which his Grace delivered to the Uſher, who likewiſe kneeled to hold the ſame, during the reſt of the Ceremony.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms make Proclamation.

Serjeant. My Lord High-Steward of England his Grace ſtraitly chargeth and commandeth all manner of perſons here preſent, to be uncovered, upon pain and peril ſhall fall thereon.

Then the Clerk read the Certiorari to the Commiſſioners, before whom the Indictment was found, to return the ſame into the Houſe of Lords with the Return in hæc verba.

Clerk of the Crown. Carolus, &c. Virtute, &c. Serjeant at Arms make Proclamation.

Serjeant. O yes: Conſtable of the Tower of London return thy Precept and Writ to thee directed, and bring forth thy Priſoner Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, on pain and peril ſhall fall thereon.

The Conſtable of the Tower of London being a Peer, by Sir John Robinſon his Lieutenant returned his Precept, and with the Ax born on his left hand, the edge from him, the Earl of Pembroke was brought to the Bar, the Lord High-Steward of England having then ordered the Judges to be covered, ſpake to the Priſoner as followeth.

Lord High-Steward. My Lord of Pembroke Your Lordſhip is now brought before this Great Aſſembly in order to your Trial, wherein you have to maintain all that can concern you in this World, your Eſtate, your Honour and your Life it ſelf. There is no leſs a Crime charged on you, than the Murther of one of the King's Subjects, and this is not charged on you by common Voice and Fame, nor by the growing Rumour of the multitude, but by the grand Inqueſt of this County, which was made up of Gentlemen of good Quality and Conſideration. Though all this amount to no more than a bare Accuſation, (for God forbid that they who neither did nor could hear the Evidence on both ſides, ſhould any way prejudge your Trial by their partial Examination) yet it hath produced the preſentment of ſuch a Crime, as is attended with extraordinary and unuſual Circumſtances.

And now for this Fact your Lordſhip is to be tried in full Parliament, and your Arraignment is to be made as full and as ſolemnly as is poſſible. The King (who will have a ſtrict account of the Blood of the meaneſt of his Subjects, by whomſoever it is ſhed) hath for this purpoſe appointed an High-Steward: And now your Lordſhip is to be tried not by a ſelect number of Lords, but by the whole Houſe of Peers, who are met together to make Inquiſition for this Blood.

Doubtleſs the ſhame of being made a Spectacle to ſuch an Aſſembly as this, and the having a man's faults and weakneſſes expoſed to the notice and obſervation of ſuch a Preſence as this is, to a generous Mind muſt needs be a penance worſe than death it ſelf; for he that outlives his own Honour, can have very little joy in whatſoever elſe he lives to poſſeſs.

In ſuch a ſtate and condition as this is, it will be very fit for your Lordſhip to recollect your ſelf with all the care and caution you can; it will be neceſſary for you to make uſe of the beſt temper, and the beſt thoughts you have, when you come to make your defence; let not the diſgrace of ſtanding as a Felon at the Bar, too much deject you; no man's credit can fall ſo low, but that if he bear his ſhame as he ſhould do, and profit by it as he ought to do, it is in his own power to redeem his reputation. Therefore let no man deſpair, that deſires and endeavours to recover himſelf again, much leſs let the terrors of Juſtice affright you; for though your Lordſhip have great cauſe to fear, yet whatever may be lawfully hoped for, your Lordſhip may expect from the Peers.

It is indeed juſt cauſe of dreadful apprehenſions, when you conſider how ſtrict and impartial the Judicature is which you ſtand before, and how impoſſible it is that any Conſideration of your Lordſhip's Relation or Family, ſhall have any kind of Ingredience into their Lordſhips Judgment; nay you have cauſe to fear all this will make againſt you, when you conſider how the Quality of the Offender doth aggravate the Crime.

You have reaſon to fear and be diſmayed again, when you conſider how ſevere, and how inexorable the Rule of Law is, in the Caſe of Blood; and how certain it is that the Lords will make that Rule of Law the meaſure of your Life or Death: But yet, my Lord, there are other Conſiderations that may ſupport you.

Your Lordſhip may be ſure that they will receive no proof againſt you, but direct and poſitive Evidence; it will not be left to any proof, but ſuch proof, as by the manifeſt plainneſs of it, deſerves to be called Evidence. In the next place, your Lordſhip ſhall ſuffer no prejudice for want of Counſel, for where there are any advantages that the Law can give you, this Court takes it ſelf obliged in Honour to put you in mind of it; nor can your Lordſhip ſuffer an Inconvenience, by having Counſel to plead againſt you, for no Arguments nor Skill can pervert their Lordſhips Juſtice; you ſhall not fall by the charms of Eloquence; nothing ſhall load or preſs you but your own Crime, and even that burthen may be alleviated, if there be any room for an Abatement, ſo far as it doth not contradict what they owe to the King, to themſelves, to the Law, and to the Juſtice of the Kingdom.

Hearken therefore (my Lord) to your Indictment with patience and attention, give no Interruption to the Counſel or Witneſſes that ſpeak againſt you, and reſerve what you have to ſay for your ſelf till the time come, when your Witneſſes ſhall be examined, and you make your Defence, of which I will give you notice. And this you may rely upon, that when you do come to ſpeak for your ſelf, you ſhall be heard with as much favour and candor as the matter will bear; and when my Lords have heard all that can be ſaid on both ſides, doubtleſs their Lordſhips will give ſuch a Judgment in the Caſe, as is fit for you to receive, ſuch a Judgment as becomes this great Court, and ſuch a Judgment as is ſuitable to that known Equity, which their Lordſhips do always obſerve in all their Proceedings.

Lord High-Steward. Read the Indictment to my Lord.

Clerk of the Crown. Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, hold up your Hand.

Which he obeyed by holding up his Right Hand.

Cl. of Cr. You ſtand indicted by the Name of Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, late of the Pariſh of St. Martins in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, for that you not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the 4th of February, in the 30th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. with Force and Arms, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, in and upon one Nathaniel Cony, Gent. in the Peace of God, and of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being, feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of your Malice forethought, did make an Aſſault; and that you the ſaid Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, with the Right Fiſt of you the ſaid Philip, &c. the ſaid Nathaniel Cony, in and upon the Left part of the Head of the ſaid Nathaniel Cony, then and there feloniouſly, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did ſtrike and bruiſe, and him the ſaid Nathaniel Cony, with your Right Fiſt aforeſaid, did beat and throw down to the Ground; and that you the ſaid Philip, &c. the ſaid Nathaniel Cony ſo lying upon the Ground, in and upon the Head, Neck, Breaſt, Belly, Sides and Back, of him the ſaid Nathaniel Cony, then and there feloniouſly, wilfully, and of your Malice before-thought did ſtrike and kick, by reaſon of which ſaid kicking and bruiſing of the ſaid Nathaniel Cony on the ſaid Left part of the Head of the ſaid Nathaniel Cony with the ſaid Fiſt of you the ſaid Philip, &c. and of the beating and throwing him to the Ground aforeſaid; and alſo by reaſon of kicking of the ſaid Nathaniel Cony with the ſaid Feet of you the ſaid Philip, &c. on the Head, Neck, Breaſt, Belly, Sides and Back of the ſaid Nathaniel, he the ſaid Nathaniel Cony, from the aforeſaid 4th Day of February in the aforeſaid Year, to the 10th of the ſame Month of February, in the Pariſh aforeſaid, did languiſh, and languiſhing did live; on which ſaid 10th Day of February in the Year aforeſaid, he the ſaid Nathaniel Cony, of the ſtriking and bruiſing, beating and kicking died; and ſo you the ſaid Philip, &c. the ſaid Nathaniel Cony, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, in manner and form aforeſaid, feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of your Malice forethought, did Kill and Murther, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. How ſay you, Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, Are you Guilty of this Felony and Murther whereof you ſtand indicted, or Not Guilty?

E. of Pemb. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, How will you be tried?

E. of Pemb. By my Peers.

Cl. of Cr. God ſend you a good Deliverance. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. O yes, If any one will give Evidence for our Sovereign Lord the King, againſt Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard, for the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

Then Sir William Dolben, Knt. the King's Serjeant at Law, Recorder of the City of London, opened the Indictment thus:

Sir William Dolben. May it pleaſe your Grace my Lord High-Steward of England, and the reſt of my Noble Lords.

Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery ſtands indicted, for that he, the 4th Day of February laſt, in the Pariſh of St. Martins in the Fields, in the County

County of Middlesex, of his malice fore-thought, did make an assault upon one Nathaniel Cony, in God and the King's peace there being; and that he the said Philip Earl, &c. with his right Fist, on the left part of the Head of the said Nathaniel, then and there feloniously did strike and bruise, and with his right Fist aforesaid, him did cast and throw down to the ground, and being so on the ground with his Feet did kick and strike, of which said striking, bruising and kicking, the said Nathaniel Cony, from the said 4th of February, to the 10th of February following, did languish, and then died; and so the Jurors do upon their Oaths say, That the said Philip Earl of Pembroke, &c. the said Nathaniel Cony, at the Parish and County aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice fore-thought, did murther, against the King's peace, his Crown and Dignity. To this Indictment the Earl of Pembroke hath pleaded Not guilty, and put himself upon his Peers for his Trial: We who are of Counsel for the King, shall produce our Evidence to confirm this Accusation, with what it is, and of what nature, his Majesty's Attorney General will acquaint your Grace, and the rest of you my Noble Lords.

Then Sir William Jones, Attorney-General, (who being called by Writ, as Assistant to the House, was within the Bar) opened the Evidence to this effect.

Att. Gen. May it please your Grace my Lord High Steward of England, and the rest of my Noble Lords; Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery stands here Indicted for the Murther of Nathaniel Cony: That my Lord of Pembroke was the cause of his death, I humbly conceive will need very little question before your Lordships, for we have such proof that it was his hand threw him down, and his feet that trod upon him and kicked him, which was the cause of his death, that it cannot be denied: but whether or no this killing amount to Murther, may be a matter of further controversie; and I hold it my duty to acquaint your Grace and my Lords, what the proof is, and then what we have to offer to prove it to be an offence even of this nature.

My Lords, I know to maintain an Indictment of Murther, there must be a proof of Malice; but the Law is plain (your Lordships know it, and my Lords the Judges will tell it you) that there are two sorts of Malice, the one is Malice expres'd, and that is when a man can be proved to have born before hand an ill will and hatred to the person he killed; this sort of Malice we pretend not to be in this case: But there is another sort of Malice, which also in Law gives the denomination of Murder to the killing of a man, which is Malice implied, when any one shall without any provocation given by the party slain, bring another by violence to his Death: For our Law supposeth, and that upon good ground, that no man without a Provocation would kill his Brother, unless he had Malice to him before-hand; and that is the Malice that falls out to be the Ingredient of this case, for the poor unfortunate Gentleman that was killed, did not for ought that did appear to me, (and I have had all the proof given at the Coroners Inquest under my Examination) give the least Provocation to this Noble Lord. Some have thought that a person might be guilty of malicious Murther, though the party killed had given the Murtherer a blow; but I shall not contend for so strict a construction of a Provocation, for there was not in this case a blow struck, no nor an angry word given: all that I can find came from Mr. Cony was, to complain that a Friend of his that came into the Company with him, was turned out of doors; and sure such a thing will never be taken to be a Provocation, at leastwise such a one as will take away Malice implied. I shall now (my Lord) give your Lordships an account of the nature of our Evidence, as to the Fact, and that (my Lords) in short; for as I shall not use any aggravation above what the Cause requires, so I shall not tire your Grace, and my Lords, with any long Speech, but barely open the Evidence, and tell you in short what will come in proof before you.

It was on Sunday the 3d of February, that my Lord of Pembroke and his Company were drinking at the House of one Long in the Hay-Market, (I am sorry to hear the day was no better imployed by them) and it was the misfortune of this poor Gentleman, together with one Mr. Goring, to come into this House to drink a Bottle of Wine; my Lord of Pembroke saw them coming in, and knowing Mr. Cony, was very importunate with him to joyn Company: he at first refused, because of his Friend, and told his Lordship they had business together; but no denial he would take, and so at last they did go into my Lord's Room. After some distance of time, when it was near twelve of the Clock at Night, there fell out a difference between my Lord, and Mr. Goring, (the Gentleman that came in with Mr. Cony) who (it seems) gave my Lord of Pembroke some words, which provoked him to expres his distaste of them, by throwing a Glass of Wine in his face; which injury Mr. Goring so far resented, as that he was about to draw his Sword, but was prevented by some of the Company, and put out of the Room to avoid further mischief. This Gentleman Mr. Cony that was killed, was not at all concerned in the matter of the difference, but only desired to go out of the Room, that he might look after his Friend who was thrust out of doors. He knew not why, (without any Provocation, as you will hear by and by) my Lord of Pembroke falls upon him, strikes him with one blow to the ground, and when he was there trod upon him on his Back, on his Belly, on his Side, and kicked him so that the poor Gentleman fell into a Swound, and was after some time, with some difficulty brought to himself again: after they had perceived there was Life in him, they liftedhim up, and laid him down on some Chairs thatwere in the Room, and thinking too much hadbeen done by them already, they take their leaves of him, and commit him to the care of the Drawer. He was not (as it should seem) so carefully attended by the Drawer, whose ignorance could not look after him as his condition required, and so fell down off the Chairs again divers times. After some time, early in the morning he was carried away in a Sedan to his own Lodging, and being there put to Bed, as he grew a little more and more recovered out of his stupefaction, so he grew more and more in pain, and sent for Doctors and Chirurgeons to consult with, by whom he had all the means used that was possible to have saved his Life; but it proved there was so much Blood forced out of his Veins, and gathered into one place of his Body, by those Blows and Bruises, that he could not be recovered, and so after a Weeks time passed in intolerable pain, died: But yet all the time of his dying, and even constantly to his death, he did complain that it was my Lord's Bruises brought him into that condition. It will also be proved, that after his death, upon view of the Body by the Coroner and his Jury, there was the appearances of those Blows and Abuses, by broad Bruises in several parts of the Body, and this some of the Jury will testifie. This in short is the matter of the Evidence, which we shall briefly prove, and then submit it all to your Lordships Judgment.

by

L. H. St. Call the Witnesses together, and speak out Mr. Attorney.

At. Gen. Those we shall call first are Mr. Henry Goring, Mr. Richard Savage, Mr. John Shelly, and Capt. Fitz-Patrick.

Cl. of Cr. The Evidence which you and every one of you shall give for our Sovereign Lord the King, against Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, the Prisoner at the Bar, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth: So help you God.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, whom do you begin with?

At. Gen. Mr. Henry Goring.

L. H. St. Stand forward, Goring.

At. Gen. Pray Sir acquaint my Lords of the manner of your coming with Mr. Cony to Mr. Long's, and what happened there.

L. H. St. Sir, you must speak so loud that I may hear.

Goring. May it please your Grace, Mr. Cony and I did on Sunday the 3d of February last, dine in the City, we stayed very late there, and I must ingenuously confess, we had drank more than was fit for us to have done; after that (if it please your Grace) I offered to set down Mr. Cony at his Lodgings, but he was so very ceremonious, that he would see me at home; it seems Long's House, the Tavern in the Hay-market, was in the way, and Mr. Cony would needs have us drink another bottle of Wine e're we parted: It was late, and the door shut, but we knocking pretty hard for admittance, did get it opened, and as soon as the door was opened, Mr. Cony went towards the Bar, and made some noise, being in drink; my Lord of Pembroke was then in a low room in the House, and knowing Mr. Cony, (as I thought) came and asked him, if he would come in and drink with him; he replied, My Lord, I am with a Friend, and we have some business together: At length my Lord asked me very civilly to come in, and we did after some time come in, and when we were in, my Lord drank to me, as I remember, and we stood round the Table a while, and at last sate down in some Chairs, for we were not so much our selves as to be able to stand all the while; then there was, it seems, some Dispute between my Lord of Pembroke and me, wherein my Lord did conceive I had done him some injury, and threw a glass of Wine in my face.

Att. Gen. What kind of Discourse was that, pray Sir?

Goring. Truly (may it please your Grace) I cannot remember all the Discourse, because I was so much in drink at that time; they say, it was about Families and Play, I cannot positively say what it was; but after my Lord of Pembroke rose up to draw his Sword, and I laid my hand on mine.

Att. Gen. Well Sir; and what followed then?

Goring. Captain Savage stept in between my Lord and me, and the Drawer came bustling about, and took me and shoved me out of the room; while I was thrusting out I heard a noise behind me, and I see my Lord make somewhat towards Mr. Cony; but more I cannot say what was done, because Mr. Savage was between my Lord and me. When I was out of the room, I found my Sword gone, and my Hat and Perriwig; I then made a noise at the door, and would not go away till I had recovered my things; the Man of the House (who was in bed, it seems, for he was then undrest, and in his Night-Gown) came and asked me what was the matter? I told him, I had been in that room with my Lord of Pembroke, where I had received some ill usage, and had lost my Hat and Perriwig; and they had broken a piece of my Sword, and taken it from me, which I desired to have again; and (said I) Mr. Cony, I doubt, is in danger, for there is quarrelling within, and I desired to come in to see what they did with him.

Att. Gen. Well Sir, when you came in, what then?

Goring. Upon this, the Master of the House did desire me to go into a room, and a Gentlewoman (his Sister, as I after understood) did also press me to go into another room, and promised they would bring Mr. Cony to me; upon which I went into a room there by, but it was something long before I heard from them; and being under some impatience, they at last came and told me, Now, Sir, you may go in, if you please: when I came in, I found a Gentleman lying along upon the Chairs, and no body else in the room; I began to be suspicious (for I was then, as I thought, somewhat soberer) that he had some Wound, and took the Candle and walked about him, and would fain have awakened him, but could not by all my endeavours; the Drawer told me, he was only dead-drunk, and would in a little time come to himself; upon which I desired them to lay some Blankets upon him, and some Pillows under him, and set some more Chairs, to make the place broader, that he might not fall down; and I ordered the Drawer to be sure to watch with him till he awaked, and make a good fire, which he promised to do.

The next day Mr. Cony sent to my Lodging to come and see him, but I did not that day, because I did go out early, and did not return till late; but the very next day after, (being Tuesday) when I came to him, Harry, (said he) I was very much abused the other night in my Lord's company; I am sorry for that (said I) with all my heart; and I asked him, how he came to be abused; My Lord of Pembroke (said he) threw me down, and there some body trod upon me and kicked me, and he shall know that he has abused me, and that I expect satisfaction for it, I hope you will let him know so much, and carry him a Challenge from me: Mr. Cony, (said I) who did tread upon you? I know not, (said he) for I was in a swound, either my Lord of Pembroke, or some of his Creatures for him. I never had the honour to know my Lord of Pembroke before, nor above one or two of the Gentlemen that were with him then in the company.

Att.

Att. Gen. Sir, had you any diſcourſe with him afterwards?

Goring. Yes, every day till Thurſday at Night.

Att. Gen. Did he complain of much pain?

Goring. Yes, conſtantly in his Belly, his Sides and his Shoulders.

Att. Gen. What did he tell you was the cauſe of his Death?

Goring. He ſaid it was my Lord of Pembroke that had done him the injury in throwing him down; who trod on him, or kicked him, he could not tell, but ſaid, my Lord ſhould anſwer for it to him.

Att. Gen. Do you remember what part he complained of moſt?

Goring. His Belly.

Att. Gen. And what elſe?

Goring. I think his Side and Shoulders.

Att. Gen. What diſtance of time was it between your being thruſt out of the Room, and your coming in, and finding him upon the Chairs?

Goring. About half an Hour.

L. H. St. Mr. Goring, you ſay you ſaw no ſtroke given by my Lord of Pembroke to Mr. Cony.

Goring. No truly, may it pleaſe your Grace, I ſaw my Lord make towards him, but Mr. Savage was between my Lord and me, and I was put out of the Room.

L. H. St. You did not hear Mr. Cony charge my Lord with kicking him, or ſtamping on him?

Goring. He did not in my hearing charge him with ſtamping on him, but that he threw him down, and that then ſome one did kick him.

Att. Gen. My Lords, We have done with this Witneſs.

L. H. St. My Lord of Pembroke, Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to ask that Witneſs that ſpoke laſt any Queſtions, for now is your time?

E. of P. No, my Lord.

Att. Gen. Then we deſire Mr. Savage may be examined: Mr. Savage, pray do you acquaint his Grace and my Lords what you know of this Buſineſs.

Savage. May it pleaſe your Grace, I was in company with my Lord of Pembroke at Mr. Long's Houſe in the Hay-Market, when Mr. Cony came in, and making a great noiſe at the Bar, my Lord of Pembroke being in a lower Room, looked out at the Door, and ſeeing who it was, my Lord ſaluted him very kindly, and told him he was glad to ſee him, and deſired him to walk into his Room. Mr. Cony told him he had a Friend at Door, and deſired his Lordſhip to admit him, which my Lord embraced very kindly: And then Mr. Cony goes to the Door and calls Mr. Goring, deſiring him to come in, and they came together into the Room; my Lord deſired them to ſit down and drink a Glaſs of Wine, which they did, and after ſome time falling into diſcourſe, Mr. Goring began to make uſe of ſome impertinent language to my Lord, and amongſt the reſt told him he was as good, or a better Gentleman than he was.

Att. Gen. Goring did?

Savage. Yes, Goring did; upon which my Lord threw a Glaſs of Wine in his Face, and immediately ſtept back and drew his Sword: Mr. Goring was going to draw, but I came up to him, and took his Sword from him, and broke a piece of it, and upon my perſwaſion my Lord put up his Sword again; but for fear there might be more words, I took Mr. Goring in my Arms, and ſhoved him out of the Room: And whilſt I was thruſting him out of Doors, I heard a noiſe of a Buſtle behind me, and leaving the Drawer to keep Mr. Goring out, I ſaw my Lord of Pembroke ſtrike Cony with his right Hand, who immediately fell down, and then gave him a kick; and ſo upon that, finding him not ſtir, I took Mr. Cony being on the Ground, (I and my Lord together, for I was not ſtrong enough to do it my ſelf) and laid him on the Chairs, and covered him up warm, and ſo left him.

Att. Gen. You ſay my Lord ſtruck him a blow.

Savage. Yes, he did ſtrike him.

Att. Gen. On what part?

Savage. I ſuppoſe on the Face.

Att. Gen. You ſay, Sir, my Lord of Pembroke did kick him when he was upon the Ground.

Savage. Yes.

Att. Gen. Did he kick him once, or oftner?

Savage. But once, that I ſaw.

Att. Gen. Pray Sir, on what part was it?

Savage. Some where on the Body, but I cannot tell what part.

Att. Gen. With what force did his Leg move?

Savage. Not with a very great force.

Att. Gen. How high was his Leg lifted up?

Savage. He puſhed his Leg with a quick motion forwards.

Att. Gen. When you took him up he was ſenſleſs, you ſay; pray Sir, how long was it e're he was brought to life again?

Savage. Two or three Minutes.

Att. Gen. What means did you uſe to bring him to himſelf?

Savage. We chafed him over the Temples, and ſuch things.

Att. Gen. When he came to life again, did he ſpeak?

Savage. He did open his Eyes, but did not ſpeak.

Att. Gen. What followed then?

Savage. We laid him upon ſome Chairs gently, for his Pulſe was almoſt gone, that we could feel.

Att. Gen. Did his Eyes continue open after he was revived?

Savage. Not long; for I asked him if he knew me, he ſeemed to ſhake his head, as if he did, and then cloſed his Eyes again.

Att. Gen. Before that Accident, what condition was he in? was he able to talk?

Savage. He was very drunk, but he did ſay ſomething.

Att. Gen. What diſcourſe had he before he was ſtruck down?

Savage. I cannot well remember, but I think he propoſed Play to my Lord.

Att. Gen. Why did my Lord ſtrike Cony?

Savage. I cannot tell, I was then putting Goring out of the Room, and hearing the noiſe of my Lord's motion towards Cony, I looked back and ſaw my Lord ſtrike him.

Att. Gen. What language did he uſe to my Lord, to provoke him to it?

Savage. I cannot tell any at all.

Att. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Cony after that time, and what did he then ſay to you?

Savage. I went two days afterwards to ſee Mr. Cony, who told me he was then in a pretty good condition. He asked me whether my Lord had ſtruck him? I told him, yes. Truly, ſaid, he I did did not know that my Lord had ſtruck me, but finding my ſelf ſo much in pain, I thought I had faln, partly through my Drink, and partly through my Fits I uſed to have.

Att. Gen. We (my Lord) have now done with this Witneſs.

L. H. St. My Lord of Pembroke, will you ask Mr. Savage any Queſtions?

E. of P. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Mr. Savage, I think you ſay you ſaw my Lord of Pembroke kick him once; in your Judgment, was that Kick of ſuch force as to give any great bruiſe?

Savage. I did (my Lord) ſee him kick him once, but not with any great force, as I conceive.

L. H. St. You did not hear Mr. Cony complain my Lord had kick'd him?

Savage. No; for as I told your Lordſhip, when I was to ſee him two days after, he asked me the queſtion, and ſaid he did not know it before.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, pray on with your Witneſſes.

Att. Gen. We ſhall next call Mr. John Shelly: Mr. Shelly, pray tell his Grace and my Lords your knowledge in this untoward Accident.

Shelly. May it pleaſe your Grace, I was in the Room at Long's, when Mr. Cony and Mr. Goring came in; they were both very far in Drink, in ſo much that Goring could hardly ſtand, but deſired he might have leave to ſit down, which he had: Mr. Goring in a little time propoſeth Play to my Lord, and my Lord told him he would throw with him for 500 l. and was ſending away for the Money; but then Mr. Goring would not Play: I believe (ſaid my Lord to him) you are an idle Fellow, that you will propoſe theſe things and not purſue them: Upon that Mr. Goring tells my Lord, his Name was a better Name than his Lordſhip's, and he a better Gentleman than my Lord: Then my Lord takes ſome Wine, and threw in his Face; hereupon Mr. Goring ſteps back, and drew his Sword, and my Lord did the ſame: Captain Savage ſteps in between them, and keeps my Lord, while Goring was put out of the Room: my Lord then deſired Mr. Cony to go out with his Friend: Said he, I do not know upon what account my Friend is ſent out; whereupon my Lord hit Cony a Box on the Ear, and that threw him down.

Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, before my Lord ſtruck him, did not Cony give my Lord ſome ill Language?

Shelly. He only ſaid as I told you before, I know not upon what account my Friend is turned out of Doors.

Att. Gen. Did you ſee my Lord ſtrike him?

Shelly. Yes.

Att. Gen. Where abouts?

Shelly. On the Head, with his Fiſt, or his Hand.

Att. Gen. Did he fall at the firſt blow.

Shelly. Yes.

Att. Gen. Did he afterwards ſay any thing?

Shelly. No.

Att. Gen. Did you ſee my Lord Kick him?

Shelly. No.

Att. Gen. Did you ſee my Lord hold up his Foot to do it?

Shelly. Yes.

Att. Gen. How high?

Shelly. A pretty height.

Att. Gen. Pray what became of the Gentleman afterwards?

Shelly. They took him up in their Arms, and laid him upon ſome Chairs.

Att. Gen. Did you ſee him laid there?

Shelly. Yes.

Att. Gen. Was he ſenſleſs when he was taken up?

Shelly. Yes.

Att. Gen. What was the reaſon do you think that he did not open his Eyes, and keep them open?

Shelly. Truly I believe his Drink, as well as the Blows.

Att. Gen. The one as well as the other.

Shelly. Yes.

Att. Gen. What then did they do with him?

Shelly. They laid Blankets upon him, and Pillows under him, and laid him upon the Chairs.

Att. Gen. How many Chairs?

Shelly. As many as reach'd his length.

Att. Gen. Who did you leave him in charge withall?

Shelly. With the Drawer.

Att. Gen. Did he ſpeak between the time of his firſt fall, and your going away?

Shelly. No.

Att. Gen. Did you ſee him after?

Shelly. Yes, three days after.

Att. Gen. What did he then ſay to you?

Shelly. That he had a Fit, but was pretty well recovered.

Att. Gen. When was it you ſaw him after that?

Shelly. On the Saturday after, and then he told me the ſame again.

L. H. St. Did he impute any thing to my Lord of Pembroke?

Shelly. He ſaid nothing at all to me of the ground of his illneſs, but that which I have told your Grace.

L. H. St. My Lord of Pembroke, will your Lordſhip ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

E. of P. No, my Lord.

Att. Gen. Then We for the King deſire to examine Mr. Fitz-Patrick. Captain Fitz-Patrick, Pray tell my Lord High-Steward, and my Lords the Peers, what you know.

Fitz-Pat. My Lord, I was in the Room at Long's with my Lord of Pembroke, and my Lord was walking about the Room, and he hears a noiſe without, and ſteps to the Door, where opening the Door half, he ſaw Mr. Cony at the Bar, who was juſt come in, and ſeeing my Lord, comes to ſalute him, my Lord returning into the Room, ſaid to him, Will you come in and joyn Company? Mr. Cony anſwered, I have my Friend here my Lord, and brings Mr. Goring to my Lord, who ſaluted him kindly, and deſired them both to walk in: Upon which all we that were in the Room ſtood up, and the Drawer gave them Chairs; after the drinking about of a Glaſs or two, Mr. Goring (both being drunk) ſaid, amongſt other diſcourſe, I will drink, I will play, I will fight with any Man. Who is this Gentleman, ſaid my Lord of Pembroke, that I ſhould never hear of, or know him? How, ſaid Goring, ('S Blood) not hear of me? My Name is Goring, a Name and Family as good as any Gentleman's in England. There is no body doubts it, ſaid my Lord. Your Betters, ſaid Goring; and then my Lord threw the Wine in his Face; and Goring going to draw, was put out of the Room by Mr. Savage, and my Lord, upon ſome words from Cony, ſtruck him down with his Hand.

Att. Gen. What words were thoſe?

Fitz-Pat. When I asked my Lord the reaſon why he ſtruck Cony, he told me, it was becauſe Cony had told him Goring ſhould not go out of the Room till he knew the reaſon of it.

the

Att. Gen. Did you hear him ſay ſo?

Fitz-Pat. No, not I, but my Lord upon my asking gave that for the reaſon.

L. H. St. What was the reaſon?

Fitz-Pat. Becauſe Mr. Cony told him, Goring ſhould not go out of the Room, till he knew ſome reaſon for it: After my Lord had ſtruck him, I was on the other ſide of the Table, and could not ſee whether my Lord did ſtamp on him, or kick him; but I ſee my Lord's Knee ſtir, and if he did kick him, he kickt him but once, for we ran in and took him up to lay him upon the Chairs, and taking his Handkerchief out of his Pocket to wipe his Face, we pluckt out of his Pocket with it ſome falſe Dice, which we afterwards put into the Hands of Mr. Long, to prove that they intended and propoſed Play; and after we had laid him on the Chairs, and wrapt him up warm, we left him.

Att. Gen. How was he after he was taken up?

Fitz-Pat. He open'd his Eyes, but being very drunk before, could not keep them open, but ſhut them again; and we made a Bed for him on the Chairs, and having wrapt him up warm, we left him, and ordered the Drawer to make him a Fire.

L. H. St. Did you hear him ſpeak after he was up?

Fitz-Pat. No, my Lord: Mr. Savage ſpoke to him, and asked him, if he knew him; he only lookt on him, and by a turn of his Head ſeemed to anſwer him yes.

L. H. St. On the Oath you have taken, did you hear him ſpeak to my Lord of Pembroke at any time before he was ſtruck?

Pat. Yes, my Lord, he had ſpoken before, and I ſaw his Lips make a motion towards my Lord, but what he ſaid, I know no otherwiſe than as I ſaid before.

L. H. St. My Lord of Pembroke, Will your Lordſhip ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

E. of P. No, my Lord.

Att. Gen. We have now, my Lord, done with the Witneſſes that were by when the Fact was committed; by all whom your Lordſhips hear, the Blows were all given by my Lord of Pembroke, and in their Company; they are all Gentlemen of Quality, and therefore, I believe, ſpeak the truth: We will now call ſome Witneſſes that were with the unfortunate Gentleman in his ſickneſs, whereof one was his Phyſician, another his Nurſe, and others, who were often with him, and after his death had a view of the Body. Theſe will give your Grace and my Lord an Account, that he died of thoſe Wounds, and Bruiſes he then received; they are theſe four, Dr. David Bruce, Mr. Thomas Hemes, Mr. Charles Jackſon, Alice Avery.

Cl. of Cr. Hearken to me you four. The Evidence that you and every of you ſhall give for our Sovereign Lord the King, againſt Philip Earl of Pembroke, ſhall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth: So help you God.

L. H. St. Whom do you call firſt Mr. Attorney?

Att. Gen. Dr. Bruce; my Lord: Pray Sir acquaint my Lord High-Steward his Grace, and my Lords the Peers, what you know of Mr. Cony's Sickneſs, and the cauſe of his Death, as you apprehend.

Dr. Bruce. May it pleaſe your Grace, all that I can evidence in particular of Mr. Cony's Sickneſs was this: On Monday Morning after his being in company of the Earl of Pembroke, I was ſent for to come to Mr. Cony's Lodgings, and about Ten of the Clock I came; he was then in extremity of pain in both Shoulders, ſo that he could not move, and his pains were ſo acute, that he could not admit of touching: Upon the abating of thoſe pains by my application the next Day, he then began to complain of pains in his Belly, but thoſe not ſo extreme as thoſe in his Shoulders; after ſome applications thereto, he complain'd of both, but in a little time was ſo eaſed, that he kept well all Night, and till Nine or Ten the next Morning. The next day, which was Wedneſday, when I came to ſee him, I told him of the common report of his being kickt; he ſeemed diſpleaſed that ſuch a thing ſhould be reported, and throwing down the Bed-cloaths, ſhewed me his Belly, but I could not ſee any blemiſh upon it then, either by diſcolouring or bruiſing; I found him indeed very backward in receiving Remedies, but left him then in a hopeful way of recovery, but I ſaw him not after, becauſe being ſick my ſelf, I could not attend him.

Att. Gen. Did he complain of any Hurt about him then?

Bruce. Only in his Belly.

Att. Gen. Did you then ſee his Belly?

Bruce. Yes, Sir, for he threw away the Cloaths.

Att. Gen. Did you ſee upon his Breaſt, or any where elſe?

Bruce. He did not complain of any Ail there, ſo I lookt not for any thing.

Att. Gen. What did he complain of when you came firſt to him?

Bruce. Only his Shoulders.

Att. Gen. And after his Belly?

Bruce. Yes.

L. H. St. Hark you, Doctor, what day was that you came to look on his Belly, whether he had any Bruiſes or no?

Bruce. Wedneſday Morning, my Lord.

L. H. St. And then you ſay upon your Oath, you ſaw there no ſwelling or diſcolouring.

Bruce. None at all, my Lord, I gave it in upon my Oath before the Coroner, and the ſame I ſay now.

Att. Gen. We have done with the Doctor, my Lord.

L. H. St. My Lord of Pembroke, will your Lordſhip examine him to any thing?

E. of P. No, my Lord.

Att. Gen. Then there is Mr. Hemes; pray Sir, acquaint my Lords what you know of this Gentleman Mr. Cony, and firſt pray you tell his Grace when you came to him firſt.

Hemes. It was on Monday morning after this Accident, about eight of the Clock.

Att. Gen. Did he ſend for you?

Hemes. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. How did you find him when you came?

Hemes. In great extremity of pain, and very ſore, complaining of pains over all his Body, eſpecially on his Shoulders and Buttocks. Then the Doctor, who came in ſoon after, did apply Plaiſters to him, and when he anointed him he was ſo ſore, that he could not endure any one to touch him, nor could we tell how to turn him in his Bed, or how to place him ſo as to apply the Ointment, but were fain to get a Sheep-skin to wrap him in, and by Pillows and a broad Joynſtool, raiſe him up by degrees: I did then look upon his Body, but ſaw no ſwelling or bruiſe there.

L. H. St. Did you ſee his Belly?

Hemes. No, my Lord, but he did complain of an inward grief there.

Att. Gen. When did he firſt complain of that?

Hemes. The firſt morning when I came.

At. Gen. What words did he then uſe? tell the very words he uſed, if you can remember them.

Hemes. No, Sir, I cannot; but he complained of a great ſoreneſs in his Belly, and an inward ſoreneſs.

At. Gen. Where, in what part of his Body?

Hemes. In his Belly, I ſay.

At. Gen. Well, now go on; how long did you continue with him? how many days did you come to him?

Hemes. I came to him every day all along.

At. Gen. Were you with him till the day he died?

Hemes. Yes; there was indeed a new Phyſician ſent for, but I ſaw him all along uſuallyonce a day.

At. Gen. Did he complain more than once of his Belly?

Hemes. Yes, all along from the firſt morning.

L. H. St. Did you ſee him opened after he was dead?

Hemes. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. St. What can you ſay as to what you ſaw on him then?

Hemes. When he was opened, in the lower part of his Belly there was a great deal of Blood gathered together on both the Hypocondria's, which is not uſual; I cannot tell the meaning of it, the Phyſician knows that beſt.

Att. Gen. Was it congealed black Blood?

Hemes. It was of an ugly colour.

Att. Gen. What colour.

Hemes. Of a blackiſh livid colour.

Att. Gen Have you obſerved it often ſo in others? Have you uſed to ſee People opened at other times?

Hemes. No indeed not I, but very ſeldom.

Att. Gen. Well then, ſtand down you for we have done with you.

L. H. St. My Lord of Pembroke, have you any thing to ſay to him?

E. of P. No, my Lord.

L. H St. Then call your next Witneſs.

Att. Gen. That is Mr. Jackſon. Pray you Sir tell my Lords what you know of this Buſineſs: When were you ſent for to Mr. Cony?

Jackſon. On Wedneſday.

Att. Gen. What Acquaintance had you with him?

Jackſon. I had a very particular Acquaintance with him, and I lookt upon him as a perſon of a ſtrong, healthy Conſtitution, and not ſubject to any Dangerous Diſtemper; my Acquaintance with him was of twelve years ſtanding, and therefore I muſt needs know him pretty well. Upon the Wedneſday, after this Accident, hearing he was very weak, I went to viſit him, and when I came, he told me, he had been troubled with very unuſual Swounding, and then fell into one of them, but with ſome Cordials we revived him again, when we thought all of us he had been dead. The Friday and Saturday before he died, I was with him all day, he complained of great griefs in his Belly, he ſaid, he had great torment there, and believed he had received ſome ill uſage lately, which occaſioned theſe pains.

Att. Gen. From whom had he received it?

Jackſon. He was very ſparing in telling whom it came from.

Att. Gen. Who did he name?

Jackſon. He ſaid, he was a drinking with my Lord of Pembroke; but he was in ſuch pains, that I could not ask him many Queſtions which he would anſwer.

Att. Gen. Where were his pains?

Jackſon. In his lower Belly, and he had ſometimes ſtrange fainting Fits.

Att. Gen. When did he firſt complain of his Fits to you?

Jackſon. On the Wedneſday.

Att. Gen. When did he die?

Jackſon. On Monday following.

Att. Gen. Did he complain on Saturday of his Belly?

Jackſon. Yes.

L. H. St. What diſcourſe had you further with him?

Jackſon. None but what I tell your Lordſhip, that I can remember.

L. H. St. My Lord of Pembroke, have you any thing to ſay to him?

E. of P. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Who's next then, Mr. Attorney?

Att. Gen. Alice Avery, my Lord, who was his Nurſe-----Were you attending upon Mr. Cony in the time of his Sickneſs?

Avery. Yes, I was.

Att. Gen. Pray tell my Lord your whole knowledge.

Avery. When he came in on the Monday morning, I found he was very ill, and could not well ſtand: Sir, ſaid I to him, ſure you are very much in Beer; No, ſaid he, I am very ſore, and full of pain: Sir, ſaid I, I believe you have been in ſome bad company? Yes ſaid he, I have been in ſome company, where I have received a great deal of wrong, I am not able to go nor ſtand, I have been beaten and kickt more than ordinary, I was never ſo abuſed in all my life; and upon his dying-Bed he wiſhed to God, he had never been in my Lord of Pembroke's company, for he did think in his conſcience my Lord had been the death of him.

Att. Gen. Speak that again.

Avery. He wiſhed to God he had never been in my Lord of Pembroke's company, for he did think in his conſcience that he had been the death of him.

L. H. St. How long before he died was that?

Avery. About two or three Hours before he died.

Att. Gen. Did he continue ſenſible to the time that he died?

Avery. Yes, to the laſt minute.

Att. Gen. How often did he complain of his pain?

Avery. All along from the time he came out of my Lord of Pembroke's company.

Att. Gen. What time did he come home?

Avery.

Avery. About ſeven or eight of the Clock on Monday morning.

Att. Gen. Where and what part did he complain of then?

Avery. His Sides and all parts about him.

Att. Gen. How often did you diſcourſe with him about his pain?

Avery. Every day divers times, from the time he came home till he died.

Att. Gen. And the ſpoke thoſe Words a little before he died?

Avery. Yes, and often complained of his being abuſed.

L. H St. My Lord of Pembroke, will you ask this Woman any Queſtions?

E. of P. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Have you any more Witneſſes, Mr. Atorney?

Att. Gen. Now, my Lord, we ſhall call three more that had a view of the Body after his death, upon the Coroner's Inqueſt, who will give your Grace an Account what appearings of Murther were there viſible; and they are, Richard Wheeler, William Brown, Thomas Roberts.

Cl. of Cr. Lay your hands on the Book: The Evidence, &c.

Att Gen. Which is Mr. Brown? Did you ſee the Body of Mr. Cony after he was dead?

Brown. Yes, my Lord, I was one of the Coroner's Inqueſt, which after view of the Body went into another Houſe; but ſome of us ſeeing the Body ſwelled at that rate as it was, and being unſatisfied of the cauſe, went back again to look upon it, and there I ſaw upon his right Breaſt a great black Bruiſe; and I looked upon the Cawl, which was all waſted away; and on his left Side again a great black Spot, and in the bottom of his Belly a quantity of very ill-lookt Blood.

Att. Gen. When was this you ſaw it? what day? how long after his death?

Brown. The day after he died.

Att. Gen. Where did you obſerve any Hurt and Bruiſe upon him beſides?

Brown. As he lay before he was opened, we ſaw him all over ſwelled at a prodigious rate, and black and blue in divers places; ſo that I was unſatisfied till I had ſeen the inward parts, and therefore went up and ſaw what I ſaid before.

L. H. St. Did you know the Gentleman before?

Brown. No, my Lord.

L. H. S. My Lord of Pembroke, do you deſire to ask him any thing?

E. of P. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Then go on Sir.

Att. Gen. Richard Weeler, pray tell my Lord what you know.

Wheeler. My Lord, I was ſummoned upon the Jury by the Coroner, and according to my duty I made ſuch an inſpection as I could into the Body; I did obſerve upon his right Breaſt a very black and great Bruiſe, and on the left ſide of his Belly a very black and great Bruiſe, which was indeed of another-guiſe colour than that of ſettled Blood, for I have of my own knowlege had a ſad experience of that kind.

Att. Gen. Did you know the Gentleman before?

Wheeler. Yes, I knew the Gentleman very well, and I had not known him to be the ſame perſon then, but by their deſcription that were about him, for all the parts of his Body were moſt violently ſwelled.

Att. Gen. Did you ſee the ſettled Blood at the bottom of his Belly?

Wheeler. Yes; and as I was informed, that was occaſioned by his being forced to lie on his Back continually, becauſe his pain would not ſuffer him to move: that on the Side, and Ribs, was a perfect Bruiſe.

Att. Gen. Where is Mr. Roberts? did you ſee this Gentleman's Body after his death?

Roberts. I ſaw the Body after it was opened, and viewed the inward lower parts of the Belly; where there was a quantity of Blood gathered together.

Att. Gen. Was it more black in that part than in others?

Roberts. It was black congealed Blood.

Att. Gen. How broad were the ſpots?

Roberts. About the breadth of my hand.

L. H. St. Mr. Roberts, did you ſee the left ſide of the Belly bruiſed?

Roberts. Yes, my Lord; and (as I ſaid) in the lower inward parts black congealed Blood.

L. H. St. Was there any ſwelling?

Roberts. Yes, my Lord, very much.

L. H. St. The Doctor that was examined before, ſaid there was no ſwelling nor diſcolouring.

Att. Gen. He did ſo, my Lord; but this was ſeveral days after that.

L. H. St. My Lord of Pembroke, will you examine theſe men?

E. of P. No, my Lord.

At. Gen. My Lord, we have but one Witneſs more for the King, and that is Mr. Charles Cony, who is Brother of the Gentleman that died, who will give you an account what he ſaid in his ſickneſs; and the Sayings of a dying Man in ſuch circumſtances, are remarkable.

Cl. of Cr. Charles Cony, harken to your Oath: The Evidence, &c.

Att. Gen. Now Mr. Cony, tell his Grace and my Lords the occaſion of your Brother's ſickneſs and death.

Cony. May it pleaſe your Grace, on Monday the 4th of February I was ſent for by my Brother, about nine of the Clock in the morning, to come to ſpeak with him, but not believing his buſineſs to be urgent, deferred my going; the Meſſenger immediately comes back again, and tells me my Brother was exceeding ill: As ſoon as I came, I found him almoſt dying, his Eyes ſet, and he extreamly ill, but we recovered him in a little time: whilſt he complained of great pain, I examined what might be the cauſe, and where he had been laſt night (for I underſtood he came not home till morning) and in what company. And when I was told of my Lord of Pembroke's company, who had ſtruck him down with a box of the Ear, both he and I quickly concluded how his ill came: But to be ſatisfied, (he telling me he could not remember what he did) we ſent for the Drawer, to know the truth of the matter: but in the mean time, to comfort him, I told him I hoped it was only a fainting Fit, which would be over again in a while. The Drawer came, and did aſſure me that my Lord did never ſtrike him; which upon aſſurance I did believe, eſpecially when he came again in the Afternoon, and told me the ſame ſtory. All the while he was in the horrideſt pain that could be, and could not be touched, but was forced to lie upon his Back. The Doctor told us, for application to eaſe his pain, the beſt thing to wrap him in was a whole Weather's Skin; which we did at two of the Clock in the Afternoon, by the help of a Chirurgeon, raiſe him up, and put on him. On Tueſday morning I ſent to know how he did, being neceſſitated to go another way; he ſent word back, he was pretty well at eaſe, and had reſted pretty well. On Wedneſday he roſe, and ſat up; on Thurſday he was ſo well, that he would have ſome Friends to Dine with him in his Chamber; on Friday he was a little ill again, but on Saturday he was ſo well, that he would have gone abroad, and truly we did never (I'm ſure I did not) believe he would have died, till about two hours before he died. One day when Dr. Conqueſt came out of his Chamber, he ſeemed to be in a Huff, and ſaid, he was only kept there to do the Drudgery; and when I asked him, what he thought of my Brother? he anſwered me ſhort, I cannot tell whether it be a Pembroke-kick or no. And when I, upon the report of my Lord's having abuſed him, (which yet upon the Drawer's anſwer I believed not) ſpoke to him about it, he would ſeem diſpleaſed any ſhould mention it: He once indeed told me, he had ſomething elſe to reveal to the Doctor, but what it was I cannot tell.

Att. Gen. Did you apprehend him to be ſo ill as he was?

Cony. No, I never believed it, till an hour before he died: and this is all that I can ſay, my Lord.

L. H. St. Will you, my Lord of Pembroke, ask Mr. Cony any queſtion?

E. of P. I deſire your Grace to ask him what Chirurgeons they were that did view the Body after dead.

L. H. St. Mr. Cony, come forward, my Lord of Pembroke deſires to know what Chirurgeons viewed the Body.

Cony. Mr. Snell the Chirurgeon, I think, my Lord.

E. of P. I deſire your Grace he may be examined.

L. H. St. If the King's Counſel have done, then your Lordſhip may examine whom you pleaſe: what would your Lordſhip examin into?

E. of P. To give your Grace an account what might be the cauſe of the Blood found in Mr. Cony's Body.

Att. Gen. Becauſe we did omit to examine Jackſon to that matter, we deſire for the King we may call him to that point now.

L. H. St. You ſhould have examined all your Witneſſes fully at firſt.

Att. Gen. We acknowledge it, my Lord; but ſince we did forget it, we humbly crave leave to do it now.

L. H. St. Here is Mr. Jackſon, what do you ask him?

Att. Gen. Mr. Jackſon, were you preſent at the opening of Mr. Cony's Body?

Jackſon. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. What did you ſee there?

Jackſon. There was an extraordinary quantity of extravaſated Blood in the lower part of his Belly.

L. H. St. Extravaſated Blood?

Jackſon. Yes, my Lord.

Att. Gen. How might that come? might it not proceed from a natural cauſe?

Jackſon. I believe it came from ſome Bruiſes given him, and from ſome Violences that were done to him.

Att. Gen. In the Belly was it?

Jackſon. Yes, in the Belly.

Att. Gen. You ſaw then: Did you ſee any Swelling there?

Jackſon. Yes, and the Diaphragma bruiſed, &c.

Att. Gen. Now, my Lord, We have done with our Evidence for the King.

L. H. St. My Lord of Pembroke, if your Lordſhip have any Witneſs to call, or will ſay any thing for your ſelf, now is the time.

E. of P. I deſire your Grace that Dr. Lower, and Dr. Conqueſt, and one Mr. Raven, may be examined for me.

L. H. St. Call Dr. Lower, Dr. Conqueſt, and Mr. Raven.

Cl. of Cr. Here they are, make room for them.

L. H. St. My Lord of Pembroke, who will your Lordſhip begin with?

E. of P. Dr. Conqueſt, my Lord.

L. H. St. Doctor, you are not upon your Oath, but you muſt have a ſtrict care what you ſay, for there will be a good account to be taken of it at another Place, and it being a Teſtimony before a Court of Judicature, the obligation upon you to ſpeak the truth is as great, as if you did ſwear.

Dr. Conqueſt. The Account I now give, my Lord, is that Account which I gave upon my Oath before the Coroner.

L. H. St. You muſt give it again viva voce; we muſt not read your Examination before the Court.

Conqueſt. The firſt occaſion I had to ſee Mr. Cony as a Phyſician, was about three Months before this unhappy Accident; he was then in a fainting Fit at the Roſe-Tavern, &c. where I was ſent for to him: He had for half an Hour lain quite dead, as they thought, but with their rubbing him, and giving him ſome mull'd Sack, he was come to himſelf juſt as I came, but he had no Pulſe, and was relapſing into his Fit: I gave him ſome Drops and Cordials, and ſent him home pretty well again. We went from thence, and the next Morning his Man came to call me, and told me his Maſter was dying, which was (as I take it) the 6th of December laſt: When I came thither, I found his Man ſitting by the Fire; and asking for his Maſter, he told me he was aſleep; I was ſomething vext at the Fellow for troubling of me ſo, and while I was ſpeaking to him, Mr. Cony at laſt heard my Voice, and calling me to him, deſired me I would come again in the Afternoon, for he had a mind to reſt this Morning: I came at One of the Clock again, where I found him very ill, and very melancholy; he wept, and ſent his Man down ſtairs, and when the Man was gone, I asked him what was the occaſion? He told me, he found ſo great an oppreſſion at his Heart, that he could hardly ſpeak: I deſired he would take ſome advice, and ſend for another Phyſician; but he would have none elſe, but would needs go abroad that Afternoon: I deſired him all I could; but not prevailing with him, I gave gave him ſome Cordial Drops, and deſired him to return home betimes; but he did not, but, as I heard, drank very hard, and returned not till very late. In ſhort, in the ſpace of two Months, I have been called out of my Bed above twenty times, to give him advice, and to recover him out of his Fits; but he would take no advice, do whatever I could. After this was his meeting with my Lord of Pembroke, which he thus gave me Relation of: He told me, he had been with Mr. Goring in the City that day drinking hard, and when he came to Long's, he was ſo extreamly drunk, that he cannot remember any thing that was done there, but finding himſelf much in pain the next day; he was ſo ignorant of the Tranſactions there, that he only thought he had had ſeveral Falls off the Chairs near the Fire; he ſaid indeed, he afterwards ſent to enquire what had paſſed in his Company that Night, and he heard my Lord of Pembroke ſhould give him a Box on the Ear, but he remembred it not. Two or three days after he ſent for me, and told me, now he would take advice of me, and enter into a courſe of Phyſick; but knowing his condition to be ſo bad, I would not venture upon it alone, and deſired that he would join ſome one elſe with me in conſultation: He asked me, what Phyſician he ſhould ſend for? I deſired him to name any one whom he had a mind to; he ſaid, he knew none, and therefore would have me take whom I would, and then named Dr. Lower, and obtained his conſent to have his advice, whom I brought with me to his Lodgings. And the Saturday before he died, as we were coming in the Coach, I told Dr. Lower what I had known of his Diſtemper before, and what might be the occaſion of it, which (when we came thither) I repeated again in Mr. Cony's preſence, who did confeſs the whole to be as I ſaid, that he had been a very hard Drinker of Wine, and ſtrong Waters upon it, which had (he believed) cauſed a Stagnation of Blood in his Body, which might be the occaſion of his fainting Fits. We conſulted the whole cauſe; he owned no Blow or Kick that he had received, neither did I believe his Intrails had received any ſuch prejudice, becauſe I ſaw him my ſelf take two or three Gliſters, as particularly that Evening: Yet he would not be regular, but that Night drank three whole Tankards of cold ſmall Beer, which did put him into a very violent Fit of the Gripes. He ſent for me, and having left him pretty well I wondered what alteration could cauſe ſo violent a Diſtemper in him ſo ſuddenly: He fell a vomiting, and vomitted all Night; and when I came and found him in a dying Fit, I gave him ſome Drops I had about me, and fetcht him to Life again; but ſtill he was very bad, and he had a Gliſter for the Gripes; he would fain have had ſome more ſmall Beer, which I diſſwaded him from, and adviſed him rather to White-Wine-Poſſet-drink but he ſwore a great Oath he would have ſmall Beer; Dr. Lower, I ſuppoſe, ſaw him that Morning. An hour before he died I came again, and thought fit to Blood, and ſo he was; he bled about eight Ounces, and was a little better, ſo I left him: An hour after I came again, and found he was dead; but for his complaining of any Bruiſe or Hurt that way received, I remember not.

L. H. St. Did you ſee him after he was dead, and when he was opened?

Conqueſt. Yes, my Lord, I did ſee him opened.

L. H. St. What was your Judgment then?

Conqueſt. My Lord, There was clotted Blood among the Bowels, that was extravaſated. My Lord, The breaking out of which, I did attribute to the great quantity of ſmall Beer he had drank, and the Gripings that followed upon it; but the Bowels were none of them touched, and he himſelf attributed his Fits to that.

L. H. St. Mr. Attorney, Will you ask him any croſs Queſtion?

Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Then Dr. Lower pray ſpeak your knowledge.

Lower. All the Account, my Lord, that I can give is, That the day before Mr. Cony died, Dr. Conqueſt did come to me to deſire me to go with him, and by the way (as he related) told me the manner of his Fits, and what he thought was the occaſion of them; and in that Diſcourſe we continued till we came to his Lodgings, where we found him in his Bed; and when he was up, Dr. Conqueſt repeated what he had told me before, and he acknowledged all that to be true: I my ſelf asked him many Queſtions how he found himſelf; he ſaid, thoſe Fits came upon him ſuddenly by ſickneſs upon his Stomach; but there was not any Diſcourſe in my hearing of any Bruiſe or Hurt that way, nor had I any reaſon to ſuſpect any ſuch thing ſhould be the cauſe of his Illneſs, for he had no ſymptome of a Fever upon him, either in Tongue, Pulſe, or Urine, which would have been, had he owed his Diſtemper to any thing of that kind. The next day I was ſent for to him early, but my neceſſary attendance on other Patients would not let me come quickly to him: When I came I found him dying, and ſeeing no hopes of his recovery, left him; I was deſired to be preſent at the Diſſection, but becauſe of the rumour of this Buſineſs, I ſaid it would be a troubleſom matter, and therefore would purpoſely avoid it.

L. H. St. So you did not ſee him diſſected?

Lower. No, my Lord, I did fear being troubled, and would have avoided it, but could not, it ſeems, for I am come here to teſtifie this.

L. H. St. Did he uſe any words to you whilſt he was ſick, complaining of any abuſe or wrong offered him by beating or kicking;

Lower. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. How long was it before he died that you ſaw him?

Lower. It was on Saturday at four of the Clock in the afternoon, and he died on Sunday at noon.

L. H. St. And when you came to ſee him again, you found him dying?

Lower. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. St. But you ſay, all the time you were with him, you ſaw no ſymptome of a Fever on him?

Lower. No, none at all, my Lord.

L. H. St. I then ask you this Queſtion, Doctor, Can any man be mortally hurt and bruiſed, whereof he may languiſh, and not have a Fever?

Lower. According to my knowledge and experience, my Lord, uſually and moſt commonly upon a mortal Bruiſe, an Inflamation follows, and that Inflamation cauſes a Fever, which will be evident in the Patient's Pulſe, or Tongue, or Water;

Water; but none of these I found so affected with Mr. Cony.

L. H. St. Have you any thing to say to this Gentleman, Mr. Attorney?

Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Where then are the rest of your Witnesses? My Lord of Pembroke, Will you call any more Evidence?

E. of P. Yes, my Lord, Mr. Raven.

L. H. St. Dr. Conqueſt, pray before you go; you say you told Dr. Lower of Mr Cony's Fits before, were they the same with those he had in his last sickness?

Conqueſt. Yes, my Lord, the same Fainting Fits.

L. H. St. And you imputed them to the same cause.

Conqueſt. Yes, my Lord, to his hard drinking Wine and Strong-waters, and then great quantities of Small Beer; I told his Landlady often it would kill him, but I could never get him to be regular, nor take any advice.

L. H St. Hath your Lordship any more Witnesses?

E. of P. Mr. Raven, my Lord.

L. H. St. Come forward, Mr. Raven, and speak out.

Raven. I viewed the Body (my Lord) before and when it was opened, and it was reported to me that there was a Bruise in each side of the Belly, of which thereupon I took a stricter view, and could find no blackness nor blewness, nor marks of Bruises; upon which the Body was opened, and their issued thence clotted Blood; then I looked upon the Cawl, which was withered and consumed, and the Heart was as loose as a Rag, and his Lungs stuck to each side of his Ribs; and as to the matter of the Blood, that was not an extraordinary thing, for it is known to Physicians, that in all natural Deaths there must be extravasated Blood in the lower Belly.

L. H. St. How did you think there came to be that quantity of Blood there?

Raven. This Blood I think (my Lord) must be extravasated by the violence of his Gripes, for it is proved he drank a great quantity of Claret, and afterwards of Small Beer, which set the Blood upon a Fermentation, that set him a Vomiting, by the violence thereby used to Nature this Blood was thrown down into the Belly; but in all Natural Deaths, if there be not so great a consumption of the Blood that there is none left, there must be some extravasated; it is a clear case.

L. H. St My Lord of Pembroke, hath your Lordship any more Witnesses?

E. of P. Yes, my Lord, two more, Benjamin Long and William Viner.

L. H. St. Who does your Lordship begin with?

E. of P. Long.

L. H. St. Do you hear, Long, you must have as great a care what you say, as if you were upon your Oath.

Long. A little before this business happen'd, Mr. Cony comes into my House at Covent-Garden, and said he was very ill; he was just going to sit down, and miss'd the Chair, and had like to have fallen down, being almost in a Swound; whereupon he said, send for Dr. Conqueſt presently, or else I shall die: so I sent my Servant to call him, who found him at the Coffee-house: When he came in, said he, Sir, how do you? I am glad you are come, said Mr. Cony, for I am very ill; and there were two Gentlemen came in with the Doctor, that were then going to the Play-house: said Mr. Cony, I am taken with the Fainting Fits, and fear they will kill me; upon that Dr. Conqueſt bid him have a care of drinking, for it would ruine him.

L H. St. When was this?

Long. A little before Christmass, my Lord.

L. H. St. How long before he died?

Long. It was before he was hurt.

L. H. St. How long?

Long. Five or six Weeks, my Lord, as I remember, I cannot tell exactly.

L. H. St. Well, and what followed?

Long. Dr. Conqueſt would have him go home to Bed, which I know not whether he did or no, but he went away from our House, and the Doctor said he would send him a Glister, and some other things the next morning: And this is all I can say.

L. H. St. Is that all you can say?

Long. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. St. Why was not this accident done at your House?

Long. No, my Lord, it was at my Brother's in the Hay-Market.

L H. St. Then call next Viner; what say you?

Viner. May it please your Grace, I am Drawer at Mr. Long's in the Hay-Market, I did see my Lord strike him with his Hand, and that is all; I came in just as he struck the blow, and Captain Savage bid me keep out Mr. Goring, which while I was doing, I knew not what was done more; but after they had laid him upon the Chairs, they charged me to make a Fire, and look after him, and left him: He fell down divers times off the Chairs; and when he came to himself a little, I asked him how he did? he told me he was very sick, and I got him still up again upon the Chairs: And then he had several Fainting Fits in the Room, and about seven of the Clock in the Morning, we sent him Home in a Chair to his Lodging. The same Day at one of the Clock he sent for me, to know what had happen'd, for his own memory would not serve him to tell: I did not think fit then to tell him my Lord had struck him, but told him he had had many falls in the Room: 'Tis Fits, said he, that I have had not long since, and it comes with my hard drinking, and not looking to my self.

L. H. St. He supposed it to be so.

Viner. Yes, my Lord, he himself did.

L. H. St. Did you see my Lord of Pembroke tread upon him?

Viner. No, my Lord, I only saw the blow of his Hand, for I was getting Mr Goring out of the Room.

L. H. St. Did he say my Lord of Pembroke did tread upon him?

Viner. No, he could not tell any thing that my Lord had done to him; he was drunk that Night, and therefore sent for me to know how it was.

L. H. St. My Lord of Pembroke, hath your Lordship any more Witnesses?

E. of P. No, my Lord.

L. H. St. Did not your Lordship speak of one Snell, my Lord, a Chirurgeon, at first.

E. of P. I did expect, my Lord, they should have brought the Person your Grace speaks of.

L. H. St. Why, my Lord.

E. of P.

E. of P. Becauſe he was their Chirurgeon.

L. H. St. What ſay you now of the King's Counſel, to my Lord's Defence?

Sol. Gen. If my Lord hath done, we are ready to go on for the King.

L. H. St. Will your Lordſhip ſay any thing more for your ſelf?

E. of P. I have nothing more to ſay, my Lord.

Then Sir Francis Winnington, his Majeſty's Solicitor General, ſumm'd up the Evidence, and concluded the Charge thus.

Sir Francis Winnington, Sol. Gen May it pleaſe your Grace my Lord High-Steward of England, and my Noble Lords, that are now Judges of this Cauſe of Blood; I ſhall with all faithfulneſs endeavour to diſcharge my duty in this Great Court, and confine my ſelf ſolely to the Evidence that hath been given, and I hope I ſhall not do this Noble Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, any injury, by miſrepetition. This Evidence, my Lords, that hath been produced for the King, to make it out, that the Priſoner at the Bar is guilty of Murder, doth (may it pleaſe your Grace) conſiſt of three parts.

1. In the firſt are contained thoſe Matters of Fact, which did ariſe at the time when the poor unfortunate Gentleman came into my Lord Pembroke's Company, and what happen'd before my Lord of Pembroke did depart from that place.

2. The ſecond part of the Evidence conſiſts of Matters that did ariſe by confeſſion of the Party, and his diſcourſing with Perſons who came to viſit him, or were with him during the time of his ſickneſs.

3. The third part doth conſiſt of Matters ariſing after his Death, upon the view of the Body. Under theſe three Heads are comprehended all the King's Evidence, and with humble ſubmiſſion I humbly conceive, that the Evidence doth reach the Indictment, which is for the Crime of wilful Murder. But when I have humbly ſtated the Fact, I muſt ſubmit it to the Judgment of my Noble Lords and Peers.

But to take a due method, I ſhall begin with a word or two of what Mr. Attorney General was pleaſed to hint, when he opened the Cauſe, that is, to ſhew what Murder is, and wherein we conceive the Evidence comes up to the Indictment. Murder in our Law is, when one Man kills another upon Malice fore-thought; now that Malice is comprehended under two particulars: The one is expreſt a former grudge, diſcontent, and hatred to a Man, to lye in wait to ſlay him: The other is Malice imply'd, and that is when a Perſon will come and fall upon another, and kill him with violence, without any provocation; and that I take to be the Caſe now before your Grace, and theſe Noble Lords; whether this Noble Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, be guilty of Murder, under the head of Malice imply'd, having killed a Man, without any provocation given; for if it ſhould be made appear, as I humbly conceive it hath, with ſubmiſſion, that Mr. Cony did receive his Wound, whereby his Death came, from the Earl of Pembroke, it is with our Law Murder.

That my Lord of Pembroke did invite him into his Company, is ſworn by four Witneſſes; for when they came into the Houſe, they did not ſo much as enquire whether my Lord was there or no; and when my Lord asked him to come into the Room, Mr. Cony did excuſe it, in a manner, by having his Friend with him; pray bring your Friend in with you, ſaid my Lord: After a little while it was ſaid, there were ſeveral Diſcourſes paſs'd between my Lord and Mr. Goring concerning Play, and their Families; but the third Witneſs doth ſwear, that when they were ſpeaking of playing for 500 l. Mr. Goring declined; my Lord of Pembroke firſt called him idle Fellow, and that occaſioned Mr. Goring to give that Language, which was not ſo fit for him to give to a Noble Lord of his Quality. But, may it pleaſe your Grace, let the Diſcourſe between Mr. Goring and my Lord of Pembroke be what it will, the Queſtion will be, Whether or no the Party that was killed, gave my Lord of Pembroke any provocation, or cauſe of diſcontent, which might make him give him that Blow? or whether or no the ſtriking or kicking was the cauſe of his Death? That comes in the laſt place, for I am now under that head; there was no provocation given by Mr. Cony to my Lord to ſtrike him, and four Witneſſes there were to that, the Perſons by at the time when it was given, who all as to the ſubſtance ſwear the ſame thing, only one or two Circumſtances come frome ſome of them, that do not come from all. Mr. Savage, a Man of Quality, and an Honourable Family, ſwears, That at the time when Mr. Goring was put out of the Room, he ſaw the Earl of Pembroke (turning his Face) give Cony a Blow on the Head, and one Kick when he was down; the Queſtion was asked him, Whether he kickt him upon the Belly; but that he could not anſwer to: He likewiſe doth particularly ſay, after the Blow was given by the Earl of Pembroke, that ſtruck him down to the Ground, he ſaw his Knee lifted up to kick him, higher than the motion of uſual walking, ſo that ſome violence was uſed as to that. Mr. Fitz-Patrick, though they all agree in ſubſtance, yet he hath one particular differing from the reſt; he ſaith, That when my Lord of Pembroke was asked why he ſtruck Mr. Cony, he anſwered, Becauſe he ſaid Mr. Goring ſhould not go out of the Room, without his knowing ſome reaſon for it; this he ſwears the Earl did ſay, but whether it was ſo or no is the Queſtion. Shelley ſays, No ſuch word paſs'd, nor doth Savage ſpeak of it: But be that Circumſtance true or not, (for all the Witneſſes agree in Subſtance, and may not be able to agree in all Circumſtances) yet under ſubmiſſion, I muſt leave it to the Judgment of my Lords the Peers, whether that be Provocation ſufficient to lay violent hands on a Man. Shelley indeed ſays the words were, I know not why my Friend is turn'd out of doors; now whether theſe are a Provocation, ſuch as in Judgment of Law can be deemed ſufficient to lay violent Hands on a Man to kill him, is the Queſtion; we ſuppoſe it is not, but ſuch a ſtroke is given without a Provocation, in which the Law implies malice. This (may it pleaſe your Grace) is the ſum of that which I humbly take the boldneſs to remember your Lordſhip of, as to the firſt part of the Evidence.

2dly. The ſecond part is upon what ariſeth after the Blow was given. My Lord of Pembroke at that time was certainly apprehenſive he had done the Gentleman ſome wrong, and that is evident by his care of him after, for his own Witneſs Wi- ner doth ſay, that my Lord bid him make a fire and watch with him; ſurely if my Lord had not been conſcious to himſelf, that he had done ſome thing extraordinary to the Perſon of that Gentleman, that caution had not been given to the man: But beſides (my Lord) there are little Circumſtances, which are always allowed for Evidence in ſuch Caſes, where men receive any Wounds to ask them Queſtions while they are ill about it, who hurt them. Now as to this there are four Witneſſes alſo, Dr. Bruce, Mr. Hemes, Mr. Jackſon, and Alice Avery.

Dr. Bruce ſwears, That when he came on the Monday to enquire of Mr. Cony what his Ilneſs was, he did complain of ſoreneſs about his Shoulders, but did not make mention of the lower part of his Belly, or any diſcolouring there.

But Hemes the Apothecary ſays, He not only complained of extream pains in hisShoulders but alſo of extream inward ſoreneſs in the lower part of his Belly, and this perſon was frequently with him, and the ſame complaints came from him, till he expired his laſt breath.

Jackſon, he did know him for a long time before; he ſaid indeed, He had about two or three months before a fainting Fit or two, but to this time he lookt upon him as a healthy man, and he continued with him off and on till he died, and to him he did declare he had received injury from the Earl of Pembroke, though he was very loth to ſay what: And he alſo tells your Lordſhips, that he ſaw the Blood in his Belly after the Diſſection, which he imputed to ſome Hurt he had received. Indeed there is a Chirurgeon that tells your Lordſhips, that it is an ordinary thing, and that it is ſo in all natural Deaths, and it might be occaſioned by his drinking the Beer, which made him vomit, and concluded with theſe words, (I noted them.) 'Tis a clear Caſe; but the man not being upon his Oath, and giving it in as his ſingle opinion, I hope will not bear ſo much weight with your Lordſhips.

The Nurſe that was continually with him to the laſt moment, ſwears, He did continually complain after he came into the Houſe, of pains all over his Body, and (as ſhe ſaith) continued in his ſenſes, and the right uſe of his underſtanding, till the laſt breath, but principally complained of ſoreneſs in his Shoulder, his Side, and his Belly, and did likewiſe often mention my Lord of Pembroke's unkindneſs to him, declaring about two hours before he died, that he thought in his conſcience the Earl of Pembroke was the cauſe of his death.

Theſe four Witneſſes ſwear what I have truly repeated, for I would be very unwilling in a Cauſe of Blood, to miſrepeat the Evidence, either to the prejudice of a juſt Cauſe for the dead, or to preſs for unjuſt vengeance upon the living, it being my duty only to recollect what is ſworn, and leave it all to your Lordſhips Judgment.

3dly. We have that which is Evidence in Law, upon the view of the Body after his death. It was viewed legally by a Jury of indifferent perſons, ſummoned by the Coroner; three of them being produced do ſwear, that there were a great many viſible Bruiſes upon the Body, and ſwellings all about: And for the diſcolouring of the parts bruiſed, Roberts ſwears, the patch was about the breadth of his hand: Brown likewiſe ſwears, that he was black and blue up and down the body in broad patches: Theſe are Jury-men, diſintereſted perſons. It is true, Mr. Cony's Brother, the laſt Witneſs for the King ſaith, He knew nothing of the Buſineſs, for his Brother would never acknowledge any thing to him but ſomething that he ſpeaks is very material, That Dr. Conqueſt, my Lord's Witneſs, coming out of the Chamber one day, ſeemed angry, and to have taken ſome diſtaſte, as if he were neglected, and uſed an expreſſion, which your Lordſhip may remember, upon Mr. Cony's asking him what ailed his Brother, he could not tell he ſaid, it might be A Pembroke-Kick. And this is the ſum of the Evidence for the King.

For the Evidence on the other ſide, I think the ſubſtance of it is only, That this Gentleman was uſed to have fainting Fits, and thoſe occaſioned, as they think, by his hard Drinking, and that might bring his death upon him; but they offer no Counterproof to the Fact.

But the Queſtion is now, Whether or no this man came to his death by other means; for it is no Argument to ſay, becauſe a man is ſick, it is lawful to kill him: but we are to enquire, whether he came to his death by thoſe Blows given him by the Priſoner at the Bar? If then it be admitted that the Blow was the cauſe of his death, and the Kicks withall, I humbly then ſubmit to yourLordſhips conſideration, whether the King's Evidence hath not reacht up to the Indictment: Here is Murther with Malice implied by the Law, for there is no colour of pleading a Provocation of the Blow, to be the cauſe of his death. Now whether or no it be ſo, I humbly offer theſe Reaſons for the Affirmation; this man was not look'd upon to be a man in that condition as to be a dying man, before the Blow.

Obj. But he was a great drinker, that brought him to thoſe Fits, and that haſtned his end.

Anſw. Though he was ſo, yet from the inſtant that he did receive the blow, he never had any eaſe till he died, inſomuch that Mr. Savage tells your Lordſhips, he took him up immediately after my Lord kicked him, and he was ſome minutes before he could get him to life again, and then he could not keep himſelf from Fainting again: ſo that upon the circumſtances of what the Witneſſes for the Priſoner have ſaid, and the Evidence offered in behalf of the King, if this were the cauſe of his death, we leave it to your Lordſhips conſideration, whether it be not Murther in this Noble Lord the Priſoner at the Bar: To that determination we ſubmit the Cauſe, and whatever opinion your Lordſhips ſhall be of in the Cauſe, I have no more to ſay, but that the King's Juſtice in this Proſecution, was ſuitable to the Law given by the Almighty in the Infancy of the World, That whoſoever ſheddeth man's Blood, by man ſhall his Blood be ſhed.

L. H. St. Will your Lordſhips pleaſe to withdraw to conſider of the Evidence?

Then the Lords went back in the ſame order they came in, and went into the Houſe of Lords; and from thence, after two hours debate, they returned into the Court, and Proclamation was made as followeth.

Cl. of Cr. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. O yes, my Lord High Steward of England his Grace ſtraitly chargeth and commandeth all manner of Perſons here preſent, to keep ſilence upon pain of Impriſonment.

Then

Then his Grace ſpake to the Peers.

L. H. St. Your Lordſhips have heard the Evidence againſt the Priſoner, and for him, on both ſides, and the Solemnity in this caſe is, that your Opinions are to be delivered ſeverally, in the abſence of the Priſoner, who is to hear all that is by the Witneſs or Counſel ſaid againſt him, but is to have his Judgment from the High Steward.

Upon the whole matter the Queſtion is this; Whether my Lord of Pembroke be guilty of the Felony whereof he ſtands Indicted, for the Murther of Mr. Cony, or not guilty?

The order of your Opinions being delivered, is to begin with the Puiſne Baron, and ſo upwards.

I deſire time to take your Lordſhips Judgments diſtinctly, and I deſire each of your Lordſhips to ſpeak out, that I may hear it.

L. H. St. My Lord Butler, what is your Opinion? Is Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery guilty of the Felony and Murther whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not guilty?

L. Butler. Not guilty of Murther, but guilty of Manſlaughter.

The ſame Queſtion to the reſt.
The Lord High Steward counted their Numbers.

L. H. St. Six of my Lords find him guilty: eighteen find him not guilty: forty find him guilty of Man-ſlaughter. Call for the Priſoner to the Bar.

Cl. of Cr. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. O yes, Conſtable of the Tower of London, bring forth the Body of thy Priſoner Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, on pain and peril ſhall fall thereon.

Then the Priſoner came in, with the edge of the Ax ſtill from him, and his Grace ſpake to him as followeth.

L. H. St. My Lord of Pembroke, You have been Indicted for the Murther of Nathaniel Cony, and upon your Arraignment you have pleaded Not guilty, and have put your ſelf upon the Judgment of your Peers; and your Peers have conſidered what have been ſaid for you, and againſt you, and the Judgment of my Lords is this, That you are guilty of Man-ſlaughter for killing of Nathaniel Cony: What can you ſay for your ſelf, why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon you to die according to the Law?

E. of P. I claim the Privilege of the Statute made in that caſe, my Lord.

L. H. St. You muſt have it, my Lord, it cannot be denied you; for by the Act of Parliament, where Clergy is allowed to a Common perſon, by Reading, and Burning in the Hand, a Peer convicted of ſuch Felony, is to be delivered without either, therefore we cannot deny it you: But your Lordſhip muſt give me leave to tell you, that no man can have the benefit of that Statute but once, and ſo I would have your Lordſhip take notice of it, as a Caution to you for the future.

Your Lordſhip is now to be diſcharged, paying your Fees.

Then the Priſoner went from the Bar, and his Grace by Proclamation thus diſſolved his Commiſſion.

Cl. of Cr. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. O yes, O yes, O yes, my Lord High Steward of England willeth and commandeth all Perſons here aſſembled, to depart in God's peace and the King's from this place, for his Grace doth now diſſolve his Commiſſion.

God ſave the King.

Then his Grace concluded the Ceremony, by breaking his Staff.

The TRIAL of EDWARD COLEMAN, Gent.

ON Wedneſday the Twenty Seventh day of November 1678. Mr. Coleman (having been Arraigned the Saturday before for High Treaſon) was brought to the King's Bench Bar, to receive his Trial, and the Court proceeded thereupon, as followeth, Court. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Proclamation for Silence.

Cryer. O yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King do's ſtrictly Charge and Command all manner of Perſons to keep Silence, upon pain of Impriſonment.

If any one can inform our Sovereign Lord the King, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney General, or this Inqueſt now to be taken, of any Treaſon, Murder, Felony, or any other Miſdemeanour committed or done by the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard, for the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

Court. Cryer, make an O yes.

Cryer. O yes! You Good Men that are impannelled to enquire between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Edward Coleman Priſoner at the Bar, anſwer to your Names.

Court. Edward Coleman, Hold up thy Hand.

Theſe Good men that are now called, and here appear, are thoſe which are to paſs between you and our Sovereign Lord the King, upon your Life or Death, if you challenge any of them, you muſt ſpeak as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they are ſworn.

The Prisoner Challenging none, the Court proceeded, and the Jury were sworn, viz.

JURY.

Sir Reginald Foster, Bar^{t}	Simon Middleton, Esq;
Sir Charles Lee.	Henry Johnson, Esq;
Edward Wilford, Esq;	Charles Umfreville, Esq;
John Bathurst, Esq;	Thomas Johnson, Esq;
Joshua Galliard, Esq;	Thomas Eaglesfield, Esq;
John Bisield, Esq;	William Bobee, Esq;

Court. Cryer, make an O yes.

Cryer. O yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King does strictly charge and command all manner of Persons to keep Silence upon pain of Imprisonment.

Court. Edward Coleman, Hold up thy Hand.

You Gentlemen of the Jury that are now sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Charge.

You shall understand, that the Prisoner stands Indicted by the Name of Edward Coleman late of the Parish of St. Margarets Westminster in the County of Middlesex, Gent. for that he as a false Traitor against our most Illustrious, Serene, and most Excellent Prince Charles, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. and his Natural Lord; having not the Fear of God in his Heart, nor duely weighing his Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, his cordial Love and true Duty, and natural Obedience, (which true and lawful Subjects of our said Lord the King ought to bear towards him, and by Law ought to have) altogether withdrawing, and devising, and with all his strength intending, the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to Disturb, and the true Worship of God within the Kingdom of England practised, and by Law Established, to overthrow, and Sedition and Rebellion within this Realm of England to move, stir up, and procure, and the cordial Love and true Duty and Allegiance, which true and lawful Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King toward their Sovereign bear, and by Law ought to have, altogether to Withdraw, Forsake, and Extinguish; and our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, the Twenty Ninth Day of September in the Seven and Twentieth Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. at the Parish of St. Margarets Westminster aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, Falsly, Maliciously, and Traiterously Proposed, Compassed, Imagined and Intended, to stir up, and raise Sedition and Rebellion within the Kingdom of England, and to procure and cause a miserable Destruction among the Subjects of our said Lord the King, and wholly to Deprive, Depose, Deject, and Disinherit our said Sovereign Lord the King, of his Royal State, Title, Power, and Rule of his Kingdom of England, and to bring and put our said Sovereign Lord the King to final Death and Destruction, and to overthrow and change the Government of the Kingdom of England, and to alter the sincere and true Religion of God, in this Kingdom by Law established; and wholly to subvert and destroy the state of the whole Kingdom, being in the universal parts thereof well Established and Ordained, and to levy War against our said Sovereign Lord the King, within his Realm of England: And to accomplish and fulfil these his most wicked Treasons, and Traiterous Designs and Imaginations aforesaid, the said Edward Coleman afterward, that is to say, the Nine and twentieth Day of September in the Twenty seventh Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, at the Parish of St. Margarets Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, Falsly, Deceitfully, and Traiterously Composed, Contrived, and Writ two Letters, to be sent to one Monsieur le Chese, then Servant and Confessor of Lewis the French King, to Desire, Procure, and Obtain, for the said Edward Coleman and other False Traitors against our said Sovereign Lord the King, the Aid, Assistance, and Adherence of the said French King, to alter the true Religion in this Kingdom Established, to the Superstition of the Church of Rome, and to subvert the Government of this Kingdom of England: And afterwards, (that is to say) the said Nine and twentieth Day of September in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish of St. Margarets Westminster in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, the said Edward Coleman Falsly, Traiterously, and Maliciously Composed and Writ two other Letters, to be sent to the said Monsieur le Chese, then Servant and Confessor to the said French King, to the Intent that he the said Monsieur le Chese should Intreat, Procure, and Obtain for the said Edward Coleman and other False Traitors against our Sovereign Lord the King, Aid, Assistance, and Adherence of the said French King, to alter the true Religion in this Kingdom of England Established, to the Superstition of the Church of Rome, and to subvert the Government of this Kingdom of England: And that the said Edward Coleman, in further Prosecution of his Treason and Traiterous Imaginations and Intentions, as aforesaid, afterwards, viz. the Twenty ninth Day of September in the Seven and twentieth Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord King Charles, of England, &c. the said several Letters, from the said Parish of St. Margarets Westminster, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, Falsly, Maliciously and Traiterously, did send to the said Monsieur le Chese, into Parts beyond the Seas, there to be delivered to him: And that the said Edward Coleman, afterward, viz. the First Day of December, in the Seven and twentieth Year of our said Sovereign Lord the King, at the said Parish of St. Margarets Westminster, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, did receive from the said Monsieur le Chese, one Letter, in Answer to one of the said Letters first mentioned, and written by him the said Edward Coleman, to the said Monsieur le Chese, which said Letter in Answer, as aforesaid, Falsly, Maliciously, and Traiterously received, the Day and Year aforesaid, at the Parish of St. Margarets Westminster aforesaid, the said Edward Coleman did falsly, traiterously and maliciously read over and peruse; And that the said Edward Coleman, the Letter so as aforesaid, by him in Answer to the said Letter, received into his Custody and Possession, the Day and Year last mentioned, at the Parish of St. Margarets Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, did Falsly, Maliciously, and Traiterously Detain, Conceal, and Keep. By which Letter the said Monsieur le Chese, the Day and Year last mentioned, tioned, at the Parish of St. Margarets Westminster in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, did signifie and promise to the said Edward Coleman, to obtain for the said Edward Coleman, and other false Traitors against our Sovereign Lord the King, Aid, Assistance and Adherence from the said French King, and that the said Edward Coleman afterward, Viz. the tenth day of December in the seven and twentieth year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King, at the Parish of St. Margarets Westminster, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, his wicked Treasons and Traiterous Designs and Proposals as aforesaid did tell and declare to one Mounsieur Revigni, Envoy extraordinary from the French King to our most Serene and Sovereign Lord King Charles, &c. in the County aforesaid residing, and did falsly, maliciously and traiterously move and excite the said Envoy extraordinary to partake in his Treason; and the sooner to fulfill and compleat his Traiterous Designs, and wicked Imaginations and Intentions, the said Edward Coleman afterward, Viz. the tenth day of December in the seven and twentieth year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King Charles the Second of England, &c. aforesaid, at the Parish of St. Margarets Westminster, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, did advisedly, maliciously, deceitfully, and traiterously compose and write three other Letters to be sent to one Sir William Throckmorton Kt. then a Subject of our said Sovereign Lord the King of this Kingdom of England, and residing in France, in parts beyond the Seas, Viz. at the Parish of St. Margarets Westminster, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, to solicite the said Monsieur Le Chese to procure and obtain of the said French King, Aid, Assistance, and Adherance, as aforesaid, and the said Letters last mentioned afterward, Viz. the day and year last named as aforesaid from the said Parish of St. Margarets Westminster, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, did falsly and traiterously send, and cause to be delivered to the said Sir William Throckmorton in France aforesaid, against his true Allegiance, and against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided.

Court. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and hath pleaded thereunto not guilty; and for his Tryal he puts himself upon God and his Country; Which Country you are.

Your Charge is to enquire, whether he be guilty of the High Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty. If you find him guilty, you are to enquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements he had at the time when the High Treason was committed, or at any time since; If you find him not guilty, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Cryer. If any one will give Evidence on the behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, against Edward Coleman the Prisoner at the Bar, let him come forth, and he shall be heard; for the Prisoner now stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

Mr. Recorder. May it please you my Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; Mr. Edward Coleman, now the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted for High Treason, and the Indictment sets forth, that the said Edward Coleman, indeavouring to subvert the Protestant Religion, and to change and alter the same; And likewise to stir up Rebellion and Sedition amongst the King's Liege People, and also to kill the King; did on the 29th of September in the twenty seventh year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord the King, at the Parish of St. Margarets Westminster in this County, compose and write two several Letters to one Mounsieur Le Chese, that was then Servant and Confessor to the French King, and this was to procure the French King's aid and assistance to him and other Traitors, to alter the Religion practised, and by Law established here in England, to the Romish Superstition. The Indictment sets forth likewise, that on the same day, he did write and compose two other Letters to the same Gentleman, that was Servant and Confessor to the said King, to prevail with him to procure the French King's assistance to alter the Religion in this Kingdom established to the Romish Religion. The Indictment sets further forth, that he caused these two Letters to be sent beyond the Seas. And it also sets forth that on the tenth of December, the same Month he did receive a Letter from the Gentleman, that was the Confessor, in answer to one of the former Letters, and in that Letter aid and assistance from the French King was promised; and that he did traiterously conceal that Letter. My Lord, the Indictment sets out further, that on the tenth day of the same Month, he did reveal his Treasons and Traiterous Conspiracies to one Mounsieur Revigni, who was Envoy from the French King to his Majesty of Great Britain. And his Indictment declares, he afterwards did write three Letters more to Sir William Throckmorton, then residing in France, to procure the French King's assistance to the alteration of the Religion practised here in England. Of these several Offences he stands here indicted.

To this he hath pleaded not guilty. If we prove these, or either of them in the Indictment, you ought to find him guilty.

Serj. Maynard. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; This is a Cause of great Concernment. Gentlemen, the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted for no less than for an intention and endeavour to Murther the King; For an endeavour and attempt to change the Government of the Nation, so well settled and instituted, and to bring us all to ruin and slaughter of one another, and for an endeavour to alter the Protestant Religion, and to introduce instead of it, the Romish Superstition, and Popery.

This is the Charge (in general) of the Indictment. We will proceed unto particulars, whereby it may appear, and whereupon he indeavoureth to accomplish his ends. One or two Letters written to Mounsieur Le Chese (he is a Foreigner, and we have nothing to say to him, being Confessor to the French King) it was to excite and stir him up to procure aid and assistance (and you know what aid and assistance means) from a Foreign Prince, Arms, and other Levies. We charge him with it, that he did receive this Letter, I, and received an answer with a promise, that he should have assistance. He writ other Letters to Sir William Throckmorton, who traiterously conspired with him, and had intelligence from time to time from him. This is the Charge in the Indictment; To which he hath pleaded, not guilty. We will go on in our Evidence: I ſhall, but more generally, open our method, that we intend to take. For it may ſeem ſtrange, and is not reaſonably to be imagined, that a private Gentleman, as the Priſoner at the Bar is, ſhould have ſuch vaſt and great deſigns as this, to alter Religion, deſtroy the Government, I, and deſtroy the Subjects too in a great meaſure. But 'tis not himſelf alone, but he imploys himſelf for Foreign Aſſiſtance, great Confederacies and Combinations with the Subjects of that King, many of whom he did pervert.

In the courſe of the Evidence I ſhall not open the particulars, (Mr. Attorny, I think, will do that by and by) thoſe that we have occaſion to ſpeak of, and ſhall in proof mention to you, will be theſe.

Le Cheſe, the French King's preſent Confeſſor we have mentioned: before him there was one Father Ferryer, with whom he held Correſpondence. That Ferryer being removed by death, the Priſoner had an imployment here amongſt us, by which he gave to Le Cheſe inſtructions how to proceed. This Gentleman is the great Contriver and Plotter, which gives him inſtructions how to proceed. He doth give him an account by way of Narrative, how all things had ſtood upon former Treaties and Negotiations, how buſineſſes were contrived, and how far they were gone; this he diligently and accurately gives an account of. This (my Lord) doth diſcover and delineate what had been done before until 1674. My Lord, there was likewiſe Sir William Throckmorton and ſome others, that are Engliſhmen too, there are none of them, but what were firſt Proteſtants, but when they once renounced their Religion, no wonder they ſhould renounce their Nation, and their Prince too. He was gone beyond the Seas, ſeveral Letters paſt between them, and all to promote and encourage, and accompliſh this Deſign. My Lord, there is likewiſe a conſult of Jeſuits uſed too, where, in expreſs words they deſigned to murther the King, or contrived, and adviſed upon it.

My Lord, there were four Iriſh Men (I open but the Heads of things) ſent to Windſor to murther the King: This Gentleman received and diſburſed Money about this buſineſs, and one Aſhby a Jeſuit here had Inſtructions from him to proſecute the Deſign, and to treat with a Phyſician to poyſon the King. This the Priſoner approved of, and contributed to it. There were Commiſſions (as I take it) delivered from Ferryer; or by his Hand, that came from Foreign Powers. Sir Henry Titchburn was another that received and delivered Commiſſions. Pompone the French Gentleman, he maintains Intelligence with him about this buſineſs, the Titular Arch-Biſhop of Dublin.

There's Cardinal Norfolk, by him he had acceſſion to the Pope.

There was likewiſe the Pope's Nuncio (I do not open the Tranſactions of theſe Inſtructions) theſe particulars will be made out, not only by Witneſs Viva Voce, and not ſingle only, but but Letters of this Mr. Coleman's own writing. But I offer that to the conſideration of the Jury.

Mr. Oats was the firſt Man, that we hear of, that diſcovered this Treaſon; he was the ſingle Man that diſcovered ſo many active Agents in ſo great a Treaſon, as this was, and it needed to be well ſeconded; but, he being found to be but ſingle, the Boldneſs and Courage of theſe Complotters in it grew great thereupon. We know what followed; the Damnable Murther of that Gentleman, in Execution of his Office, ſo Helliſhly contrived, and the endeavours that were uſed to hide it, every body knows: How many Stories were told to hide that abominable Murther, how many lies there were about it, but it could not be ſuppreſt. The Nation is awaken'd out of ſleep, and it concerns us now to look about us. But all this while, Mr. Coleman thought himſelf ſafe, walked in the Fields, goes abroad, Jealouſie increaſing, and he himſelf ſtill ſecure.

The Letters that are produced go but to ſome part of the Year 75: from 75 unto 78 all lies in the dark, we have no certain Proof of it; but we apprehend he had Intelligence until 78; That there were the ſame Perſons continuing here, and his Company increaſing here: But this I ſpeak but as probable, (but very exceeding probable) that there was other paſſages of Intelligence between this Perſon and other Confederates.

It ſeems (my Lord) that this Coleman was aware that he was concerned: but God blinded and infatuated him, and took away his Reaſon. It's no queſtion but he carried away ſome of thoſe Papers; thoſe that were left behind, and are produced, he forgot and neglected; and by that (my Lord) thoſe which are produced, are Evidence againſt him at this time. Surely he thought we were in ſuch a condition, that had Eyes and could not ſee, and Ears that could not hear, and underſtandings without underſtanding: for he was bold, and walked Abroad, and that until this Proſecution was made upon him, he endeavoured to murther the King, change the Government, make an alteration of Religion, and deſtruction of Proteſtants, as well as the Proteſtant Religion; and it will be proved by ſome Letters, when they were rejected by the Duke, that he ſent them in the Duke's Name. And by this no Man will doubt but he is a great Traitor.

Attorn. Gen. Sir William Jones. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, The King's Serjeant hath opened the general parts of our Evidence; and we have reaſon to foreſee that our Evidence will be very long, and will take up much of your time; and therefore I ſhall ſpend no more time in opening of it than is juſt neceſſary. And indeed (my Lord) Mr. Coleman himſelf hath ſaved me much of the labour, which otherwiſe I ſhould have beſtowed; for he hath left ſuch Elegant and copious Narratives of the whole Deſign under his own Hand, that the reading of them will be better than any new one I can make.

But (my Lord) ſome ſhort Account I ſhall give you, ſuch as may ſhew you the courſe of our Evidence, and will make our Evidence, when it comes to be given, to be more intelligible.

My Lord, It will appear, that there hath been for many Years laſt paſt, a more than ordinary Deſign and Induſtry to bring in the Popiſh, and extirpate the Proteſtant Religion.

I doubt not but this Deſign, in ſome meaſure, hath been contriving ever ſince the Reformation, on, by the Jeſuits, or ſome of their Emiſſaries, but hath often received interruption; ſo that they have proceeded ſometimes more coldly, ſometimes more hotly: And I do think, at no time ſince the Reformation, that ever this Deſign was carried on with greater induſtry, nor with fairer hopes of Succeſs, than for theſe laſt Years.

My Lord, You will hear from our Witneſſes, that the firſt Onſet, which was to be made upon us, was by whole Troops of Jeſuits and Prieſts, who were ſent hither from the Seminaries Abroad, where they had been trained up in all the Subtilty and Skill that was fit to work upon the People.

My Lord, you will hear how active they have been, and what Inſinuations they uſed for the perverting of particular Perſons. After ſome time ſpent in ſuch Attempts, they quickly grew weary of that courſe; though they got ſome Proſelytes, they were but few. Some Bodies, in whom there was a prediſpoſition of humors, were infected, but their Numbers were not great. They at laſt reſolve to take a more expeditious way; for in truth, (my Lord) they could not far prevail by the former. And I wiſh with all my heart, that the Bodies of Proteſtants may be as much out of danger of the Violence of their Hands, as their Underſtandings will be of the force of their Arguments. But (my Lord) when this way would not take, they began then to conſider they muſt throw at all at once. No doubt but they would have been glad, that the People of England had had but one Neck; but they knew the People of England had but one Head, and therefore they were reſolved to ſtrike at that.

My Lord, you will find, that there was a Summons of the principal Jeſuits, of the moſt able Head-pieces, who were to meet in April or May laſt, to conſult of very great things, of a moſt Diabolical Nature, no leſs than how to take away the Life of the King our Sovereign.

My Lord, you will find (as is uſually practiſed in ſuch horrid Conſpiracies) to make all ſecure, that there was an Oath of Secrecy taken, and that upon the Sacrament. You will find Agreements made, that this moſt Wicked and Horrible Deſign ſhould be attempted. You will find two Villains were found among them, who undertook to do this execrable work; and you will hear of the rewards they were to have: Money in caſe they did ſucceed, and Maſſes good ſtore in caſe they periſhed; ſo that their Bodies were provided for in caſe they ſurvived, and their Souls if they died. My Lord, What was the reaſon they did not effect their Deſign, but either that theſe Villains wanted opportunity, or their Hearts failed them, when they came to put in execution this Wicked Deſign? or, perhaps (which is moſt probable) it was the Providence of God, which over-rul'd them, that this Bloody Deſign did not take its effect.

But theſe Gentlemen were not content with one Eſſay, they quickly thought of another; and there were four Iriſh-Men prepared (Men of very mean Fortunes, and deſperate Conditions) and they were to make the attempt no longer ſince, than when the King was laſt at Windſor.

My Lord, I perceive by the Proofs, that theſe laſt Aſſaſſinates went down thither; but it came to paſs (for ſome of the Reaſons aforeſaid) that that attempt failed likewiſe.

My Lord, Theſe Gentlemen, thoſe wiſe Heads, who had met here in Conſultation, did then, and long before, conſider with themſelves, that ſo great a Cauſe as this, was not to be put upon the hazard of ſome few Hands; they therefore propoſed Forces, Aids, and Aſſiſtances, both at Home and Abroad, to ſecond this Wicked Deſign; if it had ſucceeded as to the Perſon of the King, and if that fail'd, then by their Foreign and Domeſtick Aids and Aſſiſtances, to begin and accompliſh the whole Work of ſubverting our Government and Religion. And here we muſt needs confeſs, as to the former part of this Plot, which we have mentioned, I mean the attempt upon the King's Perſon, Mr. Coleman was not the Contriver, nor to be the Executioner; But yet your Lordſhip knows, in all Treaſons there is no Acceſſory, but every Man is a Principal. And thus much we have againſt him, even as to this part of the Deſign, which will involve him in the whole guilt of it, that Mr. Coleman conſented to it, though his Hand were not to do it. Mr. Coleman encouraged a Meſſenger to carry Money down as a Reward of theſe Murtherers, that were at Windſor; of this we have proof againſt him, which is ſufficient. My Lord, Mr. Coleman, as a Man of greater Abilities, is reſerved for greater Employments, and ſuch wherein, I confeſs, all his Abilities were little enough. There were Negotiations to be made with Men Abroad, Money to be procured, partly at home from Friends here, and partly abroad from thoſe, that wiſh'd them well: And in all theſe Negotiations Mr. Coleman had a mighty Hand; and you will perceive by and by what a great progreſs he made in them. This Conſpiracy went ſo far, as you will hear it proved, That there were general Officers named and appointed, that ſhould Command their new Catholick Army, and many were Engaged, if not Liſted. There were not only in England, but in Ireland likewiſe, where Arms and all other Neceſſaries were provided, and whither great Sums of Money were returned to ſerve upon occaſion. But one thing there is, my Lord, that comes neareſt Mr. Coleman; As there were Military Officers named, ſo likewiſe the great Civil Places and Offices of the Kingdom were to be diſpoſed of; I will not name to whom at this time, more than what is pertinent to the preſent buſineſs.

This Gentleman, ſuch were his great Abilities, the truſt and reliance that his Party had upon him, that no leſs an Office would ſerve his turn than that of Principal Secretary of State; and he had a Commiſſion, that came to him from the Superiours of the Jeſuits, to enable him to execute that great Office. My Lord, it ſeems ſtrange, that ſo great an Office ſhould be conferred by no greater a Man than the Superior of the Jeſuits. But if the Pope can depoſe Kings, and diſpoſe of Kingdoms, no wonder if the Superior of the Jeſuits can, by a Power delegated from him, make Secretaries. It is not certain what the Date of this Commiſſion was, nor the very time when he received it: but I believe he was ſo earneſt and forward in this Plot, that he began to execute his Office long before he had his Commiſſion for it; for I find by his Letters, which are of a more early Date, that he had proceeded ſo far as to treat with Father Ferrier, who was the French King's Confeſſor, before he had actually received this Commiſſion.

Commiſſion. You will underſtand by the Letters, which we ſhall produce, what he had to do with him, and what with the other Confeſſor, that ſucceeded Father Le Cheſe. There were two ſmall matters they treated of, no leſs than the Diſſolving the Parliament; and the Extirpation of the Proteſtant Religion. Nay, you will find, and you will hear enough, when the Letters come to be read, that Mr. Coleman made many ſtrokes at the Parliament, he had no good opinion of them. And we cannot blame him; for without all peradventure they had made, and I hope ever will make, ſtrong reſiſtance againſt ſuch Deſigns as theſe. But a great mind he had to be rid of them; and he had hopes of great Sums of Money from abroad, if it had been to be done that way. And it is very remarkable (and ſhews the vanity of the Man) he had ſuch an opinion of the ſucceſs of theſe Negotiations, that he had penn'd a Declaration prepared by him, and writ with his own hand, to be publiſhed in Print, upon the Diſſolution of the Parliament, to juſtifie that Action with many ſpecious and plauſible Reaſons. As he did this without any Direction, ſo he takes upon him to write a Declaration, as in the Name of the King, without the leaſt ſhadow of any command to do it, ſo he prepares a Letter alſo in the Name of the Duke; and I would not affirm, unleſs I could prove it, and that from his own Confeſſion, (being examined before the Lords upon Oath) that he had no manner of Authority from the Duke to prepare ſuch a Letter; and when it was written, and brought to the Duke, it was rejected, and the Writer juſtly blamed for his preſumption. By this you will perceive the forwardneſs of this Man. And you muſt of neceſſity take notice, that in his Letters he took upon himſelf to manage Affairs, as authorized by the greateſt Perſons in the Kingdom, yet without the leaſt ſhadow of proof that he was by them impowered to do it.

My Lord, you ſhall find, Mr. Coleman thought himſelf above all; and ſuch was his own overweening opinion of his Wit and Policy, that he thought himſelf the ſole and ſupreme Director of all the Affairs of the Catholicks. You will likewiſe perceive that he held Intelligence with Cardinal Norfolk, with Father Sheldon, and the Popes Internuntio at Bruſſels. And I cannot but obſerve out of the Proofs, that as we ſhall find Mr. Coleman very ambitious and forward in all great Affairs, ſo he had a little too much Eye to the Reward; he looked too much aſquint upon the matter of Money: His great endeavours were not ſo much out of Conſcience, or out of Zeal to his Religion, as out of temporal Intereſt; to him Gain was inſtead of Godlineſs. And by his Letters to the French Confeſſor Mounſieur Le Cheſe, it will be proved, that he got much Money from the Catholicks here, and ſome from abroad, but ſtill he wanted Money. What to do? (I do not mean the greater ſum of two hundred thouſand Pounds to procure the Diſſolution of the Parliament, but ſome twenty thouſand Pounds only) To be expended by him in ſecret Service. I do not know what account he would have given of it, if he had been intruſted with it. But that he earneſtly thirſted after Money, appeareth by moſt of his Letters.

My Lord, you will obſerve, beſides his Intelligences, that he had with Father Le Cheſe, and ſeveral others, one that deſerves to be named, and that is his Negotiation with Sir William Frogmorton, who was ſent over into France, and there reſided a long time to promote theſe Deſigns. He is dead; therefore I will not ſay ſo much of him, as I would ſay againſt him, if he was here to be tried. But, my Lord, I find in his Letters ſuch Treaſonable, ſuch Impious Expreſſions againſt the King, ſuch undutiful Characters of him, that no good Subject would write, and no good Subject would receive and conceal, as Mr. Coleman hath done. My Lord, it may paſs for a wonder, how we come to be Maſters of all theſe Papers; it has in part been told you already.

There was an information given of the general Deſign, nay of ſome of the particulars againſt the King's Life. And without all peradventure, Mr. Coleman knew of this Diſcovery; and he knew that he had Papers, that could ſpeak too much, and he had time and opportunity enough to have made them away, and I make no Queſtion, but he did make many away. We are not able to prove the continuance of his correſpondence, ſo as to make it clearly out; but we ſuppoſe that continued until the day he was ſeized. And there is this to be proved, that Letters came for him, though we cannot ſay any were delivered to him, after he was in Priſon. But without all peradventure, the Man had too much to do, too many Papers to conceal: Then, you'll ſay, he might have burnt them all, (for many would burn as well as a few:) But then he had loſt much of the Honour of a great States-man; many a fine Sentence, and many a deep Intrigue had been loſt to all Poſterity. I believe that we owe this Diſcovery to ſomething of Mr. Coleman's Vanity; he would not loſe the Glory of managing theſe important Negotiations about ſo great a Deſign: He thought 'twas no ſmall Reputation to be intruſted with the Secrets of Foreign Miniſters. If this was not his reaſon, God (I believe) took away from him that clearneſs of Judgment, and ſtrength of Memory, which he had upon other Occaſions.

My Lord, I ſhall no longer detain you from reading the Papers themſelves. But I cannot but account this Kingdom happy, that theſe Papers are preſerved. For (my Lord) We are to deal with a ſort of Men, that have that prodigious confidence, that their words and deeds (though proved by never ſo unſuſpected Teſtimony) they will ſtill deny. But (my Lord) no denial of this Plot will prevail, for Mr. Coleman himſelf hath, with his own hand, recorded this Conſpiracy; and we can prove his hand, not only by his own Servants, and Relations, but by his own Confeſſion. So that (my Lord) I doubt not, that if there be any of their own Party that hear this Trial, they themſelves will be ſatisfy'd with the truth of theſe things. And I believe we have an advantage in this caſe, which they will not allow us, in another matter; namely, that we ſhall be for this once permitted to believe our own Senſes. Our Evidence conſiſteth of two parts; one is, Witneſſes Viva voce, which we deſire (with the favour of the Court) to begin with; and when that is done, we ſhall read ſeveral Letters, or Negotiations, in writing, and ſo ſubmit the whole to your Lordſhip's direction.

Prif. I beg leave that a poor ignorant Man, that is ſo heavily charged, that it ſeems a little unequal to conſider the reaſon, why a Priſoner, in ſuch a caſe as this is, is not allowed Counſel; but your Lordſhip is ſuppoſed to be Counſel for him. But I think it very hard I cannot be admitted Counſel; and I humbly hope your Lordſhip will not ſuffer me to be loſt by things that my ſelf cannot anſwer. I deny the Concluſion, but the Premiſſes are too ſtrong and artificial.

Sir William Scroggs L. C. J. You cannot deny the Premiſſes, but that you have done theſe things; but you deny the Concluſion that you are a Traitor.

Prif. I can ſafely and honeſtly.

L. C. J. You would make a better Secretary of State, than a Logician; for they never deny the Concluſion.

Prif. I grant it your Lordſhip: You ſee the advantage great men have of me, that do not pretend to Logick.

L. C. J. The labour lies upon their Hands; the Proof belongs to them to make out theſe Intrigues of yours; therefore you need not have Counſel, becauſe the Proof muſt be plain upon you, and then it will be in vain to deny the Concluſion.

Prif. I hope (my Lord) if there be any Point of Law that I am not skill'd in, that your Lordſhip will be pleaſed not to take the advantage over me. Another thing ſeems moſt dreadful, that is, the violent Prejudices that ſeems to be againſt every man in England, that is confeſs'd to be a Roman Catholick. It is poſſible that a Roman Catholick may be very innocent of theſe Crimes. If one of thoſe Innocent Roman Catholicks ſhould come to this Bar, he lies under ſuch Diſadvantages already, and his Prejudices ſo greatly byaſſeth human Nature, that unleſs your Lordſhip will lean extremely much on the other ſide, Juſtice will hardly ſtand upright, and lie upon a Level. But to ſatisfie your Lordſhip, I do not think it any ſervice to deſtroy any of the King's Subjects, unleſs it be in a very plain caſe.

L. C. J. You need not make any preparations for us in this matter, you ſhall have a fair, juſt, and legal Trial; if Condemned, it will be apparent you ought to be ſo; and without a fair Proof, there ſhall be no Condemnation. Therefore you ſhall find, we will not do to you, as you do to us, blow up at adventure, kill people becauſe they are not of your perſwaſion; our Religion teacheth us another Doctrine, and you ſhall find it clearly to your advantage. We ſeek no Man's Blood, but our own Safety. But you are brought here from the neceſſity of things, which your ſelves have made; and from your own Actions you ſhall be condemned, or acquitted.

Prif. It is ſuppoſed upon Evidence, that the Examinations that have been of me in Priſon, are like to be Evidence againſt me now; I have nothing to ſay againſt it: But give me leave to ſay at this time, that when I was in Priſon, I was upon my ingenuity charged; I promiſed I would confeſs all I knew. And I only ſay this, That what I ſaid in Priſon is true, and am ready at any time to Swear and Evidence, that that is all the truth.

L. C. J. It is all true that you ſay; but did you tell all that was true?

Prif. I know no more, than what I declared to the Two Houſes.

L. C. J. Mr. Coleman, I'll tell you when you will be apt to gain credit in this matter: You ſay, that you told all things that you knew, the Truth, and the whole Truth. Can Mankind be perſuaded, that you, that had this Negotiation in 74. and 75. left off juſt then, at that time when your Letters were found according to their Dates? Do you believe, there was no Negotiation after 75. becauſe we have not found them? Have you ſpoke one word to that? Have you confeſſed, or produced thoſe Papers and Weekly Intelligence? When you anſwer that, you may have credit; without that, it is impoſſible: For I cannot give credit to one word you ſay, unleſs you give an account of the ſubſequent Negotiation.

Prif. After that time (as I ſaid to the Houſe of Commons) I did give over Correſponding. I did offer to take all Oaths and Teſts in the World, that I never had one Letter for at leaſt two years; yea, (that I may keep my ſelf within compaſs) I think it was for three or four. Now I have acknowledged to the Houſe of Commons, I have had a curſory Correſpondence, which I never regarded or valued; but as the Letters came, I burnt them, or made uſe of them as common Paper. I ſay, that for the general Correſpondence I have had for two or three years, they have had every one of them Letters, that I know of.

Att. Gen. Whether you had or no, you ſhall have the faireſt Trial that can be. And we cannot blame the Gentleman, for he is more uſed to greater Affairs, than theſe Matters or Forms of Law. But (my Lord) I deſire to go unto Evidence, and when that is done, he ſhall be heard, as long as he pleaſeth, without any Interruption. If he deſire it, before I give my Evidence, let him have Pen, Ink, and Paper (with your Lordſhip's leave.)

L. C. J. Help him to Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Record. Then we deſire to go on in our Evidence. We deſire that Mr. Oates may not be interrupted.

Court. He ſhall not be interrupted.

Att. Gen. The firſt thing we will inquire, what account he can give of the Priſoner at the Bar, whether he was any way privy to the murther of the King?

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, we leave it to your ſelf to take your own way, and your own method: Only this we ſay, here's a Gentleman ſtands at the Bar for his Life; And on the other ſide, the King is concerned for his Life: You are to ſpeak the Truth and the whole Truth; for there is no reaſon in the World that you ſhould add any one thing that is falſe, I would not have a tittle added for any advantage, or conſequences that may fall, when a Man's Blood and Life lieth at ſtake: Let him be Condemned by truth: You have taken an Oath, and you being a Miniſter, know the great regard you ought to have of the ſacredneſs of an Oath; and that to take a Man's Life away by a falſe Oath is murther, I need not teach you that. But that Mr. Coleman may be ſatisfied in the Trial, and all People elſe be ſatisfied, there is nothing required or expected, but downright plain truth, and without any arts either to conceal, or expatiate, to make things larger than in truth they are; he must be condemned by plain Evidence of Fact.

Mr. Oates. My Lord, Mr. Coleman in the Month of November last, did entertain in his own House John Keins, which John Keins was a Father Confessor to certain Persons that were Converted, amongst which I was one. My Lord, I went and visited this John Keins at Mr. Coleman's House then in Stable-yard. Mr. Coleman inquiring of John Keins who I was? He said, I was one that designed to go over upon business to St. Omers. My Lord, Mr. Coleman told me then he should trouble me with a Letter or two to St. Omers, but he told me he would leave them with one Fenwick that was Procurator for the Society of Jesuits in London. I went on Monday Morning and took Coach, went to Dover, and had his Pacquet with me, which Pacquet when I came to St. Omers I opened. The outside sheet of this Paper was a Letter of News which was called Mr. Coleman's Letter, and at the bottom of this Letter there was this Recommendation, Pray Recommend me to my Kinsman Playford. In this Letter of News there were expressions of the King, calling him Tyrant, and that the Marriage between the Prince of Orange and the Lady Mary the Duke of York's Eldest Daughter would prove the Traitor's and Tyrant's ruine.

L. C. J. In what Language was it written?

Mr. Oates. In plain English words at length.

L. C. J. Directed to whom?

Mr. Oates. It was directed to the Rector of St. Omers, to give him Intelligence how affairs went in England.

L. C. J. Did you break it open?

Mr. Oates. I was at the opening of it, and saw it and read it. There was a Letter to Father Lechees, which was superscribed by the same hand that the treasonable Letter of News was written, and the same hand that the recommendation to Playford was written in. When this Letter was open there was a Seal fixt, a flying Seal, and no Man's Name to it.

L. C. J. What was the Contents of that Letter to Lechees?

Mr. Oates. My Lord, to give you an account of the import of this Letter, it was writ in Lattain, and in it there were thanks given to Father Lechees for the Ten Thousand Pounds which was given for the propagation of the Catholick Religion, and that it should be imployed for no other intent and purpose but that for which it was sent, now that was to cut off the King of England; those words were not in that Letter, but Lechees Letter, to which this was an Answer, I saw and read: It was dated the Month of August, and as near as I remember there was this Instruction in it. That the Ten Thousand Pound should be imployed for no other intent and purpose but to cut off the King of England. I do not swear the words, but that's the sense and substance; I believe I may swear the words.

L. C. J. To whom was that directed?

Mr. Oates. To one Strange that was then Provincial of the Society in London, which Mr. Coleman answered.

L. C. J. How came Mr. Coleman to answer it?

Mr. Oates. Strange having run a Reed into his Finger, had wounded his Hand, and Secretary Mico was ill, so he got Mr. Coleman to write an Answer unto it.

L. C. J. Did he write it as from himself?

Mr. Oates. Yes, by order of the Provincial.

L. C. J. What was the substance of that Answer?

Mr. Oates. That thanks was given to him in the Name of the whole Society for the Ten Thousand Pound which was paid and received here, and that it should be employed to the intent for which it was received. It was superscribed from Mr. Coleman.

L. C. J. Was it subscribed Coleman?

Mr. Oates. It was not subscribed; I did not see him write it, but I really believe it was by the same hand. I went and delivered this Letter.

L. C. J. I understood you because of the accident of his Hand he had employed Mr. Coleman to write this for him.

Mr. Oates. He did write this Letter then, the Body of the Letter was written by Mr. Coleman. I did not see him write it, but I shall give an account how I can prove he wrote it. I delivered this Letter to Lechees his own Hand. When I opened the Letter he asked me how a Gentleman (naming a French name) did doe.

L. C. J. When you carried this Letter, you carried it to Lechees, and delivered it to him; then he asked you of the Gentleman of the French name, whom ment he by that name?

Mr. Oates. I understood it to be Mr. Coleman.

L. C. J. Did he know him by some French name? What said you?

Mr. Oates. I could say little to this.

L. C. J. Could you guess whom he meant?

Mr. Oates. He told me he was sometime Secretary to the Dutchess of York, which I understood to be Mr. Coleman. I stuck at it, and when he said he was sometime Secretary to the Dutchess of York, I spoke in Latine to him, and asked whether he meant Mr. Coleman, and his Answer I cannot remember. He sends an Answer to this Letter. I brought it to St. Omers, and there it was inclosed in the Letter from the Society to Coleman; wherein the Society expresly told him this Letter was delivered and acknowledged. I saw the Letter at St. Omers, and the Letter was sent to him. Mr. Coleman did acknowledge the Receipt of this Letter from Lechees in the same hand with that of the News Letter, and so it was understood by all, I saw it.

L. C. J. How came you to see it?

Mr. Oates. I by a Patent from them was of the Consult.

L. C. J. You saw the Letter of the same hand which the News Letter was of with Mr. Coleman's Name subscribed?

Mr. Oates. The Contents of the Letter did own the Letter from Lechees was received; this Letter was presumed to be the Hand-writing of Mr. Coleman, and it was understood to be Mr. Coleman's Letter.

L. C. J. You say the Letter was thanks for the Ten Thousand Pound; what was the other Contents?

Mr. Oates. That all Endeavours should be used to cut off the Protestant Religion Root and Branch.

L. C. J. You say you delivered this Letter, from whom had you it?

Mr. Oates. From Fenwick, it was left in his Hand, and he accompanied me from Groves to the Coach, and gave it to me.

L. C. J. Did you hear him speak to Mr. Coleman to write for him?

Mr. Oates. Strange told me he had spoke to him.

L.

L. C. J. He doth ſuppoſe it was Mr. Coleman's hand becauſe it was juſt the ſame hand that the News Letter was. Are you ſure the Letter was of his hand?

Mr. Oates. It was taken for his hand.

Juſt. Wild. Had he ſuch a Kinſman there?

Mr. Oates. Yes he hath confeſſed it.

Att. Gen. We deſire your Lordſhip he may give an account of the Conſult here in May laſt, and how far Mr. Coleman was privy to the murthering of the King.

Mr. Oates. In the Month of April Old-Stile, in the Month of May New-Stile, there was a Conſult held, it was begun at the White Horſe Tavern, it did not continue there. After that there they had conſulted to ſend one Father Cary to be Agent and Procurator for Rome, they did adjourn themſelves to ſeveral Clubs in Companies; ſome met at Wild-Houſe, and ſome at Harcourt's Lodging in Duke-Street; ſome met at Ireland's Lodging in Ruſſel-Street; and ſome in Fenwick's Lodging in Drury-Lane. They were ordered to meet by virtue of a Brief from Rome, ſent by the Father General of the Society: They went on to theſe Reſolves, That Pickering and Groves ſhould go on and continue in attempting to Aſſaſſinate the King's Perſon by Shooting, or other means. Groves was to have Fifteen Hundred Pounds. Pickering being a Religious Man was to have Thirty Thouſand Maſſes, which at Twelve Pence a Maſs amounted much what to that Money. This Reſolve of the Jeſuits was communicated to Mr. Coleman in my hearing at Wild-Houſe. My Lord, this was not only ſo, but in ſeveral Letters he did mention it; and in one Letter (I think I was gone a few Miles out of London) he ſent to me by a Meſſenger, and did deſire the Duke might be trappan'd into this Plot to Murther the King.

L. C. J. How did he deſire it?

Mr. Oates. In a Letter, that all means ſhould be uſed for the drawing in the Duke. This Letter was written to one Ireland. I ſaw the Letter and read it.

L. C. J. How do you know it was his Letter?

Mr. Oates. Becauſe of the Inſtructions, which I ſaw Mr. Coleman take a Copy of and write, which was the ſame Hand with the News Letter, and what elſe I have mentioned, the Subſcription was, Recommend me to Father Lechees, and it was the ſame Hand whereof I now ſpeak.

L. C. J. What was the ſubſtance of the Letter?

Mr. Oates. Nothing but Complement, and Recommendation, and that all means might be uſed for the trappanning the Duke of York (as near as I can remember that was the word.)

Juſt. Wild. You did ſay poſitively that Mr. Coleman did conſent and agree to what was conſulted by the Jeſuits, which was to kill the King, and Pickering and Groves were the two Perſons deſigned to do it. Did you hear him conſent to it?

Mr. Oates. I heard him ſay at Wild-Houſe, he thought it was well contrived.

Recor. Do the Gentlemen of the Jury hear what he ſaith?

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, do you hear what he ſaith?

Jury. Yes.

Att. Gen. What do you know of any Rebellion to have been raiſed in Ireland? and what was to be done with the Duke of Ormond?

Mr. Oates. In the Month of Auguſt there was a Conſult with the Jeſuits, and with the Benedictine Monks at the Savoy. In this Month of Auguſt there was a Letter writ from Arch-Biſhop Talbot, the Titular Arch-Biſhop of Dublin; wherein he gave an account of a Legate from the Pope, an Italian Biſhop, (the Biſhop of Caſſay I think) who aſſerted the Pope's Right to the Kingdom of Ireland. In this Letter (to mention in ſpecial) there were Four Jeſuits had contrived to diſpatch the Duke of Ormond (theſe were his words) To find the moſt expedient way for his Death, and Fogarthy was to be ſent to do it by Poyſon, if theſe Four good Fathers did not hit of their Deſign. My Lord, Fogarthy was preſent. And when the Conſult was almoſt at a period, Mr. Coleman came to the Savoy to the Conſult, and was mighty forward to have Father Fogarthy ſent to Ireland to diſpatch the Duke by Poyſon. This Letter did ſpecify they were there ready to riſe in Rebellion againſt the King for the Pope.

Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of Arms?

Mr. Oates. There were 40000 Black Bills, I am not ſo skilful in Arms to know what they meant (Military Men know what they are) that were provided to be ſent into Ireland; but they were ready for the uſe of the Catholick Party.

L. C. J. Who were they provided by?

Mr. Oates. I do not know.

L. C. J. How do you know they were provided?

Mr. Oates. That Letter doth not mention who they were provided by, but another Letter mentioned they were provided by thoſe that were Commiſſion Officers for the aid and help of the Pope; the Popiſh Commiſſioners they were provided by, and they had them ready in Ireland.

L. C. J. Who wrote this Letter?

Mr. Oates. It came from Talbot, I might forget the day of the Month becauſe my Information is ſo large, but it was the former part of the Year, I think either January or February, (77) (78) laſt January or February.

L. C. J. Was this Conſult but in Auguſt laſt?

Mr. Oates. I am forced to run back from that Conſult to this; Mr. Coleman was privy, and was the main Agent, and did in the Month of Auguſt laſt paſt ſay to Fenwick, he had found a way to tranſmit the 200000 l. for the carrying on of this Rebellion in Ireland.

L. C. J. Did you hear him ſay ſo?

Mr. Oates. I did, a Week before.

L. C. J. You ſay he was very forward to ſend Fogarthy into Ireland to kill the Duke of Ormond.

Mr. Oates. Yes that I ſay; and that he had found a way to tranſmit 200000 l. to carry on the Rebellion in Ireland.

Court. Who was by beſides Fenwick?

Mr. Oates. My ſelf and no Body elſe.

Court. Where was it ſaid?

Mr. Oates. In Fenwick's Chamber in Drury-lane.

Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of tranſmitting the Money to Windſor, or perſuading any to be ſent thither, and the time when?

Mr. Oates. In the Month of Auguſt there were four Ruffians procured by Dr. Fogarthy. Theſe Four were not nominated in the Conſult with the Benedictine Convent, but (my Lord) these four Ruffians without Names were accepted of by them.

Court. Who proposed them?

Mr. Oates. Fogarthy. These four Irish-Men were sent that Night to Windsor. How they went I know not, but the next Day there was a provision of 80 l. ordered to them by the Rector of London, which is a Jesuit, one Will. Harcourt in the Name of the Provincial, because he acted in his Name and Authority, the Provincial being then beyond the Seas, visiting his Colleges in Flanders.

L. C. J. Did he order the 80 l.

Mr. Oates. Mr Coleman came to this Harcourt's House, then lying in Duke-Street, and Harcourt was not within; but he was directed to come to Wild-House, and at Wild-House he found Harcourt.

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Mr. Oates. He said he had been at his House, and was not within, finding him at Wild-House, he asked what care was taken for those four Gentlemen that went last Night to Windsor? He said there was 80 l. ordered.

L. C. J. Who said so?

Mr. Oates. Harcourt. And there was the Messenger that was to carry it, I think the most part of this 80 l. was in Guineas: Mr. Coleman gave the Messenger a Guinea to be nimble, and to expedite his Journey.

L. C. J. How know you they were Guineas?

Mr. Oates. I saw the Money upon the Table before Harcourt, not in his Hand.

L. C. J. Were the four Irish-Men there?

Mr. Oates. No, they were gone before I came.

L. C. J. Who was to carry it after them, what was his Name?

Mr Oates. I never saw him before or since, the Money was upon the Table: When Mr. Coleman came in, he gave the Messenger a Guinea to expedite the business.

Recorder. You say Mr. Coleman inquired what Care was taken for those Ruffians that were to Assassinate the King; pray, Mr. Oates, tell my Lord and the Jury what you can say concerning Mr. Coleman's discourse with one Ashby.

Mr. Oates. In the Month of July, one Ashby, who was sometime Rector of St. Omers, being ill of the Gout was ordered to go to the Bath; this Ashby being in London, Mr. Coleman came to attend him; this Ashby brought with him Treasonable Instructions, in order to expedite the King by Poison, provided Pickering and Groves did not do the Work: Ten thousand Pound should be proposed to Sir George Wakeman to Poison the King, in case Pistol and Stab did not take effect, and opportunity was to be taken at the King's taking Physick. I could give other Evidence but will not, because of other things which are not fit to be known yet.

L. C. J. Who wrote this Letter?

Mr. Oates. It was under the Hand of White the Provincial beyond the Seas, whom Ashby left; it was in the Name of Memorials to impower Ashby and the rest of the Consulters at London to propound Ten thousand Pound to Sir George Wakeman to take the opportunity to Poison the King. These Instructions were seen and read by Mr. Coleman, by him Copied out, and transmitted to several Conspirators of the King's Death, in this Kingdom of England, that were privy to this Plot.

Recorder. Know you of any Commission? We have hitherto spoken altgether of the Work of others; now we come to his own Work a little nearer.

L. C. J. Who saw Mr. Coleman read these Instructions? What said he?

Mr. Oates. He said he thought it was too little, I heard him say so.

L. C. J. Did you see him take a Copy of these Instructions?

Mr. Oates. Yes, and he said he did believe Sir George Wakeman would scarce take it, and thought it necessary the other Five thousand Pound should be added to it, that they might be sure to have it done.

L. C. J. Where was it he said this?

Mr. Oates. It was in the Provincial's Chamber, which Ashby had taken for his convenience at London, until he went down to the Bath, it was at Wild-House, at Mr. Sanderson's House.

L. C. J. Ashby was imployed by his Instructions to acquaint the Consult of the Jesuits, that there should be Ten thousand Pound advanced, if Dr. Wakeman would Poison the King, now Ashby comes and acquaints him with it. Why should Coleman take Copies?

Mr. Oates, Because he was to send Copies to several Conspirators in the Kingdom of England.

L. C. J. To what purpose should Mr. Coleman take a Copy of these Instructions?

Mr. Oates. The reason is plain, they were then a gathering a Contribution about the Kingdom, and these Instructions were sent that they might be incouraged, because they saw there was incouragement from beyond Seas to assist them. And another Reason was, because now they were assured by this their business would quickly be dispatched, and by this means some Thousands of Pounds were gathered in the Kingdom of England.

L. C. J. To whom was Mr. Coleman to send them?

Mr. Oates. I know not any of the Persons, but Mr. Coleman did say he had sent his Suffrages (which was a Canting Word for Instructions) to the Principal Gentry of the Catholicks of the Kingdom of England.

L. C. J. How know you this, that Mr. Coleman did take a Copy of these Instructions for that purpose as you say?

Mr. Oates. Because he said so.

L. C. J. Did any Body ask him why he took them?

Mr. Oates. Saith Ashby, you had best make haste and Communicate these things. Mr. Coleman answered, I will make hast with my Copies, that I may dispatch them away this Night.

Recorder. Was he not to be one of the Principal Secretaries of State?

Mr. Oates. In the Month of May last New Stile, April Old Stile, I think within a Day after our Consult, I was at Mr. Langhorn's Chamber, he had several Commissions, which he called Patents: Among his Commissions I saw one from the General of the Society of Jesus, Joannes Paulus D'Oliva, by virtue of a Brief from the Pope by whom he was enabled.

L. C. J. Did you know his Hand?

Mr. Oates. I believe I have seen it Forty times, I have seen Forty things under his Hand, and this agreed with them, but I never did see him write in my Life, we all took it to be his Hand, and we all knew the Hand and Seal.

L. C. J. What Inscription was upon the Seal?

Mr. Oates

Mr. Oates, I. H. ✠. with a Croſs, in Engliſh it had the Characters of I. H. S. This Commiſſion to Mr. Coleman in the Month of July, I ſaw in Fenwick's preſence, and at his Chamber in Drury-Lane, where then Mr. Coleman did acknowledge the Receipt of this Patent, opened it and ſaid, It was a very good exchange.

L. C. J. What was the Commiſſion for?

Mr. Oates. It was to be Secretary of State. I ſaw the Commiſſion and heard him own the Receipt of it.

Juſtice Wild. What other Commiſſions were there at Mr. Langhorn's Chamber?

Mr. Oates. A great many, I cannot remember, there was a Commiſſion for my Lord Arundel of Warder, the Lord Powis, and ſeveral other Perſons. But this belongs not to the Priſoner at the Bar: I mention his Commiſſion.

L. C. J. Were you acquainted with Mr. Langhorn?

Mr. Oates. Yes, I'll tell your Lordſhip how I was acquainted. I was in Spain, he had there two Sons; to ſhew them ſpecial favour and kindneſs (being meer Strangers at the College) I did uſe to tranſmit ſome Letters for them to the Kingdom of England in my Pacquet. When I came out of Spain, I did receive Recommendations from them to their Father, and in great Civility he received me. This was in November that I came to his Houſe. He lived in Shear-Lane or thereabouts. I underſtood that his Wife was a zealous Proteſtant; therefore he deſired me not to come any more to his Houſe, but for the future to come to his Chamber in the Temple.

L. C. J. Had you ever ſeen Mr. Langhorn in London before?

Mr. Oates. I never ſaw him till Nov. (77.) to my knowledge. I was ſeveral times in his Company at his Chamber, and he brought me there to ſhew me ſome kindneſs upon the account of his Sons. It was at the Temple, for his Wife being a Proteſtant was not willing any Jeſuits ſhould come to the Houſe. I was to carry him a ſummary of all the reſults and particulars of the Conſult at the White-Horſe and Wild-Houſe. The Provincial ordered me to do it, he knowing me, being in that affair often imployed.

L. C. J. Was it the ſecond time you ſaw him, that you ſaw the Commiſſions?

Mr. Oates. I ſaw him ſeveral times in the Month of November.

L. C. J. When did you ſee the Commiſſions?

Mr. Oates. In the Month of April Old Stile, May New Stile.

L. C. J. How came he to ſhew you the Commiſſions?

Mr. Oates. I hearing of their being come, had a curioſity to ſee them, and he knew me to be privy to the concerns.

L. C. J. How did you know he had the Commiſſions?

Mr. Oates. by Letters.

L. C. J. From whom?

Mr. Oates. From thoſe of the Society at Rome, wherein one Harcourt one of the Fathers was certified, that the Commiſſions were come to Langhorn, and were in his Hand, I ſaw the Letters at St. Omers before they came to Harcourt, we read the Letters there before they came to England, I had power to open them.

L. C. J. Did you open the Letters?

Mr. Oates. Yes.

L. C. J. When ſaw you the Letters at St. Omers?

Mr. Oates. I ſaw the Letters at St. Omers in the Month of January; then they came from Rome; and after I received ſummons to be at this Conſult in the Month of April; and accordingly we came over.

L. C. J. What time did you come over?

Mr. Oates, In the Month of April.

L. C. J. What time went you to Langhorn's Chamber? I cannot reconcile the Months together.

Juſt. Dolben. Did you not ſay you came to Langhorn in November?

Mr. Oates, Yes, before I went to St. Omers.

Juſt. Wild. How many came over with you?

Mr. Oates. I cannot tell how many came over together; there were Nine of us all Jeſuits.

L. C. J. Did not you ſay you went to Langhorn in November?

Mr. Oates. That was before I went to St. Omers.

Att. Gen. Tell how many Prieſts or Jeſuits were lately in England, that you know of, at one time?

Mr. Oates. There was, and have been to my knowledge in the Kingdom of England, Secular Prieſts Eightſcore, and Jeſuits Fourſcore, and by Name in the Catalogue, I think Three hundred and odd.

L. C. J. How long had you been in England before you were at Mr. Langhorn's Chamber?

Mr. Oates. Not long; becauſe I had Letters in my Pacquet from his Sons, aſſoon as I had reſted a little, I went to him.

L. C. J. What ſaid Mr. Langhorn to you about the Commiſſions in his Chamber?

Mr. Oates. Not a word; but ſeem'd glad.

L. C. J. Did you ſee them open upon his Table? or did you ask to ſee them?

Mr. Oates. They did not lye open upon the Table, but the Commiſſions were before him; I asked to ſee them. Mr. Langhorn (ſaid I) I hear you have received the Commiſſions from Rome; he ſaid, he had. Shall I have the honour to ſee ſome of them? He ſaid I might; he thought he might truſt me; and ſo he might, becauſe that very Day I gave him an account of the Conſult.

L. C. J. When was it you gave him an account of the Conſult?

Mr. Oates. In the Morning.

L. C. J. You ſay you were twice there that Day.

Mr. Oates. I was there the whole Forenoon.

L. C. J. That Day you ſaw the Commiſſions.

Mr. Oates. I had been there ſeveral times the ſame Day, and meeting him at laſt, he asked me how often I was there before, I ſaid twice or thrice; but that Day was the laſt time I ever ſaw him; I have not ſeen him ſince to my knowledge.

L. C. J. Was that the firſt time that you ſaw him after you came from Spain?

Mr. Oates. I ſaw him thrice in November, then I went to St. Omers, the firſt time I ſaw him after I came from thence I ſaw the Commiſſions.

Att. Gen. What were the Names of thoſe Men that came over from St. Omers beſides your ſelf?

Mr. Oates. As near as I can remember, the Rector of Liege was one; Father Warren; Sir Thomas Preſton; the Rector of Watton; one Francis Williams; Sir John Warner Baronet; one Father ther Charges; one Pool, a Monk; I think I made the Ninth.

Att. Gen. If the Priſoner at the Bar be minded, he may ask him any Queſtion.

Priſ. I am mighty glad to ſee that Gentleman Sir Thomas Dolman in the Court, for I think he was upon my Examination before the Council, and this Man that gives now in Evidence againſt me, there told the King, he never ſaw me before; and he is extreamly well acquainted with me now, and hath a World of Intimacy. Mr. Oates at that time gave ſuch an Account of my Concern in this matter, that I had orders to go to Newgate, I never ſaw Mr. Oates ſince I was born, but at that time.

L. C. J. You ſhall have as fair a Search, and Examination in this matter for your Life as can be, therefore Mr. Oates anſwer to what Mr. Coleman ſaith.

Mr. Oates. My Lord, when Mr. Coleman was upon his Examination before the Council-board, he ſaith, I ſaid there that I never ſaw him before in my Life: I then ſaid I would not ſwear that I had ſeen him before in my Life, becauſe my ſight was bad by Candle-light, and Candle-light alters the ſight much, but when I heard him ſpeak I could have ſworn it was he, but it was not then my Buſineſs. I cannot ſee a great way by Candle-light.

L. C. J. The Streſs of the Objection lyeth not upon ſeeing ſo much, but how come you that you laid no more to Mr. Coleman's Charge at that time?

Mr. Oates. I did deſign to lay no more to his Charge then, than was matter for Information. For Priſoners may ſupplant Evidence when they know it, and bring Perſons to ſuch Circumſtances, as Time and Place. My Lord, I was not bound to give in more than a general Information againſt Mr. Coleman; Mr. Coleman did deny he had Correſpondence with Father Le Cheſe, at any time, I did then ſay he had given him an account of ſeveral tranſactions. And (my Lord) then was I ſo weak, being up two Nights, and having been taking Priſoners, upon my Salvation, I could ſcarce ſtand upon my Legs.

L. C. J. What was the Information you gave at that time to the Council againſt Mr. Coleman.

Mr. Oates. The Information I gave at that time (as near as I can remember, but I would not truſt to my memory) was for writing of News-Letters, in which I did then excuſe the Treaſonable Reflections, and called them Baſe Reflections at the Council-board; the King was ſenſible, and ſo was the Council. I was ſo wearied and tyred (being all that Afternoon before the Council, and Sunday Night, and ſitting up Night after Night) that the King was willing to diſcharge me. But if I had been urged I ſhould have made a larger Information.

L. C. J. The thing you accuſed him of was his own Letter.

Priſ. He doth not believe it was my Letter.

L. C. J. You here charge Mr. Coleman to be the Man that gave a Guinea to expedite the Buſineſs at Windſor, &c. at the time when you were Examined at the Council-Table, you gave a particular account of attempting to take away the King's Life at Windſor, and raiſing Twenty Thouſand Pounds and all thoſe great Tranſactions; why did you not charge Mr. Coleman to be the Man that gave the Guinea to the Meſſenger to expedite the Buſineſs, when the 80 Pounds was ſent? That he found out a way of Tranſmitting 200000 Pounds, to carry on the Deſign? He conſulted the killing the King, and approved of it very well. And of the Inſtructions for 10000 Pounds, and ſaid it was too little for to Poyſon the King. When you were to give an account to the Council of the particular Contrivance of the Murther of the King at Windſor, with a Reward, you did mention one Reward, of 10000 Pounds to Dr. Wakeman, and would you omit the Guinea to expedite the Meſſenger, and that he ſaid that 10000 Pounds was too little; would you omit all this?

Mr. Oates. I being ſo tyred and weak that I was not able to ſtand upon my Legs, and I remember the Council apprehended me to be ſo weak that one of the Lords of the Council ſaid, that if there were any Occaſion further to examine Mr. Coleman, that Mr. Oates ſhould be ready again, and bid me retire.

L. C. J. You was by when the Council were ready to let Mr. Coleman go almoſt at large.

Mr. Oates. No; I never apprehended that, for if I did, I ſhould have given a further Account.

L. C. J. What was done to Mr. Coleman at that time? was he ſent away Priſoner?

Mr. Oates. Yes, at that time to the Meſſengers Houſe, and within two Days after he was ſent to Newgate, and his Papers were ſeized.

L. C. J. Why did you not name Coleman at that time?

Mr. Oates. Becauſe I had ſpent a great deal of time in accuſing other Jeſuits.

Juſt. Wild. What time was there betwixt the firſt time you were at the Council before you told of this matter concerning the King?

Mr. Oates. When I was firſt at the Board (which was on Saturday Night) I made Information, which began between Six and Seven, and laſted almoſt to Ten. I did then give a general Account of the Affairs to the Council without the King. Then I went and took Priſoners, and before Sunday Night, I ſaid, I thought if Mr. Coleman's Papers were ſearched into, they would find matter enough againſt him in thoſe Papers to Hang him: I ſpake thoſe Words, or Words to the like Purpoſe. After that Mr. Coleman's Papers were ſearched, Mr. Coleman was not to be found; but he ſurrendred himſelf the next Day. So that on Sunday I was commanded to give His Majeſty a general Information, as I had given to the Council on Saturday; and the next Day again, I took Priſoners that Night five, and next Night four.

Juſt. Wild. How long was it betwixt the time that you were examined, and ſpoke only as to the Letters, to that time you told to the King and Council or both of them, concerning this matter you ſwear now?

Mr. Oates. My Lord, I never told it to the King and Council, but I told it to the Houſes of Parliament.

L. C. J. How long was it between the one and the other?

Mr. Oates. I cannot tell exactly the time; it was when the Parliament firſt ſate.

L. C. J. How came you (Mr. Coleman being ſo deſperate a Man as he was, endeavouring the killing of the King) to omit your Information of it to the Council and to the King at both times,

Mr. Oates.

Mr. Oates. I ſpoke little of the Perſons till the Perſons came Face to Face.

L. C. J. Why did you not accuſe all thoſe Jeſuits by Name?

Mr. Oates. We took a Catalogue of their Names, but thoſe I did accuſe poſitively and expreſly we took up.

L. C. J. Did you not accuſe Sir George Wakeman by Name, and that he accepted his Reward?

Mr. Oates. Yes, then I did accuſe him by Name.

L. C. J. Why did you not accuſe Mr. Coleman by Name?

Mr. Oates. For want of Memory; being diſturbed and wearied in ſitting up two Nights, I could not give that good Account of Mr. Coleman which I did afterwards, when I conſulted my Papers; and when I ſaw Mr. Coleman was ſecured, I had no need to give a farther Account.

L. C. J. How long was it between the firſt charging Mr. Coleman, and your acquainting the Parliament with it?

Mr. Oates. From Monday the 30th of September, until the Parliament ſate.

L. C. J. Mr. Coleman, will you ask him any thing?

Priſ. Pray ask Mr. Oates, whether he was not as near to me as this Gentleman is, becauſe he ſpeaks of his Eyes being bad?

Mr. Oates. I had the diſadvantage of a Candle upon my Eyes; Mr. Coleman ſtood more in the dark.

Priſ. He names ſeveral times that he met with me in this Place and that Place, a third and fourth Place about Buſineſs.

Mr. Oates. He was altered much by his Perriwig in ſeveral Meetings, and had ſeveral Perriwigs, and a Perriwig doth diſguiſe a Man very much; but when I heard him ſpeak, then I knew him to be Mr. Coleman.

L. C. J. Did you hear him ſpeak? How were the Queſtions asked? Were they thus? Was that the Perſon? Or, how often had you ſeen Mr. Coleman?

Mr. Oates. When the Queſtion was asked by my Lord Chancellour, Mr. Coleman, when were you laſt in France? He ſaid at ſuch a time. Did you ſee Father le Cheſe? He ſaid he gave him an accidental viſit, My Lord Chancellour asked him whether or no he had a Paſs? He ſaid, no. Then he told him, that was a fault for going out of the Kingdom without a Paſs. Have you a Kinſman whoſe Name is Playford at St. Omers? He ſaid he had one Ten years old, (who is in truth Sixteen) That Queſtion I deſired might be asked. Then the King bade me go on.

L. C. J. Did the King, or Council, or Lord Chancellour ask you whether you knew Mr. Coleman, or no?

Mr. Oates. They did not ask me.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, anſwer the Queſtion in ſhort, and without confounding it with length. Were you demanded if you knew Mr. Coleman?

Mr. Oates. Not to my knowledge.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee him? or how often?

Priſ. He ſaid, he did not know me.

L. C. J. You ſeemed, when I asked you before, to admit, as if you had been asked this Queſtion, how often you had ſeen him, and gave me no Anſwer, becauſe you were doubtful whether it was the Man, by reaſon of the inconveniency of the Light, and your bad Sight.

Mr. Oates. I muſt leave it to the King what Anſwer I made Mr. Coleman, he wonders I ſhould give an account of ſo many intimacies, when I ſaid I did not know him at the Council-Table.

Priſ. It is very ſtrange Mr. Oates ſhould ſwear now, that he was ſo well acquainted with me, and had been ſo often in my Company, when upon his Accuſation at the Council-Table, he ſaid nothing of me more than the ſending of one Letter, which he thought was my Hand.

Mr. Oates. I did not ſay that.

Priſ. And he did ſeem to ſay there, he never ſaw me before in his Life.

L. C. J. Was he asked whether he was acquainted with you? (for thoſe words are to the ſame purpoſe.)

Priſ. I cannot anſwer directly, I do not ſay he was asked if he was acquainted with me, but I ſay this, that he did declare he did not know me.

L. C. J. Can you prove that?

Priſ. I appeal to Sir Thomas Dolman, who is now in Court, and was then preſent at the Council-Table.

L. C. J. Sir Thomas, you are not upon your Oath, but are to ſpeak on the behalf of the Priſoner: What did he ſay?

Sir Tho. Dolman. That he did not well know him.

L. C. J. Did he add, that he did not well know him by the Candle-light? But Mr. Oates, when you heard his Voice, you ſaid you knew him; why did you not come then, and ſay you did well know him?

Mr. Oates. Becauſe I was not asked.

L. C. J. But, Sir Thomas, did he ſay he did not well know him after Mr. Coleman ſpake? Was Mr. Coleman examined before Mr. Oates ſpake?

Sir Thomas Dolman. Yes.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, you ſay you were with him at the Savoy and Wild-houſe, pray, Sir Thomas, did he ſay he did not know him, or had ſeen Mr. Coleman there?

Sir Tho. Dolman. He did not know him as he ſtood there.

L. C. J. Knowing, or not knowing is not the preſent Queſtion; but did he make an Anſwer to the knowing, or not knowing him?

Juſt. Dolbin. Did he ſay he did not well know Mr. Coleman, or that he did not well know that Man?

Sir Thomas Dolman. He ſaid he had no acquaintance with that Man (to the beſt of my remembrance.)

L. C. J. Sir Robert Southwell, you were preſent at Mr. Oates his Examination before the Council; in what manner did he accuſe Mr. Coleman then?

Sir Robert Southwell. The Queſtion is ſo particular, I cannot give the Court ſatisfaction; but other material things then ſaid are now omitted by Mr. Oates; for he did declare againſt Sir George Wakeman, that Five Thouſand Pounds was added, in all Fifteen Thouſand Pounds, and that Mr. Coleman paid Five of the Fifteen to Sir George in Hand.

L. C. J. This anſwers much of the Objection upon him. The Court has asked Mr. Oates how he ſhould come now to charge you with all theſe Matters of Poyſoning and Killing the King, and yet he mentioned you ſo ſlightly at the Council-Table; but it is ſaid by Sir Robert Southwell he did charge you with Five Thouſand Pounds (for poiſoning the King) to be added to the Ten Thouſand Pounds, and he charged you expreſly with it at the Council-Table.

Priſ.

Priſ. The Charge was ſo ſlight againſt me by Mr. Oates, that the Council were not of his Opinion: For the firſt Order was to go to Newgate, and Sir Robert Southwell came with directions to the Meſſenger not to execute the Order. I humbly ask whether it was a reaſonable thing to conceive that the Council ſhould extenuate the Puniſhment, if Mr. Oates came with ſuch an amazing Account to the Council.

Sir Rob. South. Mr. Oates gave ſo large and general an Information to the Council, that it could not eaſily be fixed. Mr. Coleman came voluntarily in upon Monday Morning. The Warrant was ſent out on Sunday Night for Mr. Coleman and his Papers: His Papers were found and ſeized, but Mr. Coleman was not found at that time, nor all Night, but came on Monday Morning voluntarily, and offered himſelf at Sir Joſeph Williamſon's Houſe, hearing there was a Warrant againſt him: By reaſon of ſo many Priſoners that were then under Examination, he was not heard till the Afternoon, and then he did with great Indignation and Contempt hear theſe vile things, as thinking himſelf innocent.

Priſ. If I thought my ſelf guilty, I ſhould have charged my ſelf: I hope his Majeſty upon what hath been ſaid, will be ſo far ſatisfied as to diſcharge me.

Sir Rob. South. Mr. Coleman then made ſo good a diſcourſe for himſelf, that though the Lords had filled up a blank Warrant to ſend him to Newgate, that was reſpited, and he was only committed to a Meſſenger. I did ſay to the Meſſenger, be very civil to Mr. Coleman, for things are under Examination, but you muſt keep him ſafely. Saith the Meſſenger, pray let me have a ſpecial Warrant, that doth diſpence with the Warrant I had to carry him to Newgate, and ſuch a Warrant he had. The King went away on Tueſday Morning to New-market, and appointed a particular Committee to examine the Papers brought of Mr. Coleman and others.

His Papers were found in a Deal Box, and ſeveral of theſe Papers and Declarations ſounded ſo ſtrangely to the Lords, that they were amazed; and preſently they ſigned a Warrant for Mr. Coleman's going to Newgate.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Oates give a round Charge againſt Mr. Coleman?

Sir Rob. South. He had a great deal to do, he was to repeat in the Afternoon on Sunday when the King was preſent, all he had ſaid to the Lords on Saturday.

He did ſay of Mr. Coleman, that he had correſponded very wickedly and baſely with the French King's Confeſſor, and did believe if Mr. Coleman's Papers were ſearched, there would be found in them that which would coſt him his Neck. And did declare that the Fifteen thouſand Pounds was accepted for the Murther of the King, and that Five thouſand Pounds was actually paid by Mr. Coleman to Sir George Wakeman. But Mr. Oates at the ſame time did alſo declare that he did not ſee the Money paid, he did not ſee this particular action of Sir George Wakeman, becauſe at that time he had the Stone and could not be preſent.

Mr. Oates. I was not preſent at that Conſult, where the Fifteen thouſand Pounds was accepted, but I had an account of it from thoſe that were preſent.

L. C. J. It appears plainly by this Teſtimony, that he did charge you Mr. Coleman home, that Fifteen thouſand Pounds was to be paid for poyſoning the King; and that it was generally ſaid among them (though he did not ſee it paid) that it came by your hands, viz. Five thouſand Pounds of it, which anſwers your objection as if he had not charged you, when you ſee he did charge you home then for being one of the Conſpirators, in having a Hand in paying of Money for poyſoning the King: He charges you now no otherwiſe than in that manner: He doth not charge you now as if there were new things ſtarted, but with the very Conſpiracy of having a hand in paying the Money for murthering the King.

What Conſultation was that you had at the Savoy, in the Month of Auguſt?

Mr. Oates. It was about the buſineſs of the four Iriſh Ruffians propoſed to the Conſult.

The end of Mr. Oates's Examination.

Mr. Bedlow.

Sir Francis Winnington, Soll. Gen. We will call him to give an account what he knows of the Priſoners being privy to the Conſpiracy of murthering the King, (particularly to that) Mr. Bedlow, pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury what you know, I deſire to know particularly as it concerns Mr. Coleman, and nothing but Mr. Coleman.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney pray keep to that Queſtion cloſe.

Att. Gen. I have two ſhort Queſtions to ask him: The firſt is what he hath ſeen or heard touching any Commiſſion to Mr. Coleman, what ſay you?

Mr. Bedlow. In particular I know not of any Commiſſion directed to Mr. Coleman, I do not know any thing of it but what Sir Henry Tichbourn told me, that he had a Commiſſion, and he brought a Commiſſion for Mr. Coleman and the reſt of the Lords, from the principal Jeſuits at Rome, by Order of the Pope.

Att. Gen. A Commiſſion for what?

Mr. Bedlow. To be principal Secretary of State: The Title of it I do not know becauſe I did not ſee it, but to be Principal Secretary of State, that was the Effect.

Att. Gen. I deſire to know what diſcourſe you had with Mr. Coleman about that Deſign.

Mr. Bedlow. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I ſhall be ſhort in the Narrative.

L. C. J. Make uſe of your Notes to help your Memory, but let not your Teſtimony be merely to read them.

Mr. Bedlow. I carried over to Monſieur Le Cheſe (the French King's Confeſſor) a large Pacquet of Letters, April (75) from Mr. Coleman, which Letters I ſaw Mr. Coleman deliver to Father Harcourt, at his Houſe in Duke-Street.

Council. And Harcourt gave them to you?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes; which Letters were directed to be delivered to Monſieur Le Cheſe, and I did carry them to le Cheſe, and brought him an Anſwer from le Cheſe, and other Engliſh Monks at Paris? I did not underſtand what was in it, becauſe it was a Language I do not well underſtand, it was about carrying on the Plot; at a Conſultation there were preſent two French Abbots and ſeveral Engliſh Monks at Paris; what I heard heard them ſay, was about carrying on the Plot to ſubvert the Government of England, to deſtroy the King and the Lords of the Council. The King was principally to be deſtroyed, and the Government ſubverted as well as the Proteſtant Religion.

Court. When was this? when you were to receive the Anſwer?

Mr. Bedlow. It was upon the Conſultation: There was a Pacquet of Letters from Mr. Coleman, they did not know I underſtood French, or if they did, they had tryed me ſo long I believe they would have truſted me.

L. C. J. The Letter that le Cheſe wrote, to whom was it directed?

Mr. Bedlow. It was directed to Mr. Coleman, the Pacquet was directed to Harcourt, and within that le Cheſe wrote an Anſwer and directed it to Mr. Coleman, particularly to Mr. Coleman.

L. C. J. How do you know?

Mr. Bedlow. The Superſcription was this [in French] A Monſieur Coleman; to Mr. Coleman, with other Letters directed to Father Harcourt.

L. C. J. He ſaith plainly the Letter was yours, You gave Harcourt a Pacquet of Letters to be delivered to le Cheſe, Harcourt delivered them to him, and he did carry them to le Cheſe, and heard them talk about this Plot: That le Cheſe wrote a Letter to you (particularly by Name) incloſed in a Letter to Harcourt, that Anſwer he brought back.

Recorder. Do you know any thing concerning any Money Mr. Coleman ſaid he had received? the Sums, and for what?

Mr. Bedlow. It was to carry on the Deſign to ſubvert the Government of England, to free England from Damnation and Ignorance, and free all Catholicks from hard Tyranny and Oppreſſion of Hereticks.

Att. Gen. What words did you hear Mr. Coleman expreſs, what he would do for the Catholick Cauſe?

Mr. Bedlow. May 24, or 25, (77) I was at Mr. Coleman's with Mr. Harcourt, and received another Pacquet from Mr. Harcourt, and he had it from Mr. Coleman.

L. C. J. You ſay Mr. Coleman did give this Pacquet to Harcourt?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, and Harcourt delivered it to me to carry it to Paris to the Engliſh Monks. I was to go by Doway to ſee if they were not gone to Paris before me.

L. C. J. And what did they ſay when you delivered the Letters to the Engliſh Monks.

Mr. Bedlow. They told me how much Reward I deſerved from the Pope and the Church, both here and in the World to come. I overtook three, and that Night I went to Paris with them; and upon the Conſultation (1677) I believe they ſent the Biſhop of Tornes the ſubſtance of thoſe Letters, and not having a final Anſwer what aſſiſtance the Catholick Party in England might expect from them, they were reſolved to neglect their Deſign no longer than that Summer, having all things ready to begin in England.

Recorder. What did you hear Mr. Coleman ſay?

Mr. Bedlow. That he would adventure any thing to bring in the Popiſh Religion: After the Conſultation, I delivered the Letters to le Faire, and he brought them to Harcourt, he delivered the Pacquet of Letters to Harcourt, who was not well, but yet went and delivered them to Mr. Coleman, and I went as far as Mr. Coleman's Houſe, but did not go in, but ſtayed over the way; but Harcourt went in, and after he had ſpoke with Mr. Coleman, he gave me a beck to come to him; and I heard Mr. Coleman ſay, if he had a hundred Lives, and a Sea of Blood to carry on the Cauſe, he would ſpend it all to further the Cauſe of the Church of Rome, and to eſtabliſh the Church of Rome in England: And if there was an hundred Heretical Kings to be depoſed, he would ſee them all deſtroyed.

L. C. J. Where was this?

Mr. Bedlow. At his own Houſe.

L. C. J. Where?

Mr. Bedlow. Behind Weſtminſter Abby.

L. C. J. In what Room?

Mr. Bedlow. At the Foot of the Stair-caſe.

L. C. J. Where were you then?

Mr. Bedlow. There, I was called in by Harcourt, and was as near to him, as to my Lord Duras. (My Lord being hard by Mr. Bedlow, in Court.)

Priſ. Did I ever ſee you in my Life?

Mr. Bedlow. You may ask that Queſtion; but in the Stone-Gallery in Somerſet-Houſe, when you came from a Conſult, where were great Perſons, which I am not to Name here; that would make the bottom of your Plot tremble: You ſaw me then.

Att. Gen. We did before acquaint you with ſomething of the ſubſtance of the Letters; we ſhall now acquaint you with ſomething of the manner of finding them. Your Lordſhip hath heard Mr. Oates hath been examined before the Council, and there it was ſaid, Mr. Coleman's Papers would make ſuch a diſcovery (if they were looked into) as would be enough to hang him. I remember he ſaid the Lords of the Council were pleaſed to order the Papers to be ſeized; the execution of their Warrant they committed to one Bradly, who was a Meſſenger that attended the King and Council; and I deſire he may be called: He did find and ſeize as many Papers as Mr. Coleman was pleaſed to leave, and they are thoſe Papers which we now bring before you. The Papers ſeized he had put in a Deal Box, and four or five ſeveral Bags, and brings them to the Council; the Clerks of the Council are here attending the Court: They will tell you theſe Papers now produced were Papers found in thoſe Bags: Mr. Bradly will tell you the Papers ſeized in the Bags and Box were brought to them, and they will ſwear they were the Papers and Bags that were brought.

Record. Mr. Bradly, give my Lord and the Jury an Account whether you went to Mr. Coleman, whether you ſeized his Papers, and what Papers you ſaw, and how you diſpoſed of them after they were ſeiz'd.

Mr. Bradly. The 29th of September being Sunday Evening at Six of the Clock, I received a Warrant from the Council-Board to apprehend Mr. Coleman, and to ſeize his Papers, and to bring them to the Council-board: He being not at home, I ſpoke with his Wife, and told her I came to ſearch her Houſe, I had a Warrant ſo to do. She told me I was welcom; I deſir'd her to ſend for her Husband: I found in ſeveral parts of the Houſe a great many Papers; I put them up in ſeveral Bags: I found ſome in a private corner in a Deal Box.

L. C. Juſt. What kind of Corner?

Mr. Bradly.

Mr. Bradly. In Mr. Coleman's Chamber, not in his own Study, but in another place behind the Chimney; the Box was tack'd together with a Nail: I lifted it up, and saw they were Letters, I put it down again as it was, and gave it into the custody of one that was with me, to look to it: Then I came to his own Study where his 'Scritore was, and put up all I could find in several Bags, and Sealed them, and brought them to the Council-Chamber.

Att. Gen. Did you put up any other Papers among them than what you found at Mr. Coleman's House?

Mr. Bradly. I did not, (upon my Oath) I had them all at Mr. Coleman's House.

Att. Gen. Did you bring them all to the Clerks of the Council?

Mr. Bradly. Yes, before I came out I tyed them all up, and sealed them with my own Seal, and was constantly with them.

Att. Gen. Now we will give your Lordship an account how these things were received, that were there found. Sir Robert Southwell, look upon the large Letter, and tell my Lord and the Jury whether that were among the Papers brought by this Messenger.

Sir Robert Southwell. My Lord, I did not see this Letter in several days after the Papers brought me from Bradly; when he came in with Three great Bags, and a Box of Letters on Sunday Night; said I, which are Mr. Coleman's principal Papers? Said he, those that are in the large speckled Cloth Bag; for these we took first in the 'Scritore: These I took, and medled not with the other, I presume other Clerks of the Council can give a particular Account where this Paper was found.

Att. Gen. Sir Thomas Doleman, look upon the Letter whether you can remember any thing of it.

Sir Thomas Doleman. I remember I found it in a Deal Box among Mr. Coleman's Papers, those that Bradly brought.

Court. That's plain enough.

Att. Gen. That we may not often prove what we shall often make use of, I would prove it fully once for all, that all these Papers were of his Hand-writing; this we can prove by two sorts of Evidences; his own Confession, and the Witness of Two Persons; one that was his Servant; and th'other a Sub-Secretary, that did write very many things for him. Mr. Boatman, look upon these Papers; Tell my Lord and the Jury whose Hand it is: Are you acquainted with Mr. Coleman's Hand? What relation had you to him?

Boatman. I was his Gentleman that waited on him in his Chamber Five Years: This is very like his Hand.

L. C. J. Do you believe it is his Hand?

Boatman. I believe it is.

L. C. J. Little proof will serve the turn, because they were taken in his possession.

Att. Gen. I desire to prove it fully; look upon all the Papers, turn all the Leaves, see if they be not all one Hand, and whether you believe all to be Mr. Coleman's Hand Writing or not.

Boatman. I believe it to be all his Hand.

L. C. J. Do you know when the last Pacquet of Letters came up, that were sent to Mr. Coleman, from beyond the Seas?

Boatman. Two or three days after he was taken Prisoner.

L. C. J. Do you know where they are bestowed? Did you receive Monsieur le Chese's Letters for Mr. Coleman?

Boatman. Yes.

L. C. J. Did you ever write any for him to le Chese?

Boatman. No.

Att. Gen. Inform the Court whether he kept any Book to make Entry of Letters he sent or received?

Boatman. Yes, there was a large Book my Master did enter his Letters in, and his News.

Att. Gen. What is become of that Book?

Boatman. I know not.

Att. Gen. When did you see that Book last upon your Oath?

Boatman. On Saturday.

Att. Gen. How long before he was sent to Prison?

Boatman. Two Days, because the next Day was Sunday, which he did not make use of it: On Monday my Master was in Prison, and I did not mind the Book.

L. C. J. Were there any Entries of Letters in that Book within Two Years last past?

Boatman. I cannot be positive.

Att. Gen. Did he not usually write and receive Letters from beyond Sea? Till that time had he not Negotiation as usually?

Boatman. He had usually News every Post from beyond the Seas.

Pris. There's Letters from the Hague, Brussels, France and Rome; they are all with the Council, which were all the Letters I received.

Att. Gen. We have another Witness: Cattaway, are you acquainted with Mr. Coleman's Hand-Writing? Do you believe it to be his Hand-Writing?

Witness. I believe it is, they are his Hand-Writing.

Att. Gen. It will appear, if there were no other Proof in this Cause, his own Papers are as good as an hundred Witnesses to condemn him; Therefore I desire to prove them fully by his own Confession.

Sir Phil. Lloyd a Witness. These are the Papers I received from Sir Thomas Doleman; I found them (as he saith) in a Deal Box: Among his Papers I found this Letter. Mr. Coleman hath owned this was his Hand-Writing; it's all one Letter.

Att. Gen. 'Tis all the same Hand, and he acknowledged it to be his.

Mr. Recorder. I desire Mr. Astrey may read it so that the Jury may hear it.

Mr. Astrey Clerk of the Crown reads the Letter.

The 29*th* of September (1675.) It is subscribed thus; Your most humble and most obedient Servant, but no Name.

Mr. COLEMAN's Long Letter.

SInce Father St. German has been so kind to me, as to recommend me to your Reverence so advantageously, as to encourage you to accept of my Correspondency; I will own to him, that he has done me a Favour without Consulting me, greater than I could have been capable of if he had advised with me; because I could not then have had the Confidence to have permitted him to ask it on my behalf. And I am so sensible of the Honour you are pleased to do me, that though I cannot deserve it; yet to ſhew at leaſt the ſenſe I have of it, I will deal as freely and openly with you this firſt time, as if I had had the honour of your Acquaintance all my Life; and ſhall make no Apology for ſo doing, but only tell you that I know your Character perfectly well, though I am not ſo happy as to know your Perſon; and that I have an Opportunity of putting this Letter into the hands of Father St. German's Nephew (for whoſe Integrity and Prudence he has undertaken) without any ſort of hazard.

In order then Sir to the plainneſs I profeſs, I will tell you what has formerly paſſed between your Reverence's Predeceſſor, Father Ferryer and my ſelf. About three Years ago, when the King my Maſter ſent a Troop of Horſe Guards into his moſt Chriſtian Majeſties Service, under the Command of my Lord Duraſs; he ſent with it an Officer called Sir William Throckmorton, with whom I had a particular Intimacy, and who had then very newly embrac'd the Catholick Religion: To him did I conſtantly Write, and by him addreſs my ſelf to Father Ferryer. The firſt thing of great Importance I preſumed to offer him (not to trouble you with leſſer matters, or what paſſed here before, and immediately after the Fatal Revocation of the King's Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, (to which we owe all our Miſeries and Hazards,) was in July, Auguſt, and September 1673. when I conſtantly inculcated the great danger Catholick Religion, and his moſt Chriſtian Majeſties Intereſt would be in at our next Seſſions of Parliament, which was then to be in October following; at which I plainly foreſaw that the King my Maſter would be forced to ſomething in prejudice to his Allyance with France, which I ſaw ſo evidently and particularly that we ſhould make Peace with Holland, that I urg'd all the Arguments I could, which to me were Demonſtrations, to convince your Court of that miſchief; and preſs'd all I could to perſuade his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty to uſe his utmoſt endeavour to prevent that Seſſion of our Parliament, and propoſed Expedients how to do it: But I was anſwered ſo often and ſo poſitively, that his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty was ſo well aſſured by his Embaſſador here, our Embaſſador there, the Lord Arlington, and even the King himſelf; that he had no ſuch apprehenſions at all, but was fully ſatisfied of the contrary, and lookt upon what I offered as a very zealous Miſtake, that I was forced to give over arguing, though not believing as I did; but confidently appealed to time and ſucceſs to prove who took their meaſures righteſt. When it happened what I foreſaw came to paſs, the good Father was a little ſurprized, to ſee all the great Men miſtaken, and a little one in the right; and was pleaſed by Sir William Throckmorton to deſire the continuance of my Correſpondence, which I was mighty willing to comply with, knowing the Intereſt of our King, and in a more particular manner of my more immediate Maſter the Duke, and his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, to be ſo inſeparably united, that it was impoſſible to divide them, without deſtroying them all: Upon this I ſhewed that our Parliament in the circumſtances it was managed, by the timorous Counſels of our Miniſters, who then governed, would never be uſeful either to England, France, or Catholick Religion, but that we ſhould as certainly be forced from our Neutrality at their next meeting, as we had been from our Active Alliance with France the laſt Year: That a Peace in the Circumſtances we were in, was much more to be deſired then the continuance of the War; and that the Diſſolution of our Parliament would certainly procure a Peace; for that the Confederates did more depend upon the Power they had in our Parliament, than upon any thing elſe in the World; and were more encouraged from them to the continuing of the War; ſo that if they were Diſſolved, their meaſures would be all broken, and they conſequently in a manner neceſſitated to a Peace.

The good Father minding this Diſcourſe ſomewhat more than the Court of France thought fit to do my former; urg'd it ſo Home to the King, that his Majeſty was pleaſed to give him Orders to ſignify to his R. H. my Maſter, that his Majeſty was fully ſatisfied of his R. H's. good intention towards him, and that he eſteemed both their Intereſts but as one and the ſame; that my Lord Arlington and the Parliament were both to be lookt upon as very unuſeful to their Intereſt: That if his R. H. would endeavour to diſſolve this Parliament, his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty would aſſiſt him with his Power and Purſe, to have a new one as ſhould be for their Purpoſe. This, and a great many more expreſſions of kindneſs and confidence Father Ferryer was pleaſed to communicate to Sir William Throckmorton, and Commanded him to ſend them to his R. H. and withal to beg his R. H. to propoſe to his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, what he thought neceſſary for his own concern, and the advantage of Religion, and his Majeſty would certainly do all he could to advance both or either of them. This Sir William Throckmorton ſent to me by an Expreſs, who left Paris the 2d of June 1674. Stilo novo: I no ſooner had it, but I communicated it to his R. H. To which his R. H. commanded me to anſwer, as I did on the 29th of the ſame Month: That his R. H. was very ſenſible of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſties Friendſhip, and that he would labour to cultivate it with all the good Offices he was capable of doing for his Majeſty; that he was fully convinced that their Intereſts were both one, that my Lord Arlington and the Parliament were not only unuſeful, but very dangerous both to England and France; That therefore it was neceſſary that they ſhould do all they could to Diſſolve it. And that his R. H's. opinion was, that if his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty would Write his thoughts freely to the King of England upon this Subject, and make the ſame Proffer to his Majeſty of his Purſe to Diſſolve this Parliament, which he had made to his R. H. to call another, he did believe it very poſſible for him to ſucceed with the aſſiſtance we ſhould be able to give him here; and that if this Parliament were Diſſolved, there would be no great difficulty of getting a new one, which would be more uſeful: The Conſtitutions of our Parliaments being ſuch, that a new one can never hurt the Crown, nor an old one do it good.

His R. H. being pleaſed to own theſe Propoſitions, which were but only general, I thought it reaſonable to be more particular, and come closer to the point, that we might go the faster about the work, and come to some before the time was too far spent.

I laid this for my Maxim: The Dissolution of our Parliament will certainly procure a Peace; which Proposition was granted by every body I Conversed withall, even by Monsieur Rouvigny himself, with whom I took liberty of discoursing so far, but durst not say any thing of the Intelligence I had with Father Ferryer. Next; that a sum of Money certain, would certainly procure a Dissolution; this some doubted, but I am sure I never did; for I knew perfectly well that the King had frequent Disputes with himself at that time, whether he should dissolve or continue them; and he several times declared that the Arguments were so strong on both sides, that he could not tell to which to incline, but was carried at last to the continuance of them by this one Argument: If I try them once more, they may possibly give me Money; if they do, I have gain'd my point: if they do not, I can dissolve them then, and be where I am now; so that I have a possibility at least of getting Money for their Continuance, against nothing on the other side: But if we could have turn'd this Argument, and said; Sir, their Dissolution will certainly procure you Money, when you have only a bare possibility of getting any by their Continuance, and have shewn how far that bare possibility was from being a foundation to build any reasonable hope upon, which I am sure his Majesty was sensible of; and how much 300000 l. sterl. certain (which was the sum we propos'd) was better than a bare possibility, (without any reason to hope that that could ever be compassed) of having half so much more (which was the most he design'd to ask) upon some vile dishonourable terms; and a thousand other hazards, which he had great reason to be afraid of: If I say we had power to have argued this, I am most confidently assured we could have compassed it, for Logick in our Court built upon Money, has more powerful Charms, than any other sort of reasoning. But to secure his most Christian Majesty from any hazard, as to that point I propos'd his Majesty should offer that sum upon that condition, and if the condition were not performed, the Money should never be due; if it were, and that a Peace would certainly follow thereupon, (which no body doubted) his Majesty would gain his Ends, and save all the vast Expences of the next Campaign, by which he could not hope to better his Condition, or put himself into more advantagious Circumstances of Treaty than he was then in; but might very probably be in a much worse, considering the mighty opposition he was like to meet with, and the uncertain Chances of War. But admitting that his Majesty could by his great Strength and Conduct maintain himself in as good a Condition to Treat the next year as he was then in, (which was as much as could then reasonably be hoped for) he should have saved by this Proposal, as much as all the men he must needs lose, and all the charges he should be at in a year, would be valued to amount to more then 300000 l. sterl. and so much more in case his Condition should decay, as it should be worse than it was when this was made; and the Condition of his R. H. and of the Catholick Religion here (which depends very much upon the success of His most Christian Majesty,) delivered from a great many frights and real hazards. F. Ferryer seem'd to be very sensible of the Benefit all parties would gain by this Proposal; But yet it was unfortunately delay'd by an unhappy and tedious fit of sickness, which kept him so long from the King in the France Comte, and made him so unable to wait on His Majesty after he did return to Paris: But so soon as he could compass it, he was pleased to acquaint his Majesty with it, and wrote to the Duke himself; and did me the Honour to write unto me also on the 15*th* of September 1674. and sent his Letter by Sir William Throckmorton, who came express upon that Errand; In these Letters he gave his R. H. fresh assurance of his most Christian Majesties friendship, and of his Zeal and Readiness to comply with every thing His R. H. had, or should think fit to propose in favour of Religion, or the business of Money; And that he had commanded Monsieur Rouvigny as to the latter, to Treat and deal with his R. H. and to receive and observe his Orders and Directions, but desired that he might not at all be concerned as to the former, but that his R. H would cause what Proposition he should think fit to be made about Religion, to be offered either to Father Ferryer, or Mounsieur Pompone.

These Letters came to us about the middle of September, and his R. H. expected daily when Monsieur Rouvigny should speak to him about the Subject of that Letter; but he took no notice at all of any thing till the 29*th*. of September, the evening before the King and Duke went to Newmarket for a fortnight, and then only said, that he had Commands from his Master to give his R. H. the most firm assurance of his Friendship imaginable, or something to that purpose, making his R. H. a general Complement, but made no mention of any particular Orders relating to Father Ferryer's Letter. The Duke wondering at this proceeding, and being obliged to stay a good part of October at Newmarket; and soon after his coming back, hearing of the Death of Father Ferryer, he gave over all further prosecuting of the former Project. But I believe I saw Mounsieur Rouvigny's policy all along, who was willing to save his Master's Money, upon assurance that we would do all we could to stave off the Parliament for our own sakes, that we would struggle as hard without money as with it; and we having by that time, upon our own Interest, prevailed to get the Parliament Prorogued to the 13th. of April, he thought that Prorogation being to a day so high in the Spring, would put the Confederates so far beyond their Measures, as that it might procure a Peace, and be as useful to France, as a Dissolution: upon these Reasons I suppose he went. I had several discourses with him; and did open my self so far to him as to say, I could wish his Master would give us leave to offer to our Master 300000 l. for the Dissolution of the Parliament; and shewed him that a Peace would most certainly follow a Dissolution (which he agreed with me in) and that we desir'd not the Money from his Master to excite our wills, or to make us more industrious to use our utmost powers to procure a Dissolution, but to strenghthen our Power and Credit with the King, and to render us more capable to succeed with his Majesty, as most ceriainly we should have done had we been fortified with such an Argument.

To

To this Purpoſe I preſs'd Mounſieur Pompone frequently by Sir William Throckmorton, who returned hence again into France on the 10th of November, the day our Parliament ſhould have met, but was Prorogued. Mounſieur Pompone (as I was informed by Sir William) did ſeem to approve the thing; but yet had Two Objections againſt it: Firſt, That the Sum we propoſed, was Great; and could be very ill ſpared in the circumſtances his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty was in. To which we Anſwer'd, That if by his Expending that Sum, he could procure a Diſſolution of our Parliament, and thereby a Peace, which every Body agreed would neceſſarily follow; his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty would gain his Ends, and ſave Five or Ten Times a greater Sum, and ſo be a good Huſband by his Expence; and if we did not procure a Diſſolution, he ſhould not be at that Expence at all; for that we Deſired him only to promiſe upon that Conditon, which we were content to be Obliged to perform firſt. The Second Objection was, The Duke did not move, nor appear in it Himſelf. To that we Anſwered, That he did not indeed to Mounſieur Pompone, becauſe he had found ſo ill an effect of the Negotiation with Father Ferryer, when it came into Mounſieur Rouvigny's hands; but that he had concerned himſelf in it, to Father Ferryer.

Yet I continued to proſecute and preſs the Diſſolution of the Parliament, deteſting all Prorogations as only ſo much loſs of time, and a means of ſtrengthning all thoſe who depend upon it in Oppoſition to the Crown, the Intereſt of France and Catholick Religion, in the Opinion they had taken, That our King durſt not part with his Parliament; apprehending that another would be much Worſe. Second, That he could not live long without a Parliament, therefore they muſt ſuddenly Meet; and the longer he kept them off, the greater his Neceſſity would grow; and conſequently their Power to make him do what they liſted, would increaſe accordingly: And therefore, if they could but maintain themſelves a while, the day would certainly come in a ſhort time, in which they ſhould be able to work their Wills. Such Diſcourſes as theſe kept the Confederates and our Male-Contents in Heart, and made them weather on the War in ſpight of all our Prorogations: Therefore I preſs'd (as I have ſaid) a Diſſolution until February laſt, when our Circumſtances were ſo totally Changed, that we were forced to change our Counſels too, and be as much for the Parliament's Sitting, as we were before againſt it.

Our Change was thus; Before that time, the Lord Arlington was the only Miniſter in Credit, who thought himſelf out of all danger of the Parliament; he having been Accuſed before them and Juſtified, and therefore was Zealous for their ſitting; and to increaſe his Reputation with them, and to become a perfect Favourite, he ſets himſelf all he could, to Perſecute the Catholick Religion, and to oppoſe the French: To ſhew his Zeal againſt the firſt, he revived ſome old dormant Orders for prohibiting Roman Catholicks to appear before the King, and put them in Execution at his firſt coming into his Office of Lord Chamberlain: And to make ſure work with the ſecond, as he thought; prevailed with the King to give him and the Earl of Oſſory, (who married two Siſters of Myne Heere Odyke's) leave to go over into Holland with the ſaid Heere, to make a Viſit, as they pretended, to their Relations; But indeed, and in truth, to propoſe the Lady Mary (Eldeſt Daughter of his R. H.) as a Match for the Prince of Orange; not only without the conſent, but againſt the good liking of his R. H.: Inſomuch, that the Lord Arlington's Creatures were forced to excuſe him, with a Diſtinction, that the ſaid Lady was not to be looked upon as the Duke's Daughter, but as the King's, and a Child of the State was, and ſo the Duke's conſent not much to be Conſidered in the diſpoſal of her, but only the Intereſt of State. By this he intended to render himſelf the Darling of Parliament and Proteſtants, who look'd upon themſelves as ſecured in their Religion by ſuch an Alliance, and deſigned further to draw us into a Cloſe Conjunction with Holland, and the Enemies of France. The Lord Arlington ſet forth upon this Errand the 10th of November 1674. and returned not till the 6th of January following; During his abſence, the L. Treaſurer, L. Keeper, and the Duke of Lauderdale, who were the only Miniſters of any conſiderable Credit with the King, and who all pretended to be entirely United to the Duke, declaimed Loudly, and with great Violence, againſt the ſaid Lord, and his Actions in Holland; and did hope, in his abſence, to have totally Supplanted him, and to have routed him out of the King's Favour; and after that, thought they might eaſily enough have dealt with the Parliament. But none of them had Courage enough to ſpeak againſt the Parliament, till they could get rid of him; for fear they ſhould not ſucceed, and that the Parliament would Sit in ſpight of them, and come to hear that they had uſed their endeavours againſt it; which would have been ſo Unpardonable a Crime with our Omnipotent Parliament, that no Power could have been able to have Saved them from Puniſhment: But they finding at his Return, that they could not prevail againſt him, by ſuch Means and Arts as they had then tryed, reſolved upon New Counſels; which were to out-run him in his own Courſe; which accordingly they undertook, and became as fierce Apoſtles, and as zealous for Proteſtant Religion, and againſt Popery, as ever my L. Arlington had been before them; and in purſuance thereof, perſuaded the King to iſſue out thoſe ſevere Orders and Proclamations againſt Catholicks, which came out in February laſt; by which, they did as much as in them lay, to extripate all Catholicks, and Catholick Religion, out of the Kingdom; which Counſels, were in my poor opinion ſo Deteſtable, being levelled (as they muſt needs be) ſo directly againſt the Duke, by People which he had Advanced, and who had profeſſed ſo much Duty and Service to him, that we were put upon new Thoughts how to ſave his R. H. now from the Deceits and Snares of thoſe Men, upon whom we formerly depended. We ſaw well enough, that their deſign was to make themſelves as grateful as they could to the Parliament, if it muſt Sit; they thinking nothing ſo acceptable to them, as the perſecution of Popery; and yet they were ſo obnoxious to the Parliament's diſpleaſure in general, that they would have been glad of any Expedient to have kept it off; though they durſt not engage againſt it openly themſelves, but thought this Device of theirs might ſerve for their purpoſes, hoping the Duke would be ſo alarm'd at their proceedings, and by his being left by every Body, that he would be much more afraid of the Parliament than ever, and would uſe his utmoſt Power to prevent its Sitting: which they doubted not but he would endeavour; and they were ready enough to work underhand too for him (for their own ſakes, not his) in order thereunto, but durſt not appear openly; and to encourage the Duke the more to endeavour the Diſſolution of the Parliament, their Creatures uſed to ſay up and down, That this Rigour againſt the Catholicks, was in favour of the Duke, and to make a Diſſolution of the Parliament more eaſy, (which they knew he covered) by obviating one great Objection which was commonly made againſt it, which was, That if the Parliament ſhould be Diſſolved, it would be ſaid, That it was done in favour of Popery; which Clamour they had prevented beforehand by the Severity they had uſed againſt it.

As ſoon as we ſaw theſe Tricks put upon us, we plainly ſaw what Men we had to deal withal, and what we had to truſt to, if we were wholly at their Mercy: But yet durſt not ſeem ſo diſſatisfied as we really were, but rather magnified the Contrivance, as a Device of great Cunning and Skill: all this we did purely to hold them in a belief, that we would endeavour to Diſſolve the Parliament, and that they might rely upon his R. H. for that which we knew they long'd for, and were afraid they might do ſome other way, if they diſcovered that we were reſolved we would not: At length, when we ſaw the Seſſions ſecured, we declared, that we were for the Parliament's meeting; as indeed we were, from the moment we ſaw our ſelves handled by all the King's Miniſters at ſuch a rate that we had Reaſon to believe they would Sacrifice France, Religion, and his R. H. too, to their own Intereſt, if occaſion ſerved; and that they were lead to believe, that that was the only way they had to ſave themſelves at that time: For we ſaw no Expedient fit to ſtop them in their Carreir of perſecution, and thoſe other deſtructive Counſels, but the Parliament; which had ſet it ſelf a long time to diſlike every thing the Miniſters had done, and had appeared violently againſt Popery, whilſt the Court ſeemed to favour it; and therefore we were Confident, that the Miniſters having turned their Faces, the Parliament would do ſo too, and ſtill be againſt them; and be as little for Perſecution then, as they had been for Popery before. This I undertook to manage for the Duke and the King of France's Intereſt; and aſſured Mounſieur Rouvigny (which I am ſure he will teſtify, if occaſion ſerves) that that Seſſions ſhould do neither of them any hurt; for that I was ſure I had Power enough to prevent miſchief, though I durſt not engage for any good they would do; becauſe I had but very few aſſiſtances to carry on the work, and wanted thoſe helps, which others had of making Friends: The Dutch and Spaniard ſpared no pains or expence of Money to animate as many as they could againſt France; Our Lord Treaſurer, Lord Keeper, all the Biſhops, and ſuch as call'd themſelves Old Cavaliers, (who were all then as one Man) were not leſs induſtrious againſt Popery, and had the Purſe at their Girdle too; which is an Excellent Inſtrument to gain Friends with; and all United againſt the Duke, as Patron both of France and Catholick Religion. To deal with all this Force, we had no Money, but what came from a few private Hands; and thoſe ſo mean ones too, that I dare venture to ſay, that I ſpent more my particular ſelf out of my own Fortune, and upon my ſingle Credit, than all the whole Body of Catholicks in England beſides; which was ſo inconſiderable, in compariſon of what our Adverſaries commanded, and we verily believe did beſtow in making their Party, that it is not worth mentioning: Yet notwithſtanding all this, we ſaw that by the help of the Nonconformiſts, as Presbyterians, Independents, and other Sects, (who were as much afraid of Perſecution as our ſelves) and of the Enemies of the Miniſters, and particularly of the Treaſurer; who by that time had ſupplanted the Earl of Arlington, and was grown ſole Manager of all Affairs himſelf, we ſhould be very able to prevent what they deſigned againſt us, and ſo render the Seſſions ineffectual to their Ends, though we might not be able to compaſs our own; which were, to make ſome briſk ſtep in Favour of his R. H. to ſhew the King, that his Majeſties Affairs in Parliament were not Obſtructed, by reaſon of any Averſion they had to his R. H's Perſon, or apprehenſions they had of him, or his Religion; But from Faction and Ambition in ſome, and from a real diſſatisfaction in others, that we have not had ſuch fruits and good Effects of thoſe great ſums of Money which have been formerly given as was expected. If we could then have made but one ſuch ſtep, the King would certainly have reſtored his R. H. to all his Commiſſions; upon which he would have been much greater than ever yet he was in his whole Life, or could probably ever have been by any other Courſe in the World, than what he had taken of becoming Catholick, &c. And we were ſo very near gaining this Point, that I did humbly beg his R. H. to give me leave to put the Parliament upon making an Addreſs to the King, that his Majeſty would be pleaſed to put the Fleet into the hands of his R. H. as the only Perſon likely to give a good Account of ſo important a Charge as that was to the Kingdom; And ſhewed his R. H. ſuch Reaſons to perſwade him that we could carry it, that he agreed with me in it, that he believed we could. Yet others telling him how great a Damage it would be to him, if he ſhould miſs in ſuch an Undertaking (which for my part I could not then ſee, nor do I yet) he was prevailed upon not to venture, though he was perſwaded he could carry it. I did Communicate this Deſign of mine to Mounſieur Rouvigny, who agreed with me, that it would be the greateſt advantage immaginable to his Maſter, to have the Duke's Power and Credit ſo far Advanced as this would certainly do, if we could compaſs it: I ſhewed him all the Difficulty we were like to meet with, and what helps we ſhould have; but that we ſhould want one very materia one, Money, to carry on the Work as we ought; and therefore I do Confeſs, I did ſhamefully beg his Maſter's Help, and would willingly have been in everlaſting Diſgrace with all the World

World, if I had not with that assistance of twenty Thousand Pound Sterling, (which perhaps is not the tenth part of what was spent on the other side) made it evident to the Duke, that he could not have missed it. Mounsieur Rouvigny used to tell me, That if he could be sure of succeeding in that Design, his Master would give a very much larger Sum; but that he was not in a Condition to throw away Money upon Uncertainties. I Answered, That nothing of that nature could be so infallibly sure, as not to be subject to some possibilities of Failing; but that I durst venture to undertake to make it evident, that there was as great an assurance of succeeding in it, as any Husbandman can have of a Crop in Harvest, who sows his Ground in its due Season; and yet it would be counted a very imprudent piece of wariness in any body, to scruple the venturing so much Seed in its proper time, because it is possible it may be totally lost, and no benefit of it found in Harvest; He that minds the Winds and the Rains at that rate, shall neither Sow nor Reap. I take our Case to be much the same as it was the last Sessions: If we can advance the Duke's Interest one step forward, we shall put him out of the reach of Chance for ever; For he makes such a Figure already, that Cautious Men do not care to Act against him, nor always without him, because they do not see that he is much outpowered by his Enemies; Yet is he not at such a Pitch, as to be quite out of danger, or free from opposition: But if he could gain any considerable new addition of Power, all would come over to him as to the only steddy Center of our Government, and no Body would contend with him further. Then would Catholicks be at Rest, and his Most Christian Majestie's Interest secured with us in England, beyond all apprehensions whatsoever.

In order to this, we have two great Designs to Attempt this next Sessions. First, that which we were about before, viz. To put the Parliament upon making it their humble Request to the King, that the Fleet may be put into his R. H's Care. Secondly, to get an Act for general Liberty of Conscience. If we carry these two, or either of them, we shall in effect do what we list afterwards; and truly, we think we do not undertake these great Points very unreasonably, but that we have good Cards for our Game; Not but that we expect great Opposition, and have great reason to beg all the Assistance we can possibly get; and therefore, if his Most Christian Majesty would stand by us a little in this Conjuncture, and help us with such a sum as 20000 Pound sterling (which is no very great matter to venture upon such an undertaking as this) I would be content to be Sacrificed to the utmost Malice of my Enemies, if I did not Succeed. I have proposed This several times to Mounsieur Rouvigny, who seemed always of my Opinion; and has often told me, that he has writ into France upon this Subject, and has desired me to do the like: But I know not whether he will be as Zealous in that point as a Catholick would be; because our prevailing in these things would give the greatest Blow to the Protestant Religion here, that ever it received since its Birth; which perhaps he would not be very glad to see; especially when he believes there is another way of doing his Masters Business well enough without it; which is by a Dissolution of the Parliament; upon which I know he mightily depends, and Concludes, that if that comes to be Dissolved, it will be as much as he needs care for; proceeding perhaps upon the same manner of Discourse which we had this time twelve Months. But with submission to his better Judgment, I do think that our Case is extreamly much altered to what it was, in Relation to a Dissolution; for then the Body of our Governing Ministers (all but the Earl of Arlington) were entirely United to the Duke; and would have Governed his Way, if they had been free from all Fear and Controul, as they had been, if the Parliament had been Removed. But they having since that time Engaged in quite different Counsels, and Embark'd themselves and Interests upon other Bottoms, having declared themselves against Popery, &c. To Dissolve the Parliament simply, and without any other step made, will be to leave them to Govern what way they list, which we have Reason to suspect will be to the prejudice of France and Catholick Religion. And their late Declarations and Actions have Demonstrated to us, that they take that for the most Popular way for themselves, and likeliest to keep them in absolute Power; whereas, if the Duke should once get above them (after the Tricks they have plaid with him) they are not sure he will Totally forget the Usage he has had at their hands: Therefore it Imports us now to Advance our Interest a little further, by some such Project as I have Named, before we Dissolve the Parliament; Or else perhaps, we shall but Change Masters (a Parliament for Ministers) and continue still in the same Slavery and Bondage as before. But one such step as I have proposed, being well made; we may safely see them Dissolved, and not fear the Ministers; but shall be Established, and stand Firm without any Opposition; for every Body will then come over to us, and Worship the Rising Sun.

I have here given you the History of three Years, as short as I could, though I am afraid it will seem very long and troublesome to your Reverence, among the multitude of affairs you are concern'd in: I have also shewn you the present State of our Case, which may (by God's Providence, and good Conduct) be made of such advantage to God's Church; that for my part, I can scarce believe my self awake, or the thing real, when I think on a Prince in such an age as we live in, converted to such a Degree of Zeal and Piety, as not to regard any thing in the World in comparison of God Almighty's Glory, the Salvation of his own Soul, and the Conversion of our poor Kingdom; which has been a long time oppress, and miserably harrast with Heresy and Schism. I doubt not but your Reverence will consider our Case, and take it to heart, and afford us what help you can; both with the King of Heaven, by your holy Prayers, and with his Most Christian Majesty, by that great Credit which you most justly have with him. And if ever his Majesties affairs (or your own) can ever want the service of so inconsiderable a Creature as my self, you shall never find any Body readier to obey your Commands, or faithfuller in the Execution

Execution of them, to the best of his Power, than

Your most Humble and

Obedient Servant

Att. Gen. That I may make things clear as much as possible; you see, Here's a Letter prepared to be sent, writ with Mr. Coleman's own hand, to Mounsieur Le Chese: This Letter bears date the twenty ninth of September. We have an Answer to it from Paris, October twenty third, whereby Mounsieur Le Chese owns the receipt of this; And in this answer, is expresst Thanks to Mr. Coleman for his long Letter. Sir Robert, Pray tell how you came by this Letter.

Sir Rob. Southwell. I found this Letter in Mr. Coleman's Canvas Bag; after we had once looked over the Letters, we found it: Sir Phillip Lloyd Examined it; And we looked over those Papers very exactly: Because the House of Commons were very much concern'd, and thought those Papers were not throughly Examined, I reviewed them again. This Letter was found on Sunday following after the Papers were seized.

Mr. Att. Sir Rob. Southwell, I pray read the Letter in French first to the Court, (Sir Rob. having read the Letter in French) Mr. Attorney desired him to read it in English. Sir Rob. read it in English; The Letter was dated Paris twenty third October 1675. And subscribed, Your most humble and obedient servant, D C L. at the bottom.

The LETTER.

From PARIS, 23 October 1675.

SIR,

THE Letter which you gave your self the trouble to write to me, came to my Hands but the last Night. I read it with great satisfaction; and I assure you, that its length did not make it seem tedious. I should be very glad on my part to assist in seconding your good intentions; I will consider of the Means to effect it; and when I am better informed than I am as yet, I will give you an Account: To the end I may hold Intelligence with you, as you did with my Predecessor. I desire you to believe that I will never fail as to my good will, for the service of your Master, whom I Honour as much as he deserves, and that it is with great truth that I am.

Your most Humble and most Obedient Servant

D. L. C.

Att. Gen. We made mention of a Declaration: By his long Narrative it plainly appears, that Mr. Coleman would have had another Parliament. And the reason why he was pleased to publish a Declaration, was, thereby to shew the Reasons for its Dissolution. Sir Philip Lloyd, did you find this Writing among Mr. Coleman's Papers?

Sir P. L. I did find it among his Papers.

Att. Gen. Pray read the Declaration.

Clerk of the Crown reads the Declaration.

The Declaration which Mr. Coleman prepared, thereby shewing his Reasons for the Dissolution of the Parliament.

WE having taken into our Serious Consideration the heats and animosities which have of late appeared among many of our very Loyal and Loving Subjects of this Kingdom, and the many fears and jealousies which some of them seem to lye under, of having their Liberties and Properties invaded, or their Religion altered; and withal, carefully reflecting upon our own Government since our happy Restauration, and the end and aim of it, which has always been the ease and security of our People in all their Rights, and Advancement of the beauty and splendour of the true Protestant Religion established in the Church of England; of both which we have given most signal Testimonies, even to the stripping our Self of many Royal Prerogatives which our Predecessors enjoyed, and were our undoubted due; as the Court of Wards, Purveyances, and other things of great value; and denying to our Self many advantages, which we might reasonably and legally have taken by the Forfeitures made in the times of Rebellion, and the great Revenues due to the Church at our Return, which no particular Person had any right to: Instead of which, we consented to an Act of Oblivion of all those Barbarous usages which our Royal Father and our Self had met withal, much more full and gracious than almost any of our Subjects, who were generally become in some measure or other obnoxious to the Laws, had confidence to ask; and freely renounced all our Title to the Profit which we might have made by the Church-Lands, in favour of our Bishops and other Ecclesiastical Ministers, out of our Zeal to the Glory of our Protestant Church; which Clemency towards all, and some even high Offenders, and zeal for Religion, we have to this day constantly continued to exercise. Considering all this, we cannot but be sensibly afflicted to see, that the frowardness of some few Tumultuous heads should be able to infect our Loyal and Good People with apprehensions destructive of their own, and the general quiet of our Kingdom; and more especially, their perverseness should be powerful enough to distract our very Parliament, and such a Parliament, as has given us such Testimonies of its Loyalty, Wisdom, and Bounty, and to which we have given as many Marks of our Affection and Esteem, so as to make them mis-construe all our endeavours for to preserve our People in ease and prosperity, and against all reason and evidence to represent them to our Subjects as Arguments of fear and disquiet; and under these specious pretences of securing Property and Religion, to demand unreasonable things, manifestly destructive of what they would be thought to aim at; and from our frequent Condescentions, out of our meer Grace, to grant them what we conceived might give them satisfaction, though to the actual prejudice of our Royal Prerogative, to make them presume to propose to advance such extravagancies into Laws, as they themselves have formerly declared detestable; deteſtable; of which we cannot forbear to give our truly Loyal Subjects ſome inſtances, to undeceive our innocent and well-minded People, who have many of them of late been too eaſily miſled, by the factious endeavours of ſome turbulent Spirits. For example, we having judged it neceſſary to declare War againſt the States of Holland, during a receſs of Parliament, which we could not defer longer, without loſing an advantage which then preſented it ſelf, nor have done ſooner, without expoſing our Honour to a potent Enemy without due preparation, we thought it prudent to unite all our Subjects at home, and did believe a general Indulgence of tender Conſciences the moſt proper expedient to effect it; and therefore did by our Authority in Eccleſiaſticks, which we thought ſufficient to warrant what we did, ſuſpend penal Laws againſt Diſſenters in Religion, upon Conditions expreſſed in our Declaration, out of Reaſon of State, as well as to gratifie our own nature, which always we confeſs abhorr'd rigour, eſpecially in Religion, when tenderneſs might be as uſeful. After we had engaged in the War, we Prorogued our Parliament from April to October, being confident we ſhould be able by that time to ſhew our People ſuch Succeſs of our Arms, as ſhould make them cheerfully contribute to our charge. At October we could have ſhewn them ſucceſs even beyond our own hopes, or what they could poſſibly expect; our Enemies having loſt by that time, near 100 ſtrong Towns and Forts, taken in effect by us, we holding them buſie at Sea, whilſt our Allies poſſeſſed themſelves of their Lands, with little or no reſiſtance; and of which, the great advantage would moſt viſibly have been ours, had not the fewds we now complain of, which have been ſince unhappily ſtarted, and factiouſly improved by ſome few, dis-united our People, diſtracted our Counſels, and render'd our late endeavours vain and fruitleſs; ſo that we had no reaſon to doubt of our Peoples ready and liberal concurrence to our Aſſiſtance in that Conjuncture. Yet our Enemies propoſing to us at that time a Treaty for Peace, which we were always ready to accept upon Honourable Terms; and conſidering with our ſelf, that in caſe that Treaty ſucceeded, a far leſs ſum of Money would ſerve our occaſions, than otherwiſe would be neceſſary: We out of our tender regard to the eaſe of our People. Prorogued our Parliament again to February, to attend the ſucceſs of our Treaty, rather than to demand ſo much Money in October, as would be fit to carry on the War. But we ſoon finding that our Enemies did not intend us any juſt Satisfaction, ſaw a neceſſity of proſecuting the War, which we deſigned to do moſt vigorouſly; and in order to it, reſolv'd to preſs our Parliament to ſupply us as ſpeedily as may be, to enable us to put our Fleet to Sea early in the Spring, which would after their Meeting grow on apace. And being informed that many Members were dead during the long Receſs, we Iſſued out our Writs for new Elections, that our Houſe of Commons might be full at the firſt opening of the Seſſions, to prevent any delay in our Publick Affairs, or diſlike in our People, as might poſſibly have riſen from the want of ſo great a Number of their Repreſentatives, if any thing of moment ſhould be concluded before it had been ſupplied. Having govern'd our Actions all along with ſuch careful reſpect to the eaſe of our Subjects, we at the Meeting of our Parliament in February 1672. expected from them ſome ſuitable expreſſions of their ſenſe of our Favours; but quite contrary, found our Self alarm'd with Clamorous Complaints from ſeveral Cabals againſt all our Proceedings, frighting many of our good Subjects into ſtrange Conceits of what they muſt look for by their Seditious and falſe Conſtructions of what we had ſo Candidly and Sincerely done for their good; and ſurpriſed with a Vote of our Houſe of Commons, againſt our Writs of Elections, which we intended for their ſatisfactions, againſt many Precedents of ours, or without any colour of Law of their ſide, denying our Power to Iſſue out ſuch Writs, Addreſſing to us to Iſſue out others: Which we conſented to do at their Requeſt, chooſing rather to yield to our Subjects in that point, than to be forced to ſubmit to our Enemies in others; hoping that our Parliament being ſenſibly touched with that our extraordinary condeſcention, would go on to conſider the Publick concern of the Kingdom, without any further to do: But we found another uſe made of Our ſo eaſie compliance, which ſerv'd to encourage them to ask more; ſo that ſoon after we found our Declaration for Indulging tender Conſciences Arraigned, Voted Illegal; though We cannot to this day underſtand the conſiſtences of that Vote, with our undoubted Supremacy in all Eccleſiaſticks, Recognized by ſo many Acts of Parliament, and required to be Sworn to, by all our Subjects, and Addreſſes made to us one after another to recal it, which we condeſcended to alſo; from hence they proceeded to Us to weaken Our Self in an Actual War, and to render many of Our Subjects, of whoſe Loyalty and Ability we were well ſatisfied, incapable to ſerve Us, when we wanted Officers and Soldiers, and had reaſon to invite as many Experienced Men as We could to engage in Our Arms, rather than to incapacitate or diſcourage any; yet this alſo We gratified them in, to gain their Aſſiſtance againſt Our Enemies, who grew high by theſe Our Differences, rather than expoſe Our Country to their Power and Fury; hoping that in time Our People would be confounded to ſee Our Conceſſions, and be aſhamed of their Errors in making ſuch Demands. But finding the unfortunate Effects of Our diviſions the following Summer, We found Our Parliament more extravagant at the next meeting than ever, addreſſing to Us to hinder the Conſummation of our Dear Brother's Marriage, contrary to the Law of God, which forbiddeth any to ſeparate any, whom he hath joyned, againſt Our Faith and Honour engag'd in the Solemn Treaty, obſtinately perſiſting in that Addreſs, after We had acquainted them, That the Marriage was then actually ratified, and that We had acted in it by our Ambaſſador; ſo that We were forced to ſeparate them for a while, hoping they would bethink themſelves better at their meeting in January. Inſtead of being more moderate or ready to conſider Our wants towards the War; they Voted as they had done before, not to aſſiſt Us ſtill, till their Religion were effectually ſecur'd ſecur'd againſt Popery, Aggrievances redreſſed, and all obnoxious Men removed from Us; which We had reaſon to take for an abſolute denyal of all Aid; conſidering the indefiniteneſs of what was to proceed, and the Moral impoſſibility of effecting it in their ſenſes: For when will they ſay their Religion is effectually ſecured from Popery, if it were in danger then, by reaſon of the inſolency of Papiſts. When our Houſe of Commons, which is made up of Members from every Corner of Our Kingdom, with Invitations publickly Poſted up to all Men to accuſe them, has not yet in ſo many Years as they have complained of them, been able to charge on ſingle Member of that Communion, with ſo much as a Miſdemeanour. Or what Security could they poſſibly expect againſt that Body of Men, or their Religion, more than We had given them? or how can we hope to live ſo perfectly, that ſtudy and pains may not make a Collection of Grievances, as conſiderable as that which was lately preſented to Us, than which We could not have wiſh'd for a better Vindication of Our Government? or when ſhall We be ſure that all obnoxious Men are removed from Us, when Common fame thinks fit to call them ſo; which is to every Body, without any proof, ſufficient to render any Man obnoxious, who is Popiſhly affected, or any thing elſe that is ill, though they have never ſo often or lately complyed with their own Teſts. and Marks of Diſtinction and Diſcriminations. Finding Our People thus unhappily diſordered, we ſaw it impoſſible to proſecute the War any longer; and therefore did by their Advice make a Peace upon ſuch Conditions as we could get; hoping that being gratified in that Darling Point, they would at leaſt have paid Our Debts, and enabled Us to have Built ſome Ships for the future Security of Our Honour, and their own Properties; but they being tranſported with their ſucceſs in asking, were reſolved to go on ſtill that way, and would needs have Us put upon the removing of Our Judges from thoſe Charges, which they have always hitherto held at the Will and Pleaſure of the Crown, out of our Power to alter the ancient Laws of trying of Peers, and to make it a Premunire in Our Subjects (in a caſe ſuppoſed) not to fight againſt Our Self; nay, ſome had the heart to ask, that the Hereditary Succeſſion of our Crown (which is the Foundation of all Our Laws) ſhould be changed into a ſort of Election, they requiring the Heir to be qualified with certain Conditions, to make him capable of Succeeding, and Out-doing that Popiſh Doctrine, which We have ſo long, and ſo loudly with good reaſon decried, That Hereſie incapacitates Kings to Reign. They would have had, That the Heir of the Crown, marrying a Papiſt, though he continued never ſo Orthodox himſelf, ſhould forfeit his right of Inheritance; not underſtanding this Paradoxical way of ſecuring Religion by deſtroying it, as this would have done that of the Church of England, which always taught Obedience to their Natural Kings, as an indiſpenſable Duty in all good Chriſtians, let the Religion or Deportment of their Prince be what it will; and not knowing how ſoon that Impediment, which was ſuppoſed as ſufficient to keep out an Heir, might be thought as fit to remove a Poſſeſſor: And comparing that Bill which would have it a Premunire in a Sheriff not to raiſe the Poſſe Comitatus, againſt Our Commiſſion in a Caſe there ſuppoſed, though We Our Self ſhould aſſiſt that Our Commiſſion in Our Perſon: For not being excepted, is implyed with the other made by this very Parliament in the 14th Year of Our Reign, which all Our Subjects, or at leaſt many of them, were obliged to Swear (viz. That the Doctrine of taking up Arms by the King's Authority againſt His Perſon, was deteſtable; and We ſoon found that the Deſign was levelled againſt the good Proteſtant Religion of Our good Church, which its Enemies had a mind to Blemiſh, by ſliding in ſlily thoſe damnable Doctrines, by ſuch an Authority as that of Our Parliament, into the Profeſſion of Our Faith or Practices, and ſo expoſe Our whole Religion to the Scorn and Reproach of themſelves, and all the World: We therefore thought it Our duty to be ſo watchful as to prevent the Enemies ſowing ſuch miſchievous Tares as theſe, in the wholſom Field of Our Church of England, and to guard the unſpotted Spouſe of Our Bleſſed Lord, from that foul Accuſation, with which ſhe juſtly charges other Churches, of teaching their Children Loyalty, with ſo many Reſerves and Conditions, that they ſhall never want a diſtinction to juſtifie Rebellion; nor a Text of Scripture, as good as Curſe ye Meroz, to encourage them o be Traitors: whereas Our truly Reformed Church knows no ſuch Subtilties; but teaches according to the ſimplicity of Chriſtianity, To ſubmit to every Ordinance of Man for God's ſake, according to the natural ſignification of the words, without equivocation or Artificial turns. In order to which, having thought to diſſolve that Body, which We have theſe many Years ſo tenderly Cheriſhed, and which We are ſure conſiſts generally of moſt Dutiful and Loyal Members, We were forc'd to Prorogue Our Parliament till November next, hoping thereby to cure thoſe Diſorders, which have been ſown amongſt the Beſt and Loyalleſt Subjects, by a few malicious Incendiaries. But underſtanding ſince, that ſuch who have ſowed that Seditious ſeed, are as induſtriouſly careful to water it by their Cabals, and Emiſſaries, inſtructed on purpoſe to poiſon Our People with diſcourſes in publick places, in hopes of a great Crop of Confuſion, their beloved fruit, the next Seſſions; We have found it abſolutely neceſſary to Diſſolve Our Parliament, though with great reluctancy and violence to Our inclination: But remembring the days of Our Royal Father, and the progreſs of Affairs then, how from a Cry againſt Popery, the People went on to complain of Grievances, and againſt Evil Counſellors, and His Majeſties Prerogative; untill they advanc'd into a formal Rebellion, which brought forth the moſt dire and fatal Effects, that ever were yet heard of amongſt any Men, Chriſtians or others; and withal, finding ſo great a reſemblance between the Proceedings then and now, that they ſeem both Broth of the ſame Brains: And being Confirm'd in that Conceit, by obſerving the Actions of many now, who had a great ſhare in the management of the former Rebellion, and their zeal for Religion, who by their Lives give us too much much reaſon to ſuſpect they have none at all; We thought it not ſafe to dally too long, as Our Royal Father did, with Submiſſions and Condeſcentions, endeavouring to cure Men infected, without removing them from the Air where they got the Diſeaſe, and in which it ſtill rages and increaſes daily. For fear of meeting with no better ſucceſs than He found, in ſuffering his Parliament to Challenge Power they had nothing to do with, till they had bewitch'd the People into fond deſires of ſuch things as quickly deſtroyed both King and Country, which in Us would be an intollerable Error, having been warn'd ſo lately by the moſt Execrable Murther of Our Royal Father, and the inhumane Uſage, which We Our Self in Our Royal Perſon and Family have ſuffered, and Our Loyal Subjects have endured by ſuch practices; And leaſt this Our great Care of this Our Kingdom's Quiet, and Our own Honour and Safety ſhould, as Our beſt Actions have hitherto been, be wreſted to ſome ſiniſter Senſe, and Arguments be made from it to ſcare Our Good People into any apprehenſions of an Arbitrary Government, either in Church or State; We do hereby ſolemnly declare and faithfully engage Our Royal Word, That We will in no caſe either Eccleſiaſtical or Civil, violate or alter the known Laws of Our Kingdom, or invade any Man's Property or Liberty, without due courſe of Law. But that We will with Our utmoſt Indeavours, preſerve the true Proteſtant Religion, and Redreſs all ſuch things as ſhall indifferently, and without paſſion, be judg'd Grievances by Our next Parliament; which We do by God's bleſſing intend to Call before the end of February next. In the mean time, We do ſtrictly Charge and Command all manner of Perſons whatſoever, to forbear to talk ſeditiouſly, ſlightly or irreverently of Our Diſſolving of the Parliament, of this Our Declaration, or of Our Perſon or Government, as they will anſwer it at their perils; We being reſolv'd to proſecute all Offenders in that kind with the utmoſt rigour and ſeverity of the Law. And to the end that ſuch Licentious Perſons, if any ſhall be ſo impudent and obſtinate as to diſobey this Our Royal Command, may be detected, and brought to due Puniſhment, We have Ordered Our Lord Treaſurer to make ſpeedy payment of Twenty Pounds to any Perſon or Perſons, who ſhall diſcover or bring any ſuch ſeditious, ſlight or irreverent Talker before any of Our Principal Secretaries of State.

Record. I would have the Jury ſhould know the Declaration ends, To one of his Majeſties Principal Secretaries of State; whereof he hoped to be one.

Att. Gen. This is written in the Name of the King; for Mr. Coleman thought himſelf now Secretary of State, and he penns the Declaration for the King to give an Account, why the Parliament was Diſſolved.

Serj. Maynard. The long Letter, it appears, was to diſſolve the Parliament; and to make it Cock-ſure, he provides a Declaration to ſhew the Reaſon of it: It was done in order to bring in Popery; that may appear by the ſubſequent proof.

Att. Gen. I have other Evidence to offer to your Lordſhip, which is, That Mr. Coleman was not only ſo bold as to prepare a Declaration for the King, but alſo out of his own further ingenuity, prepares a Letter (contrary to the Duke's knowledge) for the Duke, which before ſeveral Lords he confeſſed; and Sir Philip Floyd is here ready to juſtifie it.

Sir Phi. Floyd. I did attend a Committee of the Houſe of Lords to Newgate, who examined Mr. Coleman, and told him of the Letter Mr. Attorney mentioneth; he then confeſſed, That it was prepared without the Order and Privity of the Duke; and when he was ſo bold as to ſhew it the Duke, the Duke was very Angry and rejected it.

L. C. J. He hath been a very forward undertaker on the behalf of the Duke.

Mr. Att. Gen. I deſire the Letter may be read.

The Copy of the Letter written to Mounſieur Le Cheſe, the French King's Confeſſor, which Mr. Coleman confeſſed he himſelf wrote and counterfeited in the Duke's Name.

Clerk of the Crown reads the Letter.

'THE 2d of June laſt paſt, his moſt Chriſtian 'Majeſty offered me moſt generouſly his 'Friendſhip, and the uſe of his Purſe to the aſ'ſiſtance againſt the deſigns of my Enemies 'and his; and proteſted unto me, That his 'Intereſt and mine were ſo clearly link'd to'gether, that thoſe that oppoſed the one, 'ſhould be lookt upon as Enemies to the o'ther; and told me moreover his Opinion of 'my Lord Arlington, and the Parliament; 'which is, That he is of opinion that neither 'the one nor the other, is in his Intereſt or 'mine: and thereupon he deſired me to make 'ſuch Propoſitions as I ſhould think fit in this 'Conjuncture.

'All was Tranſacted by the means of Father 'Ferrier, who made uſe of Sir William Throck'morton, who is an honeſt Man and of truth, 'who was then at Paris, and had held Corre'ſpondence with Coleman, one of my Family, 'in whom I have great Confidence.

'I was much ſatisfied to ſee his moſt Chriſti'an Majeſty altogether of my opinion, ſo I 'made him Anſwer the 29th of June, by the 'ſame means he made uſe of to write to me, 'that is, by Coleman, who addreſt himſelf to 'Father Ferrier, (by the forementioned Knight) 'and entirely agreed to his moſt Chriſtian Ma'jeſty, as well to what had reſpect to the 'Union of our Intereſts, as the unuſefulneſs 'of my Lord Arlington, and the Parliament, 'in order to the Service of the King my Bro'ther, and his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty; and 'that it was neceſſary to make uſe of our joynt 'and utmoſt Credits, to prevent the Succeſs of 'thoſe evil deſigns, reſolved on by the Lord 'Arlington and the Parliament, againſt his moſt 'Chriſtian Majeſty and my Self; which of my 'ſide I promiſe really to perform; of which, 'ſince that time, I have given reaſonable 'good proof.

'Moreover I made ſome Propoſals, which I 'thought neceſſary to bring to paſs what We 'were obliged to undertake, aſſuring him, 'That nothing could ſo firmly eſtabliſh Our 'Intereſt with the King my Brother, as that 'very ſame Offer of the help of his Purſe, by 'which means, I had much reaſon to hope 'I ſhould be enabled to perſuade to the Diſ-

'solving of the Parliament, and to make void 'the Designs of my Lord Arlington, who works 'inceſſantly to advance the Intereſt of the 'Prince of Orange and the Hollanders, and to 'leſſen that of the King your Maſter, not-'withſtanding all the Proteſtations he hath 'made to this Hour, to render him ſervice.

'But as that, which was propoſed, was at 'a ſtand by reaſon of the ſickneſs of Father 'Ferrier, ſo our affairs ſucceeded not accor-'ding to our deſigns, only Father Ferrier wrote 'to me, the 15th of the laſt Month, That 'he had Communicated thoſe Propoſitions to 'his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, and that they 'had been very well lik'd of; but as they con-'tained things that had regard to the Ca-'tholick Religion, and to the offer and uſe 'of his Purſe, he gave me to underſtand he did 'not deſire I ſhould treat with M. Revigny upon 'the Firſt, but as to the Laſt, and had the ſame 'time acquainted me, that M. Revigny had 'order to grant me whatſoever the conjun-'cture of our Affairs did require; and have 'expected the effects of it to this very Hour: 'But nothing being done in it, and ſeeing on 'the other Hand that my Lord Arlington and 'ſeveral others endeavoured by a thouſand 'deceits to break the good Intelligence, which 'is between the King my Brother, his 'moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, and my Self, to the 'end they might deceive Us all Three, I have 'thought fit to advertiſe you of all that is paſt, 'and deſire of you your Aſſiſtance and Friend-'ſhip to prevent the Rogueries of thoſe, who 'have no other deſign than to betray the 'Concerns of France and England alſo, and who 'by their pretended ſervice, are the occaſion 'they ſucceed not.

'As to any thing more, I refer you to Sir Wil-'liam Throckmorton, and Coleman, whom I have 'Commanded to give an account of the whole 'ſtate of Our Affair, and of the true Con-'dition of England, with many others, and 'principally my Lord Arlington's endeavours, 'to repreſent to you quite otherwiſe than it is.

'The Two Firſt I mentioned to you are 'Firm to my Intereſt, ſo that you may treat 'with them without any apprehenſion.

Serj. Maynard, Gentlemen of the Jury, pray obſerve that he takes upon him to prepare a Letter and that in the Duke's Name, but contrary to the Duke's Knowledge or Privacy; for when he had ſo much boldneſs as to tell him of it, the Duke was Angry and rejected it. But in it we may ſee what kind of paſſages there are, he takes very much upon him in this matter. And Mr. Coleman muſt keep the Secret too.

Att. Gen. My Lord, I have but one Paper more to read, and I have kept it till the laſt; becauſe if we had proved nothing by Witneſs, or not read any thing but this, This one Letter is ſufficient to maintain the Charge againſt him: It plainly appears to whom it was directed, and at what time. It begins thus, (I ſent your Reverence a tedious long Letter on our 29th of September,) I only mention this, to ſhew about what time it was ſent. There are ſome Clauſes in it will ſpeak better than I can; Sir Tho. Doleman and Sir Philip Floyd ſwear he hath confeſſed and owned it to be his hand writing. I deſire the Letter may be read.

Clerk of the Crown reads the Letter.

SIR.

I Sent your Reverence a tedious long Letter on our 29th of September, to inform you of the progreſs of Affairs for theſe 2 or 3 laſt Years; I having now again the opportunity of a very ſure Hand to convey this by, I have ſent you a Cipher, becauſe our Parliament now drawing on, I may poſſibly have occaſion to ſend you ſomething which you may be willing enough to know, and may be neceſſary for us that you ſhould, when we may want the conveniency of a Meſſenger. When any thing occurs of more concern other than which may not be fit to be truſted even to a Cipher alone, I will, to make ſuch a thing more ſecure, write in Lemmon between the Lines of a Letter, which ſhall have nothing in it viſſible, but what I care not who ſees, but dryed by a warm fire, ſhall diſcover what is written; ſo that if the Letter comes to your Hands, and upon drying it, any thing appears more than did before, you may be ſure no Body has ſeen it by the way. I will not trouble you with that way of writing, but upon ſpecial occaſions, and then I will give you a hint to direct you to look for it, by concluding my viſible Letter with ſomething of fire or burning, by which mark you may pleaſe to know, that there is ſomething underneath, and how my Letter is to be uſed to find it out.

We have here a mighty Work upon our Hands, no leſs than the Converſion of three Kingdoms, and by that prehaps the utter ſubduing of a Peſtilent Hereſie, which has domineered over great part of this Northern World a long time; there were never ſuch hopes of ſucceſs ſince the Death of our Queen Mary, as now in our days. When God has given us a Prince, who is become (may I ſay a Miracle) zealous of being the Author and Inſtrument of ſo glorious a Work; but the oppoſition we are ſure to meet with, is alſo like to be great: So that it imports us to get all the aid and aſſiſtance we can, for the Harveſt is great, and the Labourers but few. That which we rely upon moſt, next to God Almighty's Providence, and the favour of my Maſter the Duke, is the mighty mind of His moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, whoſe generous Soul inclines him to great undertakings, which being managed by your Reverence's exemplary piety and prudence, will certainly make him look upon this as moſt ſuitable to himſelf, and beſt becoming his power and thoughts; ſo that I hope you will pardon me if I be very troubleſom to you upon this occaſion, from whom I expect the greateſt help we can hope for. I muſt confeſs I think His Chriſtian Majeſty's Temporal Intereſt is ſo much attracted to that of his R. H. (which can never be conſiderable, but upon the growth and advancement of the Catholick Religion) that his Miniſters cannot give him better advice, even in a Politick ſenſe, abſtracting from the conſiderations of the next World, that of our Bleſſed Lord, to ſeek firſt the Kingdom of Heaven, and the Righteouſneſs thereof, that all other Things may be added unto him. That I know his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty has more powerful motives ſuggeſted to him by his own Devotion, and your Reverence's zeal for God's Glory, to engage him to afford us the beſt help he can in our preſent circumſtances. But we

we are a little unhappy in this, that we cannot preſs His Majeſty by his preſent Miniſter here upon theſe latter Arguments (which are moſt ſtrong) but only upon the firſt, Mr. Rouvigny's ſenſe and ours differing very much upon them, though we agree perfectly upon the reſt: And indeed, though he be a very able Man as to his Maſter's ſervice in things where Religion is not concerned; yet I believe it were much more happy, (conſidering the poſture he is now in) that his temper were of ſuch a ſort, that we might deal clearly with him throughout, and not be forc'd to ſtop ſhort in a Diſcourſe of conſequence, and leave the moſt material part out, becauſe we know it will ſhock his particular Opinion, and ſo perhaps meet with diſlike and oppoſition, though never ſo neceſſary to the main concern. I am afraid we ſhall find too much reaſon for this Complaint in this next Seſſion of Parliament: For had we had one here from His moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, who had taken the whole Buſineſs to Heart, and who would have repreſented the ſtate of our Caſe truly, as it is, to his Maſter, I do not doubt but His moſt Chriſtian Majeſty would have engaged himſelf further in the affair than at preſent I fear he has done, and by his Approbation have given ſuch Counſels as have been offered to his R. H. by thoſe few Catholicks who have acceſs to him, and who are bent to ſerve him and advance the Catholick Religion with all their might, and might have more credit with his R. H. than I fear they have found, and have aſſiſted them alſo with his Purſe as far as 10000 Crowns, or ſome ſuch ſum (which to him is very inconſiderable, but would have been to them of greater uſe than can be imagined) towards gaining others to help them, or at leaſt not to oppoſe them. If we had been ſo happy as to have had His moſt Chriſtian Majeſty with us to this degree, I would have anſwered with my Life for ſuch ſucceſs this Seſſions, as would have put the Intereſt of the Catholick Religion, his R. H. and His moſt Chriſtian Majeſty out of all danger, for the time to come. But wanting thoſe helps of recommending thoſe neceſſary Counſels, which have been given his R. H. in ſuch manner as to make him think them worth his accepting, and fit to govern himſelf by, and of thoſe advantages, which a little Money well managed, would have gained us. I am afraid we ſhall not be much better at the end of this Seſſions than we are now; I pray God we do not loſe ground. By my next, which will be e're long, I ſhall be able to tell your Reverence more particularly, what we are like to expect. In the mean time I moſt humbly beg your Holy Prayers for all our Undertakings, and that you will be pleaſed to honour me ſo far as to eſteem me what I am entirely, and without any reſerve.

Mon tres Reverend Pere le votre R.

Le plus humble plus obeiſant Serviteur.

[Several other Letters were read, but becauſe of prolixity they are omitted, theſe being moſt material.]

Att. Gen. I have done with my Evidence, we need no more proof againſt him.

Priſ. My Lord, I would, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, very fain ask of Mr. Oates (becauſe he was pleaſed to ſay he was preſent with me in May or April) whether he knows the particular days of the Months.

[Here Mr. Oates (who being tired, withdrew to reſt himſelf) was called, and the Priſoner was asked, whether he would ſpeak with Bedloe, but he deſired not to ſpeak with him.]

Mr. Oates. The Conſult that was held in May New-ſtile, is April Old-ſtile, it was within a day or two, or three of the Conſult.

Priſ. Where was the Conſult?

Oates. It was begun at the White-Horſe Tavern, then they did adjourn it to ſeveral Clubs and Companies, and you came two or three days after the Conſult to the Provincial's Chamber, we then deſiring to go out of Town.

Priſ. Was you there, and who elſe?

Oates. There was the Provincial, and Micho, and Strange the Old Provincial, and Keins your Companion.

Priſ. What day of Auguſt was that at the Savoy?

Oates. I cannot Swear the particular day of the Month, I cannot ſo far charge my memory.

The Reſult at the Conſult in May was, that Pickering and Groves ſhould go on in their attempt, to aſſaſſinate the Perſon of His Majeſty by Shooting, or otherwiſe. Mr. Coleman knew of this, and ſaid, it was a good deſign.

L. C. J. Who was there? was Mr. Coleman with them at the Conſultation?

Oates. No, my Lord, but two or three days after the Conſultation he was at Wild-Houſe, and there he expreſſed that he approved of it.

L. C. J. Did he conſent to it?

Oates. He did conſent to it.

Juſt. Wild. Did he uſe no Words about it?

Oates. He did ſhew his Approbation of it. But in thoſe Inſtructions that were brought to Aſhby, he did ſay it was a very good propoſition, but he thought the Reward was too little.

L. C. J. Did he uſe any words to declare his aſſent?

Oates. Two things lie couched in the Queſtion, whether your Lordſhip means the Conſult, or the Inſtructions, he did approve of.

L. C. J. How long after the Conſultation was it that he approved of it?

Oates. It was two or three days before he did give his approbation.

Juſt. Wild. What words did he ſay?

Oates. He did expreſs his conſent, but to ſay the very words I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more?

Priſ. I would know the day in Auguſt?

L. C. J. He ſaith he doth not remember the day.

Oates. I believe, I will not be poſitive in it, it was about the 21ſt day of Auguſt.

Juſt. Wild. and Juſt. Jones. Was it in Auguſt Old-ſtile?

Oates. Yes.

Priſ. I can prove I was in Warwick-ſhire at that time. That day he gueſſeth, the 21ſt of Auguſt, I can make it appear I was Fourſcore Miles off.

L. C. J. You will do well to prove you was there when the Guinea was given. Will you ask him any more?

Prif. No.

L. C. J. You may ſay as you will, but Mr. Oates doth charge, that expreſly in Auguſt (according to the Engliſh Stile) you were at this Wild-Houſe, and that he ſaw fourſcore Pounds prepared. You Mr. Coleman asked the Queſtion, what preparations were made for the Men going to Windſor? It was anſwered, fourſcore Pounds are prepared: And your ſelf gave a Guinea for expedition. It is a hard matter to preſs a Man to tell the perciſe day of the Month, but poſitively he doth ſay it was in Auguſt.

Prif. I was Two and Twenty or Three and Twenty days in Auguſt in Warwick-ſhire.

L. C. J. What have you now more to ſay?

Prif. My Lord, I never ſaw Mr. Oates but in the Council-Chamber, I never ſaw him in Rome, in other Parts I never ſaw the Face of him, or knew him in my whole Life; nor did I ſee the other till now in Court, as I hope to be ſaved. And then, my Lord, as to their teſtimony, neither of them Swear the ſelf-ſame Fact.

L. C. J. No Man ſhall be guilty, if denial ſhall make him innocent; They ſwear to the Fact of killing the King both of them, and that's enough. If one ſaith you have a Plot to Poyſon, that is killing the King; and the other ſwears a Plot to ſhoot, or ſtab him, that is to the killing of the King alſo: Then there's your own Undertaking, in your Letter, under your Hand.

Prif. For Treaſon (with ſubmiſſion to your Lordſhip) I hope there's none in that, though there are very extravagant Expreſſions in it, I hope ſome Expreſſions explain it, that it was not my deſign to kill the King.

L. C. J. No, your Deſign was for the Converſion of three Kingdoms, and ſubduing of that Hereſie that had reigned ſo long in this Northern part of the World: And for effecting whereof, there were never more hopes ſince our Queen Mary's time till now, and therefore preſſing the King of France to uſe his Power, Aid, and Aſſiſtance, and does this ſignifie nothing?

Prif. Doth Aid and Aſſiſtance ſignifie more than Money? The word Aid in French is Power; they are promiſcuous words.

L. C. J. You are Charged to have had a Correſpondency and Agency with Foreign Power to ſubvert our Religion, and bring in Foreign Authority and Power upon us, which muſt be the neceſſary conſequence: How can this be proved plainer than by your Letters, to preſs the French King that he would uſe his Power.

Prif. Conſider the Contexture and Connexion of things, whether the whole ſeries be not to make the King and the Duke (as far as I thought in my power) as great as could be.

L. C. J. How well or ill you excuſe the fault, that's not the Queſtion; they relate to the Duke moſt of them, little to the King, You were carrying on ſuch a Deſign, that you intended to put the Duke in the Head of, in ſuch method and ways as the Duke himſelf would not approve, but rejected.

Prif. Do not think I would throw any thing upon the Duke, though I might (in the beginning of it,) poſſibly make uſe of the Duke's Name, it is poſſible (they ſay I did) but can any imagine the People will lay down Money 200000 l. or 20000 l. with me upon the Duke's Name, and not know whether the Duke be in it; and conſequently no Body will imagine the Duke would ever employ any ſum to this King's prejudice or diſſervice while he lived. I take it for granted (which ſure none in the World will deny) that the Law was ever made immediately ſubject to the King or Duke, and conſequently to the Duke, I cannot think this will ever be expounded by the Law of England, or the Jury, to be Treaſon.

L. C. J. What a kind of way and talking is this? You have ſuch a ſwimming way of melting words, that it is a troubleſom thing for a Man to collect matter out of them. You give your ſelf up to be a great Negotiator in the altering of Kingdoms, you would be great with mighty Men for that purpoſe; and your long Diſcourſes and great Abilities might have been ſpared. The thing theſe Letters do ſeem to import, is this, That your Deſign was to bring in Popery into England, and to promote the intereſt of the French King in this place, for which you hoped to have a Penſion (that's plain) The Duke's Name is often mentioned, that's true; ſometimes it appears it is againſt his will, and ſometimes he might know of it, and be told that the conſequence was not great. Now ſay you theſe Sums of Money and all that was done, it did relate to the King or Duke, and it was to advance their Intereſt, and you thought it was the way to do it. How can this advance them unleſs it were done to do them ſervice; and if they do not conſent to it, and how can this be Treaſon, what kind of ſtuff is this? You do ſeem to be a mighty Agent, might not you for a colour uſe the Duke of York's Name to drive on the Catholick Cauſe, which you was driven to by the Prieſts mightily, and think to get 200000 l. advance Money, and a Penſion for your ſelf, and make your ſelf ſomebody for the preſent, and Secretary of State for the future? If you will make any defence for your ſelf, or call in Witneſſes, we will hear them; ſay what you can; for theſe vain inconſequential diſcourſes ſignifie nothing.

Prif. I have Witneſſes to prove I was in Warwick-ſhire.

L. C. J. (to Boatman a Witneſs.) Where was Mr. Coleman in Auguſt laſt?

Boatm. In Warwick-ſhire.

L. C. J. How long?

Boatm. All Auguſt, to my beſt remembrance.

L. C. J. Can you ſay that he was in Warwick-ſhire all Auguſt? that he was not at London?

Boatm. I am not certain what time of the Month he was in London.

L. C. J. That he was there in Auguſt, may be very true; I do not ask how long he was in Warwick-ſhire, but was he no where elſe? (To which the Witneſs could make no poſitive anſwer.)

Prif. I was at the Lord Denby's, and at Mr. Francis Fiſher's; I was there at leaſt twenty days.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witneſſes?

Prif. Anſ. None.

L. C. J. If you have a Mind to ſay any thing more, ſay what you can.

Prif. I can ſay nothing more than what I have ſaid. Poſitively I ſay (and upon my ſalvation) vation) I never ſaw theſe Witneſſes, Oates but once, and Bedlow never before.

Sir Francis Winnington, his Majeſty's Sollicitor General, ſums up the Evidence, as followeth.

May it pleaſe Your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury,

THE Cauſe before you (I dare adventure to ſay) is a Cauſe of as great a Nature, and includes as great Crimes, as ever came to this Bar.

It is not a Cauſe of a particular Treaſon, but 'tis a Treaſon that runs to the whole; the King, the Government, and the Proteſtant Religion, all are comprehended in it.

The defence the Priſoner has made is ſo very ſhort, and of ſo ſlight a Nature, that I ſhall contract my ſelf very much in what I had to ſay, and only ſtate to the Court, and Jury, the principal things I rely upon.

The firſt Crime laid in the Indictment, is the deſign of killing and deſtroying the Royal Perſon of his Majeſty. The ſecond, the ſubverting of the Government, and in doing that, the deſtruction of the Proteſtant Religion.

And theſe Treaſons have been punctually proved, as well by two Witneſſes, as by Letters under Mr. Coleman's own Hand, whereby he correſponded with Mounſieur Le Cheſe, the French King's Confeſſor, as alſo by the Anſwers which were ſent by Mounſieur Le Cheſe to Mr. Coleman.

As to the Proofs made by the Witneſſes, the ſubſtance of them is this. Mr. Oates ſwears, that in April laſt Old Style, and May New Style, there was a General Conſult or Meeting of the Jeſuites, at the White-Horſe-Tavern in the Strand; and afterwards they divided themſelves into ſeveral Companies, or Clubs; and in thoſe Conſults they conſpired the Death of the King; and contrived how to effect it. The manner of it was thus, (as Mr. Oates poſitively ſwears) That Grove and Pickering were employed to Murther the King; and their Deſign was to Piſtol him in St. James's Park. Grove was to have Fifteen Hundred Pounds in Money, and Pickering (being a Prieſt) was to have Thirty Thouſand Maſſes, which was computed to be of equal value to Fifteen Hundred Pounds, according to the uſual price in the Church of Rome. And this Conſpiracy and Contrivance Mr. Coleman was privy to, and did well approve of the ſame, as Mr. Oates affirmeth upon his Oath. So that here is a plain Treaſon proved upon the Priſoner, by his aſſenting to the Fact to be done, the Law not allowing any Acceſſaries in Treaſon. And this in Law makes the Priſoner as guilty as any of the Aſſaſſinates, who deſigned to kill the King with their own Hands.

If this deſign ſhould fail, Mr. Oates ſwears, that the Conſpirators intended a further attempt upon the Royal Perſon of the King, when he ſhould be at Windſor; and four Iriſh Aſſaſſinates were provided by Doctor Fogarthy, whoſe Names he would not tell, and fourſcore Guineas were provided by Father Harcourt (a Jeſuit) to maintain the Aſſaſſinates at Windſor, till they ſhould have effected their wicked deſign.

While the Conſpiracy was thus in agitation, Mr. Coleman, the Priſoner, went to viſit Harcourt the Jeſuit at his Houſe in Town; but finding him not at home, and being informed that he was at Wild-houſe, Mr. Coleman went thither and found him there; and Mr. Coleman asking what Proviſion Harcourt had made for the Gentlemen at Windſor; Harcourt replyed, that there were fourſcore Guineas, which then lay upon the Table, which were to be ſent to them; and ſaid, that the Perſon who was in the Room was to carry them. To which Mr. Coleman replyed, he liked it very well; and gave a Guinea out of his own Pocket to the Meſſenger who was to carry the Money to Windſor, to encourage him to expedite the Buſineſs. But in caſe the deſign of killing his Majeſty at Windſor ſhould be any ways prevented, then there was a further Conſpiracy, to deſtroy the King by Poiſon. Mr. Oates ſwears, that in July laſt, Aſhby (a Jeſuit) brought inſtructions to London from Flanders, that in caſe Pickering and Grove could not kill the King at London, nor the four Iriſh Aſſaſſinates at Windſor, then Ten Thouſand Pounds was to be propoſed to Sir George Wakeman to Poyſon the King. But it did appear by the Letters that paſſed between White the Provincial (here in London) and Aſhby, that Mr. Coleman ſaid, he thought Ten Thouſand Pounds was too little; and therefore thought it neceſſary to offer five Thouſand Pounds more, which afterwards was aſſented to by the Jeſuites abroad. And Mr. Oates ſwears, he ſaw Letters from the Provincial at London, to the Jeſuites at St. Omer, ſignifying, that Sir George Wakeman had accepted of the Propoſition, and received five Thouſand Pounds of the Money. By which Teſtimony, of Mr. Oates, it plainly appears, that Mr. Coleman, the Priſoner at the Bar, was privy to the Conſpiracy, and aiding and abetting to the wicked and damnable deſign of murdering the King.

The ſecond Witneſs is Mr. Bedlow, who ſwears that he was imployed by Harcourt, the Jeſuit, to carry Pacquets of Letters to Mounſieur Le Cheſe, the French King's Confeſſor; and further ſays, he was at a Conſult in France, where the Plot was diſcourſed on for killing the King; and did bring back an anſwer from Le Cheſe to Harcourt in London, and ſwears particularly, that on the 24th or 25th of May, 1677. he was at Coleman's Houſe with Father Harcourt, and ſome other Perſons, where Mr. Coleman, diſcourſing of the great deſign in Hand, ſaid theſe Words following. That if he had a Sea of Blood, and an hundred Lives, he would loſe them all to carry on the deſign; and if to effect this, it were neceſſary to deſtroy an hundred Heretick Kings, he would do it. So that here is another poſitive Oath to an Act of Treaſon committed by Mr. Coleman, in relation to the murthering the King.

The other part of the Evidence conſiſts of Papers and Letters, which generally relate to prove the latter part of the Indictment; to wit, The Extirpation of the Proteſtant Religion, and introducing of Popery, und the ſubverting of the Government. And this appears by a Letter written by Mr. Coleman, dated 29. Septem. 75. and ſent to Mounſieur Le Cheſe, the French King's Confeſſor; wherein he gives him an account of the Tranſactions of ſeveral Years before, and of the Correſpondence between Mr. Coleman and Mounſieur Ferrier, Predeceſſor to Le Cheſe; wherein he does alſo aſſert, that the true way to carry on the Intereſt of France, and the promoting of the Popiſh Religion here in England, was to get this Parliament diſſolved; which (ſays he) had been long ſince effected, if three Hundred Thouſand Pounds could have been obtained from the French King; and that things yet were in ſuch a poſture, that if he had but Twenty Thouſand Pounds ſent him from France, he would be content to be a Sacrifice to the utmoſt malice of his Enemies, if the Proteſtant Religion did not receive ſuch a Blow as it could not ſubſiſt. And the receipt of this Lerter was acknowledged by Mounſieur Le Cheſe, in an anſwer which he wrote to Mr. Coleman, dated from Paris October 23. 75. in which he gives him thanks for his good Service, in order to the promoting the Popiſh Religion.

Several other Letters have been produced and read, which were written by Mr. Coleman to Mounſieur Ferrier and others, and more particularly one Letter dated Auguſt 21. 74. written by Coleman to the Pope's Internuntio at Bruſſels, wherein he ſays the Deſign proſpered ſo well, that he doubted not but in a little time the Buſineſs would be managed, to the utter ruine of the Proteſtant Party.

And by other Letters he writes to the French King's Confeſſor that the aſſiſtance of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty is neceſſary, and deſires Money from the French King to carry on the Deſign.

But there is one Letter, without Date, more Bloody than all the reſt, which was written to Mounſieur Le Cheſe in ſome ſhort time after the long Letter of September 29. 1675. wherein, amongſt many other things, Coleman expreſſes himſelf thus. We have a mighty Work upon our Hands, no leſs than the Converſion of three Kingdoms, and the utter ſubduing of a Peſtilent Hereſie, which hath for ſome time domineer'd over this Northern part of the World; and we never had ſo great hopes of it ſince our Queen Mary's days. And in the Concluſion of the Letter he implores Mounſieur Le Cheſe to get all the aid and aſſiſtance he can from France, and that next to God Almighty, they did rely upon the mighty mind of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, and therefore did hope Le Cheſe would procure Money and Aſſiſtance from him.

Now any Man that conſiders the Contents of theſe Letters, muſt needs agree, that the latter part of the Indictment, to wit, the Treaſon of endeavouring the Subverting the Government and the Proteſtant Religion, is fully proved upon Mr. Coleman, the Priſoner at the Bar; and that theſe Letters were written by him, and the Anſwers received he does not deny. But all he has to ſay for himſelf, is, that it was to make the King of England great; whereas the contrary is moſt manifeſt, becauſe the Jeſuites who love Force and Tyranny, always adhere to thoſe Princes that are greateſt in Strength and Power. For it appears in Hiſtory, that when the Houſe of Auſtria were in their Greatneſs, and like to arrive to the Univerſal Monarchy in theſe parts of the World, the Jeſuites all adhered to that Houſe: But ſince the French King hath grown more mighty in Power and Greatneſs, they declined the Intereſt of the Auſtrian Family, and do now promote the Counſels of France, thinking that now that King will become the Univerſal Monarch.

I ſhall therefore now conclude the Evidence, only obſerving to the Jury, that the ſeveral Treaſons in the Indictment are fully proved. The firſt as to the deſtruction of the Royal Perſon of the King, by two Witneſſes, Mr. Oates, and Mr. Bedlow; the other part of it, viz. the ſubverſion of the Government, and extirpation of the Proteſtant Religion, by the ſeveral Letters which have been before remembred, which have not been denyed by the Priſoner to be his. Therefore I hope, Gentlemen, when you meet with Offenders that are guilty of ſuch ſtupendious Crimes, you will do Juſtice upon them, which will be a great Comfort and Satisfaction to the King and all his good Proteſtant Subjects.

Serj. Pembert. Gentlemen, you hear the Crime is of the higheſt Nature, it's the ſubverſion of three Kingdoms and the ſubduing of that Religion which he defames by the Name of Peſtilent Hereſie. It concerns us all to look about us, and all the Kingdom, when there ſhall be a Deſign managed in this manner, to deſtroy our King, and to take away our Religion, and to enſlave us all to the Pope, and make us all truckle to the Prieſts.

It is wonderful it is capable (at this day) of ſo great Evidence, there is Digitus Dei in it, or elſe it would be impoſſible ſuch a thing ſhould be made ſo manifeſt: All the reſt that is ſaid in the Indictment are but Circumſtances that declare it: There is a ſtrong Evidence of many matters of Fact in this Deſign, which declare the Intention hatched in his Breaſt for many Years together: Here hath been a Deſign to kill the King, and he doth not only conſent to it, but commend it; what can be ſaid to his giving the Money to him that was to pay the fourſcore pieces of Gold to thoſe Ruffians ſent to Windſor? and adding 5000 l. to the 10000 l. for the Doctor that was to poyſon the King? He denies all.

No queſtion but a Man that hath had a Heart to deſign ſuch Contrivances, will have the Face to deny it publickly: It's a thing to be acted in the dark, but there's both Mr Oates and Mr. Bedlow, plainly prove it upon him that he conſented to the acting the King's death. What's the Senſe of his Letters, but to ſhew his deſign, and to beg the Aſſiſtance of France to them in their neceſſities? the whole Current is to deſtroy our Religion. I think you Gentlemen of the Jury have had ſuch Evidence as will ſatisfie any Man.

Priſ. I deny all Mr. Oates his Teſtimony, for his ſaying to the Council he did not know me becauſe he could not ſee me, when I was as near as the next Gentleman but one, but knew me when I ſpake, and I ſpoke to almoſt all the matters asked. He accuſeth me of a thing in Auguſt, but names not the day: Now if there be one Error in his Teſtimony it weakens all the reſt. I went out of Town the 10th of Auguſt, it was the latter end I came home, about the middle of Bartholomew Fair, the laſt day of Auguſt.

L. C. J. Have you any Witneſs to prove that?

Priſ. I cannot ſay I have a Witneſs.

L. C. J. Then you ſay nothing.

Priſ. People cannot ſpeak to a day, to a thing they neither imagined or thought of.

L. C. J. I ask your Servant, do you know when Mr. Coleman went out of Town?

Coleman's Serv. In Auguſt, I cannot ſay particularly ticularly the day.

L. C. J. Do you know when he came home?

Serv. I cannot remember.

Juſt. Wild. Where was you the laſt Bartholomew day?

Serv. I was in Town.

Juſt. Wild. Where was your Maſter?

Serv. I do not remember.

L. C. J. You ſay you went out of Town the 10th, and came home the laſt of Auguſt; you ſay it is impoſſible that he ſhould ſay right, but yet you do not prove it.

Priſ. I have no more to ſay, but I entered down all my Expences every day in a Book, which Book will ſhew where I was.

L. C. J. Where is your Book?

Priſ. At my Lodging in Vere-Street by Covent-Garden; in a Trunk that came by the Carrier, that will ſhew when they were ſent.

L. C. J. If the Cauſe did turn upon that matter, I would be well content to ſit until the Book was brought, but I doubt the Cauſe will not ſtand upon that Foot, but if that were the Caſe it would do you little good.

Obſerve what I ſay to the Jury.

My Lord Chief Juſtice his Speech to the Jury upon his ſumming up of the Evidence.

Gentlemen of the Jury; My Care at this time ſhall be to contract this very long Evidence, and to bring it within a ſhort compaſs, that you may have nothing before you to conſider of, as near as I can, but what is really material to the Acquitting or Condemning of Mr. Coleman.

The things he is Accuſed of are of two ſorts; the one is, to ſubvert the Proteſtant Religion and to introduce Popery: the other was to deſtroy and kill the King. The Evidence likewiſe was of two ſorts; The one by Letters of his own hand writing, and the other by Witneſſes Viva voce. The former he ſeems to confeſs, the other totally to deny.

For that he confeſſeth, he does not ſeem to inſiſt upon it, that the Letters were not his, he ſeems to admit they were; And he rather makes his Defence by expounding what the meaning of theſe Letters were, than by denying himſelf to be the Author.

I would have you take me right, when I ſay he doth admit; he doth not admit the Conſtruction, that the King's Council here makes upon them; but he admits that theſe Letters were his. He admits it ſo far, that he does not deny them. So that you are to Examine what theſe Letters import in themſelves, and what Conſequences are naturally to be deduced from them

That which is plainly intended, is to bring in the Roman Catholick, and to ſubvert the Proteſtant Religion. That which is by Conſequence intended, was the Killing the King, as being the moſt likely means to introduce That, which as 'tis apparent by his Letters, was deſigned to be brought in.

For the Firſt part of the Evidence. All his Great long Letter that he wrote, was to give the preſent Confeſſor of the French King an Account of what had paſſed between him and his predeceſſor; By which Agency, you may ſee that Mr. Coleman was In with the former Confeſſor.

And when he comes to give an Account of the three Years Tranſactions to this preſent Confeſſor, and to begin a Correſpondence with him, About what is it? Why, the ſubſtance of the Heads of the long Letter comes to this. It was to bring in the Catholick as he call'd it, (that is) the Romiſh Catholick Religion, and to eſtabliſh that here; and to advance an Intereſt for the French King, be that Intereſt what it will.

It's true his Letters do not expreſs what ſort of Intereſt, neither will I determine: but they ſay it was to promote the French King's Intereſt, which Mr. Coleman would expound it ſome ſuch ſort, as may conſiſt with the King of England's, and the Duke of York's Intereſt. But this is certain, it was to ſubvert our Religion, as it is now by Law eſtabliſhed. This was the great end thereof, it cannot be denyed: To promote the Intereſt (I ſay) of the French King, and to gain to himſelf a Penſion as a reward of his ſervice, is the Contents of his Firſt long Letter, and one or two more concerning that Penſion.

His laſt Letters expound more plainly what was meant by the French King's Intereſt. We are (ſaith he) about a great work, no leſs than the Converſion of three Kingdoms, and the total and utter ſubverſion and ſubduing of that peſtilent Hereſie (that is the Proteſtant Religion) which hath reigned ſo long in this Northern part of the World; and for the doing of which, there never was ſuch great hopes ſince our Queen Mary's Days, as at this time.

Now this plainly ſhews, that our Religion was to be ſubverted, Popery eſtabliſhed, and the three Kingdoms to be converted; that is indeed, to be brought to confuſion.

For I ſay, that when our Religion is to be ſubverted, the Nation is to be ſubverted and deſtroyed, that is moſt apparent: For there could be no hope of ſubverting or deſtroying the Proteſtant Religion, but by a Subverſion not Converſion of the three Kingdoms.

How was it to be done otherwiſe? Why, I would have brought this Religion in (ſays he) by diſſolving of the Parliament. I would have brought it in by an Edict and Proclamation of Liberty of Conſcience. In theſe ways I would have brought it in.

Mr. Coleman knows it is not fit for him to own the introducing of his Religion by the Murder of the King, or by a Foreign Force. The one was too black and the other too bloody, to be owned. And few people (eſpecially the Engliſh) will be brought to ſave their Lives (as he may do his) by confeſſion of ſo bloody and barbarous a thing, as an intention to Kill the King, or of Levying a War; which though it be not a Particular, is a General Murder. I ſay, it was not convenient for Mr. Coleman, when he ſeems to ſpeak ſomething for himſelf, to give ſuch an Account, how he would have done it; Therefore he tells us, he would have done it by the diſſolving of the Parliament and by Toleration of Religion. Now I would very fain know of any Man in the World, whether this was not a very fine and artificial covering of his deſign for the Subverſion of our Religion?

Pray how can any Man think, that the Diſſolving of the Parliament could have ſuch a mighty influence to that purpoſe? It is true, he might imagine it might in ſome ſort contribute towards it: Yet it is ſo doubtful, that he himſelf miſtruſts it. For he is ſometimes for the Diſſolving of the Parliament, and other times not, as appears by his own papers: For which we are not beholden to him, ſo much as for any one, more than what were found by accident, and produced to the King and Council. But in truth, why ſhould Mr. Coleman believe that another Parliament (if this Parliament were Diſſolved) ſhould comply with Popery? That is to ſay, That there ſhould be great hopes of bringing in of Popery by a new Parliament? Unleſs he can give me a good reaſon for this, I ſhall hold it as inſignificant and as unlikely to have that effect, as his other way by a General Toleration.

And therefore next, Upon what ground does he preſume this? I do aſſure you, that Man does not underſtand the Inclinations of the Engliſh people, or knows their Tempers, that thinks, if they were left to themſelves and had their Liberty, they would turn Papiſts.

It's true, there are ſome amongſt us that have ſo little Wit as to turn Fanaticks, but there is hardly any, but have much more wit than to turn Papiſts. Theſe are therefore the Counterfeit pretenſions of Mr. Coleman.

Now if not by theſe means, In what way truly did he intend to bring in Popery? Why his own Letters plainly convict him of one ſtep towards it, in endeavouring with Foreign powers to bring in that Religion, and to Subvert ours. And for the other way of doing it, by killing the King; I leave it to you whether there were any more probable way than that indeed to do it.

And could he think, that the French King would not have thought himſelf cozened of his Money, if he had not given him hopes that he would uſe the moſt probable Methods that he could, to effect his Deſign?

Therefore there muſt be more in it; for he that was ſo earneſt for that Religion, would not have ſtuck at any Violence to bring it in; he would not have ſtuck at Blood. For we know their Doctrines and their Practices, and we know well, with what zeal the Prieſts puſh them forward to venture their own Lives, and to take away other Mens, that differ from them, to bring in their Religion, and to ſet up themſelves. For indeed in the Kingdoms and Countries where Popery reigns, the Prieſts have Dominion over Mens Conſciences, and power over their Purſes. And they uſe all Arts imaginable of making Proſelites, and take ſpecial Care, that thoſe in their Communion, ſhall know no more than the Prieſts ſhall give them leave to underſtand. And for this Reaſon they prohibit the uſe of all Books without their Licenſe. This blind Obedience begets blind Ignorance, and this is a great ſubtilty of theirs to keep them in it, that they may perfectly ſubmit to them.

What cannot they Command, when they have made others ſlaves in their underſtandings, and that they muſt know no more, than what they give them leave to know? But in England it is not ſo, Mr. Coleman; and therein you would have found a great diſappointment. For if Liberty of Conſcience had been tollerated here. That the Conſequence of it would have been Popery, I deny.

Nothing is more unlikely, for though in the ſhort Reign of Queen Mary, Popery came in for ſome time, which was but for a little time, and then the people were not ſo well grounded in the Proteſtant Religion, nor in the principles of it: But now they are, Inſomuch, that ſcarce a Cobler but is able to baffle any Roman Prieſt that ever I ſaw or met with.

And Thanks be to God we have a Preaching Miniſtry, and the free uſe of the Scriptures allowed amongſt us, which they are not permitted to have.

And after this I wonder, that a Man, who hath been bred up in the Proteſtant Religion (as I have Reaſon to believe that you Mr. Coleman have been) for (if I am not miſinformed) your Father was a Miniſter in Suffolk. For ſuch an one to depart from it, is an Evidence againſt you, to prove the Indictment. I muſt make a Difference between Us, and Thoſe who have been always educated that way, and ſo are under the prepoſſeſſion of their Education, which is a difficult thing to be overcome.

And I do aſſure you, there are but two things, that I know of, can make one do it, Intereſt, or groſs Ignorance.

No Man of underſtanding, but for By-ends, would have left his Religion to be a Papiſt. And for you Mr. Coleman, who are a Man of Reaſon and Subtilty, I muſt tell you (to bring this to your ſelf) upon this account, that it could not be Conſcience, I cannot think it to be Conſcience. Your Penſion was your Conſcience, and your Secretaries place your Bait.

For ſuch Men (I ſay) as have been bred up in the Proteſtant Religion, and left it, I can hardly preſume that they do it out of Conſcience, unleſs they do it upon a mighty ſearch, not leaning upon their own underſtanding and abilities, not hearing of one ſide alone.

Conſcience is a tender thing, Conſcience will tremble when it leaves the Religion it has been bred in, and its ſincerity is ſhown by being fearful, leaſt it ſhould be in the wrong. No Man may pretend to Conſcience truly, that takes not all Courſes imaginable to know the Right, before he lets his Religion ſlip from him.

Have we ſo ſoon forgot our Reverence to the late King, and the pious advice he left us? A King that was truly A DEFENDER of the FAITH, not only by his Title, but by his Abilities and Writings. A King, who underſtood the Proteſtant Religion ſo well, that he was able to defend it againſt any of the Cardinals of Rome. And when he knew it ſo throughly, and died ſo eminently for it, I will leave this Characteriſtical Note, That whoſoever after that, departs from His Judgment, had need have a very good one of his own, to bear him out.

I do acknowledge, Many of the Popiſh Prieſts formerly, were learned Men, and may be ſo ſtill, beyond the Seas: but I could never yet meet with any here, that had other Learning or Ability but Artificial only, to delude weak Women, and weaker Men.

They have indeed, ways of Converſion, and Conviction, by Enlightning our Underſtandings with a Faggot, and by the powerful and irreſiſtable Arguments of a Dagger: But there are ſuch wicked Solceciſms in their Religion, that that they ſeem to have left them neither Natural Senſe, nor Natural Conſcience. Not Natural Senſe by their Abſurdity, in ſo an unreaſonable a belief, as of the Wine turned into Blood: Not Natural Conſcience, by their Cruelty, who make the Proteſtants Blood as Wine, and theſe Prieſts thirſt after it.

Tantum Religio potuit ſuadere malorum?

Mr. Coleman, in one of his Letters, ſpeaks of rooting out our Religion, and our Party; And he is in the Right, for they can never root out the Proteſtant Religion, but they muſt kill the Proteſtants. But let him and them know, if ever they ſhall endeavour to bring Popery in, by deſtroying of the King, they ſhall find, that the Papiſts will thereby bring deſtruction upon themſelves, ſo that not a Man of them would eſcape.

Ne Catulus quidem relinquendus.

Our Execution ſhall be as quick as their Gunpowder, but more effectual. And ſo, Gentlemen, I ſhall leave it to you, to conſider, what his Letters prove him guilty of directly, and what by Conſequence; What he plainly would have done, and then, how he would have done it; And whether you think his Fiery Zeal had ſo much Cold Blood in it, as to ſpare any others?

For the other part of the Evidence, which is by the Teſtimony of the preſent Witneſſes, You have heard them. ——I will not detain you longer now the day is going out.

Mr. J. Jones. You muſt find the Priſoner Guilty, or bring in two Perſons Perjured.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, If your Conſultation ſhall be long, then you muſt lye by it all Night, and We'll take your Verdict to Morrow Morning. If it will not be long, I am content to ſtay a while.

Jury. My Lord, we ſhall be ſhort.

J. Wyld. We do not ſpeak to you to make more haſte, or leſs, but to take a full Conſultation, and your own time; There is the Death of a Man at the Stake, and make not too much haſte, We do not ſpeak it on that Account.

The Jury went from the Bar, and returned.

Court. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Court. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Court. Edward Coleman, hold up thy Hand.

Court. Is Edward Coleman Guilty of the High Treaſon, whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Jury. Guilty, my Lord.

Court. What Goods, Chattels, &c.

Priſoner. You were pleaſed to ſay to the Jury, that they muſt either bring me in Guilty, or two Perſons Perjured: I am a Dying Man, and upon my Death, and expectation of Salvation, declare, That I never ſaw theſe two Gentlemen, excepting Mr. Oates, but once in all my Life, and that was at the Council Table.

L. C. J. Mr. Coleman, Your own Papers are enough to condemn you.

Court. Capt. Richardſon, You muſt bring Mr. Coleman hither again to morrow Morning to receive his Sentence.

The Day following, being November the 28*th. Mr.* Coleman was brought to the Bar, to receive his Sentence, and the Court proceeded thereupon, as followeth.

L. C. J. ASk him what he can ſay for himſelf; Make Silence Cryer.

Court. Edward Coleman, Hold up thy Hand, Thou haſt been Indicted of High Treaſon, thou haſt thereunto Pleaded, Not Guilty; thou haſt put thy Self upon God and thy Country, which Country, hath found thee Guilty; What canſt thou ſay for thy Self, wherefore Judgment of Death ſhould not be given againſt thee, and an Execution Awarded according to Law?

Mr. Coleman. May it pleaſe you, my Lord, I have this to ſay for my ſelf; As for my Papers, I humbly Hope, (ſetting aſide oral Teſtimony) that I ſhould not have been found guilty of any Crime in them, but what the Act of Grace would have pardoned, and I hope, I ſhall have the benefit of that: The Evidence againſt me, namely Oral I do humbly beg, that you would be pleaſed, to give me a little time to ſhew you, how impoſſible it is, that thoſe Teſtimonies ſhould be true; For that Teſtimony of Mr. Oates in Auguſt, my Man, that is now either in the Court or Hall, hath gotten a Book that is able to make it appear, that I was out of Town from the 15th of Auguſt to the 31ſt of Auguſt late at Night.

L. C. J. That will not do, Mr. Coleman.

Coleman. I do humbly offer this, for this Reaſon; becauſe Mr. Oates, in all his other Evidences, was ſo punctual, as to diſtinguiſh between Old Stile and New, he never miſt the Month, hardly the Week, and often times put the very Day; for his Teſtimony that he gave againſt me, was, that it was the 21ſt of Auguſt.

L. C. J. He thought ſo, but he was not poſitive, but only as to the Month.

Coleman. He was certain it was the latter end of Auguſt, and that about Bartholomewtide.

L. C. J. He conceived ſo, he thought ſo.

Coleman. Now if I was always out of Town from the 15th Day of Auguſt, to the 31ſt late at Night, it is then impoſſible, My Lord, That ſhould be a true Teſtimony, your Lordſhip was pleaſed to obſerve, that it would much enervate any Man's Teſtimony, if to the whole he could be proved falſe in any one thing; I have further in this matter to ſay, beſides my Man's Teſtimony, the King hath ſince I have been ſeized on, ſeized on my Papers and my Book of Accounts, where I uſed punctually to ſet down where I ſpent my Money; and if it doth not appear by that Book that I was all thoſe Days and Times, and ſeveral other Days in Auguſt, to be out of Town, I deſire no favour. You cannot ſuppoſe my Lord, nor the World believe, that I prepared that Book for this purpoſe in this matter; and I can make it appear by others, if I had time; but I only offer this to your Lordſhip, that ſeeing Mr. Oates did name ſo many Particulars and Circumſtances, it's very ſtrange, that he ſhould fail in a particular of ſuch Importance as about killing the King; and no Man living of common ſenſe would think or believe that I ſhould ſpeak about ſuch a thing in Company that I did not well know, and this to be done frequently and oftentimes as he aſſerts it when Oates ſeem'd to the King and Council (and

I believe the King himſelf remembers it) when I was examined, that he did not know me, that he knew nothing of me, ſo that here is two things againſt this Witneſs that can hardly happen again.

My Circumſtances are extraordinary, and it is a great providence, and I think your Lordſhip and the whole World will look upon it as ſuch, if for any Crimes that are in my Papers, if there be any Mercy to be ſhowed me by the King's Gracious Act of Pardon, I humbly beg that I may have it.

L. C. J. None.

Col. If none I do humbly ſubmit; but I do humbly hope with ſubmiſſion, that thoſe Papers would not have been found Treaſonable Papers.

L. C. J. Thoſe Letters of yours, Mr. Coleman, were ſince the Act of Pardon, your Papers bear date 1674, 1675. and there hath been no Act ſince. But as for what you ſay concerning Mr. Oates, you ſay it in vain now, Mr. Coleman, for the Jury hath given in their Verdict, and it is not now to be ſaid, for after that Rate we ſhall have no End of any Man's Tryal; but for your ſatisfaction, Mr. Coleman, to the beſt of my remembrance, Mr. Oates was poſitive only as to the Month of Auguſt, he thought it might be about the 21ſt Day, or about Bartholomew Fair time; but he was abſolute in nothing but the Month.

Coleman. He was punctual in all his other Evidences, but in this he was not, and when I was examined at the Council Table, he ſaid he knew little of me.

L. C. J. He charged you poſitively for having held Conſpiracy to poyſon the King; and that there was Ten Thouſand Pounds to be paid for it, and afterwards there was Five Thouſand Pound more to be added; and he poſitively charges you to be the Perſon that amongſt all the Conſpirators was reputed to pay the Five Thouſand Pound.

Col. He ſaid it after ſuch a faſhion.

L. C. J. He ſaid it after ſuch a faſhion that Sir Robert Southwell and Sir Thomas Doleman ſatisfied us that he did the thing, and that plainly to his underſtanding; and what ſay you he ſaid?

Col. That he did not know me.

L. C. J. Neither of them ſay ſo, that he ſaid he did not know you, they deny it.

Col. He ſaid ſo upon my death.

L. C. J. 'Tis in vain to diſpute it further, their muſt be an End.

Cryer, make O yes, Our Sovereign Lord the King doth ſtraightly Charge and Command all Perſons to keep ſilence while Judgment is given upon the Priſoner Convict, upon pain of Impriſonment.

L. C. J. You are found guilty Mr. Coleman of High Treaſon, and the Crimes are ſeveral that you are found Guilty of. You are found Guilty of Conſpiring the Death of the King; you are likewiſe found Guilty of endeavouring to ſubvert the Proteſtant Religion as it is by Law Eſtabliſhed, and to bring in Popery, and this by the aid and aſſiſtance of Foreign Powers. And I would not have you, Mr. Coleman, in your laſt apprehenſion of things, to go out of the World with a miſtake if I could help it, That is, I would not have you think, that though you only ſeem to diſavow the matter of the Death of the King, that therefore you ſhould think your ſelf an Innocent Man. You are not Innocent I am ſure, for it is apparent by that which cannot deceive, that you are guilty of Contriving and Conſpiring the Deſtruction of the Proteſtant Religion, and to bring in Popery, and that by the aid and aſſiſtance of Foreign Powers, and this no Man can free you in the leaſt from. And know, that if it ſhould be true, that you would diſavow, that you had not an actual hand in the Contrivance of the King's Death (which two Witneſſes have ſworn poſitively againſt you): Yet he that will ſubvert the Proteſtant Religion here, and bring in conſequently a Foreign Authority, does an Act in derogation of the Crown, and in Diminution of the King's Title and Sovereign Power; and endeavours to bring a Foreign Dominion both over our Conſciences and Eſtates. And if any Man ſhall endeavour to ſubvert our Religion to bring in that, though he did not actually contrive to do it by the Death of the King, or it may be not by the Death of any one Man, yet whatſoever follows upon that contrivance, he is guilty of; Inſomuch, it is greatly to be fear'd, that though you meant only to bring it in by the way of Diſſolving of Parliaments, or by Liberty of Conſcience, and ſuch kind of innocent ways as you thought, yet if ſo be thoſe means ſhould not have proved Effectual, and worſe ſhould have been taken (though by others of your Confederates) for to go through with the work, as we have great reaſon to believe there would, you are guilty of all that Blood that would have followed. But ſtill you ſay you did not deſign that thing; but to tell you, he that doth a ſinful and unlawful Act, muſt anſwer, and is liable both to God and Man for all the Conſequences that attend it, therefore I ſay you ought not to think your ſelf innocent. 'Tis poſſible you may be penitent, and nothing remains but that. And as I think in your Church you allow of a thing called Attrition, if you cannot with our Church, have Contrition, which is a ſorrow proceeding from Love, Pray make uſe of Attrition, which is a ſorrow ariſing from Fear. For you may aſſure your ſelf, there are but a few Moments betwixt you and a vaſt Eternity, where will be no dallying, no arts to be uſed, therefore think on all the good you can do in this little ſpace of time that is left you, all is little enough to wipe off (beſides your private and ſecret offences) even your publick ones. I do know that Confeſſion is very much owned in your Church, and you do well in it; but as your offence is publick, ſo ſhould your Confeſſion be; and it will do you more ſervice then all your Auricular Confeſſions. Were I in your caſe, there ſhould be nothing at the bottom of my heart that I would not diſcloſe; Perchance you may be deluded with the fond hopes of having your Sentence reſpited. Truſt not to it, Mr. Coleman, you may be flatter'd to ſtop your Mouth, till they have ſtopt your Breath, and I doubt you will find that to be the event. I think it becomes you as a Man, and as a Chriſtian, to do all that is now in your power, ſince you cannot be white, to make your ſelf as clean as you can, and to fit your ſelf for another World, where you will ſee how vain all reſolutions of obſtinacy of concealment, and all that ſort of bravery which perhaps may be inſtill'd by ſome Men, will prove. They will not then ſerve to leſſen, but they will add to your fault. It concerns Us no farther than for your own good, and do as God ſhall direct you, for the truth is, there are perſwaſions and inducements in your Church to ſuch kind of Reſolutions and ſuch kind of Actions, which you are led into by falſe Principles and falſe Doctrines (and ſo you will find when you come once to experiment it, as ſhortly you will) that hardly the Religion of a Turk would own. But when Chriſtians by any violent bloody Act attempt to propagate Religion, they abuſe both their Diſciples and Religion too, and change that way that Chriſt Himſelf taught us to follow him by. 'Twas not by Blood or Violence; by no ſingle Man's undertaking to diſturb and to alter Governments; To make hurly burlies, and all the miſchiefs that attend ſuch things as theſe are.

For a Church to perſwade Men even to the Committing of the higheſt Violences, under a pretence of doing God good ſervice, looks not (in my Opinion) like Religion, but Deſign; like an Engine, not a Holy Inſtitution; Artificial as a Clock, which follows not the Sun but the Setter; goes not according to the Bible but the Prieſt, whoſe Interpretations ſerve their particular ends, and thoſe private advantages which True Religion would ſcorn, and Natural Religion it ſelf would not endure. I have, Mr. Coleman, ſaid thus much to you as you are a Chriſtian, and as I am one, and I do it out of great Charity and Compaſſion, and with great ſenſe and ſorrow that you ſhould be miſlead to theſe great offences under pretence of Religion. But ſeeing you have but a little time, I would have you make uſe of it to your beſt advantage; for I tell you, that though Death may be talkt of at a diſtance in a brave Heroick way, yet when a Man once comes to the Minute, Death is a very ſerious thing; then you will conſider how trifling all Plots and Contrivances are, and to how little purpoſe is all your Concealments. I only offer theſe things to your thoughts, and perhaps they may better go down at ſuch a time as this is than at another; and if they have no effect upon you, I hope they will have ſome as to my own particular, in that I have done my good will. I do remember you once more, that in this matter you be not deluded with any fantaſtick hopes and expectations of a Pardon, for the Truth is, Mr. Coleman, you will be deceived; therefore ſet your heart at Reſt, for we are at this time in ſuch diſorders, and the People ſo continually Alarm'd either with ſecret Murthers, or ſome Outrages and Violences that are this day on foot, that though the King, who is full of Mercy almoſt to a fault, yet if he ſhould be inclined that way, I verily believe both Houſes would interpoſe between that and you. I ſpeak this to ſhake off all vain hopes from you; for I tell you I verily believe they would not you ſhould have any Twigg to hold by to deceive you; ſo that now you may look upon it, there is nothing will ſave you, for you will aſſuredly dye as now you live, and that very ſuddenly. In which I having diſcharged my Conſcience to you as a Chriſtian, I will now proceed to pronounce Sentence againſt you, and do my duty as a Judge.

You ſhall return to Priſon, from thence to be drawn to the place of Execution, where you ſhall be hanged by the Neck, and be cut down alive, your Bowels burnt before your Face, and your Quarters ſever'd, and your Body diſpoſed of as the King thinks fit; and ſo the Lord have mercy upon your Soul.

Coleman. My Lord, I humbly thank your Lordſhip, and I do admire your Charity, that you would be pleaſed to give me this admirable Counſel, and I will follow it as well as I can, and I beg your Lordſhip to hear me what I am going to ſay, your Lordſhip moſt Chriſtian like, hath obſerved wiſely, that Confeſſion is extreamly neceſſary to a dying Man, and I do ſo too; but that Confeſſion your Lordſhip I ſuppoſe means, is of a guilty evil Conſcience in any of theſe points that I am condemn'd for, Of maliciouſly contriving, &c. if I thought I had any ſuch guilt, I ſhould aſſuredly think my ſelf damn'd now I am going out of the World by concealing them, in ſpite of all Pardons or Indulgencies, or any act that the Pope or the Church of Rome could do for me, as I believe any one Article of Faith. Therefore pray hear the words of a dying Man, I have made a Reſolution, I thank God, not to tell a lie, no not a ſingle lie, not to ſave my Life. I hope God will not ſo far leave me as to let me do it; and I do renounce all manner of mercy that God can ſhew me, if I have not told the Houſe of Commons, or offer'd it to the Houſe of Commons, all that I know in my whole Heart toward this buſineſs; and I never in all my Life either made any propoſition, or received any Propoſition, or knew or heard directly or indirectly of any propoſition towards the ſupplanting or invading the King's Life, Crown or Dignity, or to make any Invaſion or Diſturbance to introduce any New Government, or to bring in Popery by any Violence or Force in the World; if I have, my Lord, been miſtaken in my method, as I will not ſay but I might have been; for if two Men differ, one muſt be miſtaken; therefore poſſibly I might be of an Opinion, that Popery might come in if Liberty of Conſcience had been granted, and perhaps all Chriſtians are bound to wiſh all People of that Religion that they profeſs themſelves; if they are in earneſt: I will not diſpute thoſe ills that your Lordſhip may imagine to be in the Church of Rome; if I thought there was any in them I would be ſure to be none of it. I have no deſign, my Lord, at all in Religion but to be Saved; and I had no manner of invitation to invite me to the Church of Rome, no not one, but to be Saved; if I am out of the way, I am out of the way, as to the next World as well as this; I have nothing but a ſincere Conſcience, and I deſire to follow it as I ought. I do confeſs I am guilty of many Crimes, and I am afraid all of us are guilty in ſome meaſure, of ſome failings and infirmities; but in matters of this Nature that I now ſtand condemn'd for, though I do not at all complain of the Court; for I do confeſs I have had all the fair play imaginable; and I have nothing at all to ſay againſt it; but I ſay as to any one act of mine, ſo far as acts require Intention to make them acts, as all humane Acts do, I am as Innocent of any Crime that I now ſtand charg'd as guilty of, as when I was firſt born.

L. C. J. That is not poſſible.

Coleman. With ſubmiſſion, I do not ſay Innocent as to any Crime in going againſt any Act of Parliament, then it is a Crime to hear Maſs, or to do any Act that they prohibit; but for Intending and Endeavouring to bring in that Religion ligion by the Aid and Assistance of the King of France, I never intended nor meant by that Aid and Assistance, any Force in the World, but such Aids and Assistances as might procure us Liberty of Conscience. My Lord, if in what I have said no body believes me, I must be content; if any do believe me, then I have wip'd off those scandalous Thoughts and abominable Crimes, that, &c. and then I have paid a little Debt to Truth.

L. C. J. One word more and I have done, I am sorry Mr. Coleman, that I have not Charity enough to belive the words of a dying Man; for I will tell you what sticks with me very much, I cannot be perswaded, and no body can, but that your Correspondence and Negotiations did continue longer than the Letters that we have found, that is after 1678. Now if you had come and shown us your Books and Letters, which would have spoke for themselves, I should have thought then that you had dealt plainly and sincerely, and it would have been a mighty Motive to have believed the rest; for certainly your Correspondence held even to the time of your apprehension, and you have not discovered so much as one Paper, but what was found unknown to you, and against your will.

Coleman. Upon the words of a dying Man, and upon the expectation I have of Salvation, I tell your Lordship, that there is not a Book nor Paper in the World, that I have laid aside voluntarily.

L. C. J. No, perhaps you have burnt them.

Coleman. Not, by the Living God.

L. C. J. I hope Mr. Coleman you will not say no manner of way.

Coleman. For my Correspondence these two last years past, I have given an account of every Letter; but those that were common Letters, and those Books that were in my House, what became of them I know not; they were common Letters that I use to write every Day, a Common Journal what past at Home and Abroad, my Men they writ on out of that Book.

L. C. J. What became of those Letters?

Coleman. I had no Letters about this business, but what I have declared to the House of Commons, That is, Letters from St. Germans, which I owned to the House of Commons; and I had no methodical Correspondence, and I never valued them nor regarded them, but as they came, I destroyed them.

L. C. J. I remember the last Letter that is given in Evidence against you, discovers what mighty hopes there was, that the time was now come wherein that pestilent Heresie, that hath domineer'd in this Northern part of the World, should be Extirpated; and that there never was greater hopes of it since OUR Queen Maries Reign. Pray Mr. Coleman, was that the concluding Letter in this affair?

Coleman. Give me leave to say it upon my dying, I have not one Letter, &c.

L. C. J. What though you burnt your Letters, you may recollect the Contents.

Coleman. I had none since.

L. C. J. Between God and your Conscience be it, I have other apprehensions; and you deserve your Sentence upon you for your offences, that visibly appear out of your own Papers, that you have not, and cannot deny.

Coleman. I am satisfied. But seeing my time is but short, may I not be permitted to have some immediate Friends, and my poor Wife to have her freedom to speak with me, and stay with me that little time that I have, that I might speak something to her in order to her living and my dying.

L. C. J. You say well, and it is a hard Case to deny it; but I tell you what hardens my Heart, the Insolencies of your Party, (the Roman Catholicks I mean) that they every Day offer, which is indeed a proof of their Plot, that they are so bold and Impudent, and such secret Murders Committed by them, as would harden any Mans heart to do the common favours of Justice and Charity, that to Mankind is usually done: They are so bold and insolent, that I think it is not to be endured in a Protestant Kingdom; but for my own particular, I think it is a very hard thing for to deny a Man the company of his Wife, and his Friends, so it be done with Caution and Prudence; Remember that the Plot is on foot, and I do not know what Arts the Priests have, and what Tricks they use; and therefore have a care that no Papers nor any such thing, be sent from him.

Coleman. I do not design it I am sure.

L. C. J. But for the Company of his Wife and his near Friends, or any thing in that kind, that may be for his Eternal good, and as much for his present satisfaction that he can receive now in the condition that he is in, let him have it, but do it with Care and Caution.

Capt. Richardson. What, for them to be private alone?

L. C. J. His Wife, only she, God forbid else. Nor shall you not be deny'd any Protestant Minister.

Coleman. But shall not my Cousin Coleman have Liberty to come to me.

L. C. J. Yes, with Mr. Richardson.

Coleman. Or his Servant; Because it is a great Trouble for him to attend always.

L. C. J. If it be his Servant, or any he shall appoint, 'tis all one, Mr. Richardson, use him as Reasonably as may be, considering the Condition he is in.

Court. Have a care of your Prisoner.

The TRIAL of WILLIAM STAYLEY, Goldſmith; For Treaſonable Words, November 21. 1678.

MR. STAYLEY being accuſed of High Treaſon, was on the 20*th* Day of November 1678. brought from Newgate, and arraigned at the King's-Bench Barr, and the next Day was brought to the ſame Place to receive his Trial; where being come, and the Jury Impanelled, the Court told the Priſoner, that if he would Challenge any of the Jury, he muſt ſpeak unto them as they came to the Book to be ſworn, and before they were ſworn; the Priſoner Challenging none, the Jury were ſworn, viz.

The Indictment Read.

You ſtand Indicted by the Name of William Stayley, &c.

Cryer. If any can give Evidence on the behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, againſt William Stayley, let him come forth and he ſhall be heard.

Sir Creſſwell Levings. The Priſoner ſtands Indicted as not having the fear of God before his Eyes, being led by the Inſtigation of the Devil, not minding his Allegiance, but Traiterouſly endeavouring the Death and Deſtruction of our Sovereign Lord the King, he did on November the 14th, in the Thirtieth Year of the King, falſly, wickedly, and Traiterouſly Compaſs, Imagine, Deviſe and Invent the Killing the King; that he did Maliciouſly contrive (I ſay) the Death of our Lord, the King of England.

To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty. You are to Try whether he be guilty or not.

King's Serjeant, Maynard. The Offence is as great as can be, and will be proved as clear as can be. Call the Witneſſes to prove the Offence.

Sir William Jones Att. Gen. It would be fitting before we enter upon the Evidence, to give ſome account, why (among ſo many Offenders, ſome of them of greater quality than William Stayley) we choſe firſt to bring this Man to Tryal. It is not unknown to any Man that lives in England, what Diſcoveries there have been of horrid and damnable Deſigns againſt the King's Perſon, and the Proteſtant Religion. There are a ſort of Men in the World, that endeavour what they can to cry down this Diſcovery, as that it was altogether Suppoſititious, and a Fable. It is true, ſome are ſo charitable as to think the Roman Catholicks in England do promote the Roman Catholick Religion, but the Deſign againſt the King's Perſon is a Fiction. But they ſhall do well to take warning by the Trial of this Man, and Impriſonment of ſo many Offenders, as that even ſince this Diſcovery made, ſome have had this Treaſonable mind, and Trayterous attempt againſt the King, and ſaid thoſe words for which in the Indictment he is charged with. This Priſoner by Religion is a Roman Catholick, he calls himſelf ſo; in plain Engliſh he is a Papiſt; and finding that ſince this Plot was diſcovered, his Trading decay'd (being one that dealt in Monies) he was one of their Party, he grew inraged their Money was called ſo faſt for, being in the company of one Fromante, a Foreigner, at a Cook's Shop, and were conſidering of matters of Trade, this Man was complaining his Money was ſo faſt called in for. Taking notice of the diſcovery of the Plot, (being a very great well-wiſher to it) entred into a great Paſſion, and ſpake theſe words of the King: That he was the greateſt Heretick in the World, that he was a great Rogue; for his part, holding up his Hand, clapt it then upon his Heart, and ſaid I will with this Hand kill him. Theſe words were heard by the Gentlemen that were preſent, ſpoken in French.

William Caſters, a Witneſs.

Att. Gen. Acquaint the Court and Jury what you know of any words ſpoken by the Priſoner about killing the King.

Witneſs. So far as I know or can give an account, it was about Eleven of the Clock in the Day, on the Fourteenth Day of this Month; he call'd for a Pot of Ale and a ſlice of Roſt Beef, which when it was called for, his Landlord ſaid it ſhould be brought him; there was another Frenchman with Stayley, a Stranger to me: they diſcourſed together in French, and Stayley then ſaid 'twice over, The King was a grand Heretick, making this Demonſtration, with his Hand upon his Breaſt, and ſtampt five or ſix times with his Foot in great Fury. The old Man Fromante, his Friend, ſaid, That the King of England was a Tormenter of the People of God, and he anſwered again in a great Fury, He is a great Heretick, and the greateſt Rogue in the World; there's the Heart, and here's the Hand that would kill him, and the King and Parliament think all is over, but the Rogues are miſtaken.

Sir. William Scroggs, L. C. J. Did you know Stayley?

Witneſs. No my Lord, I had never ſeen him before.

L. C. J. What did you do upon this?

Witneſs. I did not know what to do, being ignorant of the Laws of the Country, I thought it was a great matter, and being ſenſible that Stayley was gone out, I cauſed one to attend him, and came to his Father's Shop, and looked up and down, and the next Day I apprehended him.

ed

L. C. J. Are you ſure (looking upon the Priſoner) that was the Man?

Witneſs. Yes.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him when he ſpake the words?

Witneſs. Yes, I ſaw him; there was no more diſtance betwixt the two Doors, but juſt as far as that Gentleman and me; his Face was ſtrait towards us.

L. C. J. Were you in the ſame Room?

Witneſs. No, but juſt over againſt it; the Doors were open.

L. C. J. How near were you to him?

Witneſs. Seven or Eight Foot from the Place where I was and where he was. He was ſtanding at one Door, and I at the other. In French the words were ſpoken, he making a demonſtration, ſtamping with his Foot, I would kill him my ſelf, (which the Priſoner would have evaded by ſaying, the words ſignifie I would kill my ſelf.) The Priſoner farther ſaid, that the King and Parliament thought all was over, but the Rogues were beguiled and deceived.

Alexander Southerland, Witneſs.

Mr. Southerland, Tell what you heard the Priſoner at the Bar ſay, were you there?

Witneſs. Yes.

L. C. J. Which was neareſt to him, he or you?

Witneſs. He was neareſt to him, and I juſt by the Gentleman. He ſaid afterwards when a word or two paſt betwixt them, the Rogues are deceived, they think the Buſineſs is done, but they are deceived. The old Man ſaid, that the King of England was a Tormenter of the People of God; the Priſoner anſwered, the King of England is the greateſt Heretick, and the greateſt Rogue in the World, and the King and Parliament thinks their buſineſs is done, but the Rogues are miſtaken.

Priſoner. I ſaid (replyed the Priſoner) I would kill my ſelf.

L. C. J. Would you kill your ſelf becauſe you ſaid the King was a Heretick? You acknowledge your ſelf to be a Roman Catholick.

Priſ. And in that Faith I intend to dye.

Att. Gen. Here the Priſoner doth not deny but he ſaid, the King of England was a great Heretick; and can we imagine him to be in ſuch a Paſſion that he would kill himſelf? Whether that be a natural Concluſion from the Premiſes, I muſt ſubmit to---

L. C. J. Did you ſee Mr. Stayley perfectly, was the Door open?

Witneſs. I ſaw him perfectly.

L. C. J. Did you know him before.

Wit. I never ſaw his Face before.

L. C. J. Did you write the words preſently?

Wit. I writ them down preſently, as God ſhall be my witneſs.

L. C. J. Look upon the writing, is it your Hand?

Wit. It is; and it was written the 14th of November, 1678. About Eleven a Clock they came to the Black Lyon in King-ſtreet, and call'd for a Quart of Ale and a ſlice of Roſt Beef, and it was anſwered, it ſhould preſently be had. William Stayley ſaid, having ſtruck on his Breaſt, and ſtamping with his Foot five or ſix times, I my ſelf would do it.

L. C. J. Did you write all that is in the Paper at that time?

Wit. I writ the words in French as I heard them from him, then formed it as to the Perſon and time afterwards when I was gone.

L. C. J. Who told you it was Stayley the Goldſmith?

Wit. We asked the Man of the Houſe; and we found he went to his Father's Houſe in Covent Garden; we asked his Father's Name, and his Name; and that's the very Man.

L. C. J. He confeſſeth he was in this place at that time with the old Man. He acknowledged that he ſpoke ſome words, but denied he ſpake thoſe: That he was the Man, he doth not deny.

Att. Gen. The third Man is a Gentleman that doth not underſtand the French Tongue, he was in the Company of theſe two Men at that time; we do not call him to prove the words, becauſe he doth not underſtand the Language.

L. C. J. There is no miſtake of the Perſon, the Priſoner doth not deny he was there. Call the third Perſon to know what he hath to ſay.

Philip Garret, third Witneſs

Wit. All that I can ſay is this; My Captain William Caſtars came to me in a great Paſſion, and ſaid, I cannot ſuffer this, I will run upon him, I cannot be quiet.

L. C. J. What are thoſe words he charged upon him?

Wit. That he would kill the King himſelf: It is impoſſible to ſuffer it, I will run out for a Conſtable preſently, this cannot be ſuffered. I went to enquire for his Name; the anſwer was he was a Goldſmith, and that his Name was Stayley. That's the very Man (looking upon him) I ſaw there, and heard him ſpeak.

L. C. J. What were the firſt words?

Wit. [The French words were ſpoken twice, in Engliſh thus] The King is a grand Heretick [French again] Here's the Hand, here's the Heart, I would kill him my ſelf.

L. C. J. What can you ſay to this?

Priſoner. My Lord, the matter of Fact happened thus: This Gentleman, Mr. Southerland, comes over to me in the Morning when I was in the Shop, and ſaid, Sir, I would have a red Button like this, I ſaid I had none of that nature, you had better go to the Exchange. I would have one of a true Stone; You muſt (I reply'd) go to the Jewellers, I have none of theſe. Upon that I diſmiſs'd him; he went over, and preſently comes, in a quarter of an Hour after, and tells me, that an Honourable Perſon would ſpeak with me: I went over; this Gentleman makes a great many Ceremonies to me, and reads me this Paper; he tells me, you ſee what the Gentleman reads, I would adviſe you to look to it, then taking me aſide by the Window. I ſaid, I do not underſtand you, I am innocent, you muſt not put any bubble upon me; with that the Captain runs out in a fury, and fetcheth a Conſtable, and carrieth me to the Gate-houſe. I was in my Shop the Day before, which very Day I did intend to go out with a Friend into the Country, and prepared my ſelf accordingly; and Mr. Fromante, the old Man that was the Friend of mine, comes, ſaying to me, the Conſtable would have ſomething, I know not what it is, come and aſſiſt me; me; I went to the place, the Conſtable told me, that I was to appear by Ten of the Clock; with that comes the old Man out. I owed him a little Money, I went and paid him the Money which I owed him. I came back, and ſate down by the Window out of ſight, the old Man ſat at the right Hand, ſo we ſat and diſcourſed as innocently, as I thought, and (before God) as ever I ſpake in my Life.

L. C. J. What diſcourſe had you?

Priſ. Our chief diſcourſe was about the Materials of our buſineſs, and it was about the King of France his Uſurpation over his Subjects, and the happineſs of our little People, the Commonalty of England, that was indeed uſually our our diſcourſe when we met together.

L. C. J. Did you ſay you would kill the King of France? and that he was a great Heretick? Do you believe the King of France is an Heretick?

Priſoner. I know not what his Opinion is, that's to his own Conſcience.

L. C. J. Did you name the word Heretick?

Priſoner. Not to my knowledge, upon my Soul, not of the King of England; we might have diſcourſed of the happineſs and of the difference of their Governments. I have been thought a Perſon of ſome Intelligence, and of ſome Underſtanding in the World, and not to expoſe my ſelf to ſpeak in a publick large Room, the Door being open, with ſo high a Voice that theſe Gentlemen being in the next Room ſhould hear me in French, and in a Street where almoſt all are French-men, to ſpeak theſe blaſphemous Words, Words that I abhor. I have been a great admirer of my Prince.

Court. Read the Statute of Decimo tertio, &c.

L. C. J. Speak the words in Engliſh about killing the King, ſpeak them all.

Witneſs. That the Priſoner's Companion did ſay, The King was a Tormentor and Perſecutor of the People of God. The Priſoners words were again, The King of England is the greateſt Heretick, and the greateſt Rogue in the world; here's the Heart, and there's the Hand that would kill him; I my ſelf.

Priſ. Here's the Hand, and here's the Heart which would kill my ſelf: Not would kill Him my ſelf.

L. C. J. What Jeſuit taught you this Trick? It is like one of them, it is the Art and Intereſt of a Jeſuit ſo to do.

The Statute read.

L. C. J. Have you any thing more to ſay for your ſelf than what you have already ſaid?

Court. Sir John Kirk, do you underſtand French?

One of the Jury. I do, my Lord; the words have been interpreted all right.

L. C. J. Let me ask you one Queſtion; When you ſaid the King was a great Heretick and a Rogue, and here's the Heart, and here's the Arm that would kill him my ſelf; was it not the King you would kill?

Priſoner. I have this to ſay in Juſtification of my ſelf, and Allegiance to my Prince and King, that I never thought, nor imagined or contrived any way, but have been a true Subject to the King upon all occaſions; I am ſorry it proves ſo, God's will be done, my Soul depends upon it; I am a dying Man by the Statute, never with Intention, or any thought or ill will, ſpake any word about this matter.

L. C. J. Out of the abundance of the Heart the Mouth ſpeaks, the Statute hath been read, which hath made it criminal.

Call a Witneſs for the Priſoner.

Witneſs for the Priſoner. One Anſelm Spake.

They came to my Houſe, where I live at the Croſs-keys in Covent Garden, about Eight a Clock in the Morning, theſe two Gentlemen, the Day they took him away, was the Day after theſe words were ſpoke, and he was kept Priſoner from Eight till Eleven of the Clock without any Conſtable, they had five Bottles of Wine, and beſpake Meat, but they did not ſtay to eat the Meat.

L. C. J. How came you to ſtay ſo long?

Wit. I was two Hours in looking for a Conſtable, they would not come with me, without a Warrant from a Juſtice of Peace

L. C. J. Who told you you had beſt take it up?

Priſ. The middlemoſt Man, the firſt Witneſs.

Wit. We were about three long Hours, I ſent out this Gentleman for a Conſtable, in the mean time the Priſoner's Father ſent his Maid for him to come Home, I told him he ſhould not go, if he deſired to eat we would eat there. I ſent to White-Hall and deſired a Guard, the Officer of the Guard told the Meſſenger it was a Conſtables part.

Court. Call another Witneſs for the Priſoner.

Witneſs for the Priſoner.

I have heard him often declare as much Loyalty to his Prince as any Perſon. One Day we fell into a diſcourſe of theſe affairs the buſineſs of the Jeſuits, which are a People he did as much condemn as any; for in Padua he ſaw ſo many cheats, that he forſook the Jeſuitical Religion, and if he knew any of the Perſons concerned in this Plot, he would be the Executioner himſelf, and whoever comes to Reign afterwards, they ſhall never enjoy ſo much Peace as now; and I heard him often ſay he would loſe his Blood for the King, and heard him ſpeak as Loyally as I ever heard any Man ſpeak in my Life.

L. C. J. That is when he ſpoke to a Proteſtant.

Court. Have you any thing elſe to ſay for your ſelf, or have you any more Witneſſes, that you would have examined on your behalf?

Priſoner. No.

Lord Chief Juſtice's Speech.

'THE Statute hath been read, which was made ſince the King came in, for the preſervation of his Perſon, and during his Life: The Parliament thought it reaſonable, even to make deſperate words to be Treaſon, although there was no other thing but words, that is, ſuch words, as if the thing had been done would be Treaſon, the ſpeaking it is Treaſon. When we come to obſerve the manner of this ſpeaking, methinks there is no great difficulty to ſatisfie the Jury that they were ſpoke adviſedly and maliciouſly. They were in a Publick Houſe, and by accident heard: They concealed them not a Moment, and not from the Man that did not underſtand French. To hear a Man ſay in a great Paſſion, that his

'King

'King was a Heretick, and the greateſt Rogue 'in the World, and that he would kill him, to 'write down the words preſently, they ſlept 'not upon it, they found out who he was, the 'next Day they came to attach him; they kept 'him, for what? till they could get a Conſta-'ble. So that here is nothing doubtful either 'in the Circumſtance or Subſtance of his Caſe: 'So that you cannot have a plainer proof in the 'World than there is in this. For my own part, 'when it is in the Caſe of a Man's Life, I 'would not have any Compliance with the ru-'mors or diſorder of times that ſhould be an E-'vidence againſt him, but would have a Ver-'dict depend upon the Witneſſes that ſwear the 'Fact down right upon him. You and we all 'are ſenſible of the great difficulties and hazards 'that is now both againſt the King's Perſon, 'and againſt all Proteſtants, and our Religion 'too, which will hardly maintain it ſelf, when 'they have deſtroyed the Men; but let 'em 'know, that many Thouſands will loſe their 'Religion with their Lives, for we will not be 'Papiſt's, let the Jeſuits preſs what they will '(who are the foundations of all this Miſchief) 'in making Proſelites, by telling them, do what 'wickedneſs you will it's no ſin, but we can 'ſave you, and if you omit what we Command, 'we can damn you. This they will not own 'when it comes to be an objection and penal 'upon them, but they will never get the Pope 'of Rome to declare he hath not a power to Ex-'communicate what he calls a heretick King, 'and if he does, that the Subject is not diſcharg-'ed from his Obedience, they would do great 'ſervice to their Papiſt Friends, if they could 'obtain ſuch an Edict. They Print, Preach, 'Diſpute, and Maintain otherwiſe, and there-'by lead People to their own deſtruction and 'the deſtructions of others. Excuſe me if I am 'a little warm, when perils are ſo many, their 'Murthers ſo ſecret, that we cannot diſcover 'the Murther of that Gentleman, whom we all 'knew ſo well, when things are tranſacted ſo 'cloſely, and our King in ſo great danger, and 'Religion at ſtake. Tis better to be warm here 'than in Smithfield. But that the Man might 'have juſtice done him, he hath had his Wit-'neſſes, and might have had this old Man, if 'he had named him to Mr. Richardſon: and to 'ſhew what fair play he has had, Mr. Attorny 'tells you the old Man hath been examined up-'on Oath, and offers him the Copy of his Exa-'mination to uſe, but he thinks not fit to uſe it 'for his defence, therefore nothing is ſmother-'ed. The Offence you have heard in words 'plain enough, unleſs the ſenſe is perverted by 'Jeſuitical cunning and equivocation, the beſt 'part of their learning and honeſty. They 'ſwear it expreſly, That the King was a Heretick, 'and the greateſt Rogue in the World, and here's the 'Heart and Hand, that he would kill him himſelf; 'and hath and can have no other ſignification. 'The Statute ſaith Adviſedly and Malicioufly. The 'manner of ſpeaking, and the words ſpoke, 'prove both. When a Papiſt once hath made a 'Man a Heretick, there is no ſcruple to mur-'ther him. Whoever is not of their Perſuaſion 'are Hereticks, and whoever are Hereticks 'may be murthered, if the Pope commands it, 'for which they may become Saints in Heaven; 'this is that they have practiſed. If there had 'been nothing of this in this Kingdom, or other 'parts of the World, it would be a hard thing 'to impoſe it upon them, but they ought not 'to complain, when ſo many inſtances are a-'gainſt them. Therefore diſcharge your Con-'ſciences as you ought to do; if guilty let him 'take the reward of his Crime, and you ſhall 'do well to begin with this Man, for perchance 'it may be a terrour to the reſt. Unleſs they 'think they can be ſaved by dying in the Ro-'man Faith, tho' with ſuch pernicious and trai-'terous words and deſigns as theſe are; let ſuch 'go to Heaven by themſelves, I hope, I ſhall 'never go to that Heaven, where Men are made 'Saints for killing Kings.

William Stayley, hold up your hand.

Court. Is William Stayley guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he hath been Indicted?

Jury. Guilty.

Court. What Goods, Chattels, Lands or Te-nements?

Priſ. None.

L. C. J. Now you may die a Roman Catho-lick, and when you come to die, I doubt you will be found a Prieſt too.

K. Coun. I pray Judgment according to the Verdict.

Court. You have been indicted of High Trea-ſon, you have put your ſelf upon your Country, which Country have found you guilty, what have you to ſay for your ſelf, wherefore the Court ſhould not proceed to Judgment againſt you?

Priſ. I have nothing to ſay.

L. C. J. I pronounce Judgment upon you. You are here found guilty by the Jury of High Treaſon, for ſaying you would kill the King, with other irreverent words; but the matter which makes you a Traitor is proved upon you by moſt apparent Evidence. The matter, man-ner, and all the circumſtances of it make it plain, you may harden your Heart as much as you will, and lift up your eyes, but you ſeem inſtead of being ſorrowful, to be obſtinate, between God and your Conſcience be it, I have nothing to do with it, my duty is to pronounce Judgment upon you according to Law, which is this,

The SENTENCE.

You ſhall return to the Priſon, from thence ſhall be drawn to the place of Execution, where you ſhall be hang-ed by the Neck, cut down alive, your Quarters ſhall be ſevered and be diſpoſed of as the King ſhall think fit, and your Bowels burnt, and ſo the Lord have mercy upon your Soul.

The TRIALS of William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove; December the 17*th* 1678.

ON Tueſday the Seventeenth day of December, One Thouſand Six Hundred Seventy and Eight, Thomas White alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove were brought from his Majeſty's Gaol of Newgate, to the Seſſions-houſe at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Baily, being there Indicted for High Treaſon, for contriving and conſpiring to Murder the King, to receive their Trial; and the Court proceeded thereupon as followeth.

Cryer, O yes, All manner of Perſons are commanded to keep ſilence upon pain of Impriſonment.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas White alias Whitebread, hold up thy hand: Which he did, and ſo of the reſt. You that are Sworn look upon the Priſoners and hearken to their Cauſe:

You ſhall underſtand, that they ſtand Indicted by the Names of Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, late of the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Clerk; William Ireland, late of the ſame Pariſh in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; John Fenwick, late of the ſame Pariſh in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; Thomas Pickering, late of the ſame Pariſh in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; and John Grove, late of the ſame Pariſh in the County aforeſaid, Gentleman: For that they as falſe Traitors of the moſt Illuſtrious, Serene, and moſt Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord Charles the II. by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland King Defender of the Faith, &c. their ſupreme and natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in their hearts, nor the duty of their Allegeance any ways weighing, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, towards our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, ſhould and of right ought to bear, altogether withdrawing, and endeavouring, and with their whole ſtrength intending, the peace and common tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſturb, and the true Worſhip of God within this Kingdom of England uſed, and by Law eſtabliſhed to overthrow, and to move, ſtir up, and procure Rebellion within this Kingdom of England, and the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, toward our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King ſhould and of right ought to bear, wholly to withdraw, vanquiſh, and extinguiſh, and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put the four and twentieth Day of April, in the Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign L. Charles the II. by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King Defender of the Faith, &c. the thirtieth, at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly, deceitfully, adviſedly, and traitorouſly, they did propoſe, compaſs, imagine, and intend, to ſtir up, move, and procure Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England, and to procure and cauſe a miſerable ſlaughter among the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and wholly to deprive, depoſe, throw down, and diſinherit our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King from his Royal State, Title, Power and Government of this his Kingdom of England, and him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to put to Death, and utterly to deſtroy, and the Government of this Kingdom of England, and the ſincere Religion and Worſhip of God in the ſame Kingdom, rightly and by the laws of the ſame Kingdom eſtabliſhed, for their will and pleaſure to change and alter, and wholly to ſubvert and deſtroy the ſtate of the whole Kingdom, being in all parts thereof well inſtituted and ordered, and to levy War againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King within this his Realm of England. And to fulfil and bring to paſs theſe their moſt wicked Treaſons and Traitorous deſigns and purpoſes aforeſaid, they the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, and other falſe Traitors unknown, the ſaid four and twentieth Day of April, in the ſaid thirtieth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King, with force and arms, &c. at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly, deceitfully, adviſedly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly did aſſemble, unite, and gather themſelves together, and then and there falſly, maliciouſly, deceitfully, adviſedly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly they did conſult and agree to put and bring our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction, and to alter and change the Religion rightly and by the Laws of the ſame Kingdom eſtabliſhed, to the ſuperſtition of the Church of Rome; and the ſooner to bring to paſs and accompliſh the ſame, their moſt wicked Treaſons and Traitorous imaginations and purpoſes aforeſaid, they the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, John Grove, and other falſe Traitors of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King unknown, afterwards (to wit) the ſaid four and twentieth Day of April, in the ſaid thirtieth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, at the ſaid Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, deceitfully, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly they did conſult and agree that they the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove ſhould kill and murther our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King: And that they the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and other falſe Traitors unknow, ſhould therefore ſay, celebrate, and perform a certain number of Maſſes, (then and there agreed on among them) for the good of the Soul of the ſaid Thomas Pickering, and ſhould therefore pay to the ſaid John Grove a certain ſum of Money, (then and there alſo agreed on among them:) And further, that the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove upon the agree-greement aforeſaid, then and there falſly, deceitfully, adviſedly, malicioufly, devilliſhly, and traitorouſly did undertake, and to the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and other falſe Traitors of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King unknown, then and there falſly, deceitfully, adviſedly, malicioufly, devilliſhly, and traitorouſly they did then and there promiſe, that they the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King would kill and murder: And further, that they the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, and other falſe Traitors of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King unknown, afterwards (to wit) the ſaid four and twentieth Day of April, in the ſaid thirtieth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, at the ſaid pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, deceitfully, adviſedly, malicioufly, devilliſhly, and traitorouſly, did ſeverally plight their Faith every one to other of them, and did then and there ſwear and promiſe upon the Sacrament, to conceal and not to divulge their ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons, and traitorous compaſſings, conſultations, and purpoſes aforeſaid, ſo among them had, traitorouſly to kill and murther our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and to introduce the Roman Religion, to be uſed within this Kingdom of England, and to alter and change the true Reformed Religion, rightly and by the laws of this Kingdom of England, in this ſame Kingdom of England eſtabliſhed: And further, that they the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, in execution of their ſaid traitorous Agreement, afterwards (to wit) the ſame 24th Day of April, in the ſaid 30th Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and divers other Days and Times afterwards at the ſaid pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the ſaid County of Middleſex, falſly, deceitfully, adviſedly, malicioufly, devilliſhly, and traitorouſly they did prepare and obtain to themſelvs, and had and did keep Muſquets, Piſtols, Swords, Daggers, and other offenſive and cruel weapons and inſtruments, to kill and murther our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King: And that they the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove afterwards, to wit the ſaid four and twentieth Day of April, in the ſaid thirtieth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and divers days and times afterwards with force and Arms, &c. at the ſaid pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, and in other places within the ſaid County of Middleſex, falſly, deceitfully, adviſedly, malicioufly, and traitorouſly, did lie in wait, and endeavour to kill and murther our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King; and further, that they the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and other falſe Traitors unknown, afterwards (to wit) the ſaid 24th day of April in the ſaid thirtieth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, at the ſaid pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, deceitfully, adviſedly, malicioufly, devilliſhly, and traitorouſly, did prepare, perſuade, excite, abet, comfort, and counſel four other Perſons unknown, and Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, traitorouſly to kill and murther our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, againſt the duty of their allegiance, againſt the peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the form of the Statute in that behalf made and provided.

Upon this Indictment they have been arraigned, and thereunto have ſeverally pleaded, Not Guilty, and for their Trial have put themſelves upon God and their Country, which Country you are.

Your charge therefore is to inquire, whether they or any of them be guilty of the High Treaſon, whereof they ſtand indicted, or not guilty. If you find them or any of them guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, thoſe you find guilty had at the time of the High Treaſon committed, or at any time ſince. If you find them, or any of them not guilty, you are to inquire whether they did flie for it, if you find, that they or any of them fled for it, you are to enquire of their Goods and Chattels, as if you had found them guilty. If you find them or any of them not guilty, nor that they, nor any of them fled for it, ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Make Proclamation of ſilence, on both ſides.
Which was done.

Then Sir Creſwell Levings, one of the King's Learned Counſel in the Law, opened the Indictment, thus,

Sir Creſ. Levings. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury. Theſe Priſoners at the Bar, Thomas White alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove do all ſtand indicted of High Treaſon; for that whereas they, as falſe Traitors, meaning and deſigning to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom, to levy War within the Kingdom, to make miſerable ſlaughter amongſt the King's Subjects, to ſubvert the Religion eſtabliſhed by the Law of the Land, to introduce the Superſtition of the Church of Rome, and to bring to death and final deſtruction, and to murder and aſſaſſinate our Sovereign Lord the King, they did, to effect theſe things, the four and twentieth of April laſt aſſemble themſelves together with many other falſe Traitors, yet unknown, in the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields in the County of Middleſex, and there, being ſo aſſembled, the better to effect theſe deſigns did make agreements and conſpire together; firſt, that Pickering and Grove ſhould kill the King, and that White and the reſt of the Perſons that ſtand indicted, with many other Traitors, ſhould ſay a great number of Maſſes for the Soul of the ſaid Pickering, I think thirty thouſand, and they did further agree there that Grove ſhould have a great ſum of Money, and upon this Agreement Grove and Pickering did undertake and promiſe they would do this Fact, and did then and there take the Sacrament and an Oath to one another upon the Sacrament, that they would conceal theſe their Treaſons, that they might the better effect them; and that in purſuance of this, Grove and Pickering did divers times lie in wait to murder the King, and did provide arms to do it; and the Indictment further ſets forth, that White, and Ireland, and Fenwick, and many other Traitors yet unknown, did procure four other Perſons yet alſo unknown, for to kill the King, againſt the peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the form of the Statute. Theſe are the heads of thoſe Facts for which they ſtand indicted: They have all pleaded not guilty, if we prove them or any of them guilty of theſe or any of theſe Facts according to the Evidence you ſhall have, we hope you will find it.

Sir Samuel Baldwin, one of his Majeſties Serjeants at Law, opened the charge as followeth.

Sir. Samuel Baldwin. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Perſons here before you ſtand indicted for High Treaſon, they are five in number, three of them are Jeſuits, one is a Prieſt, the fifth is a Layman, Perſons fitly prepared for the work in hand.

Gentlemen, it is not unknown to moſt Perſons, nay to every one amongſt us, that hath the leaſt obſerved the former times, how that ever ſince the Reformation there hath been a deſign carried on to ſubvert the Government, and deſtroy the Proteſtant Religion eſtabliſhed here in England; for during all the Reign of Queen Elizabeth ſeveral attempts were made by ſeveral Prieſts and Jeſuits, that came from beyond the Seas, (though the Laws were then ſevere againſt them) to deſtroy the Queen, and alter the Religion eſtabliſhed here in England, and ſo introduce Popery and the Superſtition of the Church of Rome.

But the Conſpirators from time to time, during all the Queen's Reign, were diſappointed, as Edmond Campion and ſeveral other Jeſuits, who came over in that time and were executed, and did ſuffer for their Treaſons according to Law: At length, about the latter end of the Queen's time, a Seminary for the Engliſh Jeſuits was founded at Valledolid in Spain, and you know the Employment ſuch Perſons have.

And ſoon after the Queen's death, in the beginning of the Reign of King James ſeveral Perſons came over into England from this very Seminary, who together with one Henry Garnet, Superior of the Jeſuits then in England, and divers other Engliſh Papiſts, hatched that helliſh Gunpowder-Plot; whereby what was deſigned you all know, but as it fell out theſe Perſons, as well as thoſe in Queen Elizabeth's time, were likewiſe diſappointed, and for their execrable Treaſons, in the third Year of King James, were executed at Tyburn and other places.

This is evident by the very Act of Parliament in 3° Jacobi in the preamble whereof mention is made that Creſwell and Teſmond Jeſuits, came from Valledolid in Spain to execute this Gun-powder-Treaſon with the Popiſh party here in England.

And Gentlemen, after this Treaſon, ſo miraculouſly diſcovered, was puniſhed, one would not have thought that any future age would have been guilty of the like Conſpiracy; but it ſo falls out that the Myſtery of Iniquity and Jeſuitiſm ſtill worketh, for there hath of late been a ſort of cruel and bloody minded Perſons, who, in hopes to have better ſucceſs, than they had in former times, during the Reigns of Queen Elizabeth and King James, have ſet on foot as horrid a Deſign as that of the Gunpowder Treaſon; I can reſemble it to no other Plot, or Deſign, or Treaſon in any other time, and truly it does reſemble that in many particulars: I may ſay, it doth at the leaſt equal it, if not exceed it.

I ſhall mention two or three particulars in which this Plot doth reſemble that.

Firſt, that horrid Deſign was to take away the Life of the then King, to ſubvert the Government, to introduce the Popiſh Religion, and to deſtroy the eſtabliſhed Proteſtant Religion in England, and ſo, Gentlemen, we think our proofs will make it out, that in each of theſe particulars this Deſign is the ſame that that was.

Secondly, The great Actors in that Deſign were Prieſts and Jeſuits that came from Valledolid in Spain and other places beyond the Seas. And the great Actors in this Plot are Prieſts and Jeſuits, that are come from St. Omers, and other places beyond the Seas nearer home than Spain.

Thirdly, That Plot was chiefly guided and managed by Henry Garnet Superior and Provincial of the Jeſuits then in England; and the great Actor in this Deſign, is Mr. Whitebread, Superior and Provincial of the Jeſuits now in England; ſo that I ſay in theſe ſeveral Particulars it does reſemble the GUNPOWDER PLOT.

Gentlemen, In this Plot of which the Priſoners now ſtand indicted ſeveral Perſons have ſeveral Parts: Some of theſe Perſons are Employed to keep Correſpondence beyond the Seas, (of which more hath been ſaid in another place, and ſo I ſhall not ſpeak of it here): Others were to procure and prepare Aid and Aſſiſtance here in England, who were to be ready when there ſhould be occaſion to Uſe it. But the great part that Theſe Perſons (the Priſoners at the Barr) were to Act in this Conſpiracy, was, To take away the Life of our Sovereign Lord the KING, on whoſe Preſervation the ſafety and welfare of Three Nations (and Millions of Men) does depend. Now the Facts for which the Five Priſoners ſtand indicted, I ſhall open thus:

Firſt, They are here Indicted for Conſpiring the Death of his Sacred Majeſty: They did Agree to take Away the KING's Life; and entering into ſuch an Agreement, They Hired ſome Perſons amongſt them to do it; and this Agreement was made the 24th of April laſt, 1678.

Secondly, There is another Fact they likewiſe ſtand Indicted for: That they did Endeavour and Contrive to Change and Alter the Religion Eſtabliſhed in the Nation, and introduce Popery in the Room of it, The Manner how to Effect this, was thus, if my Information be Right; you ſhall hear that from the Evidence. Mr. Whitebread being Reſident here in England, and Superior of the Jeſuits, did in February laſt think fit, (being impowered by Authority from Rome) to give Summons to the Jeſuits abroad, at St. Omers, and other places beyond the Seas, That they ſhould come over here into England, to be ready at London, on the Four and Twentieth of April, the day laid in the Indictment, and which is the day after St. George's day; and their deſign was (as will appear by the Proof) to Contrive how they may Take away the Life of the KING: For if that were once done, they thought, in all other Things, their Deſign would eaſily be Accompliſhed. After the Summons were Out, they were ſo Officious for the Accompliſhing of this Great End, that between Forty and Fifty Jeſuits did appear here at London at the time, (for thither they were Summoned) and there the Meeting ing was appointed to be. At the White-Horſe Tavern in the Strand they were to Meet firſt; but being ſo great a Number, that they were likely to be taken Notice of, if they came all together, it was ſo Ordered, they ſhould come but a few at a time, and go off in ſmall Numbers; and others ſhould ſucceed them, till the whole Number had been there: And there were Directions given, and a Courſe taken, that there ſhould be ſome Perſon to tell them whither they ſhould go from thence. After they had met there at ſeveral times in the ſame day, they were appointed, and adjourned to be at ſeveral other Places; ſome of them were appointed to be at Mr. Whitebread's Lodging, and that was in Wildſtreet, at one Mr. Sanders's Houſe: Others were appointed to go to Mr. Ireland's Lodging, which was in Ruſſel-Street, (and this Mr. Ireland was Treaſurer of the Society): And others were to meet at Mr. Fenwick's Chamber in Drury-Lane; and he was at that time Procurator and Agent for that Society. Others were appointed to meet at Harcourt's Lodging; and others at other Places.

When they came there, they all agreed to the general Deſign of the firſt meeting, which was, To kill the King. Then there was a Paper, or ſome Inſtrument to be Subſcribed. This was done, and the Sacrament was taken for the Concealment of it. After that, Whitebread, Ireland, Fenwick, and others, did Agree, that Mr. Grove and Mr. Pickering ſhould be employed to Aſſaſſinate the King. One of them (Mr. Grove) being a Lay-Brother, was to have Fifteen Hundred Pound, a great Sum; the other, as a more ſuitable Reward for his pains, was to have Thirty Thouſand Maſſes ſaid for his Soul. Mr. Whitebread, Mr. Ireland, and Mr. Fenwick, were all privy to this Deſign; and this was the Twenty fourth of April. In Auguſt after (they being appointed to Kill the King, but it not taking Effect, either their Hearts miſgave them, or they wanted Opportunity) there was another meeting at the Savoy, where the Witneſſes will tell you, four Iriſh Perſons were hired for to Kill the King. And this was ordered, in caſe the other Deſign took not Effect. There was fourſcore Pounds ſent down to them to Windſor, where they were to have done the Fact. After this, other Perſons were appointed to do the Execution, and they were to take the King at his Morning Walk at New-market.

Theſe Perſons were all diſappointed in their Deſign. But you ſhall hear what was the Agreement, how it was carried on, and what Rewards were given to carry it on. We ſhall acquaint you likewiſe, that for the bottom of this Deſign (when ſo many Jeſuits ſhould come over, when they ſhould have ſo many Conſultations, and when they ſhould reſolve to Kill the King) there could be no leſs than the Altering of Religion, and introduction of Popery here in England. And that time, at the firſt meeting, they had Ordered, That Mr. Cary a Jeſuite, as their Procurator and Agent, ſhould go to Rome, to Act their Concerns there. All which things, and more, will be made out to you by Witneſſes Produced. There are likewiſe, ſome other Circumſtances that will be material to confirm thoſe Witneſſes. We ſhall produce to you a Letter written in February laſt, about that time that Mr. Whitebread ſent over his Summons for the Jeſuits, to appear here. This Letter was written by one Mr. Peters, a Jeſuite now in Cuſtody; and 'tis written to one Tunſtal a Jeſuite, to give him notice, That he ſhould be in London about the twenty firſt of April, and be ready on the twenty fourth of April; That he knew what the Buſineſs was; but he did Adviſe him, that he ſhould Conceal himſelf, leſt the Plot (by Obſervation) ſhould be diſcover'd. We ſhall likewiſe produce ſeveral other Evidences, to Strengthen and Confirm the Witneſſes: We ſhall firſt call our Witneſſes, and enter upon the Proof.

Mr. Finch open'd the Evidence thus:

Mr. Finch. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury,

Before we call our Witneſſes, I would beg Leave once more to Re-mind you, of what hath already been open'd unto you; The Quality of the Offenders themſelves, and the Nature of the Offence they ſtand Indicted of.

For the Offenders, they are moſt of them, Prieſts and Jeſuits; three of them at the leaſt, are ſo; the other Two, are the Accurſed Inſtruments of this Deſign: For the Offence it ſelf, 'tis High Treaſon.

And though it be High Treaſon by the Statute of Twenty Seven Eliz. for Men of that Profeſſion to come into England; yet theſe Men are not Indicted upon that Law, nor for that Treaſon: This I take Notice of to you, for the Priſoners ſake, that they ſhould not Fancy to themſelves, they ſuffered Martyrdom for their Religion, as ſome of them have vainly Imagin'd in their caſe; and for your ſakes too, that as at firſt, it was Treaſon, repeated Acts of Treaſon, in theſe Men; and thoſe proceeding from a Principle of Religion too, that juſtly occaſioned the Making that Law: So here you might obſerve a pregnant Inſtance of it in the Priſoners at the Bar, That whenever they had an Opportunity, as now they thought they had, they have never Failed to put thoſe Principles into Practice.

So now, Gentlemen, As they are not Indicted for being Prieſts, I muſt deſire you to lay that quite out of the Caſe, and only conſider, that they ſtand here Accuſed for Treaſon; ſuch Treaſon, as were they Lay-men only, they ought to Die for it; though I cannot but Obſerve, they were the ſooner Traitors for being Prieſts.

The Treaſon therefore they ſtand Indicted of, is of the higheſt Nature: It is a Conſpiracy to Kill the King, and that too with Circumſtances ſo Aggravating (if any thing can Aggravate that Offence which is the Higheſt) that nothing leſs than the Total Subverſion of the Government, and utter Deſtruction of the Proteſtant Religion, would ſerve their Turns. And Really, when you Conſider the Root from whence this Treaſon Springs, you will ceaſe Wondring that all this ſhould be Attempted, and rather wonder that it was not done.

Miſchiefs have often miſcarried for want of Wickedneſs enough; the Horror of Conſcience, or elſe the Malice of the Aggreſſor not being equal to the Attempt, has ſometimes prevented the Execution of it. Here is no Room for any thing of this kind: This Treaſon proceeds from a Principle of Religion, from a Senſe that it is Lawful; Nay, that they ought to do theſe things; and every neglect here, is lookt on as a piece of Irreligion, a want of Zeal; for which one one of the Prisoners did Penance, as in the Course of our Evidence we shall prove unto you.

And when we consider too, that this is carried on, not by the fury of two or three busie Men over-zealous in the Cause, but by the deliberate, and steddy Counsels of the whole Order, and that too under the Obligations of Secrecy as high as Christian Religion can lay on them; You have great reason to wonder that it did not succeed. And yet after all this they have not been able to prevail. Not that we can bragg of any humane Policy that did prevent it; No, all that the Wit of Man could do, these Men had done: But 'twas the Providence of God, 'twas his Revelation; That Providence that first enlightned his Church, and has preserv'd it against all opposition heretofore, has once more disappointed their Counsels, and preserved the King and this Nation in the Profession of that True Religion these Men have vainly attempted to destroy.

Gentlemen, I will not open to you the Particulars of our Evidence, that I had rather should come from the Witnesses themselves: I shall only in general tell you what will be the course of it. We shall prove unto you, That there was a Summons for a Consultation to be held by these Men the 24*th* of April last, from the Provincial Mr. Whitebread; That they had a Caution given them, Not to come too soon, nor appear much about Town, till the Consultation were over, lest occasion should be given to Suspect the Design: That accordingly a Consultation was held, as they say, to send Cary, their Procurator, to Rome; Though we shall prove to you, it was for other purposes: That they adjourned from their General Assembly into lesser Companies; where several Persons did attend them to carry Intelligence of their several Resolutions: That at these several Consults, they did resolve, The King was to be Killed. That Pickering and Grove should do it; for which the one was to have 30000 Masses said for his Soul: The other was to have 1500 l. That in Prosecution of this Design, they made several attempts to execute it; That they lay in Wait for the King several times in St. James's Park and other places; And that once in particular, it had been done by Pickering, if it had not pleased God to have prevented it by an Accident unforeseen; The Flint of his Pistol being loose, he durst not then attempt it, though he had an opportunity: For which neglect, we shall prove to you, he underwent the Penance of 20 or 30 strokes. That when these Men had failed, we shall prove to you they hired Four Ruffians to Murder the King at Windsor, and after that at New-Market. Thus they Way-layd him in all his Privacies and Retirements, wherever they could think it most convenient to execute their Design.

And this we shall prove by two Witnesses; who though they should not speak to the same Consultations, nor the same times; yet they are still two Witnesses in Law. For several Witnesses of several Overt-Acts, are so many Witnesses to the Treason. Because the Treason consists in the intention of the Man, in the Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King. The several Overt-Acts which declare that Intention, are but as so many Evidences of the Treason. We will call our Witnesses, and make out what has been open'd to you.

Cl. of Cr. Mr. Oates, Lay your Hand upon the Book. The Evidence you shall give for our Sovereign Lord the King against Thomas White alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, the Prisoners at the Bar, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. So help you God.

Mr. Serj. Baldwyn. Pray, Mr. Oates, will you declare to the Court and the Jury, what Design there was for the Killing of His Majesty, and by whom.

Mr. Oates, My Lord, In the Month of December last, Mr. Thomas Whitebread did receive a Patent, from the general of the Jesuits at Rome to be Provincial of the Order; after he had received this Patent, he sent Order to one George Conyers a Jesuite at St. Omer's to Preach upon St. Thomas of Canterbury's Day; and by virtue of this Order, George Conyers did Preach against Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and did in his Doctrine call them Anti-Christian and Devillish. My Lord, in the Month of January, this Mr. Whitebread did send several Letters to St. Omers; in which Letters there was contained intimation of his intent to proceed against the King's Person to Assassinate him, which Letters were written to Richard Ashby. My Lord, in the Month of February, there comes an Order from him as Provincial, for several of the Jesuits to make their appearance at London, to be there at a Consult to be held the 24*th* of April old Stile.

Sir William Scroggs L. C. J. Where was Whitebread then?

Mr. Oates. He was then in London, my Lord, as I suppose by the dating of his Letters. My Lord, from Mr. Whitebread after this Summons, we received a second Summons, which came the 5*th* of April, New Stile, and upon the Summons there were Nine did appear at London, the Rector of Liege, Sir Thomas Preston, the Rector of Ghent, whose name is Marsh, the Rector of Wotton, whose name is Williams, and to one Sir John Harper, and two or three more from St. Omers; and there was a special Order given us, my Lord, to keep our selves close, least we should be suspected, and so our Design disclosed. My Lord, upon the four and twentieth of April, Old Stile, we did appear in the Consult. The Consult was begun at the White-Horse Tavern in the Strand, and there they met in several Rooms, they came on by degrees, and as the new ones came on, the old ones, those that had been there before them, fell off. And there was one John Cary appointed to go Procurator for Rome, and he was so appointed by the Suffrages of the three Prisoners at the Bar, Whitebread, Ireland, and Fenwick. It was afterwards adjourned into several Colloquies or little Meetings; one Meeting was at Mrs. Sanders House that butts upon Wild House, a second was at Mr. Ireland's, a third was at Mr. Harcourt's, a fourth was at Mr. Grove's, and other Meeting or Meetings there were, but I cannot give a good account of them. My Lord, after they had thus met, and debated the state of Religion, and the Life of the King, they drew up this Resolve; it was drawn up by one Mico, who was Secretary to the Society, and Socius or Companion to the Provincial.

L. C. J. When was that done?

Mr. Oates. That Day, my Lord. The Resolve, my my Lord, was this, as near as I can remember the words. It is resolved, That Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, shall go on in their Attempt to Assassinate the King (whether they used the word Assassinate, I can't remember, but the meaning was, they should make an attempt upon his Person) and that the Reward of the one, that is Grove's, should be Fifteen Hundred Pounds, and that Pickering's Reward should be Thirty Thousand Masses. My Lord, after this Resolution was Signed by Whitebread, it was Signed by Fenwick and Ireland, and by all the four Clubbs: I saw them Sign it, for I carried the Instrument from one to another.

L. C. J. What was it they Signed?

Mr. Oates. The Resolve of the Consult.

L.C.J. What that which was drawn up by Mico?

Mr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, that which was drawn up by Mico.

Whitebread. Doth he say that he saw them Sign it?

Mr. Oates. Yes, I did see them Sign it.

Jury. We desire he may be asked, where he saw them sign it.

Mr. Oates. Mr. Whitebread Signed it at that part of the Consult that was at his Chamber, Ireland did Sign it at that part of the Consult that was at his Chamber, Fenwick Signed it at that part of the Consult that was at his Chamber.

Whitebread. Were you at all these places?

Mr. Oates. I went with it from place to place; but I mention no more now, but only these.

Whitebread. You were not at all these places, and saw them Sign it there, were you?

Mr. Oates. Yes, I did see them Sign it at all those places. My Lord, in the Month of May, Mr. Whitebread came over as Provincial from England to St. Omers to begin his Provincial Visitation, and with him came Cary and his Companion Mico. Cary left St. Omers to begin his Journey to Rome; Whitebread, after he had given an accompt of what proceedings the Catholicks of England had made in order to disturb the Peace of the Kingdom, what Moneys had been gathered, what Suffrages dispers'd, what means had been used, what Noblemen had joyned in this execrable Plot; he did then (my Lord) order me to come for England.

L. C. J. Whitebread did?

Mr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, Whitebread did. And, my Lord, the Business I was to come into England for, was to Murder one Dr. Tongue, a Dr. in Divinity, who had written a Book called The Jesuits Morals; that is to say, Translated them out of French into English. My Lord, I came over into England on the 23*d* of June, new Stile, I came out of St. Omers, that is, the 13*th* in the Stile of England; on the 24*th* new Stile, I took the Packet-Boat at Calice; the 25*th* new Stile, I met with Mr. Fenwick at Dover, he was come down with certain Youths, to send them to St. Omers, and had ordered their passage.

My Lord, with Mr. Fenwick and some other Persons, we came to London in a Coach, and six Miles (as near as I remember it) on this side Canterbury, at a place called Bolton, our Coach was stopt by the Searchers, and there they did examine a Box that was in the Coach directed for the Honourable Richard Blundell Esq; This Box when they open'd it, they found full of Beads, Crucifixes, Images, and other sorts of Trumpery, that I cannot give a good account of; it's he can give the best: Mr. Fenwick went by the Name of one Thompson, and did Personate one Thompson, as Living near the Fountain Tavern at Charing-Cross; and did order the Searchers to write to him there, as by the name of Thompson. When the Box was seiz'd, they being Prohibited Goods, Mr. Fenwick did say; that if they had search'd his Pockets, they had found such Letters about him, as might have cost him his Life; but his Letters did escape Searching. We came that night to Sittenburgh, and lay there on Sunday the 26*th* New Stile, as near as I remember; and I think we stayed there till the Afternoon: We took Coach in the Afternoon and came as far as Dartford. On Monday morning we came into London; and (my Lord) when we came into London, and had continued there some days. (I now return to Mr. Whitebread.) There came one Ashby to Town, he had been sometime Rector of St. Omers, and was come to England sick of the Gout, and was to go to the Bath to be Cured. And he brought Instructions with him from Whitebread; and the Instructions contained in them these Particulars: Instructions or Memorials, or what else they called them. First that Ten Thousand Pounds should be proposed to Sir George Wakeman for the Killing of the King. Secondly, That care should be taken for the Murder of the Bishop of Hereford. Thirdly, That care should be taken for the Murder of Dr. Stillingfleet. Fourthly, That though this Proposal was made to Sir George Wakeman of 10000 l. yet Pickering and Grove should go on still in their Attempts. (My Lord,) afterwards these were taken and Copied out, and Dispersed to the several Conspirators in the Kingdom, whose Names I cannot call to mind. But Coleman made several Copies and Dispersed them about: Then the 10000 l. was proposed to Sir George Wakeman, but it was refused.

L. C. J. What, it was too little?

Mr. Oates. Yes, (my Lord,) it was too little. Then Whitebread he Writ from St. Omers, that in case 10000 l. would not do, Fifteen should be proposed, and after that he had that proposed, he accepted of that.

L. C. J. Were you by when he accepted it?

Mr. Oates. No (my Lord,) I was not: But it appeared upon their Entry Books, and it appeared by a Letter from this Gentleman Mr. Whitebread, wherein he did shew a great deal of joy for Sir George Wakeman's accepting of the Fifteen Thousand Pounds. (My Lord,) After this was agreed upon, that Sir George Wakeman should have Fifteen Thousand Pounds, and Five Thousand of it was payed by Coleman or his Order. Thus the State of Affairs stood till August. Then one Fogarthy who is dead, came to a Consult of the Jesuits with the Benedictins: Now at this Consult the Prisoner at the Bar Fenwick was, he was one and Harcourt was another. And in this Consult there were Four Ruffians recommended to them.

L. C. J. By Whom?

Mr. Oates. By Fogarthy, they were recommended, but accepted of by these Consultors, and consented to by Fenwick. They were sent away, and the next day after, Fourscore Pounds was sent them, the most part of it was Gold, and Coleman was there and gave the Messenger a Guinea to expedite his Errand. (My Lord,) In the Month of August there came other Letters from Whitebread, wherein he did give an Account of what care he had taken of the Scotch Business; and he ordered one Moor and one Sanders alias

alias Brown to go down to Scotland, and he did Order the Rector of London, then William Harcourt, to send them; and he did so send them the 6*th* of August in the name of the Provincial.

Whitebread. From whence I pray?

Mr. Oates, From London, and they went to prosecute and carry on the design which Fenwick and Ireland had Plotted, of a Rebellion amongst the Disaffected Scots against the Governours appointed them by the King, and they sent down Ministers to Preach under the Notion of Presbyterian Ministers, in order to get the Disaffected Scots to rise, by insinuating the sad Condition they were likely to be in, by reason of Episcopal Tyrany, (as they termed it.) And that they were resolved to dispose of the King, and they did intend to dispose of the Duke too, in case he did not appear vigorous in promoting the Catholick Religion; (I speak their own words.)

L. C. J. Have you done with your Evidence? What do you know of the Prisoners at the Bar? Name them all.

Mr. Oates, There is Whitebread, Ireland, Fenwick, Pickering, and Grove.

L. C. J. Are you sure Pickering and Grove accepted of the Terms?

Mr. Oates. Yes, (my Lord,) I was there.

L. C. J. Where was it?

Mr. Oates. At Mr. Whitebread's Lodgings, at Mrs. Sanders House. As for Grove, indeed he did attend at that time upon Fenwick at his Chamber; but after the Consult was over, he came to Whitebread's Lodgings and did take the Sacrament and the Oaths of Secrecy upon it, and did accept it, and agree to it.

L. C. J. Were you there when he took the Sacrament?

Mr. Oates; Yes, (my Lord) I was.

L. C. J. Who gave you the Sacrament?

Mr. Oates, It was a Jesuite, that goes by the Name of one Barton.

Whitebread, (My Lord) before I forget it, I desire to say this. He says that at such and such Consults in April and May, he was present and carryed the Resolutions from one to another. There are above a Hundred and an Hundred, that can testify he was all that while at St. Omers. Pray tell me when I received the Sacrament?

Mr. Oates, At the same time.

Whitebread, What day was that?

Mr. Oates, The 24*th* of April.

Whitebread, Was I there?

Mr. Oates, You were there.

Whitebread, I take God to Witness I was not.

L. C. J. Mr. Whitebread you shall have time to make your Answer. But Mr. Oates, pray Mr. Oates, when was Mr. Cary dispatch'd away to Rome, and what was his Errand?

Mr. Oates, (My Lord,) I'll tell you, he was approved of to go to Rome the 24*th* of April; in the Month of May or June Whitebread brings Cary over to St. Omers, and one Mico his Secretary or Companion with him.

L. C. J. When was it?

Mr. Oates, In the Month of May or June he was brought over by the Provincial; Then he went away on his Journey, and at Paris received 20 l. to bear his Charges.

Mr. Finch, What do you know of any Attempts to kill the King at St. James's Park?

Mr. Oates, I saw Pickering and Grove several times walking in the Park together with their Screw'd Pistols, which were longer than ordinary Pistols, and shorter than some Carbines. They had Silver Bullets to shoot with, and Grove would have had the Bullets to be Champt, for fear that if he should Shoot, if the Bullets were Round, the Wound that might be given might be Cured.

L. C. J. Did Grove intend to Champ them?

Mr. Oates, He did say so.

L. C. J. Did he shew you the Bullets?

Mr. Oates, I did see them.

Grove, When was this?

Mr. Oates, I saw the Bullets in the Month of May and in the Month of June.

Whitebread, Pray where did you see them?

Mr. Oates, In Grove's possession.

Whitebread, At what time?

Mr. Oates, In the Month of May.

Whitebread, Then was he actually himself at St. Omers. Was it in May or June?

Mr. Oates, The latter end of May and June. I saw them then twice if not thrice. But Pickering's I saw in August.

Sir Cr. Lewings, Do you know any thing of Pickering's doing Penance, and for what?

Mr. Oates, Yes, (my Lord,) In the Month of March last, (for these Persons have followed the King several Years) but he at that time had not lookt to the Flint of his Pistol, but it was loose, and he durst not venture to give Fire. He had a fair opportunity, as Whitebread said; and because he mist it through his own negligence, he underwent Penance, and had 20 or 30 Strokes of Discipline, and Grove was Chidden for his Carelesness.

L. C. J. That was in March last?

Mr. Oates, Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Mr. Oates, By Letters that I have seen from Mr. Whitebread, these I saw and read, and I know Whitebread's hand.

Mr. Serj. Baldwyn, What do you know of the Ruffians that went down to Windsor What success had they?

Mr. Oates, I can give no account of that, because in the beginning of September this Gentleman that had been in England sometime before, was come to London, and the Business had taken Air, and one Beddingfield had Written to him, that the thing was discovered, and that none but such a one could do it, naming me by a Name that he knew I went by.

Whitebread, When was that Sir?

Mr. Oates. In the Month of September last. I came to the Provincial's Chamber the third of September, when I came I could not speak with him, for he was at Supper; but when he had supp'd I was admitted in, and there he shewed me the Letter that he had received from Beddingfield.

Whitbread. Where did you see it?

Mr. Oates. You read it to me when you chid me, and beat me, and abused me.

L. Ch. Just. What did he chide you for?

Mr. Oates. He did charge me with very high language of being with the King, and with a Minister, and discovering the matter. I was so unfortunate that the Gentelman who was with the King did wear the same colour'd Clothes that I did then wear: And he having given an account that the party wore such Clothes, the suspicion was laid upon me: Now, my Lord, I had not then been with the King, but

but another Gentleman had been with him from me with the draughts of ſome Papers concerning this buſineſs, which I had drawn up, and I was ready to appear when I ſhould be called to juſtifie them, only I did not think fit to appear immeadiately; And, my Lord, this Beddingfield he had gotten into it that it was diſcovered, and writ the Provincial word he thought it was by me; for, ſaid he, he hath been drawn in by ſome of his old acquaintance: When he had received this Letter, he asked me with what face I could look upon him, ſince I had betrayed them: So, my Lord, I did profeſs a great deal of Innocency, becauſe I had not then been with the King; but he gave me very ill language and abuſed me, and I was afraid of a worſe miſchief from them; for I could not but conclude, that if they dealt ſo cruelly with thoſe that only writ againſt them, I could ſcarce eſcape, of whom they had that jealouſie that I had betrayed them: And, my Lord, though they could not prove that I had diſcovered it, yet upon the bear ſuſpicion I was beaten and affronted, and reviled, and commanded to go beyond Sea again; nay, my Lord, I had my Lodging aſſaulted to have murthered me if they could.

Whitebread. By whom?

Oates. By Mr. Whitebread, and ſome of them.

Whitebread, Who beat you?

Mr. Oates. Mr. Whitebread did.

Mr. Serjeant Baldwyn. Was it Pickering or Grove that had the Flint of his Piſtol looſe?

Mr. Oates. Pickering.

Pickering. My Lord, I never ſhot off a Piſtol in all my Life.

L. Ch. Juſt. What ſay you as to the fourſcore Pounds?

Mr. Oates. My Lord, I will ſpeak to that, that was given to the four Ruffians that were to kill the King at Windſor: Now, my Lord, that Money I ſaw----

L. Ch. Juſt. Where did you ſee it?

Mr. Oates. At Harcourt's Chamber.

L. Ch. Juſt. Where is that?

Mr. Oates. In Duke-Street, near the Arch.

L. Ch. Juſt. Who was it given by?

Mr. Oates. William Harcourt.

L. Ch. Juſt. Did you ſee the four Fellows?

Mr. Oates. No, my Lord, I never did, nor never knew their Names.

L. Ch. Juſt. Who was the Money given to?

Mr. Oates. A Meſſenger that was to carry it down to them.

L. Ch. Juſt. Who was that Meſſenger?

Mr. Oates. One of theirs that I do not know, and I durſt not be too inquiſitive, my Lord, for fear of being ſuſpected.

L. Ch. Juſt. Who was by when the Money was paid?

Mr. Oates. Coleman that is executed; and, my Lord, there was this Mr. Fenwick by, that is the Priſoner at the Bar.

Fenwick. When was this?

Mr. Oates. In the Month of Auguſt.

Fenwick. Where?

Mr. Oates. At Harcourt's Chamber.

Fenwick. I never ſaw you there in all my Life: Are you ſure I was by when the Money was there?

Mr. Oates. Yes, you were.

L. Ch. Juſt. Mr. Fenwick, You ſhall have your time by and by to ask him any queſtion: Mr. Oates, let me ask you once again; when there was the appointment made for Grove and Pickering to kill the King, who ſigned it?

Mr. Oates. At leaſt forty ſigned it.

L. Ch. Juſt. Did the other three ſign it?

Mr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, all of them.

L. Ch. Juſt. Name them.

Oates. There was Whitebread, Fenwick, and Ireland.

L. Ch. Juſt. And you ſay you went from place to place and ſaw it ſigned.

Mr Oates. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. Ch. Juſt. Were you Attendant upon them?

Oates. My Lord, I ever was ſince the Year 1666.

L. Ch. Juſt. At whoſe Lodging did you uſe to attend upon the Conſultation?

Mr. Oates. At the Provincial's Chamber, Mr. Whitebread.

L. Ch. Juſt. Where was it firſt ſigned?

Mr. Oates. At the Provincial's Chamber.

Sir Cr. Levinz. Who carried it from Lodging to Lodging?

Mr. Oates. I did.

L. Ch. Juſt. When was it?

Mr. Oates. The 24*th* of April.

Mr Juſtice Bertue. You ſay you carried the Reſult from place to place, pray tell us what that Reſult was?

Oates, They knew what it was, for they read it before they ſigned it.

M. Juſt. Atkins. But tell us the Contents of it.

Mr. Oates. The Contents of that Reſolve was this, (I'll tell you the ſubſtance, though I cannot tell you exactly the words) that Pickering and Grove ſhould go on in their attempts to aſſaſſinate the Perſon of the King, as near as I can remember it was ſo, that the former ſhould have 30000 Maſſes and the latter 1500 Pounds, and the whole Conſult did conſent to it and ſigned the Agreement that was made with them, and did reſolve upon the King's Death all in one reſolve.

L. C. J. Where was this agreed upon? at the White-Horſe-Tavern?

Mr. Oates. No, my Lord, after they had agreed at the White-Horſe, that Mr. Cary ſhould go Procurator to Rome, and ſome other ſmall particulars, which I cannot now remember, they did adjourn from the White-Horſe-Tavern, and met at ſeveral Chambers, ſome at one place, and ſome at another.

L. C. J. But you ſay Mico did draw up the Reſolution, where was that?

Mr. Oates, At Mr. Whitebread's Chamber, for he was Socius and Secretary to the Provincial.

L. C. J. Were Ireland and Fenwick preſent when Mico drew it up?

Mr. Oates. No, my Lord, but they were at their own Chambers; after it was drawn up there, and ſigned by Mr. Whitebread, and thoſe of the Conſult in his Chamber, it was carried to the ſeveral Conſults.

L. C. J. What all the ſame day?

Mr. Oates. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. And you went along with it.

Mr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, I did.

Mr. Juſtice Bertue. I only ask you were all the five Priſoners privy to it? or do you diſtinguiſh of any of them, and which?

Mr. Oates. They were all privy to it.

Whitebread. My Lord we can prove ———

L. C. J. You ſhall have time ſufficient to make what defence you can, you ſhall be ſure to have a fair Trial, and be ſtopt of nothing that you will think fit to say for your selves. Mr. Oates, were Pickering and Grove present?

Mr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, Grove at Fenwick's Chamber, and Pickering at the Provincial's Chamber.

L. C. J. But they were not required to sign this, were they?

Mr. Oates. After that the whole Consult had signed it, and Mass was preparing to be said for it, before Mass they did sign and accept of it.

L. C. J. Where did they two do it?

Mr. Oates. At the Provincial's Chamber.

L. C. J. What day was it?

Oates. That day, for they met all together at the Provincial's Chamber to receive the Sacrament, and when Mass was going to be said, one said it was too late, for it was after twelve a Clock; but Mr. Whitebread said it was not Afternoon till we had din'd; and you know, Mr. Whitebread, that Masses have been said at one or two of the Clock in the Afternoon.

Mr. Justice Atkins. How many Persons did meet at that Consult?

Mr. Oates. My Lord, there were about forty or fifty, and after they had adjourn'd into several lesser Companies, they met altogether at Mr. Whitebread's Chamber.

L. C. J. Where was that, and when?

Mr. Oates. That day at Wild-house.

L. C. J. Where was it that they gave the Sacrament?

Mr. Oates. At a little Chappel at Wild-house, Mrs. Sanders's.

L. C. J. Did they accept it before they took the Sacrament?

Mr. Oates. Yes, Pickering and Grove did sign it before they took the Sacrament.

Mr. Justice Atkins. You tell us of an Oath of Secresie that was taken, what was that Oath?

Mr. Oates. I cannot give an account of the form of the Oath, but it was an Obligation of Secresie.

M Just. Atk. Did you see the Oath administred?

Mr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. Who administred it?

Mr. Oates. Mr. Whitebread, he did give it unto me, and to all the rest that were there, and Mico held the Book, it was a Mass Book, but they were words of his own invention I believe, they were not written down.

L. C. J. Cannot you tell what they were?

Mr. Oates. No, my Lord, I cannot tell, because I did not see them written down.

L. C. J. If you will ask this Gentleman any thing more you may.

Whetebread. My Lord, I am in a very weak and doubtful condition as to my health, and therefore I should be very loath to speak any thing but what is true: We are to prove a Negative, and I know 'tis much harder to prove a Negative than to assert an Affirmative; 'tis not a very hard thing for a Man to swear any thing if he will venture his Soul for it; but truly, I may boldly say, in the sight of Almighty God before whom I am to appear, there have not been three true words spoken by this Witness.

L. C. J. Do you hear, if you could but satisfie us, that you have no Dispensation to call God to Witness a lye —— Whitebread. My Lord, I do affirm it with all the Protestations imaginable.

L. C. J. But if you have a Religion that can give a Dispensation for Oaths, Sacraments, Protestations, and Falshoods that are in the World, how can you expect we should believe you?

Whitebread. I know no such thing.

L. Ch. Just. We shall see that presently, before we have done.

Mr. Oates. I have one thing more to say, my Lord, that comes into my mind. This Whitebread received power from the See of Rome to grant out Commissions to Officers Military. And my Lord, here are the Seals of the Office in Court, which he hath sealed some hundreds of Commissions with, which they call Patents.

L. Ch. Just. What were those Commissions for? For an Army?

Mr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, for an Army.

Whitebread. When were those Commissions signed?

Mr. Oates. My Lord, several of them were signed in the former Provincial's time.

L. Ch. Just. What, I warrant you, you are not Provincial of the Jesuites, are you?

Whitebread. I cannot deny that, my Lord.

L Ch. Just. Then there are more than three words he hath spoken are true.

Mr. Just. Atkins. I believe, Mr. Oates, that that Army was intended for somethng, pray what was it for?

Mr. Oates. My Lord, they were to rise upon the Death of the King, and let the French King in upon us, and they had made it their business to prepare Ireland and Scotland for the receiving of a foreign Invasion.

L. Ch. Just. Who were those Commissions sealed by?

Mr. Oates. My Lord, the Commissions of the Great Officers were sealed with the General's Seal.

L. Ch. Just. Who was that?

Mr. Oates. His Name is Johannes Paulus de Oliva: His Seal Sealed the Commissions for the Generals, Major-Generals, and great Persons; but those Seals that sealed the several Commissions to several inferior Officers, were in the custody of the Provincial.

L. Ch. Just. Can you name any one Person that he hath sealed a Commission to?

Mr. Oates. I can name one: To Sir John Gage, which Commission I delivered my self.

L. Ch. Just. What of Sussex?

Mr. Oates. Yes, of Sussex.

Mr. Just. Atk. Who did you receive the Commission from?

Mr. Oates. My Lord, when he went over, he left a great many blank Patents to be filled up, and he left one ready sealed for a Commission to Sir John Gage. This was delivered into my hands when he was absent, but it was signed by him and delivered to me while he was in his Visitation beyond the Seas, but I dare swear it was his hand, as I shall answer it before God and the King.

Mr. Just. Atk. Who had it you from?

Mr. Oates. From Mr. Ashby, but by Whitebread's appointment in his Instructions, which I saw and read.

L. Ch. Just. What was the Commission for?

Mr. Oates. To be an Officer in the Army.

L. Ch. Just. Did you see the Instructions left for Ashby?

Mr. Oates. I did see them and read them, and I did then, as I always did, give it as my judgment, that it was more safe to Poyson the King than to Pistol or stab him.

Mr.

Mr. Juſt. Bertue. Was the Commiſſion which you delivered to Sir John Gage from Aſhby or from Whitebread?

Mr. Oates, I had it from Aſhby, but Whitebread, who was then beyond Sea, had ſigned this Commiſſion before he went. My Lord, I have ſomething more yet to ſay, and that is as to Mr. Grove, That he did go about with one Smith to gather Peter-pence, which was either to carry on the deſign, or to ſend them to Rome. I ſaw the Book wherein it was entred, and I heard him ſay that he had been gathering of it.

Grove. Where was this?

Mr. Oates. In Cock-pit Ally, where you know I lodged.

Grove. Did I ever ſee you at your Lodging?

Mr. Oates. You ſaw me at my own Door

L. C. J. Why don't you know Mr. Oates?

Grove, My Lord, I have ſeen him before.

L. C. J. Why this 'tis, ask a Papiſt a queſtion, and you ſhall have a Jeſuitical anſwer.

Mr. Oates. I will convince the Court that he does know me by ſome circumſtances. My Lord, in the Month of December laſt by the Provincial's Order-----

L. C. J. I would ask him firſt whether he does know you or no. Do you know Mr. Oates?

Grove. I have ſeen him before.

L. C. J. Have you been often in his Company?

Grove. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. What do you call often? Have you been in his Company ſeven or eight times? (for we muſt deal ſubtilly with ſuch as you are,) have you been in his Company ten times?

Grove. No.

L. C. J. What ſay you to three times?

Grove. Yes, I believe I have ſeen him twice or thrice.

L. C. J. Where? Did you never ſee him at Whitebread's?

Grove. As I hope to be ſaved and before the Eternal God, I did never.

Mr. Oates. I will convince him and the Court, that he does know me, and is well acquainted with me: In the Month of December laſt I went to St. Omers, I went firſt to the then Provincial's Houſe to take my leave of him, and there I met with Mr. Grove, and he appointed to come to my Lodging the next Morning, near the Red Lyon in Drury Lane at one Griſſon's Houſe, and he was ſo well acquainted with me then, that he had lent me eight Shillings to hire the Coach.

L. C. J. Did you lend him eight Shillings?

Grove. I did, my Lord, I do not deny it.

L. C. J. How came you to do it, when it ſeems, if you ſay true, he was a ſtranger to you?

Grove. I thought I ſhould have it again.

L. C. J. What, of him?

Grove. Yes.

L. C. J. Did he deſire you to lend him the eight Shillings?

Grove. Yes, he did, my Lord.

Mr. Oates. Then there is one time that he confeſſes he ſaw me.

L. C. J. Did you not know him before?

Grove. I had no acquaintance with him, I had ſeen him.

L. C. J. How came you then to lend Money to one you had no more acquaintance with?

Grove. I knew I ſhould go along with him to the Coach, and then I thought I ſhould have it again.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, were you going beyond Sea then?

Mr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, did you pay him that Money?

Mr. Oates, No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Did you ask him for the Money, and had you it?

Grove. He did not pay it me.

L. C. J. How then were you ſure you ſhould have it?

Grove. He did order me to go to ſuch a one forit.

L. C. J. Who was that?

Grove. Mr. Fenwick, I think.

L. C. J. Then Mr. Oates was known to you all, he was no ſuch ſtranger to you as you would make us believe.

Mr. Oates. Thus he confeſſes three times he had ſeen me, once before he lent me the Money, another time when he lent it, and the third time the next day. And I will put him in mind of another time when he and I were in Company, where one brought us a Note of what was done in the Houſe of Commons turned into Burleſque, for they uſed to turn all that was done at the Council, or at the Parliament, or at the Courts in Weſtminſter Hall into Burleſque, and then tranſlated it into French, and ſent it to the French King, for him to laugh at too. But that by the way. Twice more he drank in my Company, at the Red Poſts in Wild-ſtreet, and once more when he owned to me that he fired Southwark.

L. C. J. Now by the Oath that you have taken, did he own to you that he had fired Southwark.

Mr. Oates. My Lord, he did tell me that he with three Iriſhmen did fire Southwark, and that they had a thouſand Pounds given them for it, whereof he had four hundred Pounds, and the other two hundred Pounds apiece.

L. C. J. Now for Mr. Fenwick, do you know Mr. Oates?

Fenwick. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. C. J. Were you well acquainted with him? ſpeak plain.

Mr. Oates. He was my Father Confeſſor, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was he ſo? were you his Confeſſor?

Fenw. I believe he never made any Confeſſ in his Life.

L. C. J. Yes, he hath made a very good one now. Were you of his acquaintance Mr. Fenwick? ſpeak home and don't mince the matter.

Fenw. My Lord, I have ſeen him.

L. C. J. I wonder what you are made of: Ask a Proteſtant an Engliſh one a plain Queſtion, and he will ſcorn to come dallying with an evaſive Anſwer.

Fenw. My Lord, I have been ſeveral times in his company.

L. C. J. Did you pay eight Shillings for him?

Fenw. Yes, I believe I did.

L. C. J. How came you to do it?

Fenw. He was going to St Omers.

L. C. J. Why, were you Treaſurer for the Society?

Fenw. No, my Lord, I was not.

L. C. J. You never had your eight Shillings again, had you?

Fenwick. It is upon my Book, my Lord, if I ever had it.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Oates ever pay it again?

Fen. No, ſure he was never ſo honeſt.

L. C. J. Who had you it of then?

Fen. I am certain I had it not from him; he did not pay it.

L. C. J. How can you tell you had it then?

Fen. I do ſuppoſe I had it again, but not of Mr. Oates.

L. C. J. Had you it of Ireland?

Fen. I do not know who I had it of, my Lord, nor certainly whether I had it.

L, C, J, Why did you not ask Mr. Oates for it?

Fen, He was not able to pay it.

L. C. J. Why did you then lay it down for him?

Fen. Becauſe I was a Fool.

L. C. J. That muſt be the concluſion always: when you can't evade being prov'd Knaves by anſwering directly, you will rather ſuffer your ſelves to be call'd Fools.

Fen. My Lord, I have done more for him than that comes to; for he came once to me in a miſerable poor Condition, and ſaid, I muſt turn again, and betake my ſelf to the Miniſtry to get Bread, for I have eaten nothing theſe two days: And I then gave him five Shillings to relieve his preſent neceſſity.

Mr. Oates. My Lord, I will anſwer to that; I was never in any ſuch ſtraights, I was ordered by the Provincial to be taken care of by the Procurator.

Fen. You brought no ſuch Order to me.

Mr. Oates. Yes, Mr. Fenwick, you know there was ſuch an Order, and I never received ſo little in my Life as five Shillings from you: I have received 20, and 30, and 40 Shillings at a time, but never ſo little as five.

L. C. J. You are more charitable than you thought for.

Fen. He told me he had not eaten a bit in two days.

Mr. Oates, I have indeed gone a whole day without eating, when I have been hurried about your Traſh; but I aſſure you, my Lord, I never wanted for any thing among them.

L, C, J, Perhaps it was Faſting-day.

L, C, Baron. My Lord, their Faſting-days are none of the worſt.

Mr. Oates, No, we commonly eat beſt of thoſe days.

L, C, J, Have you any thing to ask him any of you?

Whitebread, My Lord, will you be pleaſed to give me leave to ſpeak for my ſelf.

Juſtice Atkins, It is not your time yet to make your full Defence, but if you will ask him any Queſtions you may.

Whitebread, I crave your mercy, my Lord.

L, C, J, Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Fen, Did not you ſay that you were at my Chamber the 24*th* of April with the Reſolve of the Conſult?

Oates, That Reſolve I did then carry to your Chamber.

Fen, Then was he himſelf at St. Omers.

L, C, J, The difference of old Stile and new Stile may perhaps make ſome alteration in that Circumſtance.

Whitebread, But, my Lord, he hath ſworn he was preſent at ſeveral Conſultations in April and May, but from November till June he was conſtantly at St. Omers.

L, C, J, If you can make it out that he was at St. Omers all April and May, then what he hath ſaid cannot be true.

Ireland, He himſelf hath confeſſed it that he was at St. Omers.

L, C, J, If you mean by Confeſſion, what ſtands upon the Evidence he hath given, I'll remember you what that was. He ſays he came to St Omers-----

Oates, Will your Lordſhip give me leave to ſatisfie the Court: In the Month of December or November, I went to St. Omers: I remained there all January, February, March, and ſome part of April: Then I came over with the Fathers to the Conſult that was appointed the 24*th* of that Month.

Fen, did you go back again?

Oates, Yes.

Fen, When was that?

Mr. Oates. In the month of May, preſently after the Conſults were over.

Fenw. And we can prove by abundance of Witneſſes that he went not from St. Omers all that Month.

L. C. J. You ſhall have what time you will to prove what you can; and if you can prove what you ſay, you were beſt fix it upon him; for he ſaith he was here at the Conſults in April and May; if you can prove otherwiſe pray do.

Fen. We can bring an Authentick Writing (if there be any ſuch) from St. Omers, under the Seal of the College, and teſtified by all in the College that he was there all the while.

L. C. J. Mr. Fenwick that will not do; for firſt if it were in any other Caſe beſides this, it would be no Evidence, but I know not what you cannot get from St. Omers, or what you will not call Authentick.

Fen. Does your Lordſhip think there is no Juſtice out of England?

L. C. J. It is not, nor cannot be Evidence here.

Fen. It ſhall be Signed by the Magiſtrates of the Town.

L. C. J. What there?

Fen. Yes there.

L. C. J. You muſt be tryed by the Laws of England, which ſends no Piece of Fact out of the Country to be Tryed.

Fen. But the Evidence of it may be brought hither.

L. C. J. Then you ſhould have brought it. You ſhall have a fair Trial; but we muſt not depart from the Law or the way of Trial, to ſerve your purpoſes. You muſt be Tried according to the Law of the Land.

Juſt. Atkins. Such Evidences as you ſpeak of we would not allow againſt you; and therefore we muſt not allow it for you.

Whitebread. May this Gentleman be put to this, to produce any two Witneſſes that ſee him in Town at that time.

Mr. Oates, I'll give ſome Circumſtances and what Tokens I have to prove my being here: Father Warner, Sir Tho. Preſton, Father Williams, and Sir John Warner, they came hither with me from St. Omers, there was one Nevil, &c. I cannot reckon them all.

L. C. J. You have named enough.

Mr. Oates, But to convince them, there was a Lad in the Houſe that was got to the end of his Rhetorick; this Lad was Whipt and turned out of the Houſe, and had loſt all his Money: Father Williams did Re-imburſe this Lad in order to his bringing home, I think the Lad's Name was Hilſley, or ſome ſuch Name. And we came up to London together.

L C J,

L. C. J. What say you to this Circumstance?

Whitebread, My Lord, he knew that two such came to Town, but he was not with them.

L. C. J. You are now very good at a Negative I see, how can you tell that?

Whitebread, My Lord, he could not come.

L. C. J. How can you tell he could not come.

Whitebread, I can tell it very well, for he had no Order to come, nor did come.

L. C. J. How can you undertake to say that he did not come?

Whitebread, Because he had no order to come.

L. C. J. Is that all your reason? Where were you then?

Whitebread, I was here.

L. C. J. How do you know he was not here?

Whitebread, He had no Orders to come.

L, C, J, Have you any other Circumstance, Mr. Oates, to prove that you were here then?

Oates, My Lord, when I came to London, I was ordered to keep very close, and I lay at Grove's House; let him deny it if he can, I'll tell you who lay there then.----

Grove, Did you ever lye at my House?

Oates, There lay a Flaxen Hair'd Gentleman, I forgot his name: But I'll tell you who lay there besides; that is Strange, that was the late Provincial.

L, C, J, Did Strange, ever lye at your House?

Grove, Yes, my Lord, he did.

L, C, J, Did he lye there in April or May?

Grove, No, he did not in either of them.

L, C, J, You will make that appear.

Grove, Yes, that I can by all the House.

L, C, J, Have you any more Questions to ask him? If you have, do: If you can prove this upon him, that he was absent, and not in England in April or May, you have made a great Defence for your selves, and it shall be remembred for your advantage when it comes to your turn: In the mean time, if you have no more to say to him, call another Witness. Let Mr. Oates sit down again, and have some Refreshment.

Mr. Serj. Baldwin. We will now call Mr. Bedlow, my Lord.

Then Mr. Bedlow was sworn.

Mr. Serj. Baldwin. Mr. Bedlow, Pray do you tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know of any design of killing the King, and by whom.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, I have been five Years almost employed by the Society of Jesuits and the English Monks in Paris to cary and bring Letters between them from England and to England, for the promoting of a Design tending to the subversion of the Government, and the extirpating of the Protestant Religion, to that degree (which was always concluded on in all their Consults wherein I was) that they would not leave any Member of any Heretick in England, that should survive to tell in the Kingdon hereafter, that there ever was any such Religion in England as the Protestant Religion-----

Here Whitebread would have interrupted him.

My Lord, I am so well satisfied in their denials, that I cannot but believe they who can give a Dispensation, and have received the Sacrament to kill a King and destroy a whole Kingdom, do not scruple to give a Dispensation for a little Lye to promote such a Design, for so much as this expiates any Lye or greater Crime.

Sir Cr. Levines, Pray, Sir, will you be pleased to tell your whole knowledge concerning the Prisoners at the Bar.

Mr. Bedlow, The first Letter I carried was from Mr. Harcourt, at his House next door to the Arch in Duke-street. He hath been Procurator for the Jesuits about six Years. He employed me first, and sent for me over, for I was then Lieutenant in Flanders, and coming home to receive my Pay that was due to me----

L, C, J, How long is it ago?

M. Bedlow, Michaelmas last was four Years; when I came to Dunkirk I went to visit the English Nunnery there, and the Lady Abbess finding me very plyable and inclinable, made very much of me, and I did adhere to her. She kept me six Weeks in the Convent, and afterwards when I went away, recommended me to Sir John Warner, as an Instrument fit to be employed in the carrying of Letters, or doing any thing that would promote the design against England. He kept me at St. Omers a Fortnight, and after sent me to Father Harcourt to be instructed in my employment: It was then Winter, the next Spring he sends me into England with divers Letters, where by Mr. Harcourt I was employed to carry several Letters to Morton and Doway, and other places: That Summer I was sent into England without an Answer: But afterwards in (76,) which was the next Summer, I was to carry another Pacquet of Letters to the Monks at Paris, who sent it to other English Monks in France-----

L, C, J, Who sent that Pacquet of Letters in 76?

Bedlow, I had it from Mr. Harcourt, and it was written by Harcourt, Pritchard and Cary.

L, C, J, To whom?

Bedlow, To the English Monks in France, and in it there was a Letter to Le Chese. Upon the receipt of these Letters at Paris Le Chese had a Consultation with the Monks and a French Bishop or two about them: I did not then speak French enough to understand what it was they said, but it was interpreted to me by Mr. Stapleton an English Monk, who told me, that it was a Letter from my Lord Bellasis and others of the Catholick Religion, English Gentlemen that were Contrivers of the Plot here, to satisfie them in what state things stood in England as to Popery, I was sent back again with a Pacquet of Letters directed to Mr. Vaughan of Courtfield in Monmouthshire.

L, C, J, From whom was that?

Bedlow, From the English Monks at Paris. From that Consultation I went to Ponthois, I there receiv'd other Letters to carry into England, I had a course to open their Letters, and read what was in them; and in those Letters was contained, That the Prayers of that House were for the prosperity of that Design, and they would not fail to be at the Consultation at of Warwick-shire Gentlemen, I fell sick at Monmouth, and Mr. Vaughan sent to me a Jesuit to Confess me; but I was well before he came, and so was not Confess'd by him. I now come to the later times.

L, C, J, You must speak it over to the Jury, that they and the Prisoners may hear you

Bedlow, The 25*th* of May 77, which was last Year, I was sent over with another Pacquet of Letters. I had no Letters of consequence forward, and therefore therefore did not call then at Wotten, but I called upon the Lady Abbeſs at Dunkirk, and I went thence to Bruges and to Ghent, where I had ſome Letters for the Engliſh Nuns, which I delivered to them. When I came to Doway, I found there that the Monks were gone, that was Sheldon, Stapleton, and Latham, but the Letters were directed to Paris, and therefore I made haſte, and at Cambray I overtook them. And the Letters were to give an account of the Conſultation held in the Gallery at Somerſet-Houſe: All tending to the deſtruction of the Proteſtant Religion, and killing the King, but I do not think fit to declare here who were the Perſons that were preſent at that Conſultation. At Cambray they were very joyful that there was ſo good a proceeding in England. At Paris when the Letters were ſhewed, there was a Letter written in a Language which I did not underſtand, but, as I was told, in that Letter they were charged in Paris by my Lord Bellaſis, that they did not proceed according to their promiſe to them in England; but, ſaid Stapleton, to me, My Lord Bellaſis nor the Society in England need not to write thus to Us, for we are not ſo backward, but that we can lend Men, and Money, and Arms too, and will upon occaſion. From thence they ſent me to Spain with a Letter to an Iriſh Father: I did overtake him at Sa Mora. From thence I went with another Letter to the Rector of a College of Iriſh Jeſuits in Salamanca. By their contrivance I was ſent to St. Iago in Spain, where was another College of Iriſh Jeſuites: there I ſtayed till I had an Anſwer to Sir William Godolphin; and when I had the Anſwer to that Letter, I went for the Letter from the Rector at Salamanca. The Jeſuites there told me, they would take care to ſend their own Anſwer another way: And when they had made me that promiſe, I came away for England, and landed at Milford Haven: All this reaches to none of theſe perſons in particular: But what I now ſhall ſay ſhall be about them, only it was neceſſary I ſhould ſpeak of what I have ſaid,

L. C. J. The meaning of all this is only to ſhew the Jury and ſatisfie them, that he was an Agent for theſe Men, and hath been employed by them for five Years together, and he names you the praticular places whither he hath been ſent, to to ſhew you the Reaſons of his Knowledge in this matter, and upon what account he comes to be informed of this Deſign.

Bedlow, Having receiv'd the News of that Country, I did there take Water, and landed again at Penſans, and when I came to London I gave the Letter to Harcourt: what was in that Pacquet I cannot particularly tell, for I was not ſo inquiſitive as to look into the Contents of it, but I know it was tending (as all the reſt did) to the carrying on of this Plot: Afterwards I was employed by Harcourt and Coleman to go to ſome parts of England to communicate the Letters to ſome of the Popiſh party.

L. C. J. Now turn to the Jury.

Bedlow, The Summer was paſt in the doing of that: In the beginning of Auguſt laſt there was a Conſultation and a cloſe one at Harcourt's Chamber, ſo as that they did not permit me to know any thing of it, I went out of Town for a Fortnight, and when I returned, I underſtood there had been ſuch a meeting, I charged them with their Privacy in it, and asked what was the private deſign of that Conſultation; they ſaid it was ſomething I ſhould know in time: That it did not ſignifie much at preſent, but in time I ſhould know it: But then I underſtood by Pritchard, who was more my Confident than any of the reſt: That it was a Deſign to kill the King: That Pickering and Grove had undertaken it a great while, and that they had been endeavouring a long while to bring it to paſs

Fenwick, Where was this Meeting, and when?

Bedlow, Laſt Auguſt at Harcourt's Chamber

Fenwick, Who were preſent there?

Bedlow, Be pleaſed to give me leave to go on, I'll tell you by and by: Then I underſtood, as I ſaid, that it was to kill the King, but that Pickering and Grove failing of it, they had hired four Ruffians that were to go to Windſor, and to do it there, and that if I would come the next day, I ſhould hear from Coleman the effect: When I came there I found Coleman was gone, but Pritchard ſaid there were ſome ſent to Windſor, and that Coleman was going after them, and that he had given a Meſſenger a Guinea that was to carry the Money to them. And he would preſently be after them, for fear they ſhould want Opportunity to effect their Deſign. Then I diſcours'd them, why they kept their Deſign ſo long hid from me? They ſaid, It was a Reſolve of the Society, and and an Order of my Lord Bellaſis, that none ſhould know it but the Society, and thoſe that were Actors in it. I ſeem'd ſatisfy'd with that Anſwer at preſent. About the latter End of Auguſt, or the Beginning of September, (but I believe, it was the latter End of Auguſt) I came to Harcourt's Chamber, and there was Ireland, and Pritchard, and Pickering, and Grove.

L. C. J. What Part of Auguſt was it?

Bedlow, The latter End.

L. C. J. Do you ſay it Poſitively, That it was the latter End of Auguſt?

Bedlow, My Lord, It was in Auguſt; I do not ſwear Poſitively to a Day.

L. C. J. But you ſay, It was in Auguſt.

Ireland, And that we were there preſent?

Bedlow, You were there, and Grove, and Pickering.

Ireland, Did you ever ſee me before?

Bedlow, You were preſent there, and Grove, and Pickering, and Pritchard, and Fogarthy, and Harcourt, and I.

L. C. J. What did you Talk of there?

Bedlow, That the Ruffians miſſing of Killing the KING at Windſor, Pickering and Grove ſhould go on, and that Conyers ſhould be joyned with them; and that was to Aſſaſſinate the KING in His Morning-Walks at New-Market: And they had taken it ſo ſtrongly upon them, that they were very eager upon it: And Grove was more forward than the Reſt: And ſaid, Since it could not be done Clandeſtinely, it ſhould be attempted Openly. And that thoſe that do Fall, had the Glory to dye in a Good Cauſe. But (ſaid he) if it be diſcovered, the Diſcovery can never come to that Heighth, but their Party would be ſtrong enough to bring it to paſs.

L. C. J. And you ſwear, Ireland was there?

Bedlow, He was there, my Lord.

L. C. J. And heard all this?

Bedlow, Yes, my Lord; and ſo did Grove, and Pickering, and the Reſt.

Ireland, My Lord, I never ſaw him before in my Life.

L. C. J. What was the Reward that you were to have for your pains in this Buſineſs?

Bedlow,

Bedlow, My Lord, The Reward that I was to have (as it was told me by Harcourt) was very conſiderable: I belong'd to one particular Part of the Society. There are others; and I preſume, they each kept their particular Meſſengers.

L. C. J. What was Grove to have?

Bedlow, Grove was to have Fifteen Hundred Pound, if he Eſcaped, and to be a continual Favorite, and Reſpected as a great Perſon, by all the Church.

L. C. J What was Pickering to have?

Bedlow, He was to have ſo many Maſſes, I cannot preſume to tell the Number; but they were to be as many, as at Twelve Pence a Maſs ſhould come to that Money: Theſe Maſſes were to be Communicated to all the Jeſuites beyond the Seas, that when he had done it, he might be ſent away immediately.

L, C, J, What can you ſay of anyof the Reſt?

Bedlow, My Lord, I do not Charge any more but them Three.

L, C, J, What ſay you to Whitebread?

Bedlow, They have ſaid, that he was very Active in the Plot; but I know it not.

L. C. J. That is not any Evidence againſt him. What can you ſay, as to Fenwick?

Bedlow, No more than I have ſaid, as to Mr. Whitebread: I only know him by Sight.

L. C. J. Then he Charges only theſe Three upon Oath, Ireland, Pickering, and Grove.

Ireland, Do you know Sir John Warner?

Bedlow, I know Father Warner at St. Omers, and Sir John Warner at Wotton by St. Omers.

Ireland, He named Sir John Warner to be at Paris.

Bedlow, It was Sheldon, I ſpoke of (my Lord) at Paris.

Ireland, At leaſt, you are certain, that I was preſent at that Conſultation?

Bedlow, Yes; I am certain, you were there.

Ireland, Can you produce any Witneſs, that you ever ſpoke to me before in your Life.

Mr. Serj Baldwyn. Do you know any thing of Mr. Whitebread's being preſent at any of the Conſults?

Bedlow, I do know, that Whitebread, and Fenwick both, have been ſeveral times at Conſultations; but I do not know what the Particular Reſolves of thoſe Conſultations were.

L, C, J, Did you ever hear them ſpeak any thing in Particular?

Bedlow, No, I have never heard them ſpeak any thing in Particular.

L, C, J, Where have you ſeen Fenwick?

Bedlow, I have ſeen Fenwick at Harcourt's Chamber, and I have often heard him talk'd of; and it hath been told me, That nothing was done, without Fenwick.

Whitebread, Are you ſure you know us?

Bedlow, I do not ſay, You are the Man that employed me: You are the Man I was leaſt acquainted with, of all the Society; but I have ſeen you there.

Ireland, Can you bring any one, that can Teſtifie it?

L, C, J, He muſt then have brought one of your ſelves; and it may be, he cannot produce any ſuch one.

Ireland, Nor no one elſe, except ſuch a Knight of the Poſt, as Mr. Oates.

L, C, J, You muſt be Corrected for that, Mr. Ireland: You ſhall not come here to Abuſe the KING's Evidence. Nothing appears to us, that Reflects upon Mr. Oates's Teſtimoney; and we muſt not ſuffer any ſuch ſort of Language.

Mr. Juſt. Atk. Take off his Credit as much as you can by Proof, but you muſt not Abuſe him by ill Language.

Mr. Finch, Can you tell the Court and the Jury, when it was, that by Agreement Grove ſhould have the Fifteen Hundred Pound?

Bedlow, He was to have it put into a Friend's Hands.

L. C. J. Do you know that Friend's Name?

Bedlow, No, my Lord, I do not.

Mr. Finch, Do you know, when that was to be delivered out to him?

Bedlow, As to the particular Time of their Agreement, I do not know it.

Mr Finch. But this he ſays, That when the Agreement was made, he was to have Fifteen Hundred Pound.

L. C. J. And he ſays this, That Ireland was in Auguſt laſt, with Pickering and Grove, and others, at a Conſult; where he was alſo.

Ireland, But what if I prove I was not in London all Auguſt laſt, from the Beginning to the End?

L. C. J. You heard them talk of this Matter in Auguſt, at Harcourt's Chamber, you ſay: What, did they talk of it, as a Matter they had agreed?

Bedlow, My Lord, they brought it in, as being baulked in their Deſign of Killing the KING at Windſor; and becauſe that had not taken the Effect they intended it, they ſhould have Conyers joyned to them, to do it at New-Market.

Mr. Finch, Did they tell you when, and where the Agreement was made?

L. C. J. No, he ſpeaks not of that; but they talk'd of the Failure at Windſor: And therefore they did conclude, that Conyers ſhould be joyned to them, to do it at New-Market.

Bedlow, Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ſay?

Bedlow, My Lord, I would only ſay this; If I had any to prove what I ſay, they muſt be Parties as well as theſe Perſons.

Ireland, My Lord, I will prove, That I was not in Town in Auguſt all the Month, by twenty Witneſſes: I'll bring thoſe that ſaw me in Staffordſhire, and ſpoke with me all Auguſt.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ask him?

Whitebread, No.

Serj. Baldwin, Swear Mr. James Bedlow. And he was ſworn.

Ireland, He does ſay, That he was Familiar with me, and ſeveral other Perſons here; and therefore, I deſire he may ſpecify the Place, and the Company.

William Bedlow, I do not ſay, there was a Familiarity; for I was a Stranger to that Part of the Society.

L. C. J. You muſt take him right, Mr. Ireland; he hath not ſaid, that he was of your Familiar Acquaintance.

Bedlow, I have ſeen you often, Sir.

Ireland, Where?

Bedlow. At Mounſieur Le Faire's.

Ireland, Where was that?

Bedlow, At Somerſet-Houſe.

Ireland, Was their any one preſent beſides?

Bedlow, Yes, ſeveral other Prieſts and Jeſuites of Somerſet-Houſe.

Ireland, Name one.

Bedlow, Seignior Perrare.

Ireland, You ſay, you ſaw me and Perrare together

ther at Somerset-House. I suppose, if Seignior Perrare may be brought hither-----

Bedlow, My Lord, Perrare is a Priest in Orders; and without doubt, is in this Business.

L. C. J. If he did see you, he must see you in such Company as you keep, they were Priests and Jesuites, and of your own Religion; and we know very well what Answers we are like to be put off with by Men of your own Persuasion at this time of day.

Ireland, My Lord if no body's Oath can be taken that is of another Persuasion than the Church of England, it is hard.

L. C. J. Pray mind, you do not object ingenuously: for you say, This Witness swears he saw me in such Company, why does he not produce them to testifie it? Why? He does not come prepared to produce them; if he should, we know well how you are concerned one for another at this time; and we can hardly expect they should make true Answers. But notwithstanding, if you will produce this Father Perrare, (he cannot be sworn because 'tis against the Law, but) his Testimony shall be heard, and let it go as far as it can.

Bedlow, If your Lordship pleases, my Lord, I would convince him that he does know me. Have you not been, Sir, at Somerset-House?

Ireland, Yes, I have.

Bedlow, Do you know le Fair and Perrare?

Ireland, Yes, but I never saw you in their Company in Somerset-House in my Life, above once or twice.

Bedlow, Yes you have twice at le Fair's.

L. C. J. Where is that le Fair? you would do well to produce him?

Bedlow, My Lord, he is gone away, and is one against whom the King's Proclamation is out.

L. C. J. You keep such Company as run away, and then you require him to produce them, whom the King's Proclamation cannot bring in.

Ireland, I keep none but honest Company.

Bedlow, If your Lordship pleases, I have one thing more that is very material to speak; at the same time that there was a discourse about these Three Gentlemen's being to destroy the King at New-Market, at the same time there was a discourse of a design to kill several Noble Persons, and the particular parts assigned to every one. Knight was to kill the Earl of Shaftesbury, Pritchard the Duke of Buckingham, Oneile the Earl of Ossory, Obrian the Duke of Ormond.

L. C. J. Well, will you have any more of this?

Mr. Finch, You say, you saw Mr. Ireland say Mass, where did you see him?

Bedlow, Not Mr. Ireland, but Mr. Fenwick, I have seen him say Mass, and at Wild-House.

Oates, My Lord, I did omit a Consult wherein there was a design laid of taking away the Duke of Ormond's Life, and of a Rebellion that was to be raised in Ireland.

My Lord, in the Month of January last, there came Letters from Arch-Bishop Talbot to London, which Letters were perused by Fenwick, and Ireland, and Whitebread, and when they were perused, they were sent and communicated to the Fathers at St. Omers. The Contents of those Letters were thus, That the Catholicks had a fair prospect of effecting their Designs in the Kingdom of Ireland. And this Letter was inclosed in a Letter signed by Whitebread, Ireland, Fenwick, and others (I name no Man's Name that is not here.)

L. C. J. You saw the Letter?

Oates, Yes, I did see it, and read it, wherein they did give thanks unto God, that he was pleased to prosper their designs so fairly in Ireland; and withal they did say, That they would not leave a stone unturned, to root out that abominable Heresy out of that Kingdom. Now what that abominable Heresy was, I have nothing but a Conjecture.

L. C. J. We all know what that is well enough, there needs no Proof of that.

Oates, In the Month of August, Fenwick, a little before he went to St. Omers, on the One and Twentieth of August, (as I think it was) that Week that Bartholomew-Fair begun on (as I take it) he was then going to fetch home the Provincial, and to carry some Students with him, and he went unto St. Omers the Monday following; but then there was a Consult, and at that Consult Fenwick did consent to the contrivance of the Death of the Duke of Ormond, and for the Rebellion that was to be raised in Ireland after his Death. And he did approve of the Four Jesuites that were to kill my Lord of Ormond, and did consent to send Fogarthy down to the Arch-Bishop of Dublin, in case the Four good Fathers did not hit the business. Mr. Whitebread, my Lord, did consent when he came over as appears by their Entry-Books. For there came a Letter from him Dated as from St. Omers, but I concluded it did not come from thence, because it paid but Two-pence.

Whitebread, Who was it that writ that Letter?

Oates, My Lord, this Letter was Dated as the latter part of August, and Dated as from St. Omers, but the Post mark upon it was but Two-pence, to be paid for it; so that I do conclude thence Mr. Whitebread was then at Esquire Leigh's house in But in that Letter he did like the Proposal that was made about killing the Duke of Ormond in that Consult, and the Letter was signed with his own hand.

L. C. J. I would gladly see that Letter.

Oates, If I could see it, I could know it.

L. C. J. You have not that Letter?

Oates, No, but they kept a Book wherein they Registred all their Resolutions, and there it was entred.

L. C. J. You upon your Oath say, That he as Superiour of them did keep a Book, wherein they Registred all their Consults.

Oates, Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. You would do well to shew us your Book, Mr. Whitebread.

Whitebread, We never kept any.

Oates, The Consult did, for tho' the Superiour have an absolute power over the subject, yet they never do any thing of Consequence without the Consult. And this Book was kept by the Superiour, and never opened but at the Consult, and therein all the Passages were Registred.

L. C. J. Produce your Book, and we shall see whether you cannot catch Mr. Oates in something or other.

Bedlow, My Lord, that Book I have seen, and therein all their Consults are Registred.

L. C. J. Was there Books kept by them?

Bedlow, Yes, my Lord, all the Consults did keep Books, and Mr. Langhorne was the Person that Registred all into one.

L. C. J. If a Hundred Witnesses swear it, they will deny it. Well, will you have any more?

Mr. S. Baldwin. My Lord, we will now call Mr. James Bedlow, this Gentleman's Brother to shew ſhew you, That theſe ſort of Perſons did reſort to him frequently.

L. C. J. Are you ſworn Sir?

J. Bedlow, Yes, my Lord, I am.

L. C. J. Then let me ask you one ſhort Queſtion. Do you know Mr. Ireland?

J. Bedlow, No.

L. C. J. Do you know Pickering or Grove?

J. Bedlow, I have heard of them.

L. C. J. Did your Brother know any thing of them?

J. Bedlow, As for the Conſpiracy of killing the King, I know nothing of it; but about his knowledge of Prieſts and Jeſuits, and the Converſe he had beyond Sea, that I can ſpeak to. And I have very often heard theſe mens names named.

L. C. J. In what nature did he talk of them?

J. Bedlow, I know nothing of the Plot, and as for any deſign I knew not what my Brother knew, but I have heard him talk of them.

L. C. J. How did he talk of them?

J. Bedlow, He mentioned them as his Acquaintance, the Jeſuits there did ask him Queſtions about them.

L. C. J. And did it appear to you they were of his Acquaintance.

J. Bedlow, But I underſtood nothing of the Plot or Deſign, by the Oath I have taken.

L. C. J. But did he ſpeak as if he knew any of them?

J. Bedlow, For any certain knowledge that my Brother had of them I cannot ſpeak, but I have often heard him talk of them as people I thought he knew.

Mr. Finch, Do you know, that when he came over from beyond Sea, that his Lodging was frequented by any, and by whom?

J. Bedlow, Yes, there were many Prieſts and Jeſuits came to him.

Mr. Finch, Did your Brother receive any Money from them?

J. Bedlow, Yes, my Lord, I have fetch'd many ſcore of Pounds for my Brother from them.

L. C. J. The Uſe, Gentlemen, that the King's Council make of this Evidence, is only to ſhew, That his Brother Mr. Bedlow was converſant in their affairs, in that he hath received many a ſcore of Pounds in the managing of their buſineſs.

Sir Cr. Levinz, Pray, from whom had your Brother that Money?

J. Bedlow, I have proved that from the Goldſmiths themſelves that paid it, before the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Chancellor, and Lord Treaſurer.

Mr. Finch, Have you received any conſiderable ſum at a time?

J. Bedlow, Yes, I have.

Mr. Finch, How much?

J. Bedlow, Fifty or Threeſcore Pounds at a time.

Finch, Of whom?

J. Bedlow, Of Prieſts and Jeſuits.

Finch, For whom?

J. Bedlow, For my Brother.

L. C. J. Will you have any more Evidence?

Mr. Serj. Baldwyn, Yes my Lord, The next Evidence we produce, is concerning a Letter; there was a Letter written by one Mr. Peter, that is now a Priſoner, to one Tonſtall a Jeſuit; and this Letter does mention, That there was a meeting appointed by order of Whitebread to be at London.

L. C. J. What is that to them, and how come you by it?

Serj. Baldwyn, Peters is now in Priſon for things of this nature; and you have heard of one Harcourt, and out of his Study this Letter was taken.

W. Bedlow, My Lord, may I not have liberty to withdraw? my head akes ſo extreamly, I cannot endure it.

L. C. J. Mr. Bedlow, you may ſit down, but we can't part with you yet.

Ireland, I deſire my Lord, that his Brother may be asked, how long he had known me.

L. C. J. Can you recollect by the diſcourſes you have heard, how long he might have known Ireland?

J Bedlow, No my Lord, it was out of my way.

L. C. J. But he did talk of Ireland?

J. Bedlow, Yes, my Lord, he did.

Ireland, As being where, in what place?

J. Bedlow, I cannot tell.

Ireland, He named one place Three Years ago, it was at Paris.

L. C. J. But he does not ſay that you were there, but that you were familiarly talk'd of there; ſo that the meaning is, they were acquainted with you: And this is only brought to ſhew, that it is not a new-taken-up thing by Bedlow, though you ſeemed never to have known any ſuch Man; yet he ſwears, ſaith he, I have heard ſuch Perſons talkt of as my Brother's acquaintance.

Ireland, If his Brother had talkt of me three years ago, why then he muſt have known me three years ago.

L. C. J. I'll ask him that queſtion: How long is it ſince you knew him?

W. Bedlow, I have known him but ſince Auguſt this ſame laſt Summer; but, my Lord, I talkt five, and four years ago of ſeveral Engliſh Monks and Jeſuits that were then at Rome, that I never knew in my Life.

L. C. J. His anſwer then is this, ſaith his Brother, I have heard him talk of them three years ago; I then asked Bedlow, how long he had known them? ſaith he, I did not know them three years ago, though I did talk of them three years ago; for we have talkt of many that we never ſaw in our Lives: So it ſeems he had occaſion to make uſe of your names frequently, and join them with thoſe of ſome he knew better: But he never knew you till Auguſt laſt; but he did diſcourſe of you three years ago, as known for ſuch ſort of Perſons.

Ireland, He muſt hear ſome-body ſpeak of us, as being in ſome place or another.

W. Bedlow, I will ſatisfie you in that, We talk of ſome now in England, that are to be ſent a year hence.

L. C. J. If you can produce but Harcourt and le Faire, they will do you great ſervice now.

W. Bedlow, My Lord, as for example, Father Pritchard is Confeſſor to ſuch a Gentleman in England now this year; a year hence we muſt ſend ſuch a one hither, and he muſt go back. And we may talk of that Perſon as in England, two Years before.

L. C. J. You need not trouble your ſelves about that. Mr. Ireland, you ſhall have a fair Trial, but you will not have cunning or art enough to deceive the Jury, nor will Mr. Whitebread have Learning enough to baffle the Court.

Then Mr. W. Bedlow and his Brother withdrew.

Serj. Baldwin, My Lord, The next Evidence that we ſhall give, as I ſaid, is a Letter from one Peters to one Tonſtal, and this we will bring home to Mr. Whitebread, for it is an invitation to be at the Conſult held in London the 24*th* of April; and it was written about that very time, to wit, the 3*d* of April. It was written from London, and it mentions, that Mr Whitebread did fix the meeting at that time. We'll tell you how we came by the Letter, Mr. Harcourt who is one of the principal perſons here, and at whoſe Houſe was the meeting you heard of, he himſelf is fled away, when they came to look after him upon the diſcovery that was made: And Mr. Bradley, who was the Meſſenger to ſeize upon him, did according to direction ſearch his Study, and did there find this Letter, which we conceive, my Lord, to be very good Evidence; this Harcourt being a party, and one at whoſe Houſe the laſt meeting was, and others was. We do conceive a Letter from one of that party, bearing date about the ſame time, concerning Mr. Whitebread's Summons, who was Maſter of the Company, is very good Evidence againſt them.

L C J, If you had found it in Mr. Whitebread's cuſtody, you ſay ſomething.

Juſt. Berttie, My Brother puts it ſo: We find a Letter directed to Mr. Whitebread, let the matter of it be what it will, it is found among Harcourt's Papers.

Serj. Baldwin, No my Lord, we find a Letter from one Mr. Peter's now a Priſoner directed to Mr. Tonſtall concerning the Conſult ſummoned by Whitebread, and this we find in Harcourt's poſſeſſion.

L C J, I can't underſtand how this may affect Mr. Whitebread.

Mr. Finch, Pray my Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, this is the uſe we make of this Letter; we do not produce it as another Evidence of this deſign, but to fortify that part of the Evidence which hath already been given, That there was a Conſult ſummoned at that time, and to be held with all the privacy that could be, to prevent diſcovery. And this is the paper, that we find in the Cuſtody of Harcourt, one of the Conſpirators who is fled for it.

L C J, Look you, Mr. Finch, if you uſe it not againſt any particular perſon, but as an Evidence in general that there was a Plot amongſt them, you ſay right enough; but it cannot be Evidence againſt any one particular perſon of the Priſoners at the Bar.

Mr. Finch, My Lord it can affect no particular perſon; but we only uſe it in the general, and We pray it may be read.

L C J, Gentlemen of the Jury, before you hear the Letter read, I would ſay this to you. Let them have fair play, whatſoever they mete unto others, we will ſhew them Juſtice. They ſhall have as fair play upon their Trials as any perſons whatſoever. The thing that is offered to be given in evidence, is a Letter written by one Peters a Priſoner for this Plot, and directed to one Tonſtall a Jeſuit, and this is found in Harcourt's Chamber, a Prieſt that is fled, and one whom the King hath Commanded to render himſelf by His Proclamation; but he does not. Now in that Letter there is a diſcourſe of a Deſign and Plot on foot. This cannot be evidence to charge any one particular perſon of theſe; but only to ſatisfy you and all the world, that thoſe Letters and Papers that are found amongſt their own Prieſts, do fortify the Teſtimony of Mr. Oates, that there is a general Plot: 'tis not applied to any particular perſon.

Oates, The day before the Conſult met, Mr. Whitebread did ask Mr Peters whether he had ſummoned the Conſult according to his direction. Mr. Peters told him yes, he had writ into Warwickſhire and Worceſterſhire.

Whitebread, When was this?

Oates, The day before the Conſult met.

Whitebread, Did you hear me ask Mr. Peters?

Oates, Yes, I did hear you; and I did hear him ſay he had done it. Now my Lord this Letter that is found in Harcourt's Study ſhews, that Mr. Whitebread had directed Mr. Peters in this Conſult.

Serj. Baldwyn, Pray ſwear Sir Tho. Doleman to ſhew how he came by it. Which was done.

Serj. Baldwyn, Sir Tho. Doleman, What do you know of this Letter?

Sir Tho. Doleman, This Letter in my hand was taken amongſt Harcourt's papers, in a great Bag of papers; and ſearching them I did find this Letter amongſt the reſt.

Then the Letter was ſhewn to Mr. Oates.

L. C. J. Is that Mr. Peters's hand?

Oates, Yes, my Lord, it is.

L C J, Were you acquainted with his hand?

Oates, Yes, my Lord, I have often read it in Letters.

L C J, Do you know Tonſtall?

Oates, My Lord, I do not know him by that name; If I did ſee him perhaps I might: I knew Men better by their Faces.

Sir Cr. Levinz, Pray read it.

Cl. of the Cr. This is Dated February 23. (77,) And ſuperſcribed thus (Theſe for his Honoured Friend Mr. William Tonſtall at Burton.)

Honoured dear Sir,

I Have but time to convey theſe following particulars to you. First, I am to give you notice, that it hath ſeem'd fitting to our Maſter Conſult, Prov. &c. to fix the 21*ſt day of* April next Stylo veteri, for the meeting at London of our Congregation, on which day all thoſe that have a ſuffrage are to be preſent there, that they may be ready to give a beginning to the ſame on the 24*th, which is the next day after St.* George's-day. You are warned to have, jus ſuffragrii, and therefore if your occaſions ſhould not permit you to be preſent, you are to ſignifie as much, to the end others in their ranks be ordered to ſupply your abſence: Every one is minded alſo, not to haſten to London long before the time appointed, nor to appear much about the Town till the meeting be over, leſt occaſion ſhould be given to ſuſpect the deſign. Finally, Secrecy, as to the time and place, is much recommended to all thoſe that receive Summons, as it will appear of its own nature neceſſary.

L C J, So it was very neceſſary indeed.

Cl. of Cr. There is more of it, my Lord.

Tertio pro Domino ſolono diſco.

Benefact. Prov. Lunienſis.

I am ſtraitned for time, that I can only aſſure you, I ſhall be much glad of obliging you any ways, Sir,

Your Servant

Edward Petre.

Pray, my Service where due, &c.

L C J. You know nothing of this Letter. Mr. Whitebread?

Whitebread, No, my Lord, nothing at all.

L C J, Nor you Mr. Ireland?

Ire-

Ireland, 'Tis none of my Lettet, my Lord.

L C J, Did you never hear of it before?

Ireland, Not that I know of in particular.

L C J, Well, have you done with the Evidence for the King?

Serj. Baldwin, Pray Sir Tho Doleman, will you tell my Lord, Did Mr. Oates give in this Testimony of the Consult, to be the 24*th* of April before this Letter was found.

Sir Tho Doleman, Mr. Oates gave in his information about this matter, to the King and Council, four or five days before we found this Letter.

Serj. Baldwin, You were speaking of the Seals that were made use of to Sign Commissions, have you them in the Court?

Oates, Yes, my Lord, they are in the Court, and they were taken out of the Provincial's Chamber.

Whitebread, I confess they had the Seals out of my Chamber; but the taking of them was more than they had power to do.

Then the Seals were shewn to the Court and the Jury.

Mr. Finch, It hath been told you already, Gentlemen, what use these Seals were put unto; to Seal Commissions to raise an Army. And we have now done with our Evidence for the King, till we hear what the Prisoners say.

L C J, Before you come to make your defence, I will do that which I think in justice and honesty, and according to the duty of my Place and my Oath I ought to do; That is to say something to the Jury, before the Prisoners make their own defence. Here are Five that stand indicted of High-Treason: I must tell you this, That as to three of them, that is to say, Ireland, Pickering and Grove, both Mr. Oates and Mr. Bedlow have sworn the thing flat upon them: Mr. Oates his Testimony is full against them all; but Mr. Bedlow does only agree with him to charge Three, and that in this particular: Saith he, I was present at Harcourt's Chamber when Ireland was there, and Pickering and Grove, where they discoursed of their defeat about their design against the King at Windsor; and there they came to a new agreement, to do it at New-Market. So that here is now, as the King's Council did open it to you at the first, as there ought to be, two Witnesses; so here are Two, which though they speak as to a different circumstance of time, yet they prove one Treasonable Fact at several times: For if killing the King be the fact in question, and one proves they would do it by one thing, and another by another; and one in one place, and another in another; yet these are two Witnesses to prove one fact, that is the substance, which is, the killing of the King. So that there are two Witnesses against them three, expresly proving a Confederacy to kill the King: for Ireland's being by, and consenting, was the same thing, and as much, as if he had been to do it with Grove and Pickering; for there are no Accessaries in Treason. I do acknowledge, that Mr. Oates hath given a very full and ample Testimoy, accompanied with all the circumstances of time and place, against them all, that may go far to weigh with you, all things considered, to believe there is a Plot; yet I do not think that they have proved it against Whitebread and Fenwick by two Witnesses: so that though the Testimony be so full, as to satisfie a private Conscience, yet we must go according to Law too. It will be convenient from what is already proved, to have them stay till more proof may come in: 'Tis a great Evidence that is against them; but it not being sufficient in point of Law, we discharge you of them; 'tis not a legal proof to convict them by, whatsoever it may be to satisfie your Consciences. Therefore remove Mr. Fenwick and Mr. Whitebread from the Bar, and let the other three say what they will for themselves.

L C Baron, (Speaking to the Goaler) You must understand they are no way acquitted; the Evidence is so full against them by Mr. Oate's Testimony, that there is no reason to acquit them. It is as flat, as by one Witness can be; and the King hath sent forth a Proclamation for further discovery; before the time therein prefixt come out, no question there will come in more Evidence: Therefore keep them as strict as you can.

Then Whitebread and Fenwick were taken back to the Goal by the Keeper.

L C J, Now Gentlemen, you shall have liberty to make your full defence.

Ireland, First I shall endeavour to prove there are not two Witnesses against me: For that which he says, of my being at Harcourt's Chamber in August, is false; for I will prove I was all August long, out of Town, for I was then in Staffordshire.

L C J, Call your Witnesses.

Ireland, If there be any of them here.

L C J, Whoever comes to give Evidence for you, shall go and come in safety; they shall not be Trapand for any thing of that, but they shall be heard.

Ireland, My Lord, We are kept so strict, that we are not permitted to send for any body.

L C J, As soon as your Sister came to me, I ordered she should have access to you, and that you should have Pen, Ink and Paper, in order to your defence; therefore call those Witnesses you have, to prove what you say.

Ireland, I can only say this, That last August upon the 3*d* day, I went down to Staffordshire with my Lord Aston, and his Lady, and his Son, and Sir John Southcot and his Lady, and all these can testifie that I went down with them. Here is Mr. John Aston in Town, if he may be found, who was in my Company all August in Staffordshire.

L C J, Will you call that Gentleman? Cryer call him.

Cryer, Mr. John Aston.

Ireland, It is an hundred to one if he be here; for I have not been permitted so much as to send a scrap of Paper.

L C J, Your Sister had leave to go to whom you thought fit in your behalf. You said you would prove it, Why don't you?

Ireland, I do as much as I can do.

L C J, What, by saying so?

Ireland, Why, I do name them that can testifie.

L C J, If naming them should serve, you must have a Law made on purpose for you.

Ireland, Then there is no help for Innocence.

Recorder, To save him that labour, the King's Evidence will prove, that he was in Town at that time.

Serj. Baldwin, Swear Sarah Pain. Which was done.

Serj. Baldwin, My Lord, this person was Mr. Grove's Maid.

L C J, I believe you know your Maid, Mr. Grove

Grove, don't you? look upon her, she was your Servant.

Grove, Yes, my Lord, she was so, she is not so now.

L C J, Do you know Mr. Ireland?

Sarah Pain, Yes, my Lord.

L C J, Do you know whether Mr. Ireland was in Town in August last, or no?

S. Paine, I saw him at his own House about a week before I went with my Lord Arlington to Windsor.

L C J, When was that?

S. Paine, That was about a week after the King was gone thither.

L C J, Sir Tho. Doleman, what day was it the King went to Windsor?

Sir Tho. Doleman. About the thirteenth of August.

L C J, Thirteen and seven is twenty; then you went to Windsor about the twentieth it seems, and you say that eight days before you saw Mr. Ireland at his own House.

S. Paine, Yes, my Lord, about eight or nine days before that, I did see him at the door of his own House, which was a Scriveners in Fetter Lane. He was going into his own Lodging.

L C J, How long had you known him before that time?

S. Paine. My Lord, I knew him, for he came often to our House, when I lived at Mr. Grove's he was the Man that broke open the Pacquet of Letters that my Master carried about afterwards, and he Sealed all the Pacquets that went beyond the Seas. And he opened them still when the Answers returned back again.

Ireland, Now must all the people of my Lodging come and witness that I was out of my Lodging all August.

L C J, Call them.

Ireland, There is one Anne Ireland.

L C J, Cryer, call her.

Cryer, Anne Ireland, Here she is.

L C J, Come Mistriss, what can you say concerning your Brother's being out of Town in August?

Anne Ireland, My Lord, on Saturday the third of August, he set out to go into Staffordshire.

L C J, How long did he continue there?

A. Ireland, Till it was a fortnight before Michaelmas.

L C J, How can you remember that it was just the third of August?

A. Ireland, I remember it by a very good Circumstance, because on the Wednesday before, my Brother, and my Mother and I, were invited out to Dinner; we stay'd there all night, and all Thursday night, and Friday night my Brother came home, and on Saturday he set out for Staffordshire.

L C J, Where was it Maid that you saw him?

S. Paine. I saw him going in at the door of their own House.

L C J, When was that?

S. Paine, About a week before I went with my Lord Chamberlain to Windsor, which was a week after the King went thither.

L C J, That must be about the 12th or 13th. Are you sure you saw him?

S. Paine, Yes, my Lord, I am sure I saw him.

L C J, Do you know this Maid, Mr. Ireland?

Ireland, I do not know her, my Lord.

L C J, She knows you by a very good token. You used to break open the Letters at her Master's house, and to seal them.

S. Paine, He knows me very well, for I have carried several Letters to him, that came from the Carrier, as well as those that came from beyond Sea.

L C J, They will deny any thing in the world.

Ireland, I profess, I do not know her. Twenty people may come to me, and yet I not know them; and she having been Mr. Grove's Servant, may have brought me Letters, and yet I not remember her. But, my Lord, here is my Mother Eleanor Ireland that can testifie the same.

L C J, Call her then.

Cryer. Eleanor Ireland.

E. Ireland, Here.

L C J, Can you tell when your Son went out of Town?

E. Ireland, He went out of Town the third of August, towards Staffordshire.

Ireland. My Lord, there is Mr. Charles Gifford will prove that I was a week after the beginning of September, and the latter end of August, in Staffordshire.

L C J, That will not do: for she says that she saw you in London about the 10th or 12th of August; and she makes it out by a Circumstance, which is better Evidence than if she had come and sworn the precise day wherein she saw him: for I should not have been satisfi'd, unless she had given me a good account why she did know it to be such a day. She does it by Circumstances, by which we must calculate that she saw you about the 12th or 13th day. She went to my Lord Arlington's at such a day, a week after the King went to Windsor, and that was about the 13th, and she saw you a week before she went to my Lord Arlington's which must be the 12th or 13th. You say you went out of Town the third of August; who can swear you did not come back again?

Ireland, All the house can testifie I did not come to my Lodging.

E. Ireland, He went out of Town the third of August, and did not return till a fortnight before Michaelmas.

L C J, Did you lye at his house?

E. Ireland, I did then, my Lord.

L C J, What, all that while?

E. Ireland, Yes, my Lord.

L C J, So did your daughter too, did she?

E. Ireland, Yes, she did.

Ireland, There are others that did see me the latter end of August in Staffordshire.

L C J, And you would feign have crampt him up, between the 20th and 31; and then, tis possible, you might be in Staffordshire.

Ireland, If I might have been permitted to send in for such Witness as I would have had, I could have brought them.

Recorder, Why, have you not a Note of what Witnesses you are to call? why don't you call them according to that Note?

Ireland, I had that but this Morning.

L C J, Why did you not send for them before, to have them ready?

Recorder, 'Tis his Sister that brings that Note of the Witnesses that he should call, and now they are not here.

A. Ireland, There was one Engletrap, and one Harrison had promised to be here, that went with him into Staffordshire.

Mr.

Mr Oates, My Lord, when ever we had a mind to come to Town, we commonly writ our Letters, and let them come to Town two days after us. So that we might prove by the writing of such Letters, if any Question did arise, that we could not be at such a place at such a time. And when we pretended to go in the Country, we have gone and taken a Chamber in the City, and have had frequent Cabals at our Chambers there. Mr. Ireland writ a Letter as dated from St. Omers, when I took my leave of him at his own Chamber, which was betwixt the 12th and 24th in London. He was there; and afterwards when I went to Fenwick's Chamber he came thither; a fortnight or ten days at least I am sure it was in August.

L C J, Here are three Witnesses upon Oath about this one thing: here is Mr. Bedlow that Swears the fact, upon which the Question arises to be in August; that you deny, and say you were out of Town then: he produces a Maid here, and she swears, that about that time, which by calculation must be about the 11th or 12th, she saw you going into your own house. And here is a third Witness, who swears he knows nothing of this matter of fact, but he knows you were in town then, and that he took his leave of you as going to St. Omers.

Oates, Whereas he says, that the beginning of Septemper he was in Staffordshire, he was in Town the first of September, or second, for then I had of him twenty shillings.

Ireland, This is a most false lie; for I was then in Staffordshire. And the Witnesses contradict themselves; for the one saith, he took his leave of me, as going to St. Omers the 12th; the other saith, it was the latter end of August I was at Harourt's Chamber.

L C J, He does not say you went, but you pretended to go.

A. Ireland, Here is one Harrison, that was a Coachman that went with them.

L C J, Well what say you friend? Do you know Mr. Ireland?

Harrison, I never saw the man before that time in my life, but I met with him at S. Albans.

L C J, When?

Harrison, the fifth of August. There I met with him, and was in a journey with him to the sixteenth.

L C J, What day of the week was it?

Harrison, Of a Monday.

L C J, Did he come from London on that day?

Har. I cannot tell that. But there I met him:

L C J, What time?

Har. In the Evening.

L C J, Whereabouts in Saint Albans?

Har. At the Bull Inn, where we lodged.

L C J, Mr Ireland, you say you went on Saturday out of Town, did you stay at Saint Albans till Monday.

Ireland, No, I went to Standon that day, and lay there on Saturday and Sunday Night, on Monday I went to Saint Albans.

L C J, What from thence?

Ireland, Yes my Lord.

L C J, Why did you go thither? was that in your way?

Ireland, I went thither for the company of Sir John Southcot and his Lady.

L C J, How did you know that they went thither?

Ireland, I understood they were to meet my Lord Aston and Lady there.

L C J, What on Monday Night?

Ireland, Yes, my Lord.

Har. From thence I went with him to Tixwel, to my Lord Aston's House, there we were all with him.

L C J. Were you my Lord Aston's Coachman?

Har. No, my Lord, I was Servant to Sir John Southcot.

L C J, How came you to go with them?

Har. Because my Lord Aston is my Lady Southcot's Brother.

L C J, How long was you in his Company?

Har. From the fifth of August to the sixteenth, and then I was with him at Westchester.

Mr. Just. Atk. You have not yet talkt of being at Westchester all this while.

Ireland, My Lord, I must talk of my journey by degrees.

L C J, Before, you said you were all August in Stafford-shire, come you must find out some evasion for that.

Ireland, In Staffordshire and thereabouts.

L C J, You Witness, who do you live with?

Har. With Sir John Southcot.

L C J, Who brought you hither?

Har. I came only by a messenger last night.

L C J, Was not Sir John Southcot in that journey himself?

Har. Yes, my Lord, he was.

L C J, Then you might as well have sent to Sir John Southcot himself to come.

A. Ireland, I did it of my self, I never did such a thing before, and did not understand the way of it.

Ireland, It was meer chance she did send for those she did.

L C J, But why should she not send for Sir John himself?

Ireland, She did not know, that Sir John was there.

L C J, You were not denied to send for any Witnesses, were you?

Ireland, I was expresly denied, they would not let me have one bit of Paper.

L C J, Fellow, what Town was that in Staffordshire? Tell me quickly.

Har. It was Tixwel by my Lord Aston's, there we made a stay for three or four days, then we went to Nantwich, and so to Westchester.

L C J, Were not you at Wolverhampton with him?

Har, No, my Lord, I was not there, I left him at Westchester.

Ireland, My Lord, I was at Wolverhamton with Mr. Charles Gifford, and here he is to attest it.

L C J, Well Sir, what say you?

Gifford, My Lord, I saw him there a day or two after St. Bartholomew's day, there he continued till the 9th of September, the 7th of September I saw him there, and I can bring twenty and twenty more, that saw him there. Then, as he said, he was to go towards London. I came again thither on the ninth, and there I found him. And this is all I have to say.

Oates, My Lord, I do know that day in September I speak of by a particular Circumstance.

Ireland, My Lord, there is one William Bowdrel, that will testifie the same, if I might send for him.

L C J, Why han't you him here?

Ire-

Ireland, She hath done what she can to bring as many as she could.

L C J, Have you any more Witnesses to call?

Ireland, I can't tell whether there be any more here or no.

L C J, Mr. Grove what say you for your self?

Grove, Mr. Oates says he lay at my house, my Lord, I have not been able to send for any Witnesses, and therefore I know not whether there be any here. They could prove that he did not lie there. He says he saw me receive the Sacrament at Wild-House, but he never did, and if I had any Witnesses here I could prove it.

L C J, He tells it you with such and such Circumstances, who lay there at that time.

Grove, He did never lie there.

L C J, Why you make as if you never knew Mr. Oates.

Grove, My Lord, I have seen him, but he never lay at my house.

L C J, Mr. Pickering, what say you for your self; you relie upon your Masses.

Pickering, I never saw Mr. Oates, as I know of, in my life.

L C J, What say you to Bedlow, he tells you he was with you in Harcourt's Chamber such a day.

Pickering, I will take my Oath I was never in Mr. Bedlow's company in all my Life.

L C J, I make no question but you will. And have a dispensation for it when you have done. Well have you any Witnesses to call?

Pickering, I have not had time to send for any.

L C J, You might have moved the Court, when you came at first, and they would have given you an order to send for any.

Ireland, Methinks there should be some witnesses brought that know Mr. Oates, to attest his reputation, for I am told, there are those that can prove very ill things against him, they say he broke prison at Dover.

L C J, Why have you not your Witnesses here to prove it?

Ireland, We could have had them if we had time.

L C J, See what you ask now, you would have time and the Jury are ready to go together about their Verdict.

Ireland, Why, we desire but a little time to make out our proof.

L C J, Only you must tye up the Jury, and they must neither eat nor drink till they give in a Verdict.

Ireland, Then we must confess, there is no Justice for Innocence.

L C J, Well if you have any more to say, say it.

Ireland, My Lord, I have produced Witnesses, that prove what I have said.

L C J, I'll tell you what you have proved: you have produced your Sister and your Mother, and the Servant of Southcot, they say you went out the third of August, and he gives an account you came to St. Albans on the fifth, and then there is another Gentleman, Mr. Gifford, who says he saw you at Wolverhampton till about a week in September. Mr. Oates hath gainsaid him in that, so you have one Witness against Mr. Oates for that circumstance. It cannot be true what Mr. Oates sayes, if you were there all that time, and it cannot be true what Mr. Gifford says if you were in London then. And against your two Witnesses and the Coachman there are three Witnesses, that swear the contrary, Mr. Oates Mr. Bedlow and the Maid, so that if she and the other two be to be believed, here are three upon Oath against your three upon bare affirmation.

Ireland, I do desire time, that we may bring in more Witnesses.

L C J, Come, you are better prepared than you seem to be. Call whom you have to call. Can you prove that against Mr. Oates, which you speak of? If you can, call your Witnesses on God's Name. But only to asperse tho' it be the way of your Church, it shall not be the way of Trial amongst us. We know you can call Hereticks, and ill Names fast enough

Ireland That Hilsley that he names can prove, if he were here, that Mr. Oates was all the while at St. Omers.

L C m, Will you have any more Witnesses call'd. If you will, do it, and don't let us spend the time of the Court thus.

Grove, Here is Mrs. York, that is my Sister, will your Lordship please to ask her, whether she see that Gentleman at my House?

L C J, What say you Mistress?

York, No, my Lord, not I.

Mr Just. Atk. Nor I neither, might not he be there for all that?

Oates, To satifie the Court, my Lord, I was in another habit and went by another Name.

L C J, Look you, he did as you all do, disguise your selves.

Ireland, Though we have no more Witnesses yet we have Witnesses that there are more Witnesses.

L C J, I know what your way of Arguing is, that is very pretty, you have Witnesses that can prove you have Witnesses, and those Witnesses can prove you have more Witnesses, and so in infinitum. And thus you argue in every thing you do.

Ireland, We can go no further than we can go, and can give no answer to what we did not know would be proved against us.

L C J, Then look you Gentlemen ——

A. Ireland, My Lord, Sir Denny Ashburnham promised to be here to testifie what he can say concerning Mr. Oates.

L C J, Call him.

Cryer. Sir Denny Ashburnham. Here he is, my Lord.

L C J, Sir Denny, what can you say concerning Mr Oates.

Sir D. Ashburnham: My Lord, I received a Letter this Morning which I transmitted to Mr. Attorny, and this Letter was only to send to me a Copy of an Indictment against Mr. Oates of Perjury; I did send it accordingly with my Letter to Mr. Attorney. He hath seen the Letter and what the Town says to me in it.

Att. Gen. I have seen it, there is nothing in it.

L C J, Do you know any thing of your own knowledge?

Sir D. Ashburnham, I do know Mr. Oates, and have known him a great while, I have known him from his Cradle, and I do know that when he was a Child, he was not a person of that Credit that we could depend upon what he said.

L C J, What signifies that?

Sir D. Ashburnham, Will you please to hear me out, my Lord, I have been also sollicited by some of the Prisoners who sent to me, hoping I could say something that would help them in this matter: Particularly last night one Mistress Ireland, Sister

Sister to the Prisoner at the Bar, a Gentlewoman I never saw before in my life, she came to me and was pressing me hard, that I would appear here voluntarily to give evidence for the Prisoner. I told her no, I would not by any means in the world, nor could I say any thing as I thought that would advantage them; for I told her though perhaps upon my knowledge of Mr. Oates in his youth, had this discovery come only upon Mr. Oates's testimony, I might have had some little doubt of it, but it was so corroborated with other Circumstances that had convinced me, and I would not speak any thing against the King's Witnesses, when I my self was satisfied with the truth of the thing: And I do think truly that nothing can be said against Mr. Oates to take off his credibility; but what I transmitted to Mr. Attorney, I had from the Town of Hastings for which I serve.

L C J, What was in that Indictment?

Sir D. Ashburnham, It is set forth, that he did swear the Peace against a man, and at his taking his Oath did say, there were some Witnesses that would evidence such a point of fact, which when they came would not testifie so much, and so was forsworn.

L C J, What was done upon that Indictment?

Sir D. Ashburnham, They did not proceed upon it, but here is the Letter and the Copy of the Indictment.

Mr. Serj. Baldwin, My Lord we desire it may be read, and see what it is.

Mr Att. Gen. It is only a Certificate, pray let it be read.

L C J, I do not think it Authentick Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. But if I consent to it it may be read.

L C J, If you will read it for the Prisoners you may, you shan't read it against them. If there be any strain it shall be in favour of the Prisoners and not against them.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is nothing against the Prisoners nor for them, but however if your Lordship be not satisfied it should be read, let it alone.

L C J, Truly I do not think it is sufficient Evidence or fit to be read.

A. Ireland, I went to another, one Colonel Shakesby, who was sick and could not come, but could have attested much as to this.

L C J, Have you any more Witnesses?

Ireland, I have none, nor I have not time to bring them in.

L C J, If you have none, what time could have brought them in. But you have called a Gentleman that does come in, and truly he hath done you very great service, you would have had him testified against Mr. Oates, he saith he hath known him ever since he was a Child, and that then he had not so much Credit as now he hath: And had it been upon his single Testimony that the discovery of the Plot had depended, he should have doubted of it, but Mr. Oates his Evidence with the Testimony of the fact it self, and all the concurring Evidences which he produces to back his Testimony, hath convinced him that he is true in his Narrative.

Sir D. Ashburnham, Your Lordship is right in what I have spoken.

L C J, Have you any more Witnesses, or any thing more to say for your selves.

Ireland, If I may produce on my own behalf Pledges of my own Loyalty and that of my Family——

L. C. J. Produce whom you will.

Ireland. Here is my Sister and my Mother can tell how our Relations were plundered for siding with the King.

L. C. J. No, I will tell you why it was, it was for being Papists, and you went to the King for shelter.

Ireland. I had an Uncle that was killed in the King's service, besides the Pendrels and the Giffards that were instrumental for saving the King, after the Fight at Worcester, are my near Relations.

L. C. J. Why all those are Papists.

Pickering. My Father, my Lord was killed in the King's Party.

L. C. J. Why then do you fall off from your Father's Vertue?

Pickering. I have not time to produce Witnesses on my own behalf.

Ireland. I do desire time to bring more Witnesses.

Grove. As I have a soul to save, I know nothing of this matter charged upon me.

L. C. J. Well, have you any thing more to say?

Ireland. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. You of the King's Council will you sum up the Evidence?

Mr. Serj. Baldwin. No my Lord, we leave it to your Lordship.

C. of Cr. Cryer, Make Proclamation of silence.

Cryer. O yes! All manner of Persons are commanded to keep silence upon pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Lord Chief Justice directed the Jury thus:

L. C. J. Gentlemen, you of the Jury! As to these three persons, Ireland, Pickering, Grove: (the other two you are discharged of) One of them, Ireland, it seems is a Priest. I know not whether Pickering be or no, Grove is none, but these are the two men that should kill the King, and Ireland is a Conspirator in that Plot. They are all indicted for Conspiring the King's death, and endeavouring to subvert the Government, and destroy the Protestant Religion, and bring in Popery. The main of the Evidence hath gone upon that foul and black offence Endeavouring to kill the King. The utmost end was without all question to bring in Popery and subvert the Protestant Religion, and they thought this a good means to do it by killing the King. That is the thing you have had the greatest Evidence of, I will sum up the particulars and leave them with you.

'Tis sworn by Mr. Oates expresly, that on the 24*th* of April last there was a Consultation held of Priests and Jesuits. They are the Men fit only for such a mischief, for I know there are abundance of honest Gentlemen of that persuasion, who could never be drawn to do any of these things, unless they were seduced by their Priests, that stick at nothing for their own end: He swears expresly that the Consult was begun at the White Horse Tavern in the Strand. That they there agreed to murder the King; That Pickering and Grove were the Men that were to do it, who went afterwards and subscribed this holy League of theirs, and signed it every one at his own Lodging, Whitebread at his, Ireland at his, and Fenwick at his, two of which are out of the case, but they are repeated to you only to shew you the order of the Conspiracy. That afterwards

Pickering

Pickering and Grove did agree to the ſame, and they received the Sacrament upon it as an Oath to make all Sacred, and a Seal to make all Secret.

Mr. Bedlow hath ſworn as to that particular time of Killing the King by Pickering and Grove, though they were not to give over the Deſign, but there were Four that were ſent to kill the King at Windſor. Mr. Oates ſwears there was an Attempt by Pickering in March laſt, but, the Flint of the Piſtol happening to be looſe, he durſt not proceed, for which he was rewarded with Pennance. He ſwears there were Four hired to do it. That Fourſcore Pounds was provided for them. He ſaw the Money; and ſwears he ſaw it delivered to the Meſſenger to carry it down.

Ireland. At what time was that?

L. C. J. In Auguſt there was an Attempt firſt by Pickering and Grove. They then not doing of it, four other Perſons (Iriſh men) were hired to doe it, and Ten Thouſand Pounds proffered to Sir George Wakeman to Poiſon the King. Thus ſtill they go on in their Attempts, and, That being too little, Five Thouſand Pounds more was added. This is to ſhew you the groſs of the Plot in general; and alſo the particular Tranſactions of theſe two Murtherers, Grove and Pickering, with the Conſpiracy of Ireland. Bedlow ſwears directly, that in Auguſt laſt, theſe three and Harcourt and Pritchard and Le-Faire, being all together in a Room, did diſcourſe of the Diſappointment the Four had met with, in not killing the King at Windſor; And there the Reſolution was, the old Stagers ſhould goe on ſtill, but they had one Conyers joyned to them, and they were to kill the King then at New-Market. He ſwears they did agree to do it; that Ireland was at it; and that all three did conſent to that Reſolve. So that here are two Witneſſes that ſpeak poſitively, with all the Circumſtances of this Attempt, of the Two to kill the King, and the Confederacy of Ireland all along with them. Now, I muſt tell you, there are no Acceſſaries, but all Principals, in Treaſon. It may ſeem hard perhaps to convict Men upon the Teſtimony of their fellow Offenders, and, if it had been poſſible to have brought other Witneſſes, it had been well: but, in things of this Nature, you cannot expect that the Witneſſes ſhould be abſolutely ſpotleſs. You muſt take ſuch Evidence as the nature of the thing will afford, or you may have the King deſtroyed and our Religion too. For Jeſuites are too ſubtle to ſubject themſelves to too plain a Proof, ſuch as they cannot evade by equivocation or a flat denial.

There is alſo a Letter produced, which, ſpeaking of the Conſult that was to be the 24*th* of April, proves that there was a Conſpiracy among them: And, although it is not Evidence to convict any one Man of them, yet it is Evidence upon Mr. Oates's Teſtimony to prove the general Deſign. It is from one Petre to one of the Confederates, and taken amongſt Harcourt's Papers, after Mr. Oates had given in his Teſtimony; and therein it is mentioned, That the Superior had taken care, that there ſhould be a Meeting the 24*th* of April, the day after Saint George's Day, which is the very time Oates ſpeaks of; and that they were not to come to Town too ſoon, that the Deſign might not be diſcovered. I would fain know what the Signification of that Clauſe may be. And then it goes farther, That it was to be kept ſecret, as the nature of the thing doth require; which ſhews plainly there was ſuch a Tranſaction on foot. But the reaſon I urge it for is, to ſhew you that it is a concurrent Evidence with Mr. Oates, who had never ſeen this Paper till three or four days after his Information was given in, wherein he ſwears the time when this Agitation was to be, and when they came to look upon the Papers, it agrees with the time preciſely. Now they do not write in this Letter that they intend to kill the King, but they write to caution them to keep the Deſign undiſcovered, and by that you may gueſs what they mean.

What is ſaid to all this by the Priſoners, but denyal? Ireland cannot deny but that he knew Mr. Oates, and had been in his company ſome times; Five times, by Circumſtances, Mr. Oates hath proved, ſo that they were Acquaintance, and it appears plainly, there was a Familiarity between them. Ireland objects, that Bedlow charges him in Auguſt, when he was out of Town all that time, and that therefore the Teſtimony of one of the Witneſſes cannot be true. And, to prove this, he calls his Mother, his Siſter, and Sir John Southcott's Man, and Mr. Gifford. His Mother and Siſter ſay expreſly, that he went out of Town the third of Auguſt, and the Servant ſays, that he ſaw him at St. Albans the fifth of Auguſt, and continued in his company to the ſixteenth; (ſo that as to that, there is a Teſtimony both againſt Mr. Bedlow and againſt Mr. Oates;) and Gifford comes and ſays, he ſaw him at the latter end of Auguſt and beginning of September at Wolverhampton, whereas Mr. Oates hath ſworn, he ſaw him the twelfth of Auguſt and the firſt or ſecond of September, and tells it by a particular Circumſtance, wherein, I muſt tell you, it is impoſſible that both ſides ſhould be true. But if it ſhould be a miſtake only in point of time, it deſtroys not the Evidence, unleſs you think it neceſſary to the ſubſtance of the thing. If you charge one in the month of Auguſt to have done ſuch a Fact, if he deny that he was in that place at that time, and proves it by Witneſſes, it may go to invalidate the credibility of a man's Teſtimony, but it does not invalidate the truth of the thing it ſelf, which may be true in ſubſtance, though the circumſtance of time differ. And the queſtion is, whether the thing be true?

Againſt this, the Counſel for the King have Three that ſwear it poſitively and expreſly, That Ireland was here. Here is a young Maid that knew him very well, and was acquainted with him, and with his breaking up of Letters; and ſhe is one that was Grove's Servant: ſhe comes and tells you directly, That about that time, which, by computation, was about the twelfth of Auguſt, ſhe ſaw him go into his own houſe, which cannot be true, if that be true which is ſaid on the other ſide: and ſhe does ſwear it upon better Circumſtances than if ſhe had barely pitch'd upon a day; for ſhe muſt have ſatisfied me well, for what reaſon ſhe could remember the day ſo poſitively, e're I ſhould have believed her: But ſhe does it remembring her going to my Lord Arlington's ſervice, which was a week after the King went to Windſor; which is ſworn to be about the thirteenth of Auguſt, and a week before her going it was that ſhe ſaw Ireland at his own door. What arts they have of evading this I know not, for as they have turn'd their Learning into ſubtlety, ſo they have their Integrity too. The ſtudy of Politicks is their buſineſs and Art which they make uſe of upon all occaſions; and I find them Learned chiefly in Cunning, and very ſubtle in their Evaſions. So that you ſee, without great difficulty, a man cannot have from them a plain Anſwer to a plain Queſtion. But the Fact againſt them is here expreſly ſworn by two Witneſſes; if you have any reaſon to disbelieve them, I muſt leave that to you. Sir D. Aſhburnham, who is produced to diſcredit Mr. Oates, ſays, that when he was a Child there was little or no credit to be given to him, and if the matter had depended ſolely upon his Teſtimony, thoſe Irregularities of his, when a Boy, would have ſtaggered his Belief. But when the matter is ſo accompanied with ſo many other Circumſtances, which are material things, and cannot be evaded or deny'd, it is almoſt impoſſible for any man either to make ſuch a Story, or not to believe it when it is told. I know not whether they can frame ſuch a one; I am ſure never a Proteſtant ever did, and, I believe, never would invent ſuch a one to take away their lieves: Therefore it is left to your Conſideration what is ſworn. The Circumſtances of ſwearing it by two Witneſſes, and what Reaſons you have to disbelieve them.

It is moſt plain the Plot is diſcovered, and that by theſe Men; and that it is a Plot, and a Villanous one, Nothing is plainer. No Man of common Underſtanding, but muſt ſee there was a Conſpiracy to bring in Popery, and to deſtroy the Proteſtant Religion; and we know their Doctrines and Practices too well, to believe they will ſtick at any thing, that may effect thoſe ends. They muſt excuſe me, if I be plain with them; I would not aſperſe a Profeſſion of Men, as the Prieſts are, with hard words, if they were not very true, and if at this time it were not very neceſſary. If they had not murthered Kings, I would not ſay they would have done ours. But when it hath been their Practice ſo to do; When they have debauched Mens Underſtandings, overturned all Morals, and deſtroy'd all Divinity, What ſhall I ſay of them? When their Humility is ſuch, that they tread upon the Necks of Emperors, Their Charity ſuch, as to kill Princes, and their Vow of Poverty ſuch, as to covet Kingdoms, What ſhall I judge of them? When they have Licences to lie, and Indulgences for Falſhoods, Nay, When they can make him a Saint that dies in one, and then pray to him, as the Carpenter firſt makes an Image, and after worſhips it, and can then think to bring in that wooden Religion of theirs amongſt us in this Nation, What ſhall I think of them? What ſhall I ſay to them? What ſhall I do with them?

If there can be a Diſpenſation for the taking of any Oath (and diverſe Inſtances may be given of it, that their Church does Licenſe them to do ſo) it is a Cheat upon Mens Souls, it perverts and breaks off all Converſation amongſt Mankind; For how can we deal or converſe in the World, when there is no Sin, but can be Indulged; no Offence ſo big, but they can pardon it, and ſome of the blackeſt be accompted meritorious? What is there left for Mankind to lean upon, if a Sacrament will not bind them (unleſs it be to conceal their Wickedneſs?) If they ſhall take Teſts and Sacraments, and all this, under colour of Religion, be avoided, and ſignifie nothing, What is become of all Converſe? How can we think Obligations and Promiſes between Man and Man ſhould hold, if a Covenant between God and Man will not?

We have no ſuch Principles nor Doctrines in our Church, we thank God. To uſe any prevarication in declaring of the truth is abominable to natural Reaſon, much more to true Religion; and 'tis a ſtrange Church that will allow a Man to be a Knave. 'Tis poſſible ſome of that Communion may be ſaved, but they can never hope to be ſo in ſuch a courſe as this. I know they will ſay, That theſe are not their Principles, nor theſe their Practices, but they Preach otherwiſe, they Print otherwiſe, and their Councils do determine otherwiſe.

Some hold, that the Pope in Council is Infallible, and ask any Popiſh Jeſuite of them all, and he will ſay the Pope is Infallible himſelf in Cathedra, or he is no right Jeſuite. And if ſo, whatever they command, is to be juſtified by their Authority; ſo that if they give a Diſpenſation to kill a King, that King is well killed. This is a Religion that quite unhinges all Piety, all Morality, and all Converſation, and to be abominated by all Mankind.

They have ſome parts of the Foundation 'tis true, but they are adulterated, and mixt with horrid Principles, and impious Practices. They eat their God, they kill their King, and Saint the Murtherer. They indulge all ſorts of Sins, and no humane Bonds can hold them.

They muſt pardon me if I ſeem ſharp, for a Papiſt in England is not to be treated as a Proteſtant ought to be in Spain; and if ye ask me why? I'll give you this Reaſon, we have no ſuch Principles nor Practices as they have. If I were in Spain I ſhould think my ſelf a very ill Chriſtian, ſhould I offer to diſturb the Government of the place where I lived, that I may bring in my Religion there. What have I to do to undermine the tranquillity and peace of a Kingdom, becauſe all that dwell in it, are not of my particular Perſuaſion?

They do not do ſo here, there is nothing can quench the thirſt of a Prieſt and a Jeſuite, not the Blood of Men, not of Any, if he can but propagate his Religion, which in truth is but his Intereſt.

They have not the Principles that we have, therefore they are not to have that common Credence, which our Principles and Practices call for.

They are not to wonder if they keep no Faith, that they have none from others; and let them ſay what they will, that they do not own any ſuch things as we charge upon them, and are like to go hard with them; For we can ſhew them out of their own Writings and Councils, that they do juſtifie the Power of the Pope in Excommunicating Kings, in Depoſing them for Hereſie, and Abſolving their Subjects from their Allegiance. And the Claim of Authority both in Pope and Council is the ſureſt Foundation they build upon.

I have ſaid ſo much the more in this Matter, becauſe their Actions are ſo very plain and open, and yet ſo pernicious; and 'tis a very great Providence, that we, and our Religion, are delivered from Blood and Oppreſſion. I believe our Religion would have ſtood notwithſtanding their Attempts, and I would have them to know we are not afraid of them; nay I think we ſhould have maintained it by deſtroying of them. We ſhould have been all in Blood 'tis true, but the greateſt effuſion would have been on their ſide; and without it, How did they hope it ſhould have been done? There are honeſt Gentlemen, I believe hundreds of that Communion, who could not be openly won upon to engage in ſuch a Deſign. They will not tell them that the King ſhall be killed; but they inſinuate into them, that he is but one Man, and if he ſhould die it were fit they were in readineſs to promote the Catholick Religion, and when it comes to that, they know what to do. When they have got them to give Money to provide Arms and be in readineſs on their ſpecious pretence, then the Jeſuits will quickly find them Work. One Blow ſhall put 'em to exerciſe their Arms; and when they have killed the King, the Catholick Cauſe muſt be maintained.

But they have done themſelves the Miſchief, and have brought Miſery upon their whole Party, whom they have enſnared into the Deſign upon other Pretences than what was really at the bottom. A Popiſh Prieſt is a certain Seducer, and nothing ſatisfies him; not the Blood of Kings, if it ſtands in the way of his Ambition. And I hope they have not only undeceived ſome Proteſtants, whoſe Charity might encline them to think them not ſo bad as they are; but I believe they have ſhaken their Religion in their own Party here, who will be aſhamed in time, that ſuch Actions ſhould be put upon the ſcore of Religion.

I return now to the Fact, which is proved by two Witneſſes, and by the concurrent Evidence of the Letter and the Maid; and the Matter is as plain and notorious as can be, That there was and intention of bringing in Popery by a cruel and bloody Way; for I believe they could never have Prayed us into their Religion. I leave it therefore to you to conſider, whether you have not as much Evidence from theſe two Men, as can be expected in a Caſe of this nature; and whether Mr. Oates be not rather juſtified by the Teſtimony offered againſt him, than diſcredited. Let Prudence and Conſcience direct your Verdict, and you will be too hard for their Art and Cunning.

Gentlemen, If you think you ſhall be long, we will Adjourn the Court till the Afternoon, and take your Verdict then.

Jury. No, my Lord, we ſhall not be long.

Then an Officer was Sworn to keep the Jury ſafe, according to Law, and they withdrew to conſider of their Verdict.

After a very ſhort receſs, the Jury returned, and the Clerk of the Crown ſpake to them thus:

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, anſwer to your Names. Sir William Roberts.

S. W. Roberts. Here. And ſo of the reſt.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, Are you all agreed in your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Omnes. The Foreman.

Cl. of the Cr. Set William Ireland to the Bar. William Ireland, hold up thy Hand. Look upon the Priſoner, How ſay you, is he guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of the Cr. What Goods and Chattels, Lands or Tenements?

Foreman. None to our knowledge.

Cl. of Cr. Set Thomas Pickering to the Bar. Tho. Pickering hold up thy Hand. Look upon the Priſoner. How ſay you, is he Guilty of the ſame High Treaſon, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements?

Foreman. None to our knowledge.

Cl. of Cr. Set John Grove to the Bar. John Grove hold up thy Hand. Look upon the Priſoner. How ſay you, is he Guilty of the ſame High Treaſon, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements?

Foreman. None to our knowledge.

Cl. of Cr. Hearken to your Verdict as the Court hath recorded it. You ſay that William Ireland is Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted. You ſay that Thomas Pickering is Guilty of the ſame High Treaſon. You ſay that John Grove is Guilty of the ſame High Treaſon. And for them you have found Guilty, you ſay, That they, nor any of them, had any Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the time of the High Treaſon committed, or at any time ſince to your knowledge. And ſo you ſay all.

Omnes. Yes.

L. C. J. You have done, Gentlemen, like very good Subjects, and very good Chriſtians, that is to ſay, like very good Proteſtants: And now much good may their Thirty Thouſand Maſſes do them.

Then the Court adjourned by Proclamation till four in the Afternoon.

In the Afternoon the ſame day.

About five of the Clock Mr. Recorder and a ſufficient number of the Juſtices, returned into the Court, the Judges being departed home; and Proclamation was made for attendance, as in the Morning.

Then the Clerk of the Crown called for the Priſoners Convicted of High Treaſon, and ſpoke to each of them thus:

Cl. of the Cr. Set William Ireland to the Bar. William Ireland hold up thy Hand, thou ſtandeſt Convicted of High Treaſon; what canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why the Court ſhould not give thee Judgment to die according to Law.

Ireland. My Lord, I repreſented all along from the the beginning, that we had not time to call in our Witneſſes to juſtifie our Innocence.

Recorder, If you have any thing to ſay in ſtay of Judgment, you have all free liberty to ſay it.

Ireland, We had no time allowed us to bring in our Witneſſes, ſo that we could have none, but only thoſe that came in by chance; and thoſe things they have declared, though true, were not believed.

Mr. Recorder, Theſe things Mr. Ireland, you did not object before the Jury gave their Verdict, now they have given their Verdict, and found you guilty; if you have any thing to ſay to the Court why they ſhould not proceed to Judgment according to that Verdict, you may ſpeak it; but for theſe things it is too late.

Ireland, My Lord, I only have this to ſay, I deſire more time to be heard again, and to call in my Witneſſes.

Recorder, Call the Executioner to do his Office.

Ireland, There are Teſtimonies, my Lord, that I could produce of my Loyalty, and my Relations Fidelity to the King.

Mr. Recorder, I believe Mr. Ireland, it will be a Shame to all your Relations that have been Loyal to the King, that you ſhould be privy to the Murder of that good King whom your Relations ſo well ſerved; and therefore if that be all that you have to ſay, it will ſignifie nothing.

The Executioner not appearing, the Sheriff of Middleſex was called to come into Court, and give his attendance upon pain of 40 l. But the Executioner coming in, was with a Reproof from the Recorder for his negligence, commanded to tye him up, which he did.

Cl. of Cr. Set Thomas Pickering to the Bar.

Thomas Pickering hold up thy Hand, Thou art in the ſame caſe with the Priſoner laſt before thee, what canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why the Court ſhould not give thee Judgment to die according to Law.

Mr. Recorder, What does he ſay for himſelf?

Cap. Richardſon, He has nothing to ſay.

Mr. Recorder, Then tie him up.

Cl. of Cr. Set John Grove to the Bar.

John Grove hold up thy Hand, Thou art in the ſame caſe with the Priſoner laſt before thee, what canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why the Court ſhould not give thee Judgment to die according to Law?

Grove, I am as innocent as the Child unborn.

Cl. of Cr. Tie him up, which was done.

Cl. of Cr. Cryers on both ſides make Proclamations.

Cryers, O yes, All manner of Perſons are commanded to keep ſilence whilſt Judgment is giving upon pain of Impriſonment; Peace about the Court.

Mr. Recorder, Where is the Keeper? ſhew me the Priſoners, William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove.

Cap. Richardſon. Thoſe are the three.

Mr. Recorder. You the Priſoners at the Bar. you have been Arraigned for a very great Offence the greateſt that can be committed againſt any Authority upon Earth, for High Treaſon againſt your King, with all the Aggravations that poſſibly can attend ſo great a Crime as that is; for you did not only ſtrike at the Life of the beſt of Kings, but you intended the ſubverſion of the beſt of Religions. Whatever you may apprehend, yet all men that will lay their hopes of ſalvation upon any thing that is fit for a man to lay his hopes upon, which is upon the Merits of a crucified Saviour, and not upon your Maſſes, Tricks or Trumperies, do abhor the thoughts of promoting their Religion by maſſacring Kings, and murdering their Subjects. And though we whom you call Hereticks, abhor to own any ſuch Religion; yet we are not afraid to tell you, and all others who are enſnared into your principles, we will maintain the Religion and the Government as it is Eſtabliſhed, with our Lives and Fortunes. And it is fit that it ſhould be known, that we who live under the Government of ſo mild and pious a Prince, and in a Country where ſo good, ſo moderate a Religion is Eſtabliſht by Law, will not be affrighted by all your Murders, Conſpiracies and Deſigns, from declaring, that they who dare kill Kings, and maſſacre their Subjects, are the higheſt Violaters, not only of the Laws of the Land, but of that great Law which all good Chriſtians and Proteſtants, think themſelves obliged to pay great Reverence and Obedience to, I mean the Law of God Almighty himſelf.

Thus I ſpeak to you, Gentlemen, not vauntingly, 'tis againſt my nature to inſult upon perſons in your ſad condition; God forgive you for what you have done, and I do heartily beg it, though you don't deſire I ſhould; for poor men, you may believe that your intereſt in the World to come is ſecured to you by your Maſſes, but do not well conſider that vaſt Eternity you muſt e're long enter into, and that great Tribunal you muſt appear before, where his Maſſes (ſpeaking to Pickering) will not ſignifie ſo many Groats to him, no not one Farthing. And I muſt ſay it for the ſake of thoſe ſilly people whom you have impoſed upon with ſuch fallacies, That the Maſſes can no more ſave thee from a future Damnation, then they do from a preſent Condemnation.

I do not ſpeak this to you, as intending thereby to inveigh againſt all perſons that profeſs the Romiſh Religion; for there are many that are of that perſwaſion, that do abhor thoſe baſe Principles of murdering Kings and ſubverting Governments. There are many honeſt Gentlemen in England, I dare ſay, of that Comunion, whom none of the moſt impudent Jeſuits durſt undertake to tempt into ſuch deſigns; theſe are only to be impoſed upon ſilly men, not upon men of Conſcience and Underſtanding. And I pray God, as was ſaid lately by a Learned Gentleman whom we all know, that all Proteſtants may be as ſafe from the force of your Daggers, as they are from thoſe of your Arguments; for I dare ſay, that you could ſooner Murder any man that underſtands the Proteſtant Religion, than perſwade him to ſuch Villanies. And among thoſe many things which prevailed with the honeſt Gentlemen of the Jury to convict you of this horrid Crime, they could not but take notice, that you (ſpeaking to Ireland) that do pretend to Learning, did ſend into Foreign parts, that your fellow Jeſuits ſhould take care publickly to preach, That the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, by which the Common Juſtice of the Nation is preſerved, ſignified nothing; which is a ſtrong Evidence of your Deſign, not only to Murther the King, but ſubvert the Government; for ſurely the moſt probable way to do that, is to aſperſe thoſe Oaths by which all Proteſtant Subjects, thoſe whom you call Hereticks, lie under an Obligation of Obedience to their Prince. And I think it not unfit to tell you, that you had a great favour shewed to you to be tried only for the matters contained in this Indictment; for you that are Priests must know, that there is a Law in the Land, that would have hang'd you for your very residence here; for if any Subject born in England, shall take Orders from the See of Rome, and afterwards come into England, and remain there 40 days, such, for that offence alone, are made Traitors by Act of Parliament. But you are so far from being under any Awe of that Law, or Submission to it, that you dare not only come to live here in despite thereof, but endeavour what you can, to overthrow both it, and the Government it self. You dare conspire to Murther the King; nay, not only so, but you dare make your Consults thereof publick. You dare write your names to those Consults. You dare solicit all your party to do the like, and make all the ties of Religion and Conscience (that to Considering Christians are Obligations to Piety and Charity) as Engagements either to act your Villanies, or to conceal them. We think no power can dispence with us whom you call Hereticks, to falsifie our Oaths, much less to break our Covenant with God in the holy Sacrament. But you, instead of making that a Tye and Obligation to engage you to the Remembrance of our Saviour, make it a snare and a gin to oblige your Proselites to the Assassinating of Kings, and murdering their Subjects. I am sorry with all my Soul, that men who have had their Education here, and the benefit of the good Examples of others, should not only be led into such mischievous principles themselves, but to be of that confidence in their perswasion, as to dare to debauch others also. I am sorry also to hear a Lay-man should with so much malice declare, That a Bullet, if round and smooth, was not safe enough for him to execute his Villanies by. But he must be sure, not only to set his poisonous invention on work about it, but he must add thereto his poisonous Teeth; for fear if the Bullet were smooth, it might light in some part where the wound might be cured. But such is the height of some mens malice, that they will put all the Venom and Malice they can into their actions. I am sure this was so horrid a design, that nothing but a Conclave of Devils in Hell, or a College of such Jesuits as yours on Earth, could have thought upon.

This I remember to you for the sake of them that are to live, and for the Charity I have for you who are to die: for the sake of them that are to live; for I hope when they hear, that Men of your Persuasion dare commit those outragious Crimes, and justifie them by a principle of Religion, they will not easily be seduced into your Opinion: And out of Charity to you that are to die, to persuade you to hearty Repentance; for, otherwise, I must tell you, thy 1500 l. (speaking to Grove) nor thy 30000 Masses (speaking to Pickering) will avail but little. And I thought fit to say this also, that it may be known that you have had the full benefit of the Laws Established in England, and those the Best of Laws; for such is not the Law of other Nations, for if any Protestant in any place where the Romish Religion is profest, had been but thought guilty of such Crimes, he had never come to the Formality and Justice of an Arraignment, and to be tried by his Peers, permitted to make his Defence, and hear what could be said against him; but he had been hang'd immediately, or perhaps suffer'd a worse death. But you are not only beholden to the happy Constitution of our Laws, but to the more happy Constitution of our Religion. For such are the admirable Documents of that Religion we in England profess, That we dare not requite Massacre for Massacre, Blood for Blood. We disown and abhor all Stabbing; and we are so far from reckoning that he shall be a Saint in Heaven for Assassinating a Prince, and be pray'd to in another world, that the Protestant is required to believe, that such that begin with Murther, must end with Damnation, if our blessed Lord and Saviour do not interpose; nothing that Man can do, Papist or Protestant, can save any Man in such a case. We dare not say that our Religion will permit us to Murder Dissenters, much less to Assassinate our King.

And having thus said, let me once more as a Christian, in the name of the great God of Heaven, beg of you for your own Souls sake, be not satisfied or over-persuaded with any Doctrine that you have preached to others, or imbibed from others; but believe, that no one can contrive the death of the King, or the overthrow of the Government, but the great God of Heaven and Earth will have an account of it. And all Pardons, Absolutions, and the Dispensations that you who are Priests can give to your Lay-Brother, or that any of your Superiours may give to you, will not serve the turn.

I know not, but as I said, you may think I speak this to insult, I take the great God of Heaven to witness, that I speak it with Charity to your Souls, and with great sorrow and grief in my own heart to see, Men that might have made themselves happy, draw upon themselves so great a ruine. But since you have been so fairly heard, so fairly Tried and Convicted, there is but little more to be said; for I must tell you, because it may not be thought that you had not free liberty to make your full defence, though that Gentleman (speaking to Ireland) seemed to be surpriz'd, he had a kind Sister that took care for to bring his Witnesses; I am so far from blaming her for it, that I do commend her, it was the effect of her good nature, and deserves Commendation; but speak to this purpose, to shew that there was no surprise upon him, nor his Life taken away by any such thing; for he had a greater favour shew'd to him than is usually shown to such Offenders.

And having thus said to you my self, we do also require him whose duty it is to attend in such cases, nay, I do Command him in the name of the Court, that he attend upon you to give you all the comfortable assistance that he can for the advantage of your future state: And not only so, but we will certainly take care, that if you will have any others come to you, they shall. I would not be mistaken, I do not mean any of your Priests and Jesuits; but if you will have the Assistance of any Protestant Divines, they shall not be deny'd you. And I hope God Almighty will please to give you pardon in another world, though you have offended beyond hopes of any in this. I once more assure you, all I have said is in perfect Charity. I pray God forgive you for what you have done. And so there remains now only for me to pronounce that Sentence which by the the Law of the Land the Court is required to do againſt perſons Convicted of that offence which you are Convicted of.

This Court doth therefore Award, That you the Priſoners at the Bar, be conveyed from hence to the place from whence you came, and from thence that you be drawn to the place of Execution upon Hurdles, that there you be ſeverally hanged by the Neck, that you be cut down alive, that your Privy Members be cut off, and your Bowels taken out, and burnt in your view, that your Heads be ſevered from your Bodies, that your Bodies be divided into Quarters, and thoſe Quarters be diſpoſed at the King's pleaſure: And the God of infinite mercy be merciful to your Souls.

Then the Priſoners were conveyed back to the Goal by the Keeper of the Goal, according to Cuſtom; and the Commiſſion was called over, and the Priſoners taken Order for according to Law. And then the Court Adjourned by Proclamation, thus:

Cl. of Cr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer, O yes, O yes, O yes, All manner of perſons that have any thing more to do at this general Seſſions of the Peace holden for the City of London, may depart hence for this time, and give their Attendance at the Guildhall, London, on Friday the 10th day of January next, at 7 of the Clock in the morning. And all manner of perſons at this Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-delivery of Newgate, holden for the City of London and County of Middleſex, may depart hence for this time, and give their Attendance here again on Wedneſday the 15th day of January, at 7 of the Clock in the morning.

God Save the King.

And then the Court broke up.

Articles of Impeachment of High Treaſon and other High Crimes, Miſdemeanours and Offences, againſt THOMAS Earl of DANBY, Lord High Treaſurer of ENGLAND; As they were deliver'd in to the Houſe of Lords, in the Name of the Commons of England, by Sir Henry Capel, December 23. 1678.

I.

THAT He hath traiterouſly encroach'd to himſelf Regal Power, by treating in Matters of Peace and War with Foreign Miniſters and Embaſſadors, and giving Inſtructions to his Majeſty's Embaſſadors Abroad, without communicating the ſame to the Secretaries of State, and the reſt of his Majeſty's Council, againſt the expreſs Declaration of his Majeſty and his Parliament; thereby intending to defeat and overthrow the Proviſion that has been deliberately made by his Majeſty and his Parliament for the Safety and Preſervation of his Majeſty's Kingdoms and Dominions.

II.

That He hath traiterouſly endeavour'd to ſubvert the Ancient and Well-eſtabliſh'd Form of Government in this Kingdom, and inſtead thereof to introduce an Arbitrary and tyrannical Way of Government; and the better to effect this his Purpoſe, he did deſign the Raiſing of an Army, upon Pretence of a War againſt the French King, and to continue the ſame as a Standing Army within this Kingdom: And an Army being ſo raiſed, and no War enſuing, an Act of Parliament having paſs'd to Pay and Disband the ſame; and a great Sum of Money being granted for that End, he did continue the Army contrary to the ſaid Act, and miſemploy'd the ſaid Money given for the Diſbanding, to the Continuance thereof, and iſſued out of his Majeſty's Revenues divers great Sums of Money for the ſaid Purpoſe, and wilfully neglected to take Security of the Paymaſters of the Army, as the ſaid Act requir'd; whereby the ſaid Law is eluded, and the Army is yet continued, to the great Danger and unneceſſary Charge of his Majeſty and the whole Kingdom.

III.

That He traiterouſly intending and deſigning to alienate the Hearts and Affections of his Majeſty's Good Subjects from his Royal Perſon and Government, and to hinder the Meetings of Parliaments, and to deprive his Sacred Sacred Majeſty of their ſafe and wholſome Counſel, and thereby to alter the Conſtitution of the Government of this Kingdom, did propoſe and negotiate a Peace for the French King, upon Terms diſadvantageous to the Intereſt of his Majeſty and his Kingdoms; for the doing whereof, he did endeavour to procure a great Sum of Money from the French King, for enabling him to maintain and carry on his ſaid traiterous Deſigns and Purpoſes, to the Hazard of his Majeſty's Perſon and Government.

IV.

That He is Popiſhly affected, and hath traiterouſly concealed (after he had Notice) the late horrid and bloody Plot and Conſpiracy, contrived by the Papiſts, againſt his Majeſty's Perſon and Government; And hath ſuppreſſed the Evidence, and reproachfully diſcountenanced the King's Witneſſes in the Diſcovery of it, in Favour of Popery, immediately tending to the Deſtruction of the King's Sacred Perſon, and the Subverſion of the Proteſtant Religion.

V.

That He hath waſted the King's Treaſure, by iſſuing out of his Majeſty's Exchequer ſeveral Branches of his Revenue for unneceſſary Penſions and ſecret Services, to the Value of 231602 l. within two Years; and that he hath wholly diverted out of the known Method and Government of the Exchequer one whole Branch of his Majeſty's Revenue to private Uſes, without any Accompt to be made of it to his Majeſty in his Exchequer; contrary to the expreſs Act of Parliament, which granted the ſame; and he hath removed two of his Majeſty's Commiſſioners of that Part of the Revenue, for refuſing to conſent to ſuch his unwarrantable Actings therein, and to advance Money upon that Branch of the Revenue for private Uſes.

VI.

That He hath by indirect Means procured from his Majeſty to himſelf divers conſiderable Gifts and Grants of Inheritance, of the ancient Revenue of the Crown, even contrary to Acts of Parliament.

For which Matters and Things the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of the Commons in Parliament, do, in the Name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of England, Impeach the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby, Lord High-Treaſurer of England, of High Treaſon, and other High Crimes, Miſdemeanours and Offences, in the ſaid Articles contain'd: And the ſaid Commons by Proteſtation, ſaving to themſelves the Liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter, any other Accuſation or Impeachment againſt the ſaid Earl, and alſo of replying to the Anſwers which the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby ſhall make to the Premiſes, or any of them, or any Impeachment or Accuſation that ſhall be by them exhibited, as the Cauſe (according to Courſe and Proceedings of Parliament) ſhall require; Do pray, That the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby, may be put to anſwer all and every the Premiſes, that ſuch Proceedings, Trials, Examinations and Judgments may be upon them, and every one of them had and uſed, as ſhall be agreeable to Law and Juſtice, and that he may be ſequeſtred from Parliament, and forthwith committed to ſafe Cuſtody.

Jovis 20 die Martii, 1678.

Reſolved, Nemine contradicente,
That a Meſſage be ſent to the Lords, to put them in mind of the Impeachment of High Treaſon, exhibited againſt Thomas Earl of Danby, in the Name of the Commons of England, and to deſire that he may be forthwith committed to ſafe Cuſtody.

Reſolved, &c.
That it be referred to the Committee of Secreſie to draw up further Articles againſt Thomas Earl of Danby.

Sabbati 22 die Martii, 1678.

Reſolved, Nemine contradicente.
That a Meſſage be immediately ſent to the Lords, to remind their Lordſhips of the laſt Meſſage ſent from this Houſe relating to Thomas Earl of Danby; And to demand, That Thomas Earl of Danby may be forthwith ſequeſtred from Parliament, and committed to ſafe Cuſtody.

Martis 25 die Martii, 1679.

A Meſſage from the Lords by Baron Littleton, and Baron Thurland.

Mr. Speaker, We are commanded by the Lords to acquaint this Houſe, That they ſent to apprehend Thomas Earl of Danby, both to his Houſe here in Town, and to his Houſe at Wimbolton; and that the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod had returned their Lordſhips Anſwer, that he could not be found.

Veneris 4 die Aprilis, 1679.

Reſolved,
That an humble Addreſs be made to his Majeſty, to deſire his Majeſty to iſſue out his Royal Proclamation for the apprehending Thomas Earl of Danby; with the uſual Penalties upon ſuch as ſhall conceal him: And that his Majeſty will be further pleaſed to give Order to the Officers of his Majeſty's Houſhold, That they take care that the ſaid Earl of Danby be not permitted to reſide within either of his Majeſty's Palaces of Whitehall, Somerſet-houſe, and St. James. And it is referred to Mr. Powel, &c. to prepare and draw up the ſame, and preſent it to the Houſe to Morrow Morning.

The

The Plea of the Earl of Danby, late Lord High Treaſurer of England, to the Articles of Impeachment, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanours, and Offences, exhibited againſt him by the Name of Thomas Earl of Danby, Lord High Treaſurer of England.

THE ſaid Earl for Plea, ſaith, and humbly offereth to your Lordſhips, as to all and every the Treaſons, Crimes, Miſdemeanours and Offences, contained or mentioned in the ſaid Articles, That after the ſaid Articles exhibited, namely, the Firſt of March, now laſt paſt, the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty, by his moſt Gracious Letters-Patents of Pardon, under his Great Seal of England, bearing Date at Weſtminſter, the ſaid Firſt Day of March, in the One and Thirtieth Year of his Majeſty's Reign; and here, into this moſt High and Honourable Court, produced under the ſaid Great-Seal.

Of His ſpecial Grace, certain Knowledge, and meer Motion, hath Pardoned, Remiſed and Releaſed to him, the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby, all, and all manner of Treaſons, Miſpriſions of Treaſons, Inſurrections, Rebellions, Felonies, Exactions, Oppreſſions, Publications of Words, Miſpriſions, Confederacies, Concealments, Negligencies, Omiſſions, Offences, Crimes, Contempts, Miſdemeanors and Treſpaſſes whatſoever, by himſelf alone, or with any other Perſon or Perſons, or by any other, by the Command, Advice, Aſſent, Conſent, or Procurement of him the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby, adviſed, committed, attempted, made, perpetrated, concealed, committed, or omitted, before the 27th Day of February then and now laſt paſt, being alſo after the Time of the ſaid Articles exhibited, altho' the ſaid Premiſes, or any of them did, or ſhould touch or concern the Perſon of his ſaid Majeſty, or any of his Publick Negotiations whatſoever; and alſo his Majeſty's Affairs with Foreign Embaſſadors ſent to his ſaid Majeſty, or by not rightly proſecuting his Majeſty's Inſtructions and Commands to his Embaſſadors, reſiding on his Majeſty's Behalf in Foreign Parts.

And as to all and ſingular Acceſſaries to the ſaid Premiſes, and every of them, altho' he the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby were, or were not of the ſaid Premiſes, or any of them, Indicted, Impeached, Appealed, Accuſed, Convicted, Adjudged, Out-law'd, Condemned, or Attainted; and all and ſingular Indictments, Impeachments, Inquiſitions, Informations, Exigents, Judgments, Attainders, Out-lawries, Convictions, Pains of Death, Corporal Puniſhments, Impriſonments, Forfeitures, Puniſhments, and all other Pains and Penalties whatſoever, for the ſame, or any of them; and all, and all manner of Suits, Complaints, Impeachments and Demands whatſoever, which his ſaid Majeſty, by reaſon of the Premiſes, or any of them then had, or for the Future ſhould have, or his Heirs, or Succeſſors, any ways could have afterwards againſt him the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby: And alſo Suit of his Majeſty's Peace, and whatſoever to his Majeſty, his Heirs, or Succeſſors, againſt him the ſaid Earl of Danby, did, or could belong, by Reaſon or Occaſion of the Premiſes, or any of them. And his Majeſty hath thereby given and granted his firm Peace to the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby. And further, his Majeſty willed and granted, that the ſaid Letters-Patents, and the ſaid Pardon and Releaſe therein contained, as to all the things therein pardoned and releaſed, ſhould be good and effectual in the Law, altho' the Treaſons, Miſpriſions of Treaſon, Inſurrections, Rebellions, Felonies, Exactions, Oppreſſions, Publications of Words, Miſpriſions of Confederacies, Concealments, Negligences, Omiſſions, Offences, Crimes, Contempts, Miſdemeanours and Treſpaſſes, were not certainly ſpecified. And notwithſtanding the Statute in the Parliament of the Lord Richard the Second, late King of England, in the 13th Year of his Reign, made and provided. And notwithſtanding the Statute in the Parliament of the Lord Edward the Third, in the Fourteenth Year of his Reign, made and provided, or any other Statute, Act, or Ordinance to the contrary thereof made and provided. And moreover, his ſaid now Majeſty, by his ſaid Letters-Patents of his further Grace, did firmly command all and ſingular Judges, Juſtices, Officers, and others whomſoever, That the ſaid free and general Pardon of his ſaid Majeſty, and the general Words, Clauſes and Sentences aboveſaid, ſhould be conſtrued, expounded, and adjudged in all his ſaid Majeſty's Courts, and elſewhere, in the moſt beneficial ample and benign Senſe.

And for the better and more firm Diſcharge of the ſaid Earl, of, and from the Crimes and Offences aforeſaid, according to the true Intents of his Majeſty, and in ſuch beneficial Manner and Form to all Intents and Purpoſes whatſoever, as if the ſaid Treaſons, Crimes, Offences, Concealments, Negligences, Omiſſions, Contempts and Treſpaſſes aforeſaid, and other the ſaid Premiſes, by apt, expreſs and ſpecial Words had been remitted, releaſed and pardoned. And that the ſaid Letters-Patents of Pardon, and the Releaſe and Pardon therein contained, ſhall be pleaded and allowed in all and every his Majeſty's Courts, and before all his Juſtices whatſoever, without any Writ of Allowance, any Matter, Cauſe, or Thing whatſoever in any Ways notwithſtanding, as by the ſaid Letters-Patents themſelves more at large appeareth, which ſaid Letters Patents follow in theſe Words, CAROLUS Secundus Dei Gratia Angliæ, Scotiæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Rex, Fidei Defenſor, &c. Omnibus ad quos præſentes literæ noſtræ pervenerint, Salutem. Sciatis, quod Nos pro diverſis bonis Cauſis & Conſiderationibus nos ad hoc ſpecialiter movent. De Gratia noſtra ſpeciali, ac ex certa ſcientia & mero motu noſtris Pardonavimus & Relaxavimus, &c.

And the ſaid Earl doth averr, That he the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby, in the ſaid Articles named, named, is the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby in the ſaid Letters-Patents of Pardon here produc'd, likewiſe named. Which Pardon the ſaid Earl doth rely upon, and pleaded the ſame in Bar of the ſaid Impeachment, and in Diſcharge of all the Treaſons, Crimes, Miſdemeanours and Offences contain'd, or mention'd in the ſaid Articles of Impeachment, and every of them; and this the ſaid Earl is ready to averr.

Whereupon he humbly prays the Judgments of your Lordſhips, and that his Majeſty's moſt Gracious Pardon aforeſaid may be allowed: And that he the ſaid Earl, by virtue hereof, may be (from all the ſaid Articles of Impeachment, and all and every of the Treaſons and Crimes therein alledg'd againſt him) acquitted and diſcharged.

A Copy of the Pardon of THOMAS Earl of DANBY.

CHARLES

CHARLES the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all to whom theſe our Letters-Patents ſhall come, ſendeth Greeting. Know ye, that we for divers good Cauſes and Conſiderations, Us hereunto eſpecially moving, have out of our ſpecial Favour, certain Knowledge and meer Motion of our own, pardoned, remitted and releaſed, and by theſe Preſents for Us, our Heirs and Succeſſors, do pardon, remit and releaſe to our Well-beloved and Right Truſty Couſin and Counſellor, Thomas Earl of Danby, all, and all manner of Treaſons, as well High Treaſon, as Miſpriſions of Treaſon, Inſurrections, Revealing of Councils, Miſpriſions, Confederations, Concealments, Neglects, Omiſſions, Offences, Crimes, Contempts, Miſdeeds and Tranſgreſſions ſions whatſoever, by himſelf alone, or with any other Perſon, or Perſons, or by any other, or others, by the Command, Advice, Aſſent, Conſent, or Procurement of the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby, adviſed, commanded, attempted, done, performed, concealed, committed, or omitted, before the 27th Day of February, now laſt paſt. Although the Premiſes, or any of them touch, or may touch Our Perſon, or our publick Negociations whatſoever, or our Tranſactions with Foreign Embaſſadors unto Us ſent, or for not right following our Inſtructions and Mandates to our own Embaſſadors reſident on Our Behalf in Foreign Parts beyond the Seas; And alſo all and ſingular Acceſſaries to the Premiſes, or any of them altho' the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby be indicted, impeached, appealed, arreſted, convict, adjudged, or as Embaſſador condemned, or be, or be not attainted of the Premiſes, or any of them; and all and every Indictments, Impeachments, Inquiſitions, Informations, Judgments to be required, Attainders, Outlawries, Convictions, Penalties of Death, Corporal Puniſhments, Impriſonments, Forfeitures, Sufferings, together with all other Pains and Penalties whatſoever, for the ſame, or any of them, and all, and all manner of Suits, Complaints, Impeachments and Demands whatſoever, which We againſt the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby, by reaſon of the Premiſes, or any of them, have had, now have, or hereafter may have, or which our Heirs or Succeſſors in any manner may have hereafter, together with any Suit for Breach of our Peace, which to Us, our Heirs, or Succeſſors, againſt the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby doth, or may belong, by Reaſon or Occaſion of the Premiſes, of ſome, or any of them; We do for ever Indemnifie him. Moreover We give and grant by theſe Preſents, and it is our further Will and Pleaſure, that theſe our Letters, and this our Pardon, Remiſſion and Releaſe therein contained, as to all and ſingular the things above pardoned, remitted and releaſed, be and ſhall be good and effectual in Law, altho' the Treaſons, High Treaſons, Miſpriſions of Treaſons, Inſurrections, Rebellions, Felonies, Extortions, Oppreſſions, Betraying of Councils, Confederacies, Concealments, Negligencies, Omiſſions, Offences, Crimes, Contempts, Miſdemeanours and Tranſgreſſions aforeſaid, be not fully ſpecified. And notwithſtanding the Statute of Richard the Second, late of England King, in the 13th Year of his Reign made and provided. And notwithſtanding the Statute by the Parliament of Edward the Third, late King of England, in the 14th Year of his Reign made and provided, or any other Statute, Act, or Ordinance to the contrary heretofore publiſh'd and provided: And moreover of our abundant Grace, We do ſtrictly command all Judges, Juſtices, or others whoſoever, that this preſent Letter, with our General Pardon, and General Words, Clauſes, and Sentences aboveſaid, ſhall be conſtrued, expounded and adjudged in all our Courts, and elſewhere, in the moſt beneficial, moſt ample, and moſt favourable Senſe, and for the greateſt and firmeſt Diſcharge of the aforeſaid Thomas Earl of Danby, of, and from the Crimes and Offences aforeſaid, according to our true Intention, and in ſo beneficial a Manner and Form, and to all Intents and Purpoſes, ſo as if the ſaid Treaſons, High Treaſons, Miſpriſions of Treaſon, Crimes, Offences, Omiſſions, Contempts, Concealments, Negligence and Tranſgreſſion aforeſaid, and other the Premiſes, had been by apt, expreſs and ſpecial Words, pardon'd, remitted and releas'd. And that theſe Letters-Patents, Remiſſion, Releaſe and Pardon, with all things therein contain'd, in whatſoever Courts, and before whatſoever Our Juſtices, ſhall be pleaded and allowed, without any Writ of Allowance, any Thing, Cauſe, or Matter whatſoever in any wiſe notwithſtanding. In Witneſs whereof We have cauſed theſe Our Letters-Patents to be made. Witneſs My ſelf at Weſtminſter, the Firſt Day of March, in the 31*ſt* Year of Our Reign.

The Reaſons and Narrative of Proceedings betwixt the two Houſes; which were deliver'd by the Commons to the Lords, at the Conference, on Monday the 26*th of* May, 1679.

THE Commons have always deſir'd, that a good Correſpondence may be preſerv'd between the two Houſes.

There is now depending between your Lordſhips and the Commons a Matter of the greateſt Weight: In the Tranſactions of which, your Lordſhips ſeem to apprehend ſome Difficulty in the Matters propoſed by the Commons.

To clear this, the Commons have deſir'd this Conference; and do readily acknowledge, That any Change in Judicature in Parliament, made without Conſent in full Parliament, to be of pernicious Conſequence, both to his Majeſty and his Subjects; and conceive themſelves oblig'd to tranſmit to their Poſterity, all the Rights which of this kind they have received from their Anceſtors, by putting your Lordſhips in mind of the Progreſs that has already been between the two Houſes, in Relation to Propoſitions made by the Commons, and the Reaſonableneſs of the Propoſitions themſelves; they doubt not to make it appear, that their Aim has been no other, than to avoid ſuch Conſequences, and preſerve that Right; and that there is no delay of Juſtice on their Part. And to that End, do offer to your Lordſhips the enſuing Reaſons and Narrative: That the Commons in bringing the Earl of Danby to Juſtice, and in Diſcovery of that execrable and traiterous Conſpiracy, have labour'd under many great Difficulties, is not unknown to your Lordſhips.

Nor is it leſs known to your Lordſhips, that upon the Impeachment of the Houſe of Commons againſt the Earl of Danby for High Treaſon, and other high Crimes, Miſdemeanours and Offences, even the common Juſtice of Sequeſtring him from Parliament and forthwith committing him to ſafe Cuſtody, was then requir'd by the Commons, and denied by the Houſe of Peers, though he then ſat in their Houſe; of which your Lordſhips have been ſo ſenſible, that at a free Conference the 10th of April laſt, your Lordſhips declared, That it was the Right of the Commons, and well warranted by Precedents of former Ages, That upon an Impeachment of the Commons, a Peer ſo impeach'd ought of right to be order'd to withdraw, and then to be committed. And had not that Juſtice been denied to the Commons, a great Part of this Seſſion of Parliament, which hath been ſpent in framing and adjuſting a Bill, for cauſing the Earl of Danby to appear, and to anſwer that Juſtice from which he was fled, had been ſaved, and had been employed for the Preſervation of his Majeſty's Perſon, and the Security of the Nation; neither had he had the Opportunity of procuring for himſelf that illegal Pardon, which bears Date the Firſt of March laſt paſt, and which he hath now pleaded in Bar of his Impeachment: Nor of waſting ſo great a Proportion of the Treaſure of the Kingdom, as he hath done ſince the Commons exhibited their Articles of Impeachment againſt him.

After which Time thus loſt, by reaſon of the Denial of that Juſtice, which of Right belong'd to the Commons upon their Impeachment, the ſaid Bill being ready for the Royal Aſſent, the ſaid Earl then rendred himſelf; and by your Lordſhips Order of the Sixteenth of April laſt, was committed to the Tower. After which he pleads the ſaid Pardon; and being preſs'd, did at length declare, He would rely upon, and abide by that Plea; which Pardon pleaded, being illegal and void, and ſo ought not to bar or preclude the Commons from having Juſtice upon the Impeachment; They did thereupon, with their Speaker, on the Fifth of May Inſtant, in the Name of themſelves and all the Commons of England, demand Judgment againſt the ſaid Earl, upon their Impeachment; not doubting, but that your Lordſhips did intend in all your Proceedings upon the Impeachment, to follow the uſual Courſe and Method of Parliament.

But the Commons were not a little ſurpriz'd by the Meſſage from your Lordſhips, deliver'd them on the Seventh of May; thereby acquainting them, That as well the Lords Spiritual as Temporal had order'd, That the Tenth of May Inſtant, ſhould be the Day for hearing the Earl of Danby, to make good his Plea of Pardon. And that your Lordſhips had addreſſed to his Majeſty for naming of a Lord High Steward in the Caſe of the Earl of Danby.

Upon Conſideration of this Meſſage, the Commons found, that the admitting of the Lords Spiritual to exerciſe Juriſdiction in theſe Caſes, was an Alteration of the Judicature in Parliament; and that if a Lord High Steward ſhould be neceſſary upon Trial on Impeachments of the Commons, the Power of Judicature in Parliament, upon Impeachments, might be defeated, by ſuſpending or denying a Commiſſion to conſtitute a Lord High Steward.

And that the ſaid Day of Trial appointed by your Lordſhips, was ſo near to the Time of your ſaid Meſſage, that theſe Matters, and the Method of proceeding upon the Trial, could not be adjuſted by Conference betwixt the two Houſes, before the Day ſo nominated. And conſequently, the Commons could not then proceed to Trial, unleſs the Zeal which they have for ſpeedy Judgment againſt the Earl of Danby ſhould induce them at this Juncture, both to admit the Enlargement of your Lordſhips Juriſdiction, and to ſit down under theſe or any Hardſhips, though with the Hazard of all the Commons Power of Impeaching for Time to come, rather than the Trial ſhould be deferr'd for ſome ſhort time, whilſt theſe Matters might be agreed on and ſettled.

For reconciling Differences in this great and weighty Matter, and for ſaving that Time, which would neceſſarily have been ſpent in Debates and Conferences betwixt the two Houſes, and for expediting the Trial, without giving up the Power of Impeachment, or rendring it ineffectual.

The Commons thought fit to propoſe to your Lordſhips, that a Committee of both Houſes might be appointed for this Purpoſe. At which Committee (when agreed to by your Lordſhips) it was then agreed, that the Propoſition as to the Time of the Trial, ſhould be the laſt thing conſider'd. And the Effect of this Agreement ſtands reported upon your Lordſhips Books.

After which, the Commons communicated to your Lordſhips, by your Committee, a Vote of theirs, (viz.) That the Committee of the Commons ſhould inſiſt upon their former Vote of their Houſe, That the Lords Spiritual ought not to have any Vote in any Proceedings againſt the Lords in the Tower, and that when that Matter would be ſettled, and the Method of Proceedings adjuſted, the Commons ſhould then be ready to proceed upon the Trial

Trial of the Pardon of the Earl of Danby, againſt whom they had before demanded Judgment; but the Commons as yet received nothing from your Lordſhips towards an Anſwer of that Vote, ſave that your Lordſhips have acquainted them, that the Biſhops have ask'd Leave of the Houſe of Peers, that they might withdraw themſelves from the Trial of the Five Lords, with Liberty of entring their uſual Proteſtation.

And tho' the Commons Committee have almoſt daily declared to your Lordſhips Committee, that that was a neceſſary Point of Right to be ſettled before the Trial, and offered to debate the ſame; your Committee always anſwered, That they had not any Power from your Lordſhips, either to confer upon, or to give any Anſwer concerning that Matter.

And yet your Lordſhips, without having given the Commons any ſatisfactory Anſwer to the ſaid Vote, or permitting any Conference or Debate thereupon, and contrary to the ſaid Agreement, did, on Thurſday the 22*d* of May, ſend a Meſſage to the Commons, declaring, That the Lords Spiritual as well as Temporal, had order'd, that the 27th of this Inſtant May be appointed for the Trial of the Five Lords.

So that the Commons cannot but apprehend that your Lordſhips have not only departed from what was agreed on, and in Effect laid aſide that Committee which was conſtituted for preſerving a good Underſtanding betwixt the two Houſes, and better Diſpatch of the weighty Affairs now depending in Parliament, but muſt alſo needs conclude from the Meſſage, and the Votes of your Lordſhips on the 14th of May, that the Lords Spiritual have a Right to ſtay and ſit in Court, till the Court proceeds to the Vote of Guilty or not Guilty. And from the Biſhops asking Leave (as appears by your Lordſhips Books two Days after your ſaid Vote) that they might withdraw themſelves from the Trial of the ſaid Lords, with Liberty of entring their uſual Proteſtation, and by their perſiſting ſtill to go on and give in their Votes Proceeding upon the Impeachment; that their Deſire of Leave to withdraw at the ſaid Trial, is only an evaſive Anſwer to the before mention'd Vote of the Commons, and chiefly intended as an Argument for a Right of Judicature in Proceedings upon Impeachments, and as a Reſerve to Judge upon the Earl of Danby's Plea of Pardon, and upon theſe and other like Impeachments, although no ſuch Power was ever claim'd by their Predeceſſors, but is utterly denied by the Commons. And the Commons are the rather induced to believe it ſo intended, becauſe the very asking Leave to withdraw, ſeems to imply a Right to be there, and that they cannot be abſent without it.

And becauſe by this Way they ſhould have it in their Power, whether or no for the Future, either in the Earl of Danby's Caſe, or any other, they will ever ask Leave to be abſent; and the Temporal Lords a like Power of denying Leave, if that ſhould once be admitted neceſſary.

The Commons therefore are obliged not to proceed to the Trial of the Lords on the 27th of this inſtant May, but to adhere to their aforeſaid Vote: And for their ſo doing, beſides what hath been now and formerly by them ſaid to your Lordſhips, do offer you theſe Reaſons following:

REASONS.

I.

BEcauſe your Lordſhips have received the Earl of Danby's Plea of Pardon with a very long and unuſual Proteſtation, wherein he hath aſperſed his Majeſty by falſe Suggeſtions, as if his Majeſty had commanded or countenanced the Crimes he ſtands charg'd with; and particularly ſuppreſſing and diſcouraging the Diſcovery of the Plot, and endeavouring to introduce an arbitrary and tyranical Way of Government; which remains as a Scandal upon Record againſt his Majeſty, tending to render his Perſon and his Government odious to his People; againſt which it ought to be the firſt and principal Care of both Houſes to vindicate his Majeſty, by doing Juſtice upon the ſaid Earl.

II.

The ſetting up a Pardon to be a Bar of an Impeachment, defeats the whole Uſe and Effect of Impeachments; and ſhould this Point be admitted, or ſtand doubted, it would totally diſcourage the exhibiting any for the future: Whereby the chief Inſtitution for the Preſervation of the Government (and conſequently the Government it ſelf) would be deſtroy'd. And therefore the Caſe of the ſaid Earl (which in Conſequence concerns all Impeachments whatſoever) ought to be determin'd before that of the ſaid Five Lords, which is but their particular Caſe.

And without reſorting to many Authorities of greater Antiquity, the Commons deſire your Lordſhips to take notice (with the ſame regard they do) of the Declaration which that Excellent Prince, King Charles the Firſt of bleſſed Memory, made in this Behalf, in his Anſwer to the Nineteen Propoſitions of both Houſes of Parliament: Wherein, ſtating the ſeveral Parts of this regulated Monarchy, he ſays; The King, the Houſe of Lords, and the Houſe of Commons, have each particular Privileges: And among thoſe which belong to the King, he reckons Power of Pardoning. After the enumerating of which, and other his Prerogatives, rogatives, his ſaid Majeſty adds thus: Again, That the Prince may not make uſe of this high and perpetual Power, to the Hurt of thoſe for whoſe Good he hath it, and make uſe of the Name of publick Neceſſity for the Gain of his private Favourites and Followers, to the Detriment of his People. The Houſe of Commons (an excellent Conſerver of Liberty, &c.) is ſolely intruſted with the firſt Propoſitions concerning the Levies of Monies, and the Impeaching of thoſe who for their own Ends, though countenanced by any ſurreptitiouſly-gotten Command of the King, have violated the Law, which He is bound (when He knows it) to protect, and to the Protection of which they were bound to adviſe Him, at leaſt not to ſerve him in the contrary. And the Lords being truſted with a Judicatory Power, are an excellent Skreen and Bank between the Prince and People, to aſſiſt each againſt any Incroachments of the other; and by juſt Judgments to preſerve that Law, which ought to be the Rule of every one of the Three, &c. Therefore the Power legally placed in both Houſes, is more than ſufficient to prevent and reſtrain the Power of Tyranny, &c.

III.

Until the Commons of England have Right done them againſt this Plea of Pardon, they may juſtly apprehend, that the whole Juſtice of the Kingdom, in the Caſe of the Five Lords, may be obſtructed and defeated by Pardons of like Nature.

IV.

An Impeachment is virtually the Voice of every particular Subject of this Kingdom, crying out againſt an Oppreſſion, by which every Member of that Body is equally wounded; And it will prove a Matter of ill Conſequence, That the Univerſality of the People ſhould have Occaſion miniſtred and continued to them, to be apprehenſive of utmoſt Danger from the Crown, from whence they of Right expect Protection.

V.

The Commons exhibited Articles of Impeachment againſt the ſaid Earl, before any againſt the Five other Lords, and demanded Judgment upon thoſe Articles: Whereupon, your Lordſhips have appointed the Trial of the ſaid Earl to be before that of the other Five Lords; Now your Lordſhips having ſince inverted that Order, gives a great Cauſe of Doubt to the Houſe of Commons, and raiſes a Jealouſie in the Hearts of all the Commons of England, that, if they ſhould proceed to the Trial of the ſaid Five Lords in the firſt place, not only Juſtice will be obſtructed in the Caſe of thoſe Lords, but that they ſhould never have Right done them in the Matter of this Plea of Pardon, which is of ſo fatal Conſequence to the whole Kingdom. and a new Device to fruſtrate publick Juſtice in Parliament.

Which Reaſons and Matters being duly weighed by your Lordſhips, the Commons doubt not but your Lordſhips will receive Satisfaction concerning their Propoſitions and Proceedings; and will agree, That the Commons ought not, nor can, without deſerting their Truſt, depart from their former Vote communicated to your Lordſhips; That the Lords Spiritual ought not to have any Vote in any Proceedings againſt the Lords in the Tower; and when that Matter ſhall be ſettled, and the Methods of Proceedings adjuſted, the Commons ſhall then be ready to proceed upon the Trial of the Earl of Danby.

The Narrative and Reaſons delivered at the Conference Yeſterday with the Houſe of Commons were again read, and after a long Debate, the Vote of this Houſe, dated the 13th of May Inſtant, and the Explanation there-upon, dated the 14th Inſtant, were read, and the Queſtion was put, Whether to inſiſt upon theſe Votes concerning the Lords Spiritual, and it was reſolv'd in the Affirmative.

The Honourable Mr. Powel's Speech in the Houſe of Commons, upon the Earl of Danby's Impeachment, Pardon and Plea.

Mr. Speaker.

I Should have been pleaſed to have heard (ſomewhat omitted) needful to have been ſpoken unto, from ſome other Member of this Houſe, rather than my ſelf; it is concerning the Earl of Danby, who ſtands Impeached by the Commons of England of High-Treaſon.

The Perſon, to whom we owe the Dangers and Fears of the French King againſt us.

The Perſon, to whom we owe the Threats and ſevere Anſwers to thoſe humble Addreſſes we made the laſt Seſſions of Parliament.

The Perſon, to whom we owe the Ruins of this Nation, and Exhauſting the King's Revenue.

The Perſon, to whom we owe the Expence of 200000 l. and upwards, within a Year, unaccounted for.

The Perſon, to whom we owe the many Prorogations that happen'd in the laſt Parliament, when many profitable Bills were ready for paſſing.

The Perſon, to whom we owe the Raiſing of a Standing Army, to be kept up by the Receipt of ſix Millions of Livres yearly, for three Years together, to enſlave us and our Religion.

The Perſon, to whom we owe the late Bone that was thrown in the Sitting of the laſt Parliament, to hinder the good Iſſue that might have come by their Proceedings; who is now laying down his Staff, and making up his Accompts in the Treaſury as he pleaſeth, to enrich himſelf out of the Spoils of the People, and ſo depart.

My humble Motion is, That a Meſſage be ſent immediately to the Lords from the Commons of England, to deſire their Lordſhips, That Thomas Earl of Danby be immediately committed to ſafe Cuſtody, he being impeach'd by the Commons of England of High-Treaſon.

The Earl of Danby's Speech in the Houſe of Peers, upon an Impeachment of High-Treaſon, &c. brought up againſt His Lordſhip by the Houſe of Commons, Dec. 23. 1678.

My Lords,

I Hope you will not enter upon any other Buſineſs, before you have given that Liberty to me, which is the Privilege of every Peer, to be heard upon any Accuſation that is brought againſt him, tho' of far leſs Moment than what hath been newly read againſt my ſelf.

I confeſs I ſhould have heard this Charge with Horror, if the Matter of it had been true; but I thank God, I know my Innocency to be ſo great, that it protects me from all ſorts of Fear, but that of lying under ſo black a Character, as may be believed by thoſe that cannot hear my Defence; tho' I have the Confidence to think that it is not truly believed in the Hearts of the greateſt part of thoſe that have been informed againſt me.

I muſt needs confeſs, that I thought my ſelf the laſt Man in this Kingdom that ſhould ever have been in danger of being accuſed for Treaſon, becauſe I know no Man that abhors it more, and that would purſue it more vigorouſly than my ſelf, againſt any that ſhould be guilty of it. Nay, to ſuch a degree is my Deteſtation of that Crime, that were I ſure the deareſt Child I have were guilty of it, I would willingly be his Executioner.

My Lords, I know this is not the time for me to enter regularly upon my Defence, becauſe I know your Lordſhips will firſt order me a Copy of my Charge, and appoint me a Time for my Vindication; when I doubt not but to do it to the full Satisfaction of your Lordſhips and all the World. In the mean time I will only beg leave to obſerve to your Lordſhips, That thoſe Articles in this Charge which can ſeem to have any thing of Treaſon in them, have their Anſwer ſo obvious, that there is very little in them which may not be anſwered by many others as well as my ſelf, and ſome of them by every Man in the Kingdom.

The Firſt, which is the aſſuming Regal Power, I confeſs I do not underſtand; having never in my Life done any thing of great Moment, either at Home, or relating to Foreign Matters, for which I have not always had His Majeſty's Command. And altho' I am far from having been the moſt cautious Man in taking Care of my own Security, (which perhaps my great Innocence hath been the Cauſe of) yet I have not been ſo wanting of common Prudence, as in the moſt material Things not to have had His Majeſty's Orders and Directions under his own Hand, and particularly for the Letters now made uſe of againſt me.

The Second, I think, doth ſcarce need my giving any Anſwer to; it being obvious, that the Army was no more raiſed by me, than by every Lord in this Houſe: And who ever is in that Station which I hold, muſt certainly be a Fool, to deſire any thing which creates a want of Money, eſpecially ſo great an one, as the Charge of an Army muſt neceſſarly and immediately produce. And for one Part of the Article concerning the Pay-Maſter of the Army, it is in Fact otherwiſe; for Security from the Pay-maſter has been taken in the Sum of Four Hundred Thouſand Pounds.

The Third is of the ſame Nature with the firſt, and comes from the ſame Foundation, which is, what a Gentleman hath thought fit to produce to the Houſe of Commons. I will not now cenſure his Action, I think it will do enough for it ſelf; I will only ſay, That altho' I take it for one of the greateſt Misfortunes which can befal a Man, to lie under ſuch a Charge of the Houſe of Commons, yet I would much ſooner chooſe to be under that Unhappineſs, than under his Circumſtances.

The Fourth Article is not only falſe in every part of it, but it is not poſſible to believe it true, without my being the greateſt Fool on Earth, as well as the blackeſt Villain. For were I capable of ſuch a Wickedneſs, yet the more wicked any Man is, the more he is carried to his own Intereſt; and is it poſſible any thing under Heaven can agree leſs with my Intereſt, than the Deſtruction of this King? Can I poſſibly hope to be better than I am? And is it not apparent, that there is not one Man living, whoſe Happineſs depends ſo much as mine upon the Preſervation of his Perſon?

My Lords, I know there is not a Man in the World, that can in his Heart think me guilty of that part of the Article, if I ſhould ſay nothing to it. But beſides, I was ſo far from concealing this helliſh Plot, that it is notoriouſly known, His Majeſty ſent me the firſt Notice of it, together with forty three Heads of the Information, before I knew a Syllable of it from any Body elſe: And it hath been own'd at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons by him (from whom only I had the Intelligence) that he had all the Encouragement and Diſpatch from me that I could give him. Beſides, when it was diſcloſed to the Council-board, he told ſome of the Clerks of the Council, (as he had done me divers times before) that it would have been much better, and more would have been diſcover'd, if it had been longer kept private. Beſides this, I had the Fortune to be particularly inſtrumental in ſeizing Mr. Coleman's Papers, without which Care there had not one of them appear'd, and conſequently, the beſt and moſt material Evidence which is yet of the Plot, had been wholly wanting. And certainly this is the firſt time that any Man was accuſed to be the Concealer of that Plot, whereof he hath been a principal Means of procuring the Diſcovery.

For that Part of the Article that ſays, I am Popiſhly affected, I thank God, that the contrary is ſo known to all the World, that even ſome of thoſe that voted againſt me, did own their Knowledge of the Falſity of that Allegation; and I hope I have through my whole Life given ſo good Teſtimony of my Religion, both in my own Family and by my Services to the Church, (when-ever it hath lain in my power) that I ſhall not need much Vindication in that Particular: And I hope your Lordſhips will forgive me my Weakneſs, in telling you, that I have a younger Son in the Houſe of Commons, whom I ſhall love the better as long as I live, for moving to have that Part of the Article to ſtand againſt me, that by that Pattern it might appear, with what ſort of Zeal the whole hath been caried to my Prejudice.

The Fifth Article will, upon Examination, appear to be as ill grounded as any of the reſt; and I am ſorry I am able to give one Reaſon, which is, That I have known no Treaſure in my time to waſte, having enter'd upon an empty Treaſury, and never ſeen one Farthing given to His Majeſty (in almoſt ſix Years) that hath not been appropriated to particular Uſes, and ſtrictly ſo applied by me, as the Acts have directed. And there hath not been one of thoſe Aids which, inſtead of giving the King Money, hath not coſt him more out of his own Purſe, to the ſame Uſes, as doth appear by the larger Dimenſions of the new Ships, and ſo in other Things: Inſomuch that I take upon me the Vanity to ſay, That by the Payments I have made to the Navy and Seamen, beyond former Times; the Paying off the greateſt part of the Debt which was ſtop'd in the Exchequer before my Time; by my own Punctuality in the Courſe of Payments, and by other Things, which I am able to ſhew, I doubt not but to appear Meritorious, inſtead of being Criminal, upon that Article.

As to the Sixth Article, which mentions my great Gettings, I cannot deny, but that I ſerve a Maſter, whoſe Goodneſs and Bounty hath been a great deal more to me than I have deſerved, and to whom I can never pay Gratitude enough by all the Services of my Life. But when the Particulars of thoſe Gettings ſhall appear, it will be found very contrary to what is ſuggeſted abroad; and that in near ſix Years time in this Great Place, I have not got half that, which many others have got in leſſer Places in half that time. And from the Examination of this, which I deſire may be ſeen, there will ariſe Matter to accuſe my Prudence, in not having done for my Family what juſtly I might, but nothing to arraign either my Honour, my Conſcience, or my faithful Service to the Crown.

My Lords, If my Obedience to the King ſhall not be my Crime, I think nothing elſe will ſtick upon me from theſe Articles: For my own Heart flatters me to believe, that I have done nothing but as a true Proteſtant, and a faithful Servant both to my King and Country. Nay, I am as confident, as that now I ſpeak, that had I either been a Papiſt, or Friend to the French, I had not been now accuſed. For I have reaſon to believe, that the principal Informer of the Houſe of Commons hath been aſſiſted by French Advice to this Accuſation; and if the * Gentleman were as juſt to produce all he knows for me, as he hath been malicious to ſhew what may be liable to miſconſtruction againſt me, or rather againſt the King, (as indeed it is) no Man could vindicate me more than himſelf. Under whoſe Hand I have it to ſhew, how great an Enemy to France I am thought, how much I might have had to have been otherwiſe, and what he himſelf might have had for getting me to take it. But I do no not wonder this Gentleman will do me no Right, when he does not think fit to do it to His Majeſty (upon whom chiefly this Matter muſt reflect.) Although he knows, as will appear under his Hand, that the greateſt Invitations to His Majeſty, for having Money from France, have been made by himſelf; that if His Majeſty would have been tempted for Money, he might have ſold Towns for as much as if they had been his own, and the Money have been convey'd as privately as he pleaſed: That His Majeſty might have made Matches with France, if he would have conſented to give them Towns; and yet that the King hath always ſcorn'd to yield the meaneſt Village that was not agreed to by the Spaniard and Hollander. That Gentleman hath often pretended how much his own Intereſt in France was diminiſh'd, only by being thought my Friend. And beſides divers other Inſtances, I have under his Hand, to ſhew the Malice of the French Court againſt me, I ſent two of his Letters to the Houſe of Commons, which ſhew how Monſieur Ruvigny was ſent hither on purpoſe to ruin me; which I am well aſſured at this time they would rather ſee, than of any one Man in England. Beſides what that Gentleman could ſay of this kind (if he pleas'd) I hope His Majeſty will give me leave (in my Defence) to ſay in his Preſence, and in the hearing of divers Lords, with whom I have the Honour to ſit in the Committee of Foreign Affairs, that, which were it not true, His Majeſty muſt think the impudenteſt and worſt of Men to affirm before him, That ever ſince I had the Honour to ſerve His Majeſty to this Day, I have deliver'd it as my conſtant Opinion, That France was the worſt Intereſt His Majeſty could embrace, and that they were the Nation in the World from whom I did believe he ought to apprehend the greateſt Danger; and who have both His Perſon and Government under the laſt Degree of Contempt: For which Reaſon alone (were there no other) I would never adviſe His Majeſty to truſt to their Friendſhip.

* Mr. Mountague.

My Lords, 'Tis my greateſt Happineſs, that your Lordſhips are my Judges; whoſe Wiſdom and Juſtice are ſo great, that you will both diſcern the Truth of the Evidence when it ſhall come before you, and in the mean time diſtinguiſh truly what the Crimes are (if they could be proved) and not what they are call'd. For this Reaſon this Houſe hath wiſely provided to have the ſpecial Matter before them, to the end, they may be ſatisfied whether the Charge have its right Denomination; for otherwiſe it were to no purpurpoſe to deſire ſpecial Matter, unleſs it were to ſee whether the ſpecial Matter alledg'd be what it is call'd. As for Example, if a Man were accuſed of having traiterouſly paſs'd the River in a Pair of Oars, this is ſpecial Matter, and ſtiled Treaſon, by inſerting the Word Traiterouſly; yet your Lordſhips would not therefore proceed as taking it for Treaſon. So in this Caſe, I beg for all your Lordſhips ſakes, as well as my own, that you will pleaſe to uſe that Caution which will be neceſſary for all your Lordſhips Safety and Seats in this Houſe: For I beſeech your Lordſhips to conſider, whither ſuch a Precedent may go hereafter? What the Houſe of Commons may do in ſuch a Caſe, there is no Queſtion but His Majeſty may do the ſame by his Attorney; and what either of them may do againſt one Lord, they may do againſt more; (and we have ſeen it done in our Days againſt all the Biſhops at once.) Were it not very precariouſly then that your Lordſhips hold your Seats here, when by either of theſe Ways as many of your Lordſhips, as for a time it might be convenient to remove, ſhould be at the Mercy of having a thing call'd Treaſon, whether it be ſo or no.

Truly, my Lords, I have reaſon to believe, that in the Houſe of Commons the Matter of my Charge (if proved) was not thought to amount to Treaſon, either by Statute or Common Law; and I hope your Lordſhips have too ſad an Example in your Memory, ever to aſſiſt the making of Treaſon by Accumulation.

I ſhould therefore not only wrong my own Innocence, but the Right of the Peers, to ſubmit to anſwer Matters of Miſdemeanor, as a Criminal in Treaſon.

My Lords, I wonder not at the malicious Proſecution of thoſe who would have me taken for what they truly are. For I am well aſſur'd, that neither the French take me to be of their Intereſt, nor the Papiſts to be of their Religion: But I am troubled to fall under ſo ſevere a Cenſure of the Houſe of Commons, altho' I cannot blame them, but my Accuſers, who have ſo wrongfully inform'd them.

My Lords, I will conclude with this Comfort, That I do not in the leaſt apprehend the Matter of my Charge under the Security of your Lordſhips Juſtice; and will therefore trouble your Lordſhips no longer at this time, but only to pray your Directions whether I am to withdraw, which I ſhall readily obey.

The Earl of Danby's Arguments at the Court of King's-Bench, upon His Lordſhip's Motion for Bail, the 27th Day of May, Term. Paſch. 1682, &c.

IMmediately after His Lordſhip was in Court, the Return of the Habeas Corpus was read, and Mr. Saunders (of Council for His Lordſhip) did move the Court, That whereas in Eaſter-Term, 1681, the Court had diſmiſs'd His Lordſhip with a Declaration, that they would take into their Conſideration, till the Term following, what Anſwer they would make to what had then been ſaid to them by His Lordſhip and his Council; he therefore moved, That they might now accordingly know the Pleaſure of the Court, and that they would be pleaſed to grant Bail to the Earl of Danby.

But before the ſaid Mr. Saunders could well have pronounced the foregoing Words, the Lord Chief Juſtice Pemberton did reprimand the ſaid Mr. Saunders, for having offer'd to impoſe upon the Court what had never been ſaid by them; ſaying, That there was no ſuch thing as their having ſaid, at any time, that they would take the Earl of Danby's Caſe into farther conſideration; for that they had told my Lord of Danby the laſt time, That it was not in their Power to give him any Relief at all; and that he therefore wonder'd, and muſt extreamly blame Mr. Saunders, for moving the Court again in a Matter to which they had already given ſuch a poſitive Anſwer; and could not but admire, that he ſhould ſo miſinform his Client, as to give him any ſuch Advice, which could only be to the giving both him and the Court an unneceſſary Trouble.

To all which Mr. Saunders replied, That he humbly begg'd His Lordſhip's Pardon, if he had miſtaken him; for that truly he did underſtand, that His Lordſhip had declar'd that he would take time to conſider of my Lord of Danby's Caſe till the following Term; but that if it was a Miſtake, he muſt beg His Lordſhip's Pardon, and did believe the reſt of his Brethren took it ſo, as well as himſelf.

The Earl of Danby then ſpoke himſelf for about two Hours, and ſaid to the Lord Chief Juſtice, That he met with an Objection, which he did not expect; and that he muſt beg His Lordſhip's Pardon, not to let that paſs for a Miſtake which his Council had affirm'd, of the Court's having taken time to conſider of his Caſe, till the next Term after that of His Lordſhip's being laſt there; for that His Lordſhip did therein appeal both to the reſt of the Judges, which were upon the Bench with him, and to all other Perſons whatſoever, who were then in Court, whether His Lordſhip had not ſaid, that if he (meaning the Earl of Danby) pleaſed, they would take time to conſider of his Caſe till the next Term; and he did declare upon his Honour, that thoſe Words had been pronounced to him by my Lord Chief Juſtice himſelf, and that he did then accept it as a Favour from the Court, and did return his humble Thanks to them for it: Inſomuch, that His Lordſhip ſaid, That he confeſſed he was very much ſurprized to meet with ſuch an Introduction at the firſt entrance into a Matter which he conceived to be of ſo great Weight, as he doubted not but he ſhould make this Caſe of his appear to be.

But yet, that it did give him Reaſon to believe, that he came with ſome Prejudice before his Lordſhip, and that they were ſo much prepoſſeſſed in this Matter, that if he did not think every Man in England would find that he might be concern'd in what Reſolution ſhould be given in this Caſe, as well as himſelf, he ſhould ſcarcely have ventured upon it, though he had lain ſo long under ſo unreaſonable a Confinement, as he took himſelf to do; and therefore he muſt deſire their Lordſhip's Patience and Attention to what he had to offer in his own Behalf, and (as he believed) in the Behalf of the Liberty of the Subject in general.

His Lordſhip, directing himſelf to the Lord Chief Juſtice, ſaid, It was juſt now a Year ſince he was before his Lordſhip in this Court; and that he was aſſured, that his Lordſhip did then pleaſe to tell him, That they would take Time to the following Term to conſider of what they ſhould think fit to do in his Lordſhip's Caſe: But he ſaid, that Care was then taken the first Day of that following Term to prevent his coming there, by an Indictment which was brought against him (ready cut and dry'd, as he had been told) for his being privy to the Murther of Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey.

He said he did not wonder at it, because there was nothing so black, which had not been Invented to be said against him; but, he confessed, he did wonder to hear, that such an Evidence of an Irish Papist (who was upon Trial for his own Life, and upon an Hear-say only) should be believed against an English Protestant, by a Jury of English-Men, and some of them Gentlemen; but yet that Wonder had been much abated, when he heard that the same Foreman had been as favourable in the Case of a Notorious Murther, as he had been ready to find that Murther against him, which had not the least Probability in it, and which no Man could think of with more Detestation both of the Fact, and of any Man that could have an hand in it, than himself.

However, this prevented him from coming there again, till after Notice had been given to Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey's Brothers, to know if they had any thing further to say against him on that Matter, and that he could get himself Discharg'd from that Indictment; and as to the Wretch himself, Fitz Harris, (who had accused him) he did Two Days before his Death, send the Minister of the Tower to his Lordship, to beg of him, that before he died, his Lordship would forgive him his having sworn falsly against him; and he did confess, that he was put upon it to Save his own Life; and did say by whom he was prompted to it. And whether it proceeded from those Men, who might think their Villanies discovered, and so might fear they could no way be safe but by putting that Matter yet farther against him, or from what other Cause, his Lordship could not tell; but (if his Lordship was not misinformed) he did hear that Some Men were still endeavouring to get something more of the same Nature to be sworn against him, if they can contrive how to make their forg'd Testimonies to agree about it.

He said he thought that Time would have tired out the Malice of such Blood-Suckers before now, whom he had found so busy, for the first Year and Half after his Imprisonment, that he was not a Week without Endeavours used by strange People to get to speak with him, and such as he had Reason often to suspect to be Knights of the Post; amongst whom the Story of one Magrath, (another Irish-Man) he said, was notably remarkable, in his Endeavour (under Pretence of Kindness) to have made him their Tool, to prove, that Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey had killed himself: But he said, he had the good Fortune immediately to detect that Villany, as he hoped yet to live to do of some others; but that in the mean time he foresaw, that he was always to be a particular Object of the Malice of such Men, so long as he was left under this Confinement, from which he saw no Hopes to be relieved, but by that Court where the Law directs every Englishman to come for Justice, that is oppress'd in his Liberty.

He said, he hoped His Lordship would forgive him for having been a little tedious on that Subject of Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey, because his Reputation had been so much exposed in that Particular, and before that Court.

After his Discharge from that Indictment, he said, there seem'd to be a Probability of the Call of a Parliament in some short time; and whenever he could give himself the least Hopes of that, he resolved to trouble no other Place: But that now he had not the least Prospect of that kind; and that he had been a Prisoner above Three Years, and yet could safely swear, he was without the Knowledge to that Day, for what real Crimes he was Committed; only he knew that the Name of Treason had been laid to his Charge, without saying wherein the Treason consisted.

He said he came, therefore, now to that Court (as the only proper Place for all Persons to resort to for their Liberty) and he was sorry, that he was put to the great Disadvantage of speaking in his own Cause. But because he saw the last time he was there, that some Fault seemed to be found with his Council, for urging things which seemed to relate to Matters of Parliament (altho' upon a due Consideration of his Request, there is nothing in it which does touch their Jurisdiction) he had chosen rather to rely upon the Court's Pardoning his Defects, than put any further Hardships upon those Gentlemen, who had been his Council, to whom he had been more beholden, than they had been to him; for that they had undergone some unheard-of Rebukes already in another Place, for offering to be of Council with him, (though in Matters of Law) which he believed had never been heard of, but in his Case; and he hoped, that (when all his Circumstances shall have been well considered) he shall be the last Englishman that will ever have so many Hardships put upon him; as will appear to be thro' every Part of his Case.

In the first Place he said, that he had been both Accused and Committed, without any Oath or Affidavit made against him, for any Crime whatever: Which had been in the Case of no other Lord but himself, and he did believe of no other Man.

Secondly, That there was no particular Treason mention'd in the Articles against him, only the word TRAITEROUSLY had been applied to things which were not Treason, if they had been true (as was then declared by Sir William Jones, the King's Attorney) and he said, there were good Store of Witnesses to prove, that when it could not be maintained by Argument in the House of Commons, that any of the Crimes mentioned against him were Treason; It was answered by one of the long Robe there, (who would not have spared to have assigned the Treason, had there been any) that however they ought to give the Title of High Treason to the Articles, for that otherwise they would dwindle to nothing when they came into the House of Peers. Now in the Impeachments of the other Lords (not to meddle with the Truth or Falsity of their Accusers) they were charg'd with the highest Treasons in Name, and upon Oaths made against them.

Thirdly, When a short Day was set by the Lords for his being heard; and that he appeared that Day accordingly, his Council was then threatned if they did dare to plead Matter of Law for him: Which he said was never heard of before in any Man's Case whatsoever, nor in the worst of Times.

Fourthly, He said if all the Articles had been true against him, and had been Treason; he had his Majesty's Pardon (which he then shewed to the Court, and demanded the Benefit of it) saying, That that did Pardon both his Crimes (if he were Guilty of any) and his Imprisoment; and yet, that both that Pardon and He, had been Prisoners together for above three Years (of which he said he durst confidently affirm, that his was the first Precedent since the Conquest.)

Fifthly, He set forth, That he had not only His Majesty's jesty's Pardon, but that there had been his Majesty's Declaration of it in his Speeech to his Two Houses of Parliament, together with a Declaration of his Innocency, and a Declaration that he would give him his Pardon Ten times over, if that were defective either in Matter or Form. And in this also he said, that his Case was not only particular from any others, but that such Declarations of the King's Intentions to pardon, (altho' the formal Pardons have not been obtained) have heretofore been alone a Ground to procure Bail at least, when the Party has been the King's Prisoner, and at the King's Suit; which he supposed was not doubted in his Case.

Sixthly, He said that he had not only been thus Committed, and thus Detained for above forty Months, but he had been kept a Prisoner, without any Prosecution, for the greatest part of that time; which is another sufficient ground by the Law for Bail: But instead of a Restraint Ad Custodiam, he said he had undergone Punishments greater than the Crimes alledged against him could have deserved, if they had been true; both by the length of his Imprisonment, which was agreed to be a sufficient Ground for Bail, both by the King's Council and the Prisoner's, in the Arguments on the Grand Habeas Corpus, 3 Car. as also in Melvin's Case, 1 Car. and in Sir Thomas Darnell's and other Cases.

By the Inconvenience of his Accommodations in the Prison, for above two Years and an half of the time.

By Two most dangerous Sicknesses in the Prison. And

By the loss of divers of his Family since his being in Prison, who would some of them most certainly not have been in those Places where they have been lost, had he been at Liberty.

He said he was informed, That His Majesty had been again pleased to give his Directions to Mr. Attorney, to give his Consent a second Time to his Bail, and he did beg leave to ask Mr. Attorney if it were so? Whereupon Mr. Attorney did stand up, and say, that he had His Majesty's Directions to give His Majesty's Consent again to His Lordship's being Bailed.

His Lordship did thereupon say, That this also was Particular in his Case; and he did believe, there was scarce a Precedent in the World, of the King's Prisoner, and at the King's Suit, not being Bailed when there hath been the King's Consent to it; unless where the Prisoner hath not been able to find sufficient Security for his Appearance to abide his Trial. For that the two only justifiable Grounds for the continuance of Restraint by the Law are, either for keeping the Party from being able to do any harm by his being at Liberty, (of which the King is the best Judge) or for securing the Party to abide the Judgment of the Law, (in which the Court ought to have good Satisfaction) and so they might have sufficiently in his Case.

He said, That the Precedent would be no less strange and new against the King, than against himself, if they should not permit him to be Bail'd under such Circumstances: For he had heard, that the Law did admit of no Absurdity: Now he did desire to know, how any thing could in Reason be more absurd on behalf of the King, than if the King's Prisoner and at the King's Suit, should be kept in Prison by any of the King's Courts, against the King's Will?

Or how, said he, can any thing be more dangerous to the Subject, or be a plainer failure of Justice (whatever may be pretended to the contrary) than to say, That there can be any such Restraint of English Liberty, as cannot obtain so much as Bail, but by the leave of the House of Lords? When that House can neither meet but when the King pleases, nor can never sit longer than he pleases: So that to say a Man shall be a close Prisoner (I mean by that a Prisoner without Bail, for Bail it self is Imprisonment in the Eye of the Law) till he shall be discharged by the House of Lords; is to say, that a Man shall be a Prisoner during the King's Pleasure; which was the Great Grievance complained of, when the Petition of Right was granted, and that was thought to have fully and for ever Redressed that Grievance.

But if after so many Heats and Disputes which our Ancestors have had with the Crown about their Liberties, this Doctrine should now be admitted for Law; We would seem to endeavour, (as much as in us lies) to bring it to this Conclusion, and be our own Felo's de se; That the King shall have a way found out by our selves, and without his seeking, how he may Imprison any Man, or number of Men, when he pleases in a Parliamentary way; and by Dissolving that Parliament he may keep them as long as he pleases in a Prison without Remedy: But that he shall neither have Power to Relieve us himself by his own Authority, nor by his Courts of Justice. So as in short, by this Doctrine, the King should only have Power to hurt his Subjects as much and as long as he pleases, but should not be able to do them any Right if he would; and then we shall have Magna Charta and the Petition of Right revers'd, instead of receiving that Benefit by them, which the Kings of England have been so Gracious as to give us, and all the Learned Writers upon those happy Laws of Liberty have told us, we are secure under, at all Times, and against all Accidents whatever.

He then beg'd leave to observe to His Lordship what he found in my Lord Chief Justice Coke's Comments upon Magna Charta; who said, That the Words Nulli Vendemus, Nulli Negabimus, aut Differemus Justitiam vel Rectum, are spoken in the Person of the King, who (in Judgment of Law) is always present, and repeating the said Words in all his Courts of Justice.

And therefore (says he) every Subject in the Realm, may, at all times, have Remedy by the Course of the Law; and may have Justice done freely, fully, and speedily, without delay; for that Delay is a sort of Denial.

The said Lord Coke observes farther, That those Words of Magna Charta are fully expounded by latter Statutes, viz. 20 Eliz. 3, &c. which do direct, That there shall be no Delay nor Hindrance of speedy Justice to any Man, neither by any Seal, nor by any Order, nor any Writ whatsoever; neither from the King, nor from any other, nor by any other Cause.

Now, whatever may be said out of other Considerations, he said, No Man can deny, but that there is great Delay of Justice (to say no worse of it) to any Man who (through no Neglect of his own) can neither get Trial nor Bail in above three Years, altho' his Crimes were never so great. And he said, he durst be confident, that the Makers of Magna Charta did believe they had secured all Englishmen from ever being under the Possibility of such a Danger; and that he made no Question at all, but that by Law we are so.

He said, That the said L. Coke does say in his Comment upon the 15 W. 1. (where he speaks of what Things are Bailable, and what are not; and names Treason amongst the Things not Bailable) that is, (ſays he) ſuch Offences ſhall not be Replevied by the Sheriff; but all or any of theſe, he ſaith, may be Bailed in the King's-Bench.

(says

And he ſaid, he had alſo ſome of the preſent Judges Opinions to ſhew, in this Point, which he deſired to Read out of a Copy of the Lords Journal, (viz) 23d. Decemb. 1678. The Queſtion being put, Whether the Lord Treaſurer ſhould withdraw? 'Twas carried in the Negative. And on the 27th of the ſaid December, The Queſtion being put, Whether the Earl of Danby, Lord High Treaſurer, (who ſtands Impeached by the Houſe of Commons) ſhould be Committed? It was Reſolved in the Negative.

And it was the ſame Day propoſed to the Judges, Whether the Judges can Bail any Perſon, in Caſe of Miſpriſion of Treaſon, wherein the King's Life is concern'd?

To which Sir William Scroggs (Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench,) Sir Francis North (Lord Chief Juſtice of the Court of Common-Pleas,) Juſtice Windham, Juſtice Jones, and other of the Judges then preſent, gave ſeverally their Opinions; That the Court of King's-Bench may take Bail for High-Treaſon of any kind, if they ſee Cauſe.

He cited the Lord Coke alſo in his Comment on the 24 W. II. where he ſays, That it is a Rule in Law, Quod Curia Regis non debet Deficere Conquerentibus in Juſtitia Exhibenda. And the Reaſon of this is, that a Failure of Juſtice may be prevented; which, he frequently ſays, is Abhorred by the Law: So as it appears, That the Law abhors all Failure of Juſtice; and he ſaid, That if ſuch Failure do appear in his Caſe, or any Man's elſe; no Order can licenſe ſuch Failure; nor no Court can Juſtify the not giving Relief againſt it: And he ſaid, he ſhould either make ſuch Failure appear, or His Lordſhip (meaning the Lord Chief Juſtice) would be able to tell him where he might repair for Juſtice; which both Magna Charta and the Petition of Right are underſtood to have provided at all times for the Subjects Liberty: But if His Lordſhip could not inform him where he might appeal forthwith for his Liberty; in that Caſe, he ſaid, That for that Reaſon alone (were there no other) he ought of Right to be admitted to Bail by that Court; till he could be brought before ſuch a Judicature, as had Power to diſcharge him.

He obſerved alſo, That the Lord Coke (in a Chapter on the King's-Bench) did ſay, That that Court might Bail for any Offence whatſoever: And that in the ſaid Chapter it was particularly obſerved, That there had been ſuch Care taken by the Law to avoid Failure of Juſtice, (even in ſmall Matters, in compariſon of Liberty) that he gives there an Example concerning a Clerk or Officer of that Court: For he takes notice of what Things, and againſt whom that Court hath Power to hold Plea by Bill. And amongſt thoſe, he names againſt any Officer or Clerk of that Court; and gives the Reaſon: Becauſe if they ſhould be Sued in any other Court, they would have the Privilege of that Court, which might be the Cauſe of a Failure of Juſtice. And from this His Lordſhip ſaid it did appear, That the Law intended that there ſhould be no Failure of Juſtice by the Privilege of any Court, how great ſoever it was; for that (as was ſaid before) the Law did abhor all Failure of Juſtice. And he ſaid, if ſuch Care had been taken againſt a Failure, in ſuch ſmall Matters, and not in what concern our Liberties; all Engliſhmen ought juſtly to break out into the like Exclamations, as the ſame Lord Coke and many others did, in their Speeches in Parliament, and in their Pleadings, 3 & 5 Car. upon the Argument of the Grand Habeas Corpus at that time: Where the Lord Coke breaks forth into this Expreſſion; Shall I have an Eſtate of Inheritance for Life, or for Years, in my Land? And ſhall I be Tenant at Will for my Liberty? Shall I have Property in my Goods by the Laws; and not Liberty in my Perſon? And thereupon he tells us, That Perſpicuè vera non ſunt probanda; As taking for granted, That our Liberties were not to be doubted, where our Properties were ſo ſecured: And the King (ſays he) had diſtributed his Judicial Power to Courts, and to his Miniſters of Juſtice; Who are to ſee Right done.

And he ſaid, The Lord Coke gave the Reaſons of thoſe Laws which are againſt undue Impriſonments; and that one of thoſe is, For the Indefiniteneſs of Time; which, he ſays, may be Perpetual during Life: And that his Words are, That it is unreaſonable to think, that a Man has a Remedy for his Horſe or Cattle, (if detained) and none for his Body indefinitely Impriſoned: For that a Priſon without any prefixed Time is a kind of Hell.

And here his Lordſhip ſaid, That he hoped the Court would either allow him Bail, or tell him a prefixed Trme, wheu he ſhould be Tried or Diſcharged. He did then alſo Quote the Caſe of the Duke of Suffolk, 26 H. VI. and the Opinions of Preſcot and Forteſcue, (who were eminent Judges) who ſaid, That he ought not to be Committed, (tho' for Treaſon) without Eſpecial Cauſe of the Treaſon ſhewed; which had not been in his Caſe.

He further ſaid, That many other Principal Gentlemen of that Parliament had ſpoke moſt Senſibly on the ſame Subject of Liberty; and amongſt the reſt, Sir Robert Philips had ſaid, To have our Liberties (which are the Souls of our Lives) taken from us and to be Pent up in Goals without Remedy by Law; and this to be ſo adjudged, (for ſo that Court had then thought fit to deny Bail, for Reaſons which were at that time alſo beſt known to themſelves) he cries out, O Improvident Anceſtors! O Unwiſe Fore-Fathers! To be ſo curious in Providing for the Quiet Poſſeſſion of our Lands, and to neglect our Perſons and Bodies! And to let them lie in Priſons! And without Remedy, durante bene placito! If this be Law, what do we talk of our Liberties? This (ſays he) is Summa Totalis of all Miſeries.

He ſaid alſo, That Mr. Selden did in the ſame Parliament argue, at a Conference with the Lords, That in all Caſes where any Right or Liberty belongs to the Subject, by any Poſitive Law, written or unwritten, if there were not alſo a Remedy by Law, for enjoying or regaining of this Right of Liberty, when it is violated or taken from him, the Poſitive Law were moſt vain, and to no purpoſe; and it were to no purpoſe for any Man to have any Right in Land, Liberty, or other Inheritance, if there were not a known Remedy, by which, in ſome Court of ORDINARY JUSTICE he might recover it; and in this Caſe of Right of Liberty of Perſon, if there were not a Remedy in the Law for regaining it, when it is reſtrain'd, it were to no purpoſe to ſpeak of Laws.

Here he deſired leave, to ſhew His Lordſhip what Sir Nicholas Hide (when ſitting as Lord Chief Juſtice in that Court) did ſay on this Occaſion, viz. That the King's Pleaſure is, his Law ſhould take place and be executed; and for that do we ſit here: And whether the Commitment be by the King, or others, this Court is the Place where the King doth ſit in Perſon to do Right, if Injury be done; and if it appear that any Man hath Wrong done done to him by his Impriſonment, we have Power to deliver or diſcharge him. And he farther ſaid, That the ſame Lord Chief Juſtice Dodderidge, Jones, and Whitlocke, (anſwering the Priſoner's Council at that time) did ſay, the Attorney-General had told them, That the King had done it; and that they (the Judges) do ever truſt him in great Matters. And here he took occaſion to ſay, That he hoped that the King's Conſent to his Bail, and his Declaration of his Innocency, would be now as much truſted in this Court.

He cited alſo the Arguments of Mr. Calthorpe for Sir John Corbet, on the ſame Occaſion, who ſaid, That, admit the Commitment were lawful, yet when a Man hath continued in Priſon a reaſonable time, he ought to be brought to Anſwer, and not to be continued ſtill in Priſon: For that it appears by the Books of our Laws, that Liberty is a thing ſo favour'd by the Law, that the Law will not ſuffer the continuance of any Man in Priſon, longer than of neceſſity it muſt.

He cited alſo Mr. Hackwell; who ſaid, upon the ſame Occaſion, That the Law admits not the Power of detaining in Priſon at Pleaſure, when the Impriſonment is but pro Cuſtodia: For a Man, by long Impriſonment, might otherwiſe be puniſhed before his Offence. And he mention'd an Expreſſion of his, That long Impriſonment was, Vita pejor Morte.

He mentioned how the Commons, at the End of the Parliament 3 Car. did deſire, That the Judges might declare themſelves upon the Matter, why thoſe Gentlemen had not been Bailed, when (by the Judges Arguments) it was poſſible they might have been kept Priſoners all their days.

To which, he ſaid, Whitlocke anſwer'd, Firſt, Not ſo; but they did Remand them, that they might better adviſe of the Matter; and that the Gentlemen, if they had pleaſed, might have had a new Writ of Habeas Corpus, when they thought fit. And Secondly, That he had ſpent much Time in this Court; and that in ſuch great Caſes, he never knew any Man Bailed without the King firſt conſulted in it: And the ſame he ſaid, was then ſaid by the reſt of the Judges of that Court.

Hereupon he made Two Remarks: Firſt, That by this it did appear, that upon Conſideration, That Court had altered their Opinions in the Caſe of Bail, juſt contrary to what their firſt Opinions had been poſitive in: And, Secondly, That the conſulting of the King was ever neceſſary in ſuch Great Caſes. And he ſaid, he did believe, that there was not a Precedent, where the King had agreed to the Bail, that ever it had been denied.

He ſaid, That thoſe Men whom he had quoted, were Men of no Ordinary Underſtanding in the Laws: And as the Judges then did at laſt acknowledge their Senſe of them to be right, ſo he ſaid, He hoped our Laws were neither changed nor diminiſh'd, in what related to the SUBJECTS LIBERTIES; and he hoped that no Order of one Houſe, nor Ordinance of both Houſes, nor King alone, nor King and either Houſe alone, could alter them: And he reſted aſſured, that a King and Parliament would never alter them to the Prejudice of Liberty.

He proceeded, That if the Law were ſtill the ſame it was heretofore, it was plain that that Law did both give a Power to that Court to Bail for all Offences whatſoever (and for Treaſon particularly) and did require, that the Subject ſhould at all times find Remedy in it, when his Liberty was Reſtrained, BY ANY CAUSE WHATEVER.

The Chief Reaſons, he ſaid, why ſuch large Powers had been given to that Court, were principally for avoiding all Failure of Juſtice; and to the End, Firſt, That the King may both have a Means of giving Right to his Subjects at all times, according to his Oath at his Coronation, and according to the Intent of Magna Charta, and the Petition of Right. And Secondly, That there might be a conſtant Place for the Subject to reſort unto for Remedy at all times, whenſoever he was oppreſs'd in his Liberty: And he hoped we were not now to learn a new Law, That the King could neither keep his Oath, nor maintain Magna Charta, nor the Petition of Right, without the aſſiſtance of an Extraordinary Court, which he may both chuſe, whether he will call, or when he will call it, and how long it ſhall ſit; which (as he had ſaid) would put all under the King's abſolute Will.

He then ſaid, He took for granted, that there would be no Diſpute made in this Matter, but that there was an Order of the Lords which was ſuppoſed to ſtand in the way: But he ſaid, If his Lordſhip would give him Leave, he would firſt ſay ſomething to the Order it ſelf, and then he hoped to ſhow His Lordſhip, that it ſtood not at all in the way, as to his Requeſt of Bail; and that it ſhould neither be interfered with in the leaſt, nor the Juriſdiction of the Lords, nor their Proceedings meddled with in any kind by his being Bailed; but rather owned and ſubmitted to, by his being Bailed to the Parliament.

And firſt for the Order it ſelf, He deſired the Court to obſerve, that it was dated the 19th of March, 1678, and worded as followeth, viz.

Die Mercurii, 19no Martii, $167\frac{8}{9}$.

THE Houſe this Day taking into Conſideration the Report made from the Lords Commitee for Privileges, that in Purſuance of the Order of the 17th Inſtant to them directed, for conſidering whether Petitions of Appeal, which were preſented to this Houſe in the laſt Parliament, be ſtill in force to be proceeded on; and for conſidering of the State of Impeachments brought up from the Houſe of Commons the laſt Parliament; and all the Incidents relating thereunto; upon which the Lords Committees were of Opinion, That in all Caſes of Appeals, and Writs of Errors, they continue, and are to be proceeded on in Statu quo, as they ſtood at the Diſſolution of the laſt Parliament, without beginning De Novo. And that the Diſſolution of the laſt Parliament doth not alter the State of the Impeachments brought up by the Commons in that Parliament.

Now upon this Order, he obſerved, That it related as well to Appeals and Writs of Error, as to Impeachments; and ſeemed to be more fully worded to them, than to Impeachments: The Words STATU QUO, and without beginning DE NOVO being annex'd in the Order more particularly to the Appeals and Writs of Error; whereas all that was ſaid as to the Impeachments, he obſerved to be, that the Diſſolution of THAT LAST PARLIAMENT doth not alter the State of Impeachments brought up by the Commons in THAT PARLIAMENT, and are not Words which (ſtrictly taken) can bind after the Diſſolution of any other than that Parliament.

But he ſaid, If the Order ſhould be Expounded otherwiſe, yet that both the Law, and the Practice of the Inferior Courts, were undoubtedly contrary, In the Caſes of Appeals and Writs of Error. And, he hoped, no Court would take upon them to Expound the Order ſo, as if they were at Liberty berty to ſplit the Order, and to judge, which Part of the ſame Order ſhould be binding, and which not; for that would be to meddle, in a more extraordinary Manner, with the Proceedings of the Lords, than he had deſired.

Now, as to Writs of Error, he ſaid, there were full Reſolutions of the Judges in the Caſe, tho' in times of Prorogations only, when a Day is ſet for the Sitting of the Lords Houſe; and he cited the Caſe of Heydon and Godſalve, in Croke's Reports; as alſo the Lord Chief Juſtice Hale, who did not only grant Execution upon a Writ of Error (depending in Parlament) but did alſo anſwer the Defendant's Council (who would have pleaded the Lords Order in Bar of the Execution) that he ſhould always pay all due Reſpect to that Superior Court of the Lords; but that he muſt act according to Law; and, that he knew, that the Lords did not intend otherwiſe. And of this Lord Chief Juſtice Pemberton himſelf, who he ſaid had denied Reſtitution upon an Execution lately taken out, in Caſe where a Writ of Error was, and is ſtill depending in Parliment. And in Caſes of Appeals, he ſaid, he was inform'd, that the Court of Chancery did not take any Notice of the Appeal being in Parliament after a Diſſolution, but did notwithſtanding proceed to Sequeſtration. And he ſaid, that there was a late Precedent in the Court of Exchequer, in the Caſe of one Fountaine, where an Appeal was brought from a Decree in the Exchequer, and Recognizance entred into by the ſaid Fountaine, to abide the Order of the Houſe of Lords: and after the Parliament was Diſſolved, the Council of the ſaid Fountaine did inſiſt on the ſaid Order before the Barons, That the Houſe being poſſeſt of Mr. Fountaine's Cauſe, and Security having been given by him to abide the Order of the Houſe, that no Proceedings ought to be had in the Exchequer upon the ſaid Decree, until the Matter on the Appeal was determined before the Lords. Notwithſtanding which, and that Mr. Fountaine produced the Lords Order in Court, and produced the Security allow'd; yet the now Barons declared and ordered, That the Decree by them made, ſhould be proceeded on againſt the ſaid Fountaine, in the Court of Exchequer: And a Proceeding hath been had accordingly.

By all which he obſerved, That the Inferior Courts did proceed upon Matters, forbid as much by the Houſe of Lords, in the Matters of Appeals and Writs of Error, as it was upon Impeachments; and yet that the Reaſon was plain why they did ſo, for that the Parliament might proceed again upon the ſame Appeals, and Writs of Errors, notwithſtanding thoſe Proceedings in the Inferior Courts, in the Interval of Parliaments; for that none of thoſe Acts of the Inferior Courts, does ſo hinder the Procedings of the Superior, but that the Plantiff in Parliament may revive the ſame Matter there again, by Scire Facias, or by Reſummons, &c. But he ſaid, It was never heard of, that the Lords themſelves did proceed again Ex Officio, without the Petition of the Party to revive the Cauſe. And ſo he ſaid in the Caſe of Impeachments, that the Lords would no more proceed Ex Officio upon that neither, unleſs they were called upon by the Proſecutors; and then their Lordſhips Proceedings upon the Impeachment, would be no more hindered by the Bailing of him in the Inferior Court, than they were in the other Caſes by the Executions and Sequeſtrations, which are granted in the Intervals of Parliament, which were for the Prevention both of DELAY and of FAILURE of JUSTICE.

Beſides, he ſaid, If this ſhould not be done, how could it be known, whether the Proſecutors of an Impeachment from the Houſe of Commons (who are never the ſame Men in a new Parliament) will proceed any more upon a Former Impeachment? For, he ſaid it had many times fallen out otherwiſe; and he cited a late Caſe of the Lord Mordant, who was Impeach'd upon Articles in one Seſſion: and having taken out a Pardon during the Prorogation, was never more called upon, nor never queſtion'd upon the former Impeachment; altho' the very ſame Parliament ſat again, which had Impeach'd him: And therefore, he ſaid, That the Caſe might more probably happen to fall out ſo, when a new Parliament ſhould meet again, which would conſiſt of new Men,

He ſaid, It was likewiſe to be obſerved, That altho' the Tranſcript of the Record in a Writ of Error might have days of continuance, yet no Superſedeas is grantable; and he ſaid, That if the Lords Order be no Ground for a Superſedeas on a Writ of Error, why the lying of an Impeachment ſhould be a Ground for Confining a Man within Tower Walls all his Life, he was ſure muſt be both leſs reaſonable and leſs juſt, as Liberty was more valuable than Property, and without which, Property could be of no Comfort.

In the next Place he obſerved, That if the Order ſhould be continued literally to mean, that the Impeachments, as well as the Appeals and Writs of Error, (and the Incidents relating to all of them) ſhould remain in the ſame State they were at the Diſſolution of THAT PARLIAMENT mentioned in the ſaid Order, his Caſe thereupon, he ſaid, would be quite different from any others; for that he was not under any Commitment at the Diſſolution of THAT PARLIAMENT, nor at the time when THAT ORDER was made, but was then at Liberty to be a Sitting Member of that Houſe, and by a Vote of the Houſe had Leave to continue ſo; for that (as he had already obſerved) the the Date of the Order was the 19th of March 1678. and the Warrant of his Commitment did appear by the Return before the Court, to be the 16th of April following: Inſomuch, that he deſired the Court to take Notice, that the ſtrict Letter of the Words Statu Quo in the Order (compar'd with the Time when the ſaid Order was made) would be an Argument to ſet him in a ſtate of Liberty, as he then was.

He then told the Court, That by what he had ſaid, he hoped he had made appear, That the Order did not afford the leaſt Shadow for the hindering of his being Bailed; but that on the contrary, the Reaſons were much ſtronger for the doing of that, (as it related not only to him, but to the Liberty of the Subject in general) than for the Proceedings which the Inferior Courts do daily Practice upon Appeals and Writs of Error (which are but for Property) and are comprized in the ſame Order; and therefore he ſaid, That he hoped he ſhould at leaſt find the ſame Favour in a Caſe of Liberty, which is allow'd every Day in Caſes of leſſer Moment.

He then ſaid, That altho' it did not concern his particular Caſe, yet for the ſake of Engliſh Liberty itſelf, he could not but ſay ſomething farther upon this Point: For he could not but be of Opinion, That if the Order had directly forbid Bail; which it was far from doing; and beſides, the Lords own Practice had ſhew'd their Meaning to the contrary, by the Bailing of a Commoner, whoſe Crimes were declared to be greater than his;

his; and in which Caſe they made no Non Obſtante to their Order, but take that to be ſtill in the ſame Force towards him, as towards any others who are in Cuſtody: Yet he ſaid, In that Caſe, if ſuch an Order ſhould be found to be againſt Magna Charta, and the Fundamental Right of the Liberty of the Subject, (as any thing muſt be, which does ſubject any Man to an INDEFINITE IMPRISONMENT); he conceived, that of Right that Court ought to free any Man from ſuch a Slavery; for he ſaid, he could give it no better a Name. And he then cited an Argument of the Earl of Shaftsbury's upon that Point, which that Lord argued in that Court upon an Habeas Corpus; when the Court agreed they would have Bailed him, had it not been in a Time of an Adjournment only of the Parliament. His Words, he ſaid, were, That this Court will, and ought to judge AN ACT OF PARLIAMENT VOID, if it be againſt MAGNA CHARTA; and more might it judge of AN ORDER OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS, that is put in Execution to deprive any Subject of his LIBERTY. And, as he ſaid, this could not be denied to be Law; ſo he was confident the Earl of Shaftsbury was ſtill of the ſame Mind, and ſo muſt every Lord in England be, or (when they conſider their own Caſes) they would make their Liberties to be very precarious.

He proceeded to ſay, That the Earl of Shaftsbury being allow'd to be a knowing Man, both in the Laws, Orders, and Conſtitutions of Parliaments, he would beg Leave to quote another Part of the ſame Speech; viz. That Mr. Attorney (which was then Sir William Jones) was pleaſed to anſwer the Inſtance of one of his Lordſhip's Council, That if a great Miniſter ſhould be Committed, he hath the Cure of a Pardon, a Prorogation, or a Diſſolution: But (ſays the Earl) if the Caſe ſhould be put, why Forty Members, or a greater Number, may not as well be taken without any Remedy of any of the King's Courts? His Lordſhip ſaid, That Mr. Attorney could not very eaſily anſwer. And if in this Caſe (ſays he) there can be no Relief, no Man can foreſee what may be hereafter. And in another place of the ſame Speech he ſays, He does not think it a Kindneſs to the Lords to make them Abſolute, and above the Law; for ſo it muſt be, if it be adjudged, that they may Commit a Man to an INDEFINITE IMPRISONMENT.

He ſaid, He took theſe Men whom he had named, for no ſmall Authorities in this Age: And the Earl of Shafsbury, he ſaid, was a Man ſtill as much for the maintaining of this Order as ever; but that his Lordſhip did ſhew himſelf, at the ſame time, to be for Engliſh Liberty: And he plainly ſhew'd his own Senſe, both of this and of all Orders whatever, which concern'd the Liberty of the Subject; and declared, That he took that Court to be the proper Judge of all ſuch Orders.

He ſaid, It thereby appear'd how ſenſible that Lord was, that ſuch Caſes might concern Forty, as well as One, and Members of either Houſe, as well as other Men; and without Relief, if it ſhould be admitted, that ORDINARY COURTS could not Relieve. And the Earl of Danby ſaid, That there was no anſwering of theſe Arguments of the Earl of Shaftsbury; unleſs it could be denied, That the King can Impeach as well as the Commons; or that the King cannot Call and Diſſolve Parliaments at his own Will and Pleaſure: For if he may (as was not to be doubted) he ſaid, He was ſure every Man in England was in the ſame Danger when the King pleaſed; and then he ſaw nothing whereby we had any Security; but that we lived under a King who would not exerciſe this Power over us, which we will needs put into his Hands, altho' he does not deſire it himſelf. As if we were ſo weary of our Liberties, that we would be Induſtrious in contriving how we might inſenſibly ſlide into thoſe Slaveries, which our Anceſtors have been ſome Ages taking Pains to ſecure us from; and our Kings have been ſo Gracious as to grant and confirm to us, ſo many times over as they have done; and which other Kings may be as ready to reaſſume hereafter, as we are to give them away.

He concluded his Obſervations upon that Speech of the Earl of Shaftsbury's, with taking Notice, That His Lordſhip had ſhew'd he was one of thoſe Peers who would take it for no Kindneſs to be made Abſolute, and above the Law, by ſuch Orders of theirs being conſtrued to extend to INDEFINITE IMPRISONMENTS.

He then repeated Sir William Jones's Declaration in that Court; That either a Pardon, a Prorogation, or a Diſſolution, was a Cure againſt ſuch Impriſonments. And he obſerved thereupon, That if that Doctrine were true, That any one of thoſe was a Cure againſt ſuch Impriſonment, (and he could not doubt of its being good Law) then certainly he ought to find Relief from his Impriſonment, who had every one of thoſe Cures on his Side.

He then deſired to put the Court in mind, How in the worſt of Times, Juſtice had taken place ſo far, as to lay aſide the Force of Orders made in Parliaments, after the Diſſolutions of thoſe Parliaments which made them; altho' it was to the Prejudice of the Intereſt of thoſe Uſurpers themſelves.

He cited an Inſtance of one Sir John Stowel, who, by the Articles of Exeter was to have been admitted to Compoſition for his Eſtate; but yet, contrary to thoſe Articles, the Parliament did afterwards order his Eſtate to be ſold. After the Diſſolution of which Parliament Sir John Stowel pleaded by his Council (which were Serjeant Maynard and Mr. Latch), That that Order was Diſſolved by the Diſſolution of that Parliament; and that therefore the Articles were again in Force: And that the Plea was admitted to be good, and Sir John reſtored to the Benefit of the Articles upon that Plea, even by Bradſhaw himſelf. But he ſaid, he was ſorry that he could neither have Sir William Jones, to argue thoſe Points for him which he had uſed againſt my Lord Shaftsbury; nor Serjeant Maynard, to make good the Invalidity of Parliamentary Orders after Diſſolutions: But he ſaid, That it was not his Fault, and he doubted not but he was before more Juſt Judges than there was in thoſe Ill Times; and that he hoped, That the Liberty of the Subject was not now more Precarious than it was in thoſe Days.

He added, That if upon ſuch Orders Men could not be Bailed in the Interval of Parliaments, they would become Grievances equal to the Multiplications of Treaſons in former Days; which have ſometimes been greedily made heretofore by Parliaments in Diſtemper'd Times; but the Commons had never been quiet, till they could get their Bear chain'd up, and their Laws reduced to the Old Standard of Treaſon again: But yet thoſe things had been done by Acts, and not by Orders of Parliament.

He deſired them likewiſe to remember, That it had been one of the chief Grounds of the late War betwixt the King and his Parliament, (in which ſo much Blood had been ſhed) That an Ordinance of Parliament ſhould not be held equal to an Act of Parliament; and yet thoſe were Orders of both Houſes. And now, ſaid he, ſhall we be Defending, That an Order of One Houſe only ſhall be Equivalent to a Law? And ſhall be in Force againſt our greateſt and moſt Sacred Laws of Liberty, which have been ſo confirmed to us? This, ſaid he, I am not able to underſtand the Reaſon of; nor will any Man who ſhall give himſelf the leaſt leiſure to think upon it.

He then ſaid, He deſired to ask any Man that then heard him, or any Commoner of England, who would but take Time to conſider this Caſe, (which may be any Man's in England,) Whether they would be contented to Inveſt the Lords with ſuch an Inherent Power over their Liberties, which they can no more be exempted from than the Peers themſelves?

And he ſaid, That the Lords had already made it appear, that they would not have any ſuch Arbitrary Power placed in them, for that they had refuſed to paſs a Favourite Act (which was for their own Trials) only by reaſon of a Clauſe which was inſerted therein, To have Enacted the Subſtance of this preſent Order into a Law.

And he ſaid, That the Houſe of Commons deſiring that ſuch a Power might have been Enacted into a Law, (tho' themſelves would have been the firſt who would have repented ſuch a Law,) did ſufficiently denote, That the Commons did not think the Order would be binding in Law after their Diſſolution; for otherwiſe what need was there of a Law, if the Order was in force after Diſſolution, without a Law.

Upon the whole he ſaid, He thought the Diſtemper of that time had given more weight to the Order, than any thing elſe; and ſome of their Lordſhips on that Bench did know, both in what an Heat it had been made, and how it had been ſince blown upon by the Lords themſelves; who he was confident would no more endure to have it Conſtrued in that Senſe which now ſeems to be put upon it, (of Subjecting Men to be under INDEFINITE IMPRISONMENT,) than they will endure themſelves to be every Day put in the Stocks.

As he had ſaid thus much to the Order it ſelf, ſo he ſaid, He hoped to make appear, That the Court's Bailing of him would not at all Intrench upon the Order, nor meddle with the Juriſdiction of the Lords, nor their Proceedings in any kind.

For that he took it for granted, That what is done by that Court, and the Courts of Chancery and Exchequer, on Appeals and Writs of Error, was underſtood not to meddle at all with the Juriſdiction nor Proceedings of the Lords in thoſe Caſes; and that this was juſt the ſame, all being alike ſubject to the final Determination of the Lords, whenever they pleaſed to call the Appeal, Writ of Error, or Impeachment, before them, and without any Prejudice to their Lordſhips Proceedings by any of thoſe Acts done by that or the other Courts in the Interval of Parliaments.

Beſides, he ſaid, It had been uſual to Bail in that Court to the Juſtice Seat in Eyre, and yet that that Court could not proceed further.

He Inſtanced alſo, That Courts allowing of the Pardons of Peers, (when pleaded there) and yet that they had no power to proceed to the Trial of a Peer.

And ſo he ſaid, There were divers other Inſtances of that Court's Proceeding to ſuch and ſuch Degrees of Exerciſing their Power to avoid Delays, &c. where the Court had no Juriſdiction to determine the Matter.

Precedents he ſaid were not to be expected, which were exactly fitted to his Caſe, becauſe he durſt be bold to ſay, there never was ſuch a Caſe before, (when well conſidered in all its Circumſtances,) nor he hoped never would be again: But he ſaid, That therefore both the King's Power and the People's Liberties would be the more concern'd in what Reſolution ſhould be given by the Court in this Caſe of his.

He ſaid, There were Precedents of Diſcharging of Men Impeach'd in Parliament upon the King's Writ to that Court, Commanding the Proceedings to ceaſe, and they have been Diſcharg'd accordingly by that Court, without any other Reaſon given in the Writ, but becauſe the King held the Parties to be Innocent and Free from the Crimes charg'd againſt them. As in the Caſes of Melton Archbiſhop of York, and Graveſend Biſhop of London, 7 E. 3.

He mentioned alſo Hugh Spencer, and Sir Thomas Berkley's being Mainpriſed to Parliament, and yet that the latter was upon Suſpicion for the Murder of a King, (viz.) Edward the Second.

He ſaid, Inferior Courts had Bailed to Parliament about the Pope's Bull, &c. Reg. Writs, 274.

He ſaid, A Single Judge, (viz.) Sir Robert Atkins, had lately Bailed one for Treaſon, and another for Murder; and that he did himſelf hear his Juſtification of both allow'd (as to the legal part) before the King and Council.

He ſaid, That Kings had fomerly aboliſh'd Accuſations of Treaſon, and Inſtanced a Caſe of Talbot againſt Ormond in the time of H. 6.

And to ſhew how powerful the bare Intention of Kings to Pardon had been heretofore, he Inſtanced the Caſe of a Man Indicted of Felony, who (without any Council) ſhew'd forth a Charter of Pardon to the Court, which was diſcordant to the Indictment, and alſo to his Name; and yet becauſe the Court perceived that it was the King's Intention he ſhould be pardoned, he was Remanded to get a better Pardon, 26. Aſſ. p. 46.

And he did thereupon ſay, That he hoped the King's Intention of Pardon as to him, had been ſufficiently declared to the whole Kingdom.

And in ſhort, he ſaid, That if the Matter was proper for the Juriſdiction of that Court, before it was in Parliament; its having been there, did not take away the Juriſdiction from a Competent Court, when the Extraordinary Juriſdiction fails; which was not to be ſuppoſed could lay all other Juriſdictions aſleep, when it ſelf was not in being; and eſpecially when that Competent Court ſhould do nothing in Contradiction to the Proceedings of the Extraordinary Court, as he hoped he had made appear, that that Court would not do by the Bailing of him.

Whereas on the contrary, he ſaid it was moſt evident, that Juſtice did fail in the higheſt Concern, (which is that of Men's Liberties) unleſs he could be inform'd when and where he might certainly be either Tried or Diſcharged; for that (as he had ſaid before) it was agreed both by the Council for the King, and the Council for the Priſoners, in the Arguments on the Grand Habeas Corpus, that INDEFINITE IMPRISONMENT was held to be PERPETUAL IMPRISONMENT, which the Law did admit in no Caſe where the Impriſonment was only AD CUSTODIAM. And altho' his had been intended but AD CUSTODIAM, yet it could not be denied, but it had already been ad Gravem Pœnam, and without any particular Cauſe yet ſhew'd for which he ought not to be Bailed by Law.

He then ſaid, That Littleton had declared in his Arguments, 5 Car. That if Treaſon in General ſhould be held to be a ſufficient Return, yet that the the King's-Bench might Bail: And the ſaid Littleton, and the King's Attorney, in their Arguments (one for the King, and the other for Mr. Selden) did agree, That where the Party could not avoid the Judgment of the Law, nor that there was no Danger by his being at Liberty, He ought to be Bailed after long Impriſonment; and, at that time, Six Months was taken to be long Impriſonment.

He ſaid he had read a Paſſage in the Lord Coke's Inſtitutes, where he ſpoke of ſuch Impriſonments as he compared to the Impriſonment of St. Paul, by the Centurion, who firſt put him in Chains, and then enquired who he was, and what he had done.

He ſaid he would not compare his Caſe to that; but that there was ſo much of reſemblance in it, that he had been in Chains, or what was there meant by Chains (which was a Priſon) for above Three Years, on a pretence of Treaſon, without being told to that day what kind of Treaſon he had committed; which had been done in nobodies Caſe but his, and by ſo much the greater was his Hardſhip.

He had alſo both been Accuſed and Committed without any Oath made againſt him.

When a Day had been appointed for his Hearing, his Council had been forbid to Plead Matter of Law for him.

It had been acknowledged, that there was no Treaſon contained in any of the Articles againſt him, if they were all True.

And if they had been True, and had amounted to Treaſon, he had there ſhewed the King's Pardon, which did releaſe both the Crimes and the Impriſonment.

That beſides that Pardon, he had had his Majeſty's Declaration in full Parliament, both of his Innocence, and that he would Grant him his Pardon ten times over if this were defective.

That he had now had his Majeſty's Conſent to his Bail, a ſecond time, declared to that Court by the Attorney-General, by the King's Direction.

That in all theſe foregoing Particulars, his Caſe was ſingular, and different from all others, who are or have been made Priſoners ſince the beginning of the late Plot, or (as he believed) at any other time.

Beſides theſe Things, which are peculiar to his own Caſe, he ſaid that there was alſo what was Common to other Caſes as well as his

The length of his Impriſonment, which had been above 40 Months.

The being Confin'd ſo long under pretence (as he conceived) of an Order of the Houſe of Lords, which neither Directs nor Implies any thing to forbid Bail. But in that alſo he had what was particular to himſelf (which he had already ſaid, and deſired leave to repeat, becauſe it would deſerve their Conſideration,) viz. That he was at Liberty, and had leave to be a ſitting Member in the Houſe of Lords, at the Time when that Order did declare that the Impeachments, Appeals, &c. and the Incidents belonging to them ſhould ſtand in STATU QUO; ſo that (as is already obſerved) the STATUS QUO (as to him) he again ſaid, was to put him into a State of Liberty.

Laſtly, he ſaid, That he had no proſpect now when any Parliament would ſit, and by the Examples of paſt Parliaments he might reaſonably fear, whether, when they did meet, they might ſit ſo long as to give him Relief; for that his Petition had been read the firſt Day that the laſt Parliament entered upon any publick Buſineſs; or whether greater Buſineſs of the Kingdom might not (as it had done already) ſo take up their Time, as not to give them leiſure to conſider the Caſe of a ſingle Perſon: And ſince this had already fallen out to be his Misfortune in Three Parliaments ſucceſſively, he took it to be but too plain a Demonſtration of his lying under an Indefinite Impriſonment, unleſs he ſhould find Relief in that Court, for that there was no other to Appeal unto.

He ſaid, That in thoſe Great and Eminent Caſes which fell out 3 & 5 Car. about the Bailing of Perſons committed to Indefinite Impriſonment, the Judges were then very poſitive againſt their Bail, and yet changed thoſe Opinions afterwards; and ſo he hoped that Court might do upon a due Conſideration of his Caſe and Circumſtances; or elſe he hoped that His Lordſhip would convince him, that his Impriſonment was not Indefinite, by letting him know at what prefixed Time, and where he might reſort for Remedy, which the Law does, without queſtion, allow to all Men, and at all Times.

He ſaid, he was a very reaſonable Man, and when he was convinced by Reaſon (upon which he was ſure all Laws were founded) he could be content to ſuffer ſtill, tho' his Impriſonment had been ſo long already; for that however he may have been miſrepreſented for an Arbitrary Man, he would rather periſh in his Priſon, than have any thing done for him which the Law would not warrant: But, on the other ſide, he ſhould be ſorry, that his Caſe ſhould be made a Precedent againſt Law, and againſt Engliſh Liberty, which he was ſure it would be, if he ſhould be continued to lye under an Indefinite Impriſonment without being bailed; and he ſaid he was not aſhamed to ſay, in the behalf of all Engliſhmen's Liberties, as well as of his own Caſe; That it was a Caſe which did concern every Man to take care of in the Conſequences of it, and which did cry loudly for Relief.

He then told the Court, That he had troubled them long, but that he hoped it would be excuſed in a Caſe of that Moment: And in the firſt place he ſaid, he hoped it was plain, that That Court had it in their power to grant him Relief if they pleaſed.

That it was as plain, that there was nothing in the Lords Order againſt it, and that the practice of the Lords had been otherwiſe, even in the behalf of Commoners.

That it was apparent, that both that Court, and the Courts of Chancery and Exchequer, do relieve upon Appeals and Writs of Error, which are in the ſame Order with the Impeachments, and yet do in no ſort meddle with the Judicature or Proceedings of the Houſe of Lords.

That it was manifeſt, that let the Order be conſtrued as any Man pleaſes, yet that Bailing could be no ſort of Judging of any Proceedings in the Superior Court, but would leave the Judgment entirely to the Parliament, and would continue him a Priſoner in Law, bound to appear before that Extraordinary Court, whenever His Majeſty ſhall be pleaſed to call it; and he ſaid it was more evident, that otherwiſe he was an Indefinite Priſoner, and at the King's Will only for his Liberty, the Conſequences of which every Man ought to lay to his Heart, with a dread of it, whenever they ſhould live under a Prince that might not be ſo Merciful as our preſent King; and he hoped the Court would duly conſider it.

Beſides all this, he ſaid, he durſt confidently affirm, That there was not a Precedent ſince the Conqueſt, of any Man's being refuſed Bail under ſuch Circumſtances as his were: Whereas he ſaid, the detaining of Men under long Impriſonment, ought either to have expreſs Law for it, or a good Number of Precedents, and in good Times, to juſtify it, and not any ſingle Inſtance or two (if they could be produced) which he thought they could not.

And he hoped that Precedent which he had already mentioned on his Majeſty's behalf, would be very well conſidered, which was, How the King's Court ſhould keep the King's Priſoner, and at the King's Suit, in the King's Priſon, with the King's Pardon, and againſt the King's Will, twice declared in that Court by his Attorney-General.

He ſaid, he ſhould conclude with letting his Lordſhip know, that as the King himſelf had ſufficiently declared that there was no danger in the letting him have his Liberty, ſo he had ſuch Bail to offer to his Lordſhip as would ſufficiently ſatisfy the World, that he ſhould be forth-coming to anſwer when and where that Court ſhould appoint; and then, he hoped, the Two Chief Grounds for Detenſion in a Priſon (viz. The Danger of a Man's having his Liberty, and the Danger of his not appearing to abide his Trial) would be fully anſwered.

And if it might not ſeem too great a Vanity to ſay (altho' the true Reaſon does take away the Vanity of it, becauſe it would not be for his, but for their own ſakes, as what may happen to be their own Caſes) he ſaid, he doth believe, he could have the Major Part of the Houſe of Lords to be his Bail in this Caſe, and ſome of thoſe very Lords who were for the making of this Order, altho' not in that Senſe which would ſeem to be put upon it. Inſomuch, that there would be no more to fear in the granting him Bail, than, he hoped, there was either Reaſon or Juſtice to deny it. And he doubted not, but he was there before very juſt Judges, who would duly conſider what he had ſaid.

The Lord Chief Juſtice then ſpeaking, did ſay, That the Earl of Danby had ſeemed to reflect upon the Court, as if they had denied him Juſtice in not hearing his Council.

Then the Earl of Danby deſired Leave to interrupt his Lordſhip, ſaying, That his Lordſhip had miſtaken him, for that he had ſaid no ſuch thing of that Court, nor did he mean of that Court; but ſaid, It was very well known, that his Council had been forbid to plead for him in another Place; which was then acknowledged by Juſtice Jones to be very true.

The Lord Chief Juſtice then proceeded, and ſaid, That for his Lordſhip's ſaying they needed not to fear, becauſe, he did believe, the greateſt Part of the Lords would be his Bail: That it was not the Fear of another Court that had any kind of Influence upon them, or that they ſhould do ſuch things as they feared to be called to an Account for; but that they were to govern themſelves by the doing of Juſtice.

That they had heard his Lordſhip with a great deal of Patience; and that he had ſaid many material Things, and with much Acuteneſs; And that they were not ſenſeleſs of the Hardſhip of his Lordſhip's Caſe, and of the Greatneſs of his Sufferings.

That they were likewiſe ſenſible of the King's Deſires, that his Lordſhip ſhould have no longer Impriſonment than the Law requires. And he confeſſed, That the King had done as much as lay in his Power.

That it was not denied, becauſe that Court could not Bail for Treaſon; for that they had a Power to Bail in all Caſes whatſoever, if the Court ſaw Cauſe. Neither would the Indictment which was found againſt him about Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey have hindred; nor was it the Order of the Houſe of Lords which hindred them: But that they were to act there according to Law; and he pray'd his Lordſhip to conſider that they could not relieve him according to Law.

That he did agree to ſome things mentioned by his Lordſhip; and that it was a very hard Caſe he ſhould lie ſo long in Priſon: But here was the Miſery; they could only compaſſionate him; for that his Lordſhip was impriſoned by an higher Hand, and where they had no Power to intermeddle.

He inſtanced in Indictments for Treaſons, and ſeveral other great Crimes, in which they could bail Men; but in this Caſe, the Supreme Juriſdiction of the Nation had laid their Hands upon it, which was attended by the Houſe of Commons with an Impeachment.

Whether their Lordſhips had Cauſe, or not Cauſe, to commit his Lordſhip, they could not inſpect; But that they ought to believe that his Lordſhip was juſtly Committed; and that their Lordſhips, in their mature Deliberation, would do nothing unjuſtly.

He ſaid, That they had a Juriſdiction over all the Courts in the Kingdom, (that only excepted.) And as it would be very Incongruous for an Inferior Court to Bail whom they had Committed, or to call their Proceſſes in Queſtion; ſo would it be in like manner for them to do in this Caſe, becauſe the Lords exceed their Juriſdiction, and were above them. He ſaid alſo, That the Opinion of all the Judges in England had been taken therein, and had delivered their Opions, that he could not be bailed: And that the truth was, his Lordſhip was impriſoned by too high a Court for them to bail him: For that his Lordſhip was not indefinitely Impriſoned, as he had alledged: For whenever his Majeſty is pleaſed to call a Parliament, his Lordſhip would have Remedy.

That the King has Power to do it when he pleaſes; and, for his People's Good, no doubt he will, when he ſees fit: But that at ſome time the Circumſtances of State differ from other times; and that it may not for ſome Space of Time be thought convenient: And tho' this may prove miſchievous to a ſingle Perſon, or to two or three Perſons, yet ſuch things muſt be endured for the Good of the Publick. He ſaid alſo, That if that Court ſhould commit a Man for High Treaſon, and the King ſhould adjourn them from time to time, that Man could not be bailed until they ſat again: So that he muſt confeſs, (as his Lordſhip had ſaid) that as this Caſe did happen, he was under a Temporary Indefinite Impriſonment.

He concluded, with telling his Lordſhip, That he muſt be contented to wait the King's Pleaſure when he would call a Parliament.

That, for his Part, he was before of Opinion, that they could not bail his Lordſhip, and he was ſo ſtill.

The Earl of Danby to all this anſwered, that he muſt confeſs, his Ears did tingle to hear his Lordſhip ſay, That the King had done as much as lay in his Power; when his Majeſty is bound both by his Coronation Oath, and by the Laws, to ſee Right done at all times to his Subjects; and he deſired to know, Whether this was not the King's Court, and whether he had not deputed a Power to them to ſee Right done to all accordingly?

He ſaid alſo, That he was now under greater Amazement than before; ſince his Lordſhip had both granted, That this Court could bail any Treaſon, and that the Order of the Houſe of Lords did not hinder it;

it; which, till now, he confeſt, he had taken to be the only Obſtruction to his Liberty.

That he had hoped, he had ſatisfied his Lordſhip, that altho' he was impriſoned by an higher Hand, yet that the Bailing of him did not intermeddle with the Juriſdiction of that higher Judicature, and he had yet heard nothing to ſhew him that it did.

That for what his Lordſhip had ſaid of the Opinion of all the Judges in England, being taken in his Caſe, he muſt needs inform his Lordſhip, That that was a Miſtake; for that the Opinion of the Judges had never been asked in this particular Caſe, ſaving once, upon petitioning the King for Liberty to go to his Country Houſe at Wimbledon, with a Guard, or otherwiſe, as his Majeſty ſhould think fit; which Petition was referred by his Majeſty to the Judges: And they (according to their wonted Prudence and Caution) did only report, That they thought his Majeſty could not legally grant the Petitioner's Requeſt.

That whereas his Lordſhip ſaid, That he was not indefinitely impriſoned, for that whenever his Majeſty is pleaſed to call a Parliament, he will have Remedy; and that he muſt be content to await the King's Pleaſure when he will call a Parliament; He took thoſe to be fuller Arguments, than any himſelf had made, to prove, That his Impriſonment was Indefinite, and at the King's Pleaſure; ſo that he was now more fully confirm'd than ever to be of that Opinion, and wiſh'd that every Man, that heard that Doctrine given for Law, might fully conſider the Conſequences of it.

He ſaid further, That his Lordſhip had miſtaken him, in thinking that he had ſaid he was under a Temporary Indefinite Impriſonment; for that he had ſaid he was under an Abſolute Indefinite Impriſonment: And that his Lordſhip had rather proved him to be ſo, than ſhewed any thing to the contrary; nor did he know what Temporary Indefinite did mean.

The Lord Chief Juſtice then ſaid, That he was not a Judge at that time when the Judges Opinions were asked; but deſired his Brother Jones to relate how it was.

Mr. Juſtice Jones then ſaid, That he remembred the Caſe had been put to the Judges, Whether the Lords in the Tower might be bailed, and that it was then the Opinion of the Judges that they might not: But he ſaid, he did think the Earl of Danby was not particularly concerned in the Queſtion at that time, but that it related to the Popiſh Lords only, and that there was much difference betwixt his Lordſhip's Caſe and theirs; beſides, he did think, that was at a time when there was a Day appointed for the Meeting of a Parliament.

The Earl of Danby then ſaid, That the Queſtion which was put at that time to the Judges, about the Popiſh Lords, did not concern his Caſe at all; for that it differed from theirs in very many Particulars, which he had already mentioned, viz. Of no Oath againſt him; No ſpecial Treaſon alledged, &c. which he was loth to trouble them with repeating again; but he ſuppoſed, that the then Opinion of the Judges, ought not to be made any Argument againſt him.

He ſaid alſo, That the Lord Chief Juſtice had argued very ſtrongly for him: For that it was true, That the King might call a Parliament when he pleaſed; but if therefore a Man muſt ſtay in Priſon till the King did pleaſe to do ſo, he may (by that very Argument) lie there all his Life-time, if the King pleaſes; which confirms what he had been a great Part of this time labouring to prove: And he ſaid, he muſt confeſs, he did expect to have heard ſtronger and more powerful Arguments to have convinc'd him, that he was in the wrong in what he had ſaid; but that now he was more encourag'd than before, not to give over a Cauſe which did ſo much concern every Man in England.

The Lord Chief Juſtice then ſaid, That his Lordſhip was miſtaken in believing that that Court did keep him in Priſon; for that he was not kept in Priſon by them, but by a Superior Court, which was too big for them to meddle with, or to examine what they did.

To this his Lordſhip anſwered, That he had Wrong done him, which muſt be done by ſome-body, and that it was a Maxim of the Law, That the King could do no Man Wrong, (being adviſed by his Courts); beſides, that his Majeſty had twice ſhew'd his Conſent in that Court to have him bail'd. Neither could he ſay, that the Lords did him Wrong, becauſe there was nothing in their Order to hinder his being bailed, (beſides their own Practice to the contrary); and it ſeemed now to be ſaid, that it was by the Law, and not by the Order, that he was kept a Priſoner. He ſaid, he would not ſay, that That Court did keep him a Priſoner, but by ſome-body he was ſure he was kept Priſoner; but perhaps it might be by the Stars, ſince he could not find who it was upon Earth that did it.

He concluded, that if he were legally impriſon'd, yet by Magna Charta and the Petition of Right, &c. it was impoſſible for an Engliſhman to be without ſome certain Proſpect of Relief in a reaſonable time, they being to have Juſtice done them by the Law at all times, and without Delay; and that he was now in the King's proper Court for Juſtice; wherefore as his Lordſhip had given his own Opinion, ſo he did deſire that every Judge would be pleaſed to deliver theirs ſeverally.

Then Mr. Juſtice Jones ſaid, That he was not ready to give any preſent Opinion, there having been ſo much, and ſome things ſo materially ſaid by his Lordſhip: But that for his better Satisfaction, he did deſire to ask his Lordſhip a Queſtion, in a Point which did much ſtick with him, and would go a great way in guiding his Judgment; and he was confident that his Lordſhip was as able to give him an Anſwer to it, as any Man; which was this, His Lordſhip (he ſaid) had been charg'd with Treaſon by an Impeachment, and had pleaded a Pardon to the Impeachment before the Lords; He ſaid he took that Plea to be a Tacit Confeſſion of Guilt in Law, (tho' the Party were never ſo innocent) and then it had been a Tacit Pleading of Guilty; inſomuch that he did believe, there could be no Admittance of any ſecond Plea; and if ſo, he did confeſs, he did not ſee how that Court could then have any thing to do with his Lordſhip in that Caſe; but it was what he had not well conſidered (tho' at preſent he took the Law to be ſo) and he did deſire to hear what his Lordſhip did ſay to that?

His Lordſhip anſwered, That he gave him great thanks for letting him clear any Objections, and giving him liberty to anſwer them as well as he could. That this indeed was a Queſtion of Law, which he was but little vers'd in, but that he was at preſent able to ſay, That he had read the Opinions of ſome great Men of the Law, to be otherwiſe; and inſtanced what the Lord Coke had ſaid upon the Caſe of Graveſend, Biſhop of London, 7 E. 3. who did get a Writ of Diſcharge to the King's Bench, and did not take a Pardon; upon which he obſerved the ſaid Lord Coke to have ſaid, That it may be he thought that the taking of a Pardon would would have implied a Confeſſion of the Fault, and therefore went a new way; but that was a Miſtake, for that no Man that is wiſe and well adviſed, will refuſe God and the King's Pardon, how often ſo ever he may have it; for there is no Man but offendeth God and the King almoſt every day, and the Pardon is the ſafeſt and ſureſt way.

And tho' at preſent, he ſaid, he was not provided of Precedents in the Caſe, yet he remembred there was a Caſe of a Coiner tried at Durham upon a Pardon, where the Pardon proved defective, and yet he was allowed to plead over.

And he told him, That the ſame Queſtion had been moved in the Houſe of Lords upon his own Caſe, where divers Lords had declared themſelves, That they hoped it ſhould never paſs for Law amongſt them, that a Man ſhould not have one Plea for his Life; and gave for Reaſon, that if a Pardon was pleaded, and not admitted to be good, then the Priſoner had depended upon what he thought had been a good Plea, but was adjudged by the Court not to be ſo, and then if he ſhould not be admitted to plead over, it would be to enſnare a Man's Life, without giving him any Plea at all for it. And he concluded, ſaying, He thought that this Queſtion was rather going into the Merits of his Cauſe, than to what he only demanded, which was but Bail.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben then ſaid, He muſt acknowledge there was a vaſt Difference betwixt his Lordſhip's Caſe, and the Caſe of the Popiſh Lords in the Tower, in many material Particulars, which his Lordſhip had mentioned; and he muſt confeſs that he thought it one of the hardeſt Caſes in England. He ſaid alſo, that he could not but differ from what his Brother Jones had ſaid, as to the not having Liberty to plead over; for that he was of Opinion his Lordſhip ought not to be debarr'd from having a ſecond Plea, if the Pardon ſhou'd be over-ruled; and (if I did not miſtake him) he cited the Inſtance of one Hetley's Caſe (or ſuch a Name) and he ſaid, that his Lordſhip had ſaid ſo many things of great Conſequence, that he thought it did very well deſerve further Conſideration; but if he ſhould be put to give any preſent Anſwer, he muſt then ſay (as my Lord Chief Juſtice had done) that he thought they could not bail his Lordſhip; but he thought it might well deſerve further Conſideration.

Mr. Juſtice Raymond then ſaid, That his Lordſhip's Caſe had ſo many weighty Circumſtances in it, as ought to make it to be very well conſidered, before any Opinion could be delivered in it. That for what had been ſaid by his Brother Jones, about the Pleading over or not, he thought that did not properly lie before them in that Place; That his Lordſhip had ſaid ſome things, to which he thought full Anſwers might be given; but that he had alſo ſaid ſome things, to which he thought it would not be ſo eaſy to anſwer. That for his Part, he thought it was a Caſe which might well deſerve the Conſideration of more of the Judges, betwixt this and the next Term; and that he muſt acknowledge he muſt further conſider it, before he would preſume to give any Opinion at all upon it.

A Council at the Bar then moved, That a Rule of Court might be made to bring his Lordſhip thither again, the firſt Day of the next Term.

The Lord Chief Juſtice ſeemed diſpleaſed with the Forwardneſs of that Council; and the Earl of Danby excuſed it, ſaying, It was not moved by his Deſire or Directions; but ſaid, That was all alike to him, whether there were any Rule of Court or no; for that they were like to be troubled with him again, and that he ſhould not eaſily give over a Cauſe, wherein he took the Liberty of the Subject in general to be as deeply concern'd as himſelf, and wherein he had found ſo little to be ſaid againſt him, that he did believe he ſhould be as troubleſome to them as ever Judge Jenkins had been heretofore in the Defence of Engliſh Liberty.

The Lord Chief Juſtice then ſtanding up, ſaid, My Lord, your Lordſhip muſt for the preſent be content to be remanded; and ſpeaking to the Lieutenant of the Tower's Officer, told him, he muſt take back his Priſoner.

And then the Lord Chief Juſtice immediately left the Court.

The Tryals of Robert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill.

ON Wedneſday the 5th of February, 1678. Robert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill, were brought from His Majeſty's Goal of Newgate, to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench, to be Arraigned for the Murder of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, upon an Indictment found by the Grand Jury for the County of Middleſex, on Monday the Morrow of the Purification of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary; and the Court proceeded thus:

Mr. Juſtice Wild Arraign'd the Priſoners.

Clerk of the Crown. Robert Green, hold up thy Hand; Henry Berry, hold up thy Hand; Lawrence Hill, hold up thy Hand. Which they ſeverally did.

You ſtand Indicted by the Names of Robert Green, late of the Pariſh of St. Mary le Strand, in the County of Middleſex, Labourer: Henry Berry, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Labourer: And Lawrence Hill, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Labourer; for that you three, together with ——— Girald, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Clerk; Dominick Kelly, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Clerk; and Philibert Vernatt, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Labourer, who are withdrawn: Not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the 12th day of October, in the Thirtieth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, of England, Scot-

How ſay'ſt thou, Robert Green, art thou guilty of this Felony and Murder whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and haſt been now Arraigned, or not guilty?

Green. Not Guilty.

Cl. of the Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be Tryed?

Green. By God and my Country.

Cl. of the Crown. God ſend thee a good Deliverance. How ſay'ſt thou, Henry Berry, art thou guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and haſt been now Arraigned, or not guilty?

Berry. Not Guilty.

Cl. of the Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be Try'd?

Berry. By God and my Country.

Cl. of the Cr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance. How ſay'ſt thou, Lawrence Hill, art thou guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof thou ſtand'ſt Indicted, and haſt been Arraign'd, or not guilty?

Hill. Not Guilty.

Cl. of the Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be Try'd?

Hill. By God and my Country.

Cl. of the Cr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Capt. Richardſon. I deſire to know when they muſt be brought up to be Try'd?

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Upon Friday next.

Cl. of the Crown. You ſhall have a Rule to bring them up on Friday.

But on Thurſday the 6th of February, Mr. Attorney-General mov'd the Court that it might be defer'd till Monday, that the King's Evidence might be the more ready; which was granted accordingly.

On Monday the 10th of February, 1678, the ſaid Robert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill, were brought again to the Bar for their Trial, which proceeded as followeth.

Clerk of the Cr. Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O Yes.

Clerk of the Cr. Again, Again.

Cryer. O Yes! O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King doth ſtraightly Charge and Command all manner of Perſons to keep ſilence upon pain of Impriſonment.

Clerk of the Cr. Make an O Yes.

Cryer. O Yes! If any one can inform our Sovereign Lord the King, the King's Serjeant at Law, the King's Attorney-General, or this Inqueſt now to be taken of the Felony and Murder whereof Robert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill, the Priſoners at the Bar, ſtand Indicted, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard, for now the Priſoners ſtand at the Bar upon their Delivery. And all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoners at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance.

Clerk of the Cr. Robert Green, hold up thy Hand; Henry Berry, hold up thy Hand; Lawrence Hill, hold up thy Hand. Which they ſeverally did.

Thoſe good Men that you ſhall hear call'd, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and You, upon Trial of your ſeveral Lives and Deaths: If therefore You, or any of You, will challenge Them, or any of Them, your time is to ſpeak unto them when they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they are Sworn. Cryer, Make an O Yes.

Cryer. O Yes! You good Men that are Impannel'd to enquire between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Robert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill, the Priſoners at the Bar, anſwer to your Names, and ſave your Iſſues.

Cl. of the Cr. Sir William Roberts.

Cryer. Vouz avez, Sir William Roberts.

Cl. of the Cr. Sir William Roberts, to the Book.

Cryer. Sir William Roberts, look upon the Priſoners: You Priſoners look upon the Jury. You ſhall well and truly Try, and true Deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoners at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in Charge, and a true Verdict give according to your Evidence. So help you God.

And the ſame Oath was adminiſtred to the reſt, and their Names were as follow:

Sir William Roberts, Baronet.
Sir Richard Fiſher, Bar.
Sir Michael Heneage, Knight.
Sir Thomas Bridges, Knight.
William Avery, Eſq;
Charles Humphrevile, Eſq;
John Bathurſt, Eſq;
Richard Gowre, Eſq;
Thomas Henſlowe, Eſq;
John Sharpe, Eſq;
John Haynes, Eſq; and
Walter Moyle, Eſq;

Cl. of the Cr. Cryer, count theſe. Sir William Roberts.

Cryer. One, &c.

Cl. of the Cr. Walter Moyle.

Cryer. Twelve, Good Men and true, ſtand together, and hear your Evidence. Gentlemen, are you all Sworn? And you that are not Sworn, pray withdraw.

The ſtanding-place for the Jury being ſo throng'd, that thoſe who were ſworn had not room to ſtand together, the Clerk of the Crown was order'd to make Proclamation thus:

Cl. of the Cr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer.

Cryer. O Yes, My Lords the Kings Juſtices, doth ſtraitly charge and command all Perſons, that are not of the Jury, to withdraw forthwith, upon pain of one hundred Pounds a Man.

Clerk of the Cr. Robert Green hold up thy Hand; Henry Berry, hold up thy Hand; Lawrence Hill, hold up thy Hand. Which they ſeverally did.

Gentlemen, You that are ſworn look upon the Priſoners, and hearken to their Charge: You ſhall underſtand, that they ſtand Indicted by the Names of Robert Green, late of the Pariſh of St. Mary le Strand in the County of Middleſex, Labourer; Henry Berry late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Labourer; and Lawrence Hill late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Labourer; for that they, together with, &c. (as before) againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. Upon this Indictment they have been arraigned, they have thereunto ſeverally pleaded Not Guilty, and for their Trials have ſeverally put themſelves upon God and their Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire, whether the Priſoners at the Bar, Robert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill, or any of them, are guilty of the Felony and Murder, whereof they ſtand Indicted, or not guilty and for them which you ſhall find guilty, you ſhall inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, they had at the time of the Felony Committed, or at any time ſince. If you find them, or any of them, not guilty, you ſhall enquire, whether they, or any of them, that you find ſo not guilty, fled for the ſame; if you find, that they or any of them fled for the ſame, you ſhall enquire of their Goods and Chattels, as if you had Found them guilty: But, If you find them, nor any of them, not guilty, nor that they did fly for it, ſay ſo and no more, and hear your Evidence. Cryer make Proclamation.

Cryer. O Yes! If any one will give evidence on half of our Sovereign Lord the King, againſt Robert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill, the Priſoners at the Bar, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard.

Then Sir Thomas Stringer, Serjeant at Law of Council with the King in this Cauſe, opened the Indictment thus;

Mr. Serjeant Stringer. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of this Jury, The Priſoners at the Bar, Robert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill, ſtand Indicted for that they, with one Girald a Prieſt, one Kelly, and one Vernatt, did the twelfth of October laſt, at the Pariſh of St. Mary le Strand in this County, felonioufly, willfully, and of their malice aforethought, aſſault the Perſon of Sir Edmond-bury Godfrey, Kt. and that the Priſoner, Robert Green, did put about the Neck of the ſaid Sir Edmond-bury a twiſted Handkerchief, and did with that twiſted Handkerchief ſo choak and ſtrangle the ſaid Sir Edmond-bury, that he immediately died, and that the other Priſoners, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill, with the other Perſons Girald, Kelly, and Vernatt, were aiding and aſſiſting the ſaid Robert Green to Murder the ſaid Sir Edmundbury, and ſo the Priſoners at the Bar, with the ſaid other Perſons, the ſaid Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, did kill and murder againſt the Kings Peace, his Crown and Dignity. To this they have pleaded not guilty, and for their Trial have put themſelves upon their Country, which Country you are. If we prove them, or any of them guilty, you are to find it ſo.

Then Sir William Jones, his Majeſty's Attorney General, opened the Evidence in this manner,

Mr. Attorney General. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of this Jury, the Priſoners who ſtand now at the Bar, are Indicted for Murder. Murder, as it is the firſt, ſo is it the greateſt Crime, that is prohibited in the Second Table. It is a Crime of ſo deep a ſtain, that nothing can waſh it away but the Blood of the Offender, and unleſs that be done, the Land in which it is ſhed, will continue polluted. My Lord, as Murder is always a very great Crime, ſo the Murder which is now to be try'd before your Lordſhip, is, it may be the moſt heinous and moſt barbarous that ever was committed. The Murder was committed upon a Gentleman, and upon a Magiſtrate, and I wiſh he had not therefore been murdered, becauſe he was a Proteſtant Magiſtrate.

My Lord, I will not ſpend much of your time in making my Obſervations before hand, becauſe I muſt in this Caſe crave leave to do it in the concluſion of the Evidence. For I, that have made a ſtrict Examination into this matter, do find, that I ſhall better ſpend my time in making Obſervations, and ſhewing how the Witneſſes do agree, after the Evidence given, than before. Therefore my Lord, I ſhall at preſent only make a ſhort Narrative of the fact, to ſhew you the courſe of our Evidence, that it may be the better underſtood and remembred by the Jury.

My Lord, Upon the diſcovery of the late horrid Plot ——

Lord Chief Juſtice, (Sir William Scroggs.) And preſent Plot too, Mr. Attorney: But pray go on.

Mr. Attorney General. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, you may call it ſo, for 'tis to be feared they have not yet given it over: But upon the diſcovery of that Plot (call it late or preſent) Sir Edmond-bury Godfrey (whom I ſuppoſe, the Jury all knew, and every Man, that lived thereabouts, muſt needs remember to have been a very uſeful and active Juſtice of the Peace) had taken ſeveral Examinations about this Matter, and perhaps ſome more than now are extant: (but we have proof he had ſome) and was very induſtrious in finding out the principal Actors in this Plot, among whom, ſome Prieſts and Jeſuits foreſeeing their own danger, and likewiſe the overthrow of a deſign which they had been ſo long in contriving, they had ſeveral Conſultations how to prevent the diſcovery. And as they are men, who never ſtick at Blood but rather account it meritorious to ſhed it, though never ſo unjuſtly, when their Intereſt may be profited by it, they did reſolve to ſecure themſelves and their deſign by taking away the Life of this Gentleman. In order thereunto they had ſeveral meetings, and the place of their meeting, you will find by the Evidence, to be at the Plow-Alehouſe, and there they did conſult how to take away the Life of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey. And they made ſeveral attempts to do it: one while they dogg'd him into the Fields, another while they ſent People to ſpy when he came abroad, that they might follow him into ſome dark Alley, or other obſcure or unfrequented Place, and there diſpatch him; and at laſt, after many attempts, they ſucceeded in that wicked one, when the Murder was committed.

My Lord, There are contained in this Indictment ſix Offenders, all Principals, three of them, I think, are Prieſts, or at leaſt two of them are ſo, that is, Father Girald an Iriſh-man, Father Kelly

Kelly likewise of the same Nation, and one Vernatt whether a Priest or Layman, I know not. These Priests (as they are always the first that contrive mischief, so they are always the first that fly punishment) have taken care for themselves and run away, and left their blind followers, the Prisoners at the Bar, whom they had drawn into this bloody act, alone to answer for it.

The Day, when this murder was committed, was Saturday the 12th of October last; and I must desire your Lordship to take notice of the Day, for upon that much of the Evidence will depend. And we shall prove, that as they did before send several times to Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's House to get intelligence of his going abroad, so this very Day in the morning, Hill, one of the Prisoners at the Bar, came to his house upon pretence of business with him; and as we guess, and have reason to believe, to learn whither he went that day: Green (another of the Prisoners) had been there before on the same errand. And so much we shall prove to you by the People of the House, Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey happened about Noon, or some time in the Afternoon of the same Day (as we have it by the confession of one of the Parties) to be at an House near St. Clement's Church, where these murtherers had notice he was, and had prepared a Trap for him as he came back. They had appointed men to watch him and give them notice when he did come back, and whatever his business was at the House that he was in (for it cannot yet be known) he staid there till about seven or eight a Clock at Night: And your Lordship knows that at that time of the Year it is then dark, He coming from about St. Clement's Church towards his own House near Charing-Cross, notice was given to the Murderers of his approach near to Somerset-House. And thus they had laid their Bloody Contrivance: Some of them were appointed to meet him at the Back-Gate of Somerset-House, and to inform him that there was a Quarrel in the Yard, and He being a Man always careful to keep the Peace and punish them that broke it, they thought it a very apt means to train him into the Yard. And when he came near the Back-Gate they did accordingly acquaint him that Two of the Queen's Servants were fighting in the Yard, and that they needed his Presence to part and quiet them. He, at first, thought it might be but some ordinary idle Scuffle, and was not willing to go down, but being very much importun'd by them, down he went, thro' the Back-Gate into the Yard, where were indeed two Men Scuffling together, but counterfeitly; the one was Berry, the Prisoner here; the other was Kelly, the Priest that is run away. And when Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was come, and within their reach, then, as it was before contrived, the Fray of it self ended, and Berry goes to the lower Water-Gate, and Mr. Praunce (who was in that foul fact, but hath since repented, and hath made this discovery) to the Upper-Gate, to keep back any casual Passengers for a little while, till such time as the Murder was over.

My Lord, Things being thus prepared, whilst Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey stood still, or was returning, having no more to do there, after the Scuffle was thus appeased, Green one of the Prisoners, coming behind him, puts a Cravat, or a Twisted Linen Cloth, (which he had ready for the purpose) about his Neck. And he, Hill, and those Holy Fathers Girald and Kelly (with great veneration be it spoken, for Men of their Order to stain their Hands with the Blood of an Innocent Gentleman, and that in so treacherous a manner) All set upon him, and very manfully, being Four upon one, and he altogether surprised, threw him down and Strangled him. And this was done (as it is easie to imagine) without much Noise; so that I doubt not but many that were near the Place might be ignorant of it and did not hear it.

My Lord, Tho' the thing was done with a great Zeal, and a very good Will to dispatch him, yet it so happen'd, that when Mr. Praunce came back from keeping Sentinel at the Gate, there was some Life left in Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, he did stir his Feet, and thereby they perceived that he was not quite dead. But to make thorough Work with him, Green (who begun, and was to give an accomplishment to this bloody Fact) takes hold of his Head and twists his Neck round, and stamps upon his Breast, the Marks of which outragious Cruelty did plainly appear in his Body after it was found.

My Lord, After they had thus kill'd him, Girald the Priest thought he was not yet dead enough, and was very willing to run him through with Sir Edmund-bury's own Sword, but that was not liked by the rest, lest it might be discovered by a great effusion of Blood in that place: and so they forbore it for that time. Having thus dispatch'd him, they remov'd him to the Chamber of Hill, where they kept him some time, and after that to another Chamber. I will not be particular herein because the Witness will give the best account of it. But after some time, (I desire it may be observed) 'twas on Monday Night (two Nights after the Fact was committed) they brought him into another Room and laid him there, with a Cloak thrown over him. And I mention this last so particularly, because he then happened to be seen by another Witness here present, who concurs as to his lying there dead, and that he saw him by the help of a Dark-Lanthorn, of which, and other Circumstances, I shall have occasion to make use hereafter.

My Lord, After he had lain in Somerset-House some Days, they thought it was high time to remove him, or rather to expose him: for having now kill'd him, they did endeavour to kill his Reputation, and lay the blame of this foul Murder upon this Innocent Gentleman, as if he had killed himself: And on Wednesday Night, which by computation was the 16th of October, they carried him out of Somerset-House in this manner: Hill having late in the Night procured a Sedan, they made a shift, by bending the Body to a fit Posture, to crowd him into it, and Berry, one of the Murderers and Porter of Somerset-House, was of all Men most proper to help them out with Privacy; and therefore it was agreed between them, that whenever a Man should come before and make an Hem, it should be a sign to Berry to open the Gate. And, my Lord, having put him into the Sedan, Mr. Praunce and Girald first carried him out in it to Covent-Garden, and there they rested, (being something wearied with their Burthen) and two more supplied their rooms, and carried him to Long-Acre. Then Girald and Praunce took him up again and carried him to the Grecian Church near Soho: And when they had him there, they got an Horse ready and mounted him upon it, and Hill was set behind him to hold him up; by which means they carried him to the place where he was found; and there, to accomplish the last part of their Design, which was to murder his Reputation, after they had killed his Body, they took his own Sword and run him thro', and left him in such a manner, as that (according to the Weakness of their Understanding) the World should conclude he had killed himself. In that Condition was the Gentleman found. I have but little more at present to trouble you with, and that shall be to shew you what the Murtherers did after they had committed this Fact. They gave an Account of it the next morning to Mr. Praunce, who went no further than the Sedan went, which was to the Grecian Church: And the Priests were so far from any Remorse, and had so little of Humanity, (I believe there is none can think they had much of Divinity) that they did, in a Paper, set down a Narrative of this heroick Act: And I doubt not, but by this time it is sent to Rome, where it finds as great Approbation, and causes as great Joy as their other Acts of a like Nature have heretofore done. Some Days after the Fact was done, and to their everlasting Honour, thus by themselves recorded, some of these Priests had a meeting at the Queen's-Head at Bow, and there was the Paper produced and read; at which they were very merry, and were so loud, that some of the House overheard them; and do yet remember, that they read, and were merry at, a Paper which concern'd Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey.

My Lord, This will be the Course of our Evidence, and tho' your Lordship and the Jury will easily believe that most of these Particulars must arise from one who was Party to the Fact, yet, my my Lord, I will undertake, before I have done, so to fortify almost every Particular he delivers, with a concurrent Proof of other Testimony, and the Things will so depend upon one another, and have such a Connexion, that little Doubt will remain in any Man's Mind, that is come hither without Prepossession, but that Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was murthered, at Somerset-House, and that the Persons who stand now Indicted for it were the Murtherers.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, if your Lordship pleases, according as Mr. Attorney hath opened it, we desire we may call our Witnesses, and first we will call Mr. Oates.

Cryer. Mr. Oates, lay your Hand on the Book. The Evidence you shall give for our Sovereign Lord the King, against Robert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill, the Prisoners at the Bar, shall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth. So help you God.

Mr. Sol. Gen. (Sir Francis Winnington.) Pray, Mr. Oates, will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account what Transactions there were between you and Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and that, my Lord, is all we call him for.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I call this Gentleman to prove, what Examinations Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey had taken, and what was his own Opinion of himself about them.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, I suppose the Use you make of it is this, to shew, that that might be one of the Motives to these Persons to do this Act, because he was forward in the Discovery of their Plot.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is so, my Lord; and that it was his Opinion himself that he should have some Mischief from them for it.

L. C. J. Come, Mr. Oates, pray tell your Knowledge.

Mr. Oates. My Lord upon the 6th of September last, I did go before Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and there, upon Oath, gave in several Depositions, and after that I had made Oath of those Depositions, we took the Record along with us home again. And on the 28th of September, after we had taken two or three Copies of this Record, we went before Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey again, and Swore all the Copies we had taken, and so made them Records. My Lord, after that, the Business was made known to the Council by my self, and upon Monday, Mr. Godfrey came to me, which was, I think, the 30th of September, and did tell me, what Affronts he had received from some great Persons, (whose Names I name not now) for being so zealous in this Business. And, my Lord, he told me, That others, who were well inclin'd to have the Discovery made, did think that he had not been quick enough in the Prosecution, but had been too remiss, and did threaten him, that they would complain to the Parliament, which was to sit the 21st of October following. My Lord, that Week before Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was missing, he came to me, and told me, that several Popish Lords, some of whom are now in the Tower, had threatned him, and asked him what he had to do with it. My Lord, I shall name their Names when time shall come. My Lord, this is all I can say, He was in a great Fright, and told me, he went in fear of his Life, by the Popish Party, and that he had been dogg'd several Days.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you that he was dogg'd?

Mr. Oates. Yes, he did; and I did then ask him, why he did not take his Man with him, he said, he was a poor weak Fellow: I then ask'd him why he did not get a good brisk Fellow to attend him? but he made no great Matter of it, he said, he did not fear them, if they came fairly to work; but yet he was often threatned, and came sometimes to me to give him some Encouragement, and I did give him what Encouragement I could, That he would suffer in a just Cause, and the like: but he would often tell me, he was in continual Danger of being hurt by them.

Mr. Att. Gen. We desire Mr. Robinson may be sworn. Which was done accordingly.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, Sir, will you tell the Court and the Jury, what Discourse you had with Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and what Apprehensions he had concerning this Business.

Tho. Robinson, Esq; (Chief Prothonotary of the Court of Common-Pleas.) My Lord, Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey and I were of a very ancient Acquaintance for above forty Years; we were bred up together at Westminster-School, and continued in that Acquaintance all along, except in the Times of the War, and were for many Years together in Commission for the Peace, both for this County and this City. We met at the Quarter-Sessions for Westminster, the 7th of October, which was Monday, as I take it, and meeting there, we went, after the Court was up, and Dined with the Head-Bailiff, as the Custom is; where Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey and I did discourse several things about this Plot; I said to Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, I understand you have taken several Examinations about this Plot, that is now made publick: Truly, said he, I have; but I think I shall have little Thanks for my Pains, or some such Words: Saith he, I did it very unwillingly, and would fain have had it done by others. Why, said I, you did but what was your Duty to do, and it was a very good Act: pray, Sir, have you the Examinations about you, will you please to let me see them? No, I have them not, said he; I delivered them to a Person of Quality; but as soon as I have them, you shall see them.

them. But, said I, I should be very glad to understand, Sir Edmund-bury, that the depth of the Matter were found out. I am afraid, said he, of that, that it is not; but discoursing further, he said to me, Upon my Conscience, I believe I shall be the first Martyr. Why so, said I, are you afraid? No, said he, I do not fear them, if they come fairly, and I shall not part with my Life tamely. Why do not you go with a Man, said I, if you have that Fear upon you? Why, said he, I do not love it, 'tis a Clog to a Man. But, said I, you should do well to keep a Man; I observe you never go with one.

Mr. Att. Gen. But did he tell you, Sir, that he did believe he should be the first Martyr?

Mr. Robinson. Yes, he did say, Upon his Conscience, he did believe, he should be the first Martyr: and this is all I can say of this Business.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, if your Lordship please, we will, in the next place, call Mr. Praunce, who was drawn in to be present at this Business, and who knew of all the Fact, and will give you an Account of the whole Matter.

Then Mr. Praunce was Sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, begin at the very Beginning; the Meetings you had at the Plow-Alehouse, and the sending to Sir Edmund-bury's House, and all the Story.

L. C. J. Mr. Praunce, Pray tell us the first Motives that were used to you to do this Thing, and the first Time it was mentioned; who they were that first mentioned it, and where.

Mr. Praunce. My Lord, it was about a Fortnight or three Weeks before he was murdered, we met several Times at the Plow-Alehouse.

L. C. J. With whom?

Mr. Praunce. With Mr. Girald, Mr. Green, and Mr. Kelly. Girald and Kelly did intice me in, and told me it was no Sin.

Mr. Recorder. Girald and Kelly did?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, Girald and Kelly.

Mr. Reccorder. What are they?

Mr. Praunce. Two Priests: And they said, it was no Sin, it was a charitable Act: They said he was a busy Man, and had done, and would do a great deal of Mischief, and it was a Deed of Charity to do it; and so they told the rest besides.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was it they said thus?

Mr. Praunce. They said it at the Plow, and by the Water-side.

Mr. Recorder. Well said, how long was it before he died?

Mr. Praunce. A Week or a Fortnight before he was murdered, and Green, Hill, and Girald met there together.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse had you then?

Mr. Praunce. There they resolved, that the first that could meet with him should give notice to the rest to be ready, and so in the Morning, when they went out on Saturday ——

Mr. Att. Gen. But before you come to that, do you know of any dogging of him into the Fields?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, it was before that, I heard them say, they would, and had dogged him into the Fields.

L. C. J. Who did you hear say so?

Mr. Praunce. Girald, Kelly, and Green.

Mr. Att. Gen. That Green is one of the Prisoners.

Mr. Recorder. Which way did they dog him? what Fields?

Mr. Praunce. Red-Lyon-Fields, and those by Holbourn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why did they not kill him there?

Mr. Praunce. Because they had not Opportunity.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know of any sending to his House, or going to it?

Mr. Praunce. One Time I do know of, and that was Saturday-morning, Mr. Kelly came to give me notice, that they were gone abroad to dog him; and afterwards they told me, that Hill or Green did go to his House and ask for him, but the Maid told him, he was not up, and then went away, and said he would call by and by.

Hill. What time was that in the morning?

Mr. Praunce. It was about nine or ten a Clock in the morning.

Hill. And had we been there before or after?

Mr. Praunce. You had been there before.

Mr. Recorder. Pray stay till such time as we have done with our Evidence, you shall have all free Liberty to ask him any Question; but you must stay till we have done.

Mr. Praunce. As soon as they heard he was within, they came out and staid for his coming out, and dogg'd him.

L. C. J. Did all three of them go to his House?

Mr. Praunce. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who was it did go?

Mr. Praunce. Only one, either Hill or Green.

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Mr. Praunce. They told me so themselves, for they came to give me Notice.

L. C. J. Who told you so?

Mr. Praunce. It was Girald and Green both.

L. C. J. Did Green tell you that he had been there?

Mr. Praunce. He told me one of them, but I am not certain which. And so, my Lord, after that, when he came out they dogg'd him that Day up and down.

Mr. Justice Jones. Who dogg'd him?

Mr. Praunce. Girald, Green, and Hill dogg'd him into St. Clements; and about seven a Clock, Green came and gave me notice, that he was at St. Clements, and I came to Somerset-House as fast as I could.

L. C. J. Where were you?

Mr. Praunce. At my own House.

L. C. J. How far did you live from Somerset-House?

Mr. Praunce. I lived in Princes-street, not far from Somerset-House.

Mr. Recorder. Who was it gave you notice?

Mr. Praunce. It was Green. He told me, that Girald and Kelly were watching him, and that he was at St. Clements.

L. C. J. Where was he?

Mr. Praunce. At St. Clements, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where there?

Mr. Praunce. I was not there; they told me so, and no more: and about eight or nine a Clock, Hill came before, up the Street, and gave us notice that we must be ready. And so, my Lord, as soon as Hill had given us notice, he went up to the Gate, and staid there till Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey came by, and then told him, there were two Men a quarrelling, and desired him to come and try whether he could pacify them; he was very unwilling. But pray, Sir, saith Hill, you being a Justice of the Peace, may qualify them; and so he went down till he came to the bottom of the Rails; and when he came to the bottom of the Rails, Green twisted his Handkerchief, and threw it about his Neck, and threw him behind the Rails, and there throttled him, and punched him, and then Girald would have thrust his Sword through him, but the rest would not permit him, for fear it should discover them by the Blood. And about a quarter of an Hour after, I came down, and found he was not quite dead; for I laid my Hand upon him, and his Legs totttered and shook, and then Green wrung his Neck quite round.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was it that took him by the Neck?

Mr. Praunce. It was Green, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you see him?

Mr. Praunce. No, but he did tell mè afterwards that he did it.

L. C. J. Who, Green himself?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, my Lord, for he boasted of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what did he do to him besides?

Mr. Praunce. He punch'd him with his Knee.

L. C. J. Did you see him do this? how do you know he did it?

Mr. Praunce. He and the rest told me so afterwards.

L. C. J. Where were you, at that time that the Handkerchief was twisted about his Neck?

Mr. Praunce. As soon as I came down I went towards the Gate.

L. C. J. Who ordered you to stand at the Gate?

Mr. Praunce. It was Hill.

Mr. Serj. Stringer. You watch'd the Water-Gate, who watch'd the Stairs?

Mr. Praunce. That was Berry.

Mr. Recorder. Pray give an Account what they did afterwards.

Mr. Praunce. Why afterwards——

Mr. Att. Gen. Who told you that Green twisted his Neck?

Mr. Praunce. All spoke of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Hill?

Mr Praunce. Yes, he and the rest.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to understand that he punch'd his Breast?

Mr. Praunce. Green spoke of it himself, and so did the others.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were about his Body when you came down to the Gate?

Mr. Praunce. All Four.

Mr. Att. Gen. Name them.

Mr. Praunce. Hill, Green, Girald and Kelly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was Berry there?

Mr. Praunce. He came to them a while after.

Mr. Att. Gen. When?

Mr. Praunce. Before they carried him into the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. How can you tell that?

Mr. Praunce. Because he help'd them to carry him in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was Berry before they carried him into the House?

Mr. Praunge. He was about the Stairs.

Mr. Recorder. Who was it that carried him up into the Room?

Mr. Praunce. We all did.

Mr. Recorder. Pray name all that were in the Company.

Mr. Praunce. There was Girald, Green, Hill, Kelly, Berry, and I.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who set their Hands to do it?

Mr. Praunce. We all did help; Hill went before and opened the Door, and we carried him into the Room.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whose Room was that?

Mr. Praunce. It was a Chamber of Hill's, in Dr. Godwin's House.

Mr. Recorder. Was Hill Godwin's man?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, he had been.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did Berry help to carry him in?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, Berry did.

Mr. Serj. Stringer. Was there any Discourse of a Sword to be thrust thro' him at that time?

M. Praunce. Yes, Girald said he would thrust a Sword thro' him, but they would not let him, for fear of Discovery.

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of the Body?

Mr. Praunce. It lay there till Monday Night, and on Monday it was removed into Somerset-House, and upon Monday Night Hill did shew me it with a dark Lanthorn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were in the Room then?

Mr. Praunce. Girald, and Hill, and Kelly, and all were there. And on Tuesday Night it was brought back again: Mr. Hill would have carried him into his own Lodging.

L. C. J. Whither did they carry him on Monday Night?

Mr. Praunce. Into Somerset-House.

Mr. Just. Wild. Is not Hill's Chamber in Somerset-House?

Mr. Serj. Stringer. Describe the Room, Mr. Praunce, as well as you can.

Mr. Praunce. I am not certain of the Room, and so cannot describe it.

Mr. Just. Wild. But was not Hill's Chamber in Somerset-house?

Mr. Praunce. 'Tis in the lower part of the House in a Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you saw him in this Room, pray, what was thrown over him?

Mr. Praunce. There was something, I cannot tell what; for I durst not stay long there.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What Light was there?

Mr. Praunce. Only a Dark Lanthorn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who carried it?

Mr. Praunce. Hill carried it.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Are you sure you saw the Body there?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, I am certain of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of it after that?

Mr. Praunce. On Tuesday Night it was carried to Hill's, the Chamber where he was first brought after he was murdered; but there was some body there, and so they could not carry it into the Room, but they carried him to a Room just over against, I think they were Sir John Arundell's Lodgings, I can't tell. There it lay till Wednesday Night, and about nine a Clock on Wednesday Night they were removing the Body into the Room where it first lay; and I happened to come as they were removing it, and they were affrighted, and run away: But I spoke, and Berry came back again, and got the Body up into the Room, and about Twelve a Clock they carried it away in the Sedan.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who brought the Sedan?

Mr. Praunce. Hill did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who put him into it?

Mr. Praunce. We all set our Hands to it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who carried him out first?

Mr. Praunce. I and Girald.

Mr. Att. Gen. Out of which Gate?

Mr. Prannce. The Upper-Gate of the Upper-Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to have the Gate opened?

Mr. Praunce. Berry opened it.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came he to open it?

Mr. Praunce. Some Body hem'd, and that was the Sign.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was it that carried the Sedan firſt?

Mr. Praunce. I and Girald.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who went before?

Mr. Praunce. Green and Kelly.

Mr. Recorder. How far did you carry him?

Mr. Praunce. Into Convent-Garden; and there we reſted.

Mr. Att. Gen. And who took him up then?

Mr. Praunce. Green and Kelly.

Mr. Att. Gen. How far did they carry him?

Mr. Praunce. They carried him to Long-Acre. Then we took him up, and carried him to So-ho Church, and there Hill met us with an Horſe, and we help'd the Body up.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was it that rid behind him?

Mr. Praunce. It was Hill.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you do with your Sedan?

Mr. Praunce. We ſet it in a new Houſe till we came back again.

L. C. J. You ſay you ſaw him on Horſeback?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. How, in what Poſture?

Mr. Praunce. Aſtride, his Leggs were forced open, and Hill held him up.

Hill. Did I hold him?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, you did.

L. C. J. Did the others go with him?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who did go with him?

Mr. Praunce. Green, Hill, Girald and Kelly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you tell my Lord and the Jury, what Account they gave you the next Morning, concerning the Body, and how they had diſpoſed of it.

Mr. Praunce. They told me ———

L. C. J. Who told you?

Mr. Praunce. Hill, Kelly, and Girald.

L. C. J. What did they tell you?

Mr. Praunce. Firſt, that they had run him thro' with his own Sword; then thrown him into a Ditch, and laid his Gloves, and other things, upon the Bank.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray tell now the Story of your meeting at Bow. What was the Houſe called you met at?

Mr. Praunce. It was the Sign of the Queen's-Head.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was it that did meet there?

Mr. Praunce. They were Prieſts, I can't ſo well remember their Names, they are written down in this Paper.

Mr. Recorder. Look on the Paper your ſelf, you can read, I ſuppoſe.

Mr. Praunce. There was one Luſon a Prieſt, I think.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did he live?

Mr. Praunce. He was with Vernatt.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the occaſion of your meeting there?

Mr. Praunce. Vernatt told me only it was to be merry there.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Man of the Houſe his Name?

Mr. Praunce. One Caſhes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you dine there?

Mr. Praunce. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What had you for Dinner?

Mr. Praunce. We had a Barrel of Oyſters, and a Diſh of Fiſh: I bought the Fiſh my ſelf.

L. C. J. What Day was it?

Mr. Praunce. The Friday after the Proclamation, That all the Papiſts were to be gone out of Town.

Mr. Recorder. Tell what Company you had there, and what Diſcourſe.

Mr. Praunce. There was Mr. Vernatt, and I, and Mr. Girald, and that other Prieſt, and one Mr. Dethicke.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who ſent for him?

Mr. Praunce. Mr. Vernatt ſent a Note for him by a Cobler.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he come upon that Note?

Mr. Praunce. He came preſently. And when he was come, then they read all the Writing of the murder; for Mr. Vernatt ſhould have been one at the doing of it, but ſomething happen'd he could not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Vernatt was very ſorrowful at the reading of it, was he not?

Mr. Praunce. If he was, 'twas becauſe he was not there.

Mr. Att. Gen. How did he behave himſelf? Did he read it with any Pleaſure and Delight?

Mr. Praunce. We were all very merry.

Mr. Att. Gen. What can you ſay about any body's over-hearing you?

Mr. Praunce. There was a Drawer came and liſtned at the Door, and I hearing the Door a little ruſtle, went to the Door, and catch'd him liſtning, and ſaid I to him, Sirrah, I could find in my Heart to kick you down Stairs; and away he went.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Was Vernatt with you there that Night he was murdered, the Saturday Night?

Mr. Praunce. No; there was only the Six I have named.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You ſay that you met at the Plow the firſt Night?

Mr. Praunce. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. And there you were told, That it was a very charitable Act to kill Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, I was ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Was it agreed there that he ſhould be kill'd?

Mr. Praunce. It was agreed there; and the firſt that met him were to give notice to the reſt.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Who were there?

Mr. Praunce. Girald, Kelly, Green and I.

L. C. J. When came Hill and Berry into this Cauſe? How came they acquainted with it?

Mr. Praunce. They were in it before I.

L. C. J. Who told you they were in it?

Mr. Praunce. Mr. Girald, my Lord, told me ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Hill and Berry were not at the Plow, where did you firſt hear them ſpeak of it?

Mr. Praunce. Girald and I have been at Berry's Houſe divers Times.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But there were two meetings at the Plow, were there not?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, there were.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. And Hill was at the laſt meeting, was he not?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, he was, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now I would ask you this Queſtion, by the Favour of the Court, was there any Reward propoſed by theſe Prieſts for the doing of it?

Mr. Praunce, Girald and Vernatt did ſpeak of a great Reward that was to be given for it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, how much?

Mr. Praunce. I do not remember what.

Mr. Att. Gen. Cannot you tell how much?

Mr. Praunce. There was to be a good Reward, from my Lord Bellaſis, as they ſaid.

Mr. Juſt.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. You had ſeveral meetings, you ſay: Did you there reſolve what ſhould be the way of doing it?

Mr. Praunce. Girald was reſolv'd to kill him that Night; and if he could not get him into a more convenient Place, he would kill him with his own Sword, in the Street that leads to his own Houſe.

Mr. Record. Who was that, that reſolved ſo?

Mr. Praunce. It was Girald.

Mr. Record. The Prieſt, rather than fail, was reſolved to do that Act of Charity himſelf.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would now ask you a Queſtion, which though it does not prove the Perſons guilty, yet gives a great ſtrength to the Evidence. Do you know Mr. Bedlow, Mr. Praunce?

Mr. Praunce. I do now know him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you ever any Conference with him before you was committed to Priſon?

Mr. Praunce. Never, in all my Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you ever in his Company in your Life before, that you know of?

Mr. Praunce. No, not that I remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, you ſhall ſee how far he will agree with you.

Mr. Record. Now they may ask him any Queſtions, if they pleaſe, for we have done with him.

L. C. J. Let them if they will.

Hill. My Lord, In the firſt place I humbly pray that Mr. Praunce's Evidence may not ſtand good againſt me, as being perjured by his own Confeſſion.

L. C. J. How?

Hill. I ſuppoſe, my Lord, it is not unknown to you that he made ſuch an open Confeſſion before the King.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, I will tell you for that, I do not know that ever he made a Confeſſion to contradict what he had ſaid upon his Oath.

Hill. He was upon his Oath before.

L. C. J. Yes, he had accuſed you upon Oath, but afterwards, you ſay, he confeſſed that it was not true: but that Confeſſion that it was not true, was not upon Oath: How is he then guilty of Perjury?

Hill. My Lord, if a Man can ſwear a thing, and after deny it, he is certainly perjured.

L. C. J. If a Man hath great horrors of Conſcience upon him, and is full of Fears, and the Guilt of ſuch a thing diſorders his Mind, ſo as to make him go back from what he had before diſcovered upon Oath, you can't ſay that Man is perjured, if he don't forſwear it: But I believe no Body did believe his denial, becauſe his firſt diſcovery was ſo particular, that every Man did think his general Denial did only proceed from the diſturbance of his Mind. But have you any mind to ask him any Queſtions?

Mr. Record. We can prove, that immediately after he retracted his Recantation.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Try if you can trap him in any Queſtion.

Hill. Pray, what Hour was it that I went to Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's?

Mr. Praunce. About nine or ten a clock, I am not certain in the hour.

L. C. J. No, no, a man cannot be preciſe to an hour; but prove you what you can.

Hill. I have a great many Witneſſes beſides the Juſtice of my Cauſe, that I was not out of my Houſe that day.

L. C. J. You ſhall be heard for that, but the preſent matter is, Whether you will ask him any Queſtions or no?

Hill. My Lord, 'tis all falſe that he ſays, and I deny every word of it, and I hope it ſhall not be good againſt me.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Berry, will you ask him any Queſtions?

Berry. Mr. Praunce, who was in my Houſe at that time you ſpeak of?

Mr. Praunce. There was your Wife there, and ſeveral other Perſons beſides.

Berry. Who were they?

Mr. Praunce. There were divers People, it is an Alehouſe.

Berry. But who? Can you name any of them?

Mr. Praunce. There was Girald, and Kelly, and I.

L. C. J. Why, did you not all know Mr. Praunce?

Berry. My Lord, I knew him as he paſs'd up and down in the Houſe.

L. C. J. Why, what an Anſwer is that? what do you mean by his paſſing up and down in the Houſe? Did you never drink with him?

Berry. Drink with him, my Lord? Yes.

L. C. J. Yes? Why People don't uſe to drink as they go along.

Berry. It was in other Company that came to my Houſe, no acquaintance of mine.

L. C. J. Was not Mr. Praunce known by you all three? Which of you can deny it? What ſay you Hill?

Hill. My Lord, I did know him.

L. C. J. What ſay you Green?

Green. Yes I did know him?

Mr. Att. Gen. But yet my Lord, we ſhall prove in the Courſe of our Evidence, that upon their Examinations, they did deny they ever knew him; But becauſe the Priſoners give us this Occaſion, I deſire Mr. Praunce may give an Account of one thing. He was concerned in this very Fact, and there was no other way to get any proof of it, than by the diſcovery of one among themſelves. He was once of that Religion, or elſe he had never been concerned in this thing. And your Lordſhip will find, that Mr. Praunce, while he was of that Religion, and not ſure of his Pardon, was under ſome Diſturbances and Fears, which prevailed with him to come before the King, and deny what he had Sworn. But, my Lord, which is very obſervable, this Gentleman that had made that denial before the King, was ſo far Convinc'd, that he had done amiſs in it, and ſo troubled that he had done it, that he deſired Capt. Richardſon (as ſoon as he returned back to Priſon) to carry him back to the King again: for he muſt go back, and make good that Confeſſion which he at firſt had made; For it was every word true. And being for the King, we deſire Capt. Richardſon may be Sworn.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Can you tell where Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was dogg'd.

Mr. Praunce. No my Lord, I cannot.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. You ſay they did tell you, that they Dogg'd him up and down; Did not they tell you from whence they Dogg'd him, when they kill'd him;

Mr. Praunce. No they did not.

L. C. Juſt. Mr. Richardſon, were you by when Mr. Praunce denied all that he had confeſſed?

Capt. Richardſon. My Lord, upon the Sunday Night before the Prorogation of the laſt Parliament, I received a Letter from one of the Lords of the Council, to bring up Mr. Praunce before the Lords of the Committee for his Examination.

When

When I brought him thither, I found Mr. Praunce was diſturbed, and deſired to ſpeak with the King; and I carried him into the King's Cloſet, where he fell down on his Knees, and ſaid, He was Innocent, and they were all Innocent; and that was the Subſtance of all he ſaid. I then had him up to the Council, where he ſaid the ſame thing. The Lords asked him, Whether any body had been tampering with him, he anſwered, No. My Lord, when I came home, I was no ſooner got within the Doors, but he begg'd of me (for God's ſake) to go back to the King, and to acquaint him, not only that what he had now ſaid, was falſe; but that all which he had ſworn before, was truth. And if His Majeſty would ſend him a Pardon, he would make a great diſcovery. And, my Lord, more than that, he ſaid, It was Fear, that made him recant; and he gave a full ſatisfaction, that it was only out of an Apprehenſion that his Life was not ſecure, that his Trade would be loſt among the Roman Catholicks; and in caſe he had his Pardon, and were Saved, he ſhould have been in danger of being Murthered by them.

L. C. J. Now you have an Account Mr. Hill how he came to deny, and how ſoon he recanted his denial.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You are upon your Oath Mr. Praunce, Is this all true that he hath ſaid?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, my Lord, it is.

Mr Recorder. How hath he behaved himſelf ſince that time?

Capt. Richardſon. As ſoberly as can be, ſince he had his Pardon.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, ſince that time, have you had any Diſcourſe with him? And how did he carry himſelf?

Capt. Richardſon. Very ſoberly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he expreſs any Abhorrence of the Practice of that Church?

Capt. Richardſon. Yes, my Lord, he did ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. I hope it will make all People abhor and forſake them in time, if theſe be their Practiſes. In the next place, my Lord, we will call Mr. Bedlow, who, tho' he was not preſent at the Murther, yet he ſaw the Body after it was dead in Somerſet-Houſe, which goes to the Matter as to the Place; and he will give you ſome Circumſtances which will very much corroborate the Teſtimony of Mr. Praunce.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. What time was it before they carried him in, after they had kill'd him.

L. C. J. Brother, I think they ſay, between eight and nine they decoy'd him down thro' the Water-Gate. Was it not ſo?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. How long had they kill'd him before they carried him into the Room?

Mr. Praunce. About a quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Had he his Sword about him?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, it was found run thro' him.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Did Sir Edmund-bnry Godfrey himſelf draw his Sword?

Mr. Praunce. No, he was ſtrangled by Surpriſe, by getting a Thing about his Neck, and prevented him of drawing his Sword.

L. C. J. They were Perſons that were ready prepared for him, they would not permit him to defend himſelf.

Mr. Serj. Stringer. My Lord, Before Mr. Bedlow be Sworn, I deſire a little to open what we call him to. My Lord, there were four Prieſts that did deſign this Murder; Le Faire, and Welſh, and Girald, and Kelly, beſides the other Prieſts; and they treated with Mr. Bedlow for Four Thouſand Pounds, to undertake to kill a Gentleman. My Lord, He did promiſe to undertake it, but failing of his Promiſe, afterwards Le Faire met him, and told him it was done: and told him he ſhould have half that Reward to help to carryhim off; and withal, carried him into the Room where the Body was. And he will tell you, that Praunce was in the Room when he ſaw him; and tho' he never knew Praunce before, yet when he met with him in the Lobby of the Lords Houſe, he knew him again, and charged him as the Man that committed this Fact. And he will acquaint your Lordſhip, that Le Faire ſaw the Body likewiſe, and gave Mr. Bedlow an account of the Murder, with the ſame Circumſtances that Praunce now relates it.

Then Mr. Bedlow was Sworn.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Bedlow, Pray do you direct your Diſcourſe to the Jury.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Pray do you ask him your Queſtions, that you may put him in that method you would have him take, to give his Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would firſt ask him this Queſtion: What Conference he had with any Perſons, Prieſts or others, about murdering any Body?

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord and the Jury, I have at other Times, and in other Places, proved what Familiarity I have had with the Prieſts and Jeſuits; and if I have not ſatisfied the Court, and others, about it, yet I have done my Duty in endeavouring ſo to do. My Lord, I have been ſeveral times treated with, not only about the Plot, but be ſeveral Perſons about murdering of a Gentleman. They never told me who it was that was to be murdered; but if I would undertake it, they, that is, Le Faire and Prichard, and Mr. Kaines, and ſeveral other Prieſts, who diſcourſed with me about it, would find out ſome to aſſiſt me, and my Reward ſhould be very conſiderable.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Bedlow. It was in October laſt, about the beginning, or latter end of September.

L. C. J. Well, Sir, Go on.

Mr. Bedlow. I did adhere to them all along, for I had a mind to Diſcover two Years ago, but was prevented; and I only drill'd them on, to know the Party, that I might prevent them. But they would never diſcover the Party.

Mr. Att. Gen. Prithee come to this particular part of the Story.

Mr. Bedlow. Afterwards they ſet me to inſinuate my ſelf into the Acquaintance of Sir Edmund-Godfrey, not telling me they had a Deſign upon him.

L. C. J. Who did?

Mr. Bedlow. Le Faire, and Pritchard, and Welſh.

L. C. J. Girald was not one, was he?

Mr. Bedlow. No, my Lord: But they told me, that afterwards they would have me introduce them into his Acquaintance: And I had been, I think, ſix or ſeven Days together with Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, at his Houſe; and had got much into his Acquaintance.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. By what means did you get into his Acquaintance?

Mr. Bedlow. Why, I pretended to get Warrants for the Good Behaviour againſt Perſons, that there were none ſuch.

L. C. J. Well, and what then?

Mr. Bed-

Mr. Bedlow. This was the Week before the Saturday that he was kill'd; and I was there every Day but Saturday: On the Friday I went to the Greyhound-Tavern, and I ſent my Boy to ſee if Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey were at home: Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was not at home then.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Bedlow. The very Day before he was kill'd: If he had been at home, I would have gone over to him, and would have deſired him to go over to them.

L. C. J. Were the Prieſts there?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, my Lord, there was Pritchard, and Le Faire, and Welſh, and Kaines, and another; five Jeſuits: And, as I ſaid, I ſent my Boy to ſee if he were at home, and he brought me word he was not; and if he had, I was to have gone to him, to have fetch'd him thither, that they might inſinuate themſelves into his Acquaintance: And indeed, they had Tongue enough to wheedle themſelves into any ones Acquaintance: So he not being at home, we came into the City, two of the Jeſuits and I.

Mr. Att. Gen. Which two?

Mr. Bedlow. Le Faire and Welſh: The next Morning Le Faire came to my Chamber, and I was not then within; but by accident I met him, about Four of the Clock in Lincolns-Inn-Fields: We went to the Palſgraves-Head-Tavern; where falling into Diſcourſe, he told me there was a Gentleman that was to be put out of the way; that was the Phraſe he uſed, he did not really ſay murder him; for they don't count it murder.

L. C. J. No, no, they put it into ſofter Terms.

Mr. Bedlow. They told me it was to be done to Night. I asked who it was, they ſaid it was a very material Man: For he had all the Informations that Mr. Oates and Dr. Tongue had given in; that ſeveral had been imployed in the doing of it, that ſeveral Attempts had been made, and that they had miſs'd ſeveral Opportunities, and had not done it till then; but if he ſhould not be taken out of the way, and the Papers taken from him, the buſineſs would be ſo obſtructed, and go near to be diſcovered, to that Degree, that they would not be able to bring this Deſign to paſs, but muſt ſtay till another Age before they ſhould Effect it. I asked him again, who it was, he ſaid he would not tell me, but it was a very material Man. I told him, that according to my Promiſe I would Aſſiſt; but in ſuch a Caſe, I ſhould need a great many Men to be with me, he being ſo conſiderable a Perſon. I asked him then, where the Mony was, that was formerly promiſed? he told me no worſe a Man was Engaged for it, than my Lord Bellaſis, and Mr. Coleman had order to pay it.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What was that Reward?

Mr. Bedlow. Four Thouſand Pounds.

L. C. J. Who was it that firſt named this Gentleman to you to be Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey?

Mr. Bedlow. They never named him to me at all.

L. C. J. Let us know when you firſt knew it to be Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey.

Mr. Bedlow. I parted with him then, but came not according to my promiſe. I was to meet him at the Cloyſters at Sommeſet-Houſe that Night; but I knew their Deſign was to murder ſome Body, and I would not come. I ſaw him no more till Monday Night, then I met him in Red-Lyon-Court, where he put up his Cane to his Noſe; as who ſhould ſay, I was to blame in not keeping my Promiſe. And we went together to the Greyhound-Tavern in Fleet-ſtreet, where he charged me with my breach of Promiſe. I told him I was taken up by other Company, and unleſs they would tell me who it was I was to kill, I would have no hand in it: For I did not know but that it might be my own particular Friend. And I would not murder any private Perſon, unleſs I knew who it was, and for what Reaſon. Well, ſays he, we will tell you more anon if you meet me to Night at Somerſet-Houſe, at Nine a Clock. I did meet him exactly at that time in the Cloyſters, where we walk'd and talk'd a great while. And then he took me into the middle of the Court, and told me, you have done ill, that you did not help in this buſineſs; but if you will help to carry him off, you ſhall have half the Reward. Why, ſaid I, Is he Murdered? Yes, ſaid he; May not I ſee him, ſaid I? Yes, you may, ſaid he; and ſo took me by the hand, and led me into the Room through a dark Entry. In the Room were a great many, I can't tell who they all were.

Mr. Att. Gen. How many were there?

Mr. Bedlow. There might ſtand a great many behind one another. I ſaw Four or Five.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What kind of Light had they, Mr. Praunce?

Mr. Praunce. It was a middle-ſized Lanthorn.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Was it a ſmall Light, or a great Light?

Mr. Bedlow. It was a ſmall Light.

Mr. Juſtice Jones. Had they no Light but that Lanthorn?

Mr. Bedlow. No: And they did not open it till I had had a turn about the Room.

L. C. J. Did they diſcourſe of carrying him away then?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, they did.

L. C. J. Did you know him, when he lay dead there?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, your Lordſhip ſhall hear how I came to know him: One ſtep'd to the Body, and threw off the Thing that lay upon him, and I went and look'd upon him; and he had got about his Neck ſuch a kind of a faſhion'd Crevat as this about my Neck; and I went to try, and could not get my Finger in betwixt: So I ſaw him, his Boſom was all open, and I knew him preſently; For thoſe Jeſuits that were there, were not thoſe who had employed me to inſinuate my ſelf into his Acquaintance; and ſo they thought I had not known him. I asked who it was, they ſaid it was a Man that belong'd to a Perſon of Quality. I was mightily ſtruck and daunted when I knew him: I would fain have perſwaded them to have tied Weights at his Head and Feet, and thrown him into the River; and afterwards I would have dragg'd for him, and took him up there. But they did not think that ſo ſafe: No (ſaid they) we will put it upon himſelf, there are none but Friends concerned. I asked Le Faire how they would get him out? They ſaid, In a Chair. Then I asked them, which way they would get him into the Chair, and out of the Gate: They ſaid the Porter was to ſit up to let them out.

Mr. Recorder. What Porter?

Mr. Bedlow. The Porter of the Houſe.

Mr. Recorder. Who, Berry?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes. As for that Hill, or the Old Man, I do not know that I ever had any particular Knowledge of them; but only I looked upon them as ill-deſigning men, ſeeing them in the Chapel.

L. C. J. Did you ſee e'er a one of the three Priſoners there at that Time?

Mr. Bed-

Mr. Bedlow. No, my Lord: But I have ſuch a Remembrance of Faces, that I could tell, if I ſaw them again, any that I did ſee there, tho' the Light was but ſmall. They told me, They had ſtrangled him; but how, I did not know. When they preſs'd me to help to carry him out, I then Excuſed my ſelf, and ſaid, It was too early to carry him out yet; but about Eleven or Twelve a Clock would be a better Time. And I aſſured them I would come again. Said Le Faire to me, Upon the Sacrament you took on Thurſday, you will be at the carrying off of this Man at Night. I promiſed him I would. And he went away, and left me there. I made what Speed away I could, for I was very unſatisfied in my ſelf; having ſo great a Charge upon me, as the Sacrament of the Altar, which, after the Diſcovery of the Plot, was adminiſtred to me twice a Week to conceal it, I could not tell how to diſcover: I went then to Briſtol, but very reſtleſs and diſturbed in my mind; and being perſuaded by what God was pleaſed to put into my mind, calling to Remembrance, that ſome Murders had been already committed, and greater ones were daily intended, I was at laſt convinc'd, and could no longer forbear Diſcovery. I wrote to the Secretary of it, and went to the Parliament and gave in my Information. And one Day I met with Mr. Praunce in the Lobby, and knew him, and apprehended him.

Mr. Att. Gen. I will ask you one Queſtion, Had you any Diſcourſe with Mr. Praunce between the Time you ſaw him with the Body, and the Day he was apprehended?

Mr. Bedlow. No; I never ſaw him to this Day, to have any Converſe with him.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Did not you ſee Hill that Night, when you were to have carried him away?

Mr. Bedlow. No, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Nor Green, nor Berry?

Mr. Bedlow. Green I did ſee about the Court, and Berry, I was told, was to open the Gate that Monday Night. But, my Lord, when they found I did not come again, they deſiſted that Night, and kept it off longer, for fear I ſhould come again to ſtop them.

Mr. Att. Gen. He did not refuſe to help them, but promiſed to do it, and failed: And they finding that he had failed them, would not let the Body lie where it was for fear of Diſcovery, but removed it back again.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. VVhat did Praunee ſay, when you firſt took notice of him?

Mr. Bedlow. I underſtood afterwards that he was taken upon Suſpicion, becauſe at that time, his Maid had made a Diſcovery, that he was about that Time out of his Lodgings. And while he was there in the Conſtable's Hands, Mr. Oates came by, and he deſired to ſee him; and preſently after I came thither, and the Conſtable asked him, Mr. Praunce, will you ſee Mr. Bedlow? No, he ſaid, he would not: Then he put his Hat over his Eyes, that I might not ſee his Face, and kept it ſo. The Preſs being great, and being deſirous to be private my ſelf, I ſpoke to the Guard to put all out that had no Buſineſs there, and they cried out, that all ſhould avoid the Room, but Mr. Bedlow and his Friends. And when he was going out with the reſt, he lift up his Hat, to ſee his VVay; and tho' before I did not mind him, yet I happened at his paſſing by me to caſt my Eyes upon his Face, and preſently knew him, and cried, Oh! pray, Sir, ſtay; you are one of my Friends that muſt ſtay here. And I preſently charged my Guards to take Charge of him. Saith the Conſtable, he is my Priſoner: Is he ſo, ſaid I? Then you have a very good Priſoner, and pray look ſafe to him. And then when I went into the Houſe of Lords, I made out my Charge againſt him.

Mr. Recorder. Now if the Priſoners have any Queſtions to ask Mr. Bedlow, they may have free Liberty to do it.

Hill. I never ſaw him before in my Life.

L. C. J. Do you know any of them?

Mr. Bedlow. I know Mr. Berry and Green very well.

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Praunce, was the Dark-Lanthorn at Hill's Lodging, or at the other Place?

Mr. Praunce. At the other Place.

L. C. J. Look you here, Mr. Praunce, they carried him to Hill's on Saturday Night, and he lay there till Monday Night: VVhat time on Monday Night was it that they removed him into Somerſet-Houſe?

Mr. Praunce. I was not there when they did remove him.

L. C. J. VVhat Time did you ſee him there?

Mr. Praunce. About Nine or Ten a Clock.

L. C. J. VVhat Time was it that you ſaw him there, Mr. Bedlow?

Mr. Bedlow. It was after Nine, my Lord.

Mr. Praunce. They had then removed him to Somerſet-houſe, and Mr. Hill asked what they intended to do with the Body? They ſaid, They would carry it out that Night; but they did not. But there the Dark-Lanthorn was, and on Tueſday Night they removed him back again.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, my Lord, if you pleaſe, we ſhall go on to call ſome Witneſſes that were not preſent at the Murder; for direct Evidence, as to that, can come only out of the mouth of ſome that were concerned in it; but to corroborate, by concurrent Circumſtances, the Teſtimony which hath been already given. And firſt we ſhall call the Conſtable, to prove that he found Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey in the Fields, in the ſame manner which Mr. Praunce ſays they told him they left him.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, you promiſed you would prove, that when theſe Perſons were examined, they did deny before the Houſe of Lords that they knew Praunce.

Mr. Atten. Gen. My Lord, in that we were miſtaken, I underſtand now, it was only Berry denied that he did know Girald.

L. C. J. VVhy, did you never know Mr. Girald?

Berry. Never in my Life.

L. C. J. Mr. Praunce, have not you ſeen Girald with Berry?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, I have, but they uſually went by ſeveral Names.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee Girald in Hill's Company?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, that I have.

L. C. J. VVas there no Centinel ſet that Monday Night, that Saturday Night, and that Wedneſday Night?

Mr. Praunce. My Lord, I am not certain, I took notice of none; if there were any, they were at Berry's Houſe, and he opened the Gate, when we came out with the Sedan.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Berry, I ſuppoſe, could take Order with the Centinel, and give them ſome Entertainment in his own Lodge.

Then Mr. Brown the Conſtable was Sworn.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, in what Poſture did you find Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey?

Mr. Brown. I found him, my Lord, in a Ditch, with his Sword through him, and the end of it was two Handfuls out of his Back.

L. C. J. Was he Bloody?

Mr. Brown. There was no Blood at all, there was no Blood in the Ditch.

L. C. J. VVas the Sword ſticking in his Body?

Mr. Brown. Yes, My Lord, but there was no Blood at all when it was taken out; they had run it into another place, but that happened to be againſt a Rib, and ſo it could not go thro'; but there was no Blood there.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. VVas there any Bruiſes on his Breaſt?

Mr. Brown. He did look black about the Breaſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would ask, whether his Neck were broken?

Mr. Brown. Yes, I ſuppoſe it was.

L. C. J. How do you know it?

Mr. Brown. It was very weak, and one might turn his Head from one Shoulder to the other.

L. C. J. VVhere was his Stick and Gloves?

Mr. Brown. They were on the Bank-ſide.

L. C. J. VVhoſe Sword was it?

Mr. Brown. His Servants ſaid it was his own.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, had he any Money in his Pocket?

Mr. Brown. Yes; a great deal of Gold and Silver.

L. C. J. Ay, Ay, for they count Theft Sin, but not Murder.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. They left that, to let Men think he murdered himſelf.

L. C. J. Well, will you ask this VVitneſs any Queſtions before he goes?

Capt. Richardſon. They ſay they will ask him none.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we deſire to call the Chirurgeons that view'd and opened the Body, Mr. Skillard, and Mr. Cambridge; both whom were ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. VVe begin with Mr. Skillard, Pray, Sir, inform my Lord and the Jury, Did you ſee the Body of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey?

Mr. Skillard. Yes, I did view the Body.

Mr. Att. Gen. VVhen? what time did you ſee it?

Mr. Skillard. About Twelve of the Clock.

Mr. Att. Gen. VVhat Day of the VVeek was it?

Mr. Skillard. On Friday, the next Day after he was found.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you obſerve his Breaſt? how was it?

Mr. Skillard. His Breaſt was all beaten with ſome obtuſe Weapon, either with the Feet, or Hands, or ſomething.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you obſerve his Neck?

Mr. Skillard. Yes; it was diſtorted.

Mr. Att. Gen. How far?

Mr. Skillard. You might have taken the Chin, and have ſet it upon either Shoulder.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you obſerve the Wound?

Mr. Skillard. Yes, I did: it went in at one place, and ſtopp'd at a Rib, the other place it was quite thro' the Body.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you think he was killed by that Wound?

Mr. Skillard. No; for then there would have been ſome Evacuation of Blood, which there was not. And beſides, his Boſom was open, and he had a Flannel VVaſtcoat and a Shirt on; and neither thoſe, nor any of his Cloaths were penetrated.

Mr. Att. Gen. But are you ſure his Neck had been broken?

Mr. Skillard. Yes, I am ſure.

Mr. Att. Gen. Becauſe ſome have been of Opinion, that he hanged himſelf, and his Relations, to ſave his Eſtate, run him through; I would deſire to ask the Chirurgeon what he thinks of it.

Mr. Skillard. There was more done to his Neck than an ordinary Suffocation; the Wound went thro' his very Heart, and there would have appeared ſome Blood, if it had been done quickly after his Death.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did it appear by the View of the Body that he was ſtrangled or hanged?

Mr. Skillard. He was a lean Man, and his Muſcles, if he had died of the Wound, would have been turgid: And then again, all ſtrangled People never ſwell, becauſe there is a ſudden Deprivation of all the Spirits, and a hindring of the Circulation of the Blood.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long do you believe he might be dead before you ſaw him?

Mr. Skillard. I believe four or five Days. And they might have kept him a Week, and he never ſwell'd at all, being a lean Man. And when we rip'd him up, he began for to putrify, we made two Inciſions to give it vent, and the Liquor that was in his Body did a little ſmell. The very lean Fleſh was ſo near turned into Putrefaction, that it ſtuck to the Inſtrument when we cut it.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, here is another Chirurgeon, Mr. Cambridge; Pray, Sir, are you Sworn?

Mr. Cambridge. Yes, I am.

Mr. Recorder. When did you ſee the Body of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey?

Mr. Cambridge. Upon Friday, the very ſame Day the Gentleman did. I found his Neck diſlocated, and his Breaſt very much beaten and bruiſed. And I found two Punctures under his left Pap, the one went againſt the Rib, the other quite through the Body, under the left Pap.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you believe that Wound was the Occaſion of his Death?

Mr. Cambridge. No, I believe it was given him after his Death.

L. C. J. And his Neck was broke?

Mr. Cambridge. His Neck was diſlocated, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why, that is broken. Now, my Lord, we ſhall call Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's Maid, Elizabeth Curtis. Swear her. Which was done.

Mr. Recorder. Your Lordſhip knows, that Mr. Praunce did ſay in the beginning, that they had been ſeveral times at his Houſe, enquiring for him: now we call this Perſon to tell you what ſhe knows about that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Elizabeth Curtis, look upon the Priſoners, and tell my Lord and the Jury whether you know any of them or no.

Elizabeth Curtis. This Man, that I now hear called Green, my Lord, was at my Maſter's about a Fortnight before he died.

L. C. J. What to do?

Eliz. Curtis. I don't know, but he asked for Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey.

L. C. J. What time of the Day was it?

Eliz. Curtis. It was in the Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he ſay?

Eliz. Curtis. He asked for Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and when he came to him, he ſaid, Good morrow, Sir, in Engliſh, and afterwards ſpoke to him in French, I could not underſtand him.

Mr. Recorder. I deſire ſhe may conſider well, and look upon him.

Eliz. Curtis. That is the Man.

Green. Upon my Soul I never ſaw him in all my Life.

Eliz. Curtis. He had a darker coloured Perriwig when he was there, and was about a quarter of an Hour talking with my Maſter.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you ſure this was the Man?

Eliz. Curtis. Yes, I am; and that other Man, Hill, was there that Saturday Morning, and did ſpeak with him before he went out.

L. C. J. That you will deny too?

Hill. Yes, I do.

L. C. J. How do you know he was there?

Eliz. Curtis. I was in the Parlour at that Time, making up the Fire.

L. C. J. Had you ever ſeen him before that Time?

Eliz. Curtis. No, never before that Time. I went into the Parlour to carry my Maſter's Breakfaſt, and brought a Bunch of Keys with me in, and there Hill was with him. And I went up Stairs about ſome Buſineſs, and came down again, wanting the Keys, which I had left upon the Table; and Hill was all that Time with my Maſter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How do you know he was there?

Eliz. Curtis. I was in the Parlour, and ſtirred up the Fire, and he was there a good while.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How long after did you ſee him again?

E. Curtis. Not till I ſaw him in Newgate.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. How long was that afterwards?

E. Curtis. A Month ago. But it is not the Man that brought the Note to my Maſter.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Note?

E. Curtis. A Note that a Man brought to my Maſter that Night before.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is become of that Note?

Eliz. Curtis. My Lord, I cannot tell, my Maſter had it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Prithee tell us the Story of it.

E. Curtis. There was a Man came to my Maſter's Houſe, and asked if Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey were within. He ſaid he had a Letter for him; and ſhewed it me, it was tied up in a knot. I told him my Maſter was within, but buſy; but, ſaid I, if you pleaſe, I will carry it in to him: he did ſo, and I gave it to my Maſter; when I went out again, the Man ſtaid and asked for an Anſwer: I went in again, and told my Maſter, that the Man required an Anſwer. Prithee, ſaid he, tell him I don't know what to make of it.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. When was that?

Eliz. Curtis. On Friday Night.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. When? The Friday Night before he was murdered?

Eliz. Curtis. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you ſwear that Hill was there the Saturday morning?

Eliz. Curtis. Yes, he was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what Cloaths was he then?

Eliz. Curtis. The ſame Cloaths that he hath now.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Are you ſure they are the ſame Cloaths?

Eliz. Curtis. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Here is a great Circumſtance, my Lord. I asked her what Cloaths he was in, when he came to Sir Edmund-bury's? and ſhe ſaith, the ſame that he hath now.

L. C. J. Have you ever ſhifted your Cloaths?

Hill. No indeed, I have not.

Eliz. Curtis. But for the Man that brought the Note, I cannot Swear it is he.

Hill. But ſhe did ſay, when ſhe came to ſee me in Newgate, that ſhe never ſaw me in my Life; and, my Lord, I hope I have ſufficient Witneſſes to prove where I was that Morning.

L. C. J. She ſays, ſhe cannot ſwear you were the Man that brought the Note.

Hill. My Lord, I deſire ſhe will tell me about what time it was I was there.

Eliz. Curtis. It was about nine or ten a Clock.

Mr. Att. Gen. That agrees with Mr. Praunce's exactly in point of Time. Now, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, we will proceed, and call Mr. Lancellot Stringer, and Mr. Vincent.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, we do call theſe Witneſſes to prove, that theſe Men had meetings with Mr. Praunce at the Plow.

Then was Lancellot Stringer Sworn.

Mr. Recorder. Pray tell my Lord and the Jury, whether you know Mr. Praunce.

L. Stringer. Yes, Sir, I do.

Mr. Recorder. Have you ſeen him at the Plow at any time?

L. Stringer. Yes, Sir, I have.

Mr. Recorder. In what Company there? Was Mr. Green there?

L. Stringer. Yes, he was.

Mr. Recorder. Which was he. He points to him.

Mr. Recorder. And who elſe?

L. Stringer. There was that Hill.

Mr. Att. Gen. How often?

L. Stringer. Several times.

L. C. J. How long before Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was murdered?

L. Stringer. I cannot tell, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do you remember any other Company was with him?

L. Stringer. Yes, there were ſeveral other Company.

Mr. Recorder. Name them.

L. Stringer. There was Mr. Fitz-Girald and Mr. Hill.

Mr. Att. Gen. And yet Hill ſaith he never ſaw Girald.

L. Stringer. And there was Kelly, he was another of them, and Praunce.

L. C. J. Did you know Vernatt?

L. Stringer. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. How now? What ſay you to it, Mr. Hill, and Mr. Green? Were you never at the Plow, drinking with Mr. Praunce?

Hill. Yes, my Lord, ſeveral Times.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Green?

Green. I have drank with him there.

L. C. J. Do you know Girald?

Hill. I know one Girald.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now will your Lordſhip pleaſe to let me prove, that at the Council he owned he knew Girald and Kelly, and now 'tis proved he hath been in Kelly's Company, he ſays, he does not know Girald.

Hill. My Lord, that was a miſtake, for I do know Kelly by ſight, that is, I knew two Men that uſed the Chapel very much, and he was one of them.

L. C. J. But you, Witneſs, ſay you have ſeen Girald and them together?

L. Stringer. Yes, I have.

L. C. J. How many times?

L. Stringer. I cannot tell how many, my Lord, ſeveral Times.

L. C. J. Have you ſeen them twice together?

L. Stringer. Yes, I have.

Mr. Recorder. Now to ſettle it, I would ask him, with your Lordſhip's Favour, when he came to live with his Maſter. You, young Man, when did you come to live with your Maſter at the Plow?

L. Stringer. Why, I have been with him two Years?

Mr. Recorder. But when was it you came laſt to live at the Plow?

L. Stringer. In Bartholomew-tide laſt.

Mr. Recorder. It was but five Weeks before Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was murdered.

L. C. J. Do you, Green, know Mr. Girald?

Green. Yes, I do.

Mr. Recorder. Then pray Swear Mr. Vincent. Which was done.

Mr. Recorder. Come, pray Sir, do you live at the Plow?

Vincent. Yes, Sir, I do.

Mr. Recorder. Then pray, do you tell my Lord and the Jury, if you know any of the Priſoners at the Bar, and which of them?

Vincent. I know Mr. Green.

Mr. Recorder. Do you know any body elſe?

Vincent. Yes, I know Hill, and I know Mr. Berry.

Mr. Recorder. Have you ſeen theſe Perſons at your Houſe?

Vincent. Yes, I have.

L. C. J. With whom?

Vincent. I can't tell every body with whom they were.

L. C. J. Were they there with Praunce?

Vincent. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Did you know one Girald?

Vincent. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Hath he been at your Houſe?

Vincent. Yes, Sir, he hath.

L. C. J. Who was with him?

Vincent. I can't tell juſtly.

L. C. J. Did you know Kelly?

Vincent. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Hath he been there?

Vincent. Yes, he hath.

L. C. J. In what Company?

Vincent. With Praunce.

L. C. J. And with any of the Priſoners?

Vincent. Yes, but I can't tell particularly with whom.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, my Lord, as theſe were meetings before the Fact was committed, to conſult how to do it; ſo we at the Beginning told you of a meeting after it was done, and that was at Bow. We ſhall therefore call ſome Witneſſes as to that; and they are Richard Cary, and William Evans. Firſt ſwear Richard Cary. [Which was done.

Mr. Recorder. Do you remember you were ſent of a meſſage from the Queen's-Head at Bow, and whither? Pray tell my Lord and the Jury.

Cary. I remember it very well; there were three Gentlemen that ſent for me to the Queen's-Head, and I being ſent for did come; and when I came up Stairs, they asked me if I knew Poplar, I ſaid, I knew it very well. Then they asked me, if I knew Mr. Dethick; I told them, I thought I did. Then ſaid they, you muſt carry this Letter to George Dethick, Eſq; at Poplar, and deliver it to his own Hands, and to no body elſe. Accordingly, away I went, and carried the Letter: I went to the Door, and asked if he were within; his Man ſaid he was above Stairs, but they would call him to me; and calling him to me, Sir, ſaid I, there are ſome Gentlemen at the Queen's-Head at Bow, that have ſent me with a Letter to you. So he looked upon the Letter, and, ſaith he, go and tell them I will be with them preſently. So, may it pleaſe you, my Lord, I came again, and when I came, the Gentlemen were there ſtill. Well, ſaid they, go and drink a Glaſs of Claret, which ſtood upon the Table, and they gave me Six-pence, and I went away.

Mr. Recorder. Pray look upon Mr. Praunce, can you remember whether that Man was there?

Cary. There were three of them, and he looks like one.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Praunce, do you remember this was the Man you ſent?

Mr. Praunce. Yes, my Lord, this was the ſame Man that was ſent.

L. C. J. Well, call the other.

Then William Evans, the Boy of the Houſe at the Queen's-Head, was ſworn.

Mr. Recorder. Hark you, do you remember any Company that was at your Maſter's Houſe two or three Months agon?

W. Evans. Yes, I do.

Mr. Recorder. Do you remember that you heard them talk any thing there?

W. Evans. They pull'd out a Paper and read it.

L. C. J. You Boy, do you know Mr. Dethick?

W. Evans. Yes, I do.

L. C. J. Was he there?

W. Evans. He did come to them, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. What had they to Dinner there?

W. Evans. They had Flounders.

Mr. Recorder. Who bought them?

W. Evans. One of them, I can't tell who.

Mr. Recorder. What had they elſe?

W. Evans. A Barrel of Oyſters.

Mr. Recorder. Pray give my Lord an Account what you obſerved and heard.

W. Evans. Sir, I know nothing but that they pull'd out a Paper, and read it, and named Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's Name. And while I was at the Door, ſome body came and threatned to kick me down Stairs.

L. C. J. He ſaith juſt as Mr. Praunce ſaid in every Particular.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip, we deſire to call Sir Robert Southwell, to prove what Mr. Praunce ſaid before the Council, and how particular he was; and did, to ſome of the Lords who were ſent with him to Somerſet-Houſe, point out the Places.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We call him to ſhew, that when Praunce was examined before the King, he was ſent with ſome of the Lords, and Sir Robert Southwell, to Somerſet-Houſe, where he pointed with his Finger, and ſhewed the Places where all was done; and ſo we ſhall ſhew your Lordſhip and the Jury, how exact he was in every Thing.

Then Sir Robert Southwell was ſworn.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, Sir Robert, will you tell your Knowledge?

Sir Robert Southwell. My Lord, I was, upon the 24th of December, waiting upon His Majeſty in Council, and Mr. Praunce was ſent for, to ſpeak his Knowledge concerning this Murder, and he then gave a general Account of Things, which, becauſe it did relate to that Bench, and this Corner, and that Room, and that Paſſage, and that Gallery, it was not underſtood by the Board, and thereupon His Majeſty thought fit to appoint my Lord Duke of Monmouth, and the Earl of Oſſory, and Mr. Vice-Chamberlain to the Queen, to go thither, and take the Examination upon the Place, and Report it to the Board: And I, being Clerk of the Council, tho' not in Waiting at that Time, and having taken notice of what Mr. Praunce had there depoſed, I did wait upon thoſe Lords, and took the Examination upon the Place. And what I did take upon the Place, This was done here, and that there, I drew up into a Report, and the Report is ſigned by thoſe two Noble Lords, and was read that Afternoon ternoon at the Board; and to that I refer my ſelf.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Sir Robert, Did he ſhew the particular places to thoſe Lords?

Sir Robert Southwell. Yes, he did. Firſt, the Bench whereon they were ſitting when Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was coming down; then the Corner into which they drew him when they had ſtrangled him; then the place where one Berry went to ſtay, which was at the Stairs that lead to the Upper Court, then a little Door at the end of the Stables, which lead up a pair of Stairs, and at the head of the Stairs a long dark Entry, and at the top of thoſe Stairs, a Door on the left hand, which being opened, ſhew'd us eight Steps, which lead up to the Lodgings that were Dr. Godwin's; In which Hill was ſaid to be inhabitant for ſeven years before. And aſſoon as we were gone two Steps, there was a little Cloſet or Cabinet on the right hand, in which there was a Bed, and there he ſhewed my Lords, This is the place where we handed him up firſt, and here we left him, ſaid he, in the care of Hill for two Nights.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. You were there, Sir Robert Southwell upon the place, when he ſhew'd them theſe things?

Sir Robert Southwell. Yes Sir, I was there.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Was it anſwerable to what he had declared to the King and Council?

Sir Robert Southwell. Yes, it was anſwerable to all things he had ſaid in the morning.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. And ſuitable to what he ſays now?

Sir Robert Southwell. Yes, ſuitable to what he ſays now, but only now he ſays more than he ſaid then. And as to what he ſays about the Chambers of Sir John Arundel, they could not be Sir John's Lodgings, for they were not capable of receiving a Perſon of that Quality.

Mr. Praunce. I ſaid, I did believe they did belong to Sir John Arundel.

L. C. J. They were Lodgings perhaps that belong'd to his Servants, tho' not to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Robert, I deſire to know, whether Mr. Praunce, when he ſhew'd theſe Places, and made theſe Deſcriptions, did he do it with any heſitancy, or did he do it readily?

Sir Robert Southwel. Hitherto, my Lord, he went directly and poſitively, as if any body ſhould walk to Weſtminſter-Hall Door. But afterwards, when the Lords did deſire to know whither the Body was carried, he ſaid, it was into ſome Room of the Houſe by the Garden; for this is an Outer part of the Houſe, which any body may do any thing in, without their knowledge that are within. And he undertook to lead them to the place as well as he could; and ſo away we went thro' the long dark Entry that leads into the Outer Court of the Great Houſe; and croſſing the Quadrangle, he leads us to the Piazza, and down a pair of Stairs, and ſo far, ſaid he, I am ſure I went; then, aſſoon as we were down the Stairs, there is a great Square Court, then he began to ſtagger, as if he did not know his way, but there was no way but to go on however, and on we went, and coming croſs the Court, we came into ſeveral Rooms, and going thro' them, we came up Stairs again, and ſo into ſeveral other Rooms again. Sure, ſaid he, we were here, but I can't tell, and he was in a Diſtraction what Room he ſaw the Body in; but, ſaid he, thus far, I am certain I am right; which was according to the Paper, and I refer my ſelf to that.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. But, you ſay, that what he had ſaid to the Lords in the Council, was the ſame that he ſaid when you were by upon the place.

Sir Robert Southwel. Yes.

L. C. J. His doubtfulneſs of the Room does aſſert, and give credit to his Teſtimony, and confirms it to any honeſt man in England. Here, ſaith he, I will not be poſitive, but having ſworn the other things which he well remembred, poſitively, he is made the more Credible for his doubtfulneſs of a thing which he does not remember, which a Man that could ſwear any thing would not ſtick at.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Beſides, he was not there but by Night, and all the Light he had was a dark Lanthorn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, Sir Robert, I would ask you one Queſtion, if you pleaſe, Do you remember that Hill was Examined at the Council about this matter?

Sir Robert Southwell. My Lord, theſe are the Notes that I took upon theſe Mens Examinations, if your Lordſhip pleaſes they may be read.

Mr. Recorder. Sir Robert, We ask you but as to one particular thing, therefore if you pleaſe to look upon it, and refreſh your Memory, you may read it to your ſelf, and tell us only the Subſtance; which he did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now Sir, if you pleaſe, Do you remember that Hill was there?

Sir Robert Southwell. Yes, I find he was Examined.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did not he deny there that he knew Kelly, but that he knew Girald?

Sir Robert Southwell. Yes, I do find it here ſet down that he did deny he knew Kelly, but that he knew Girald.

Hill. I ſaid I knew one Girald, but not that.

Mr. Recorder. But before the Council he ſaid he knew Girald; not one Girald.

L. C. J. This way of Anſwering is like the Examination that was taken lately amongſt ſome of them. A Perſon was asked when he ſaw ſuch a Prieſt? He denied that he had ſeen him in fourteen days. But then comes one and proves to his face, that he was with him in company all Night, within a Week and leſs. I, ſays he, that's true, but I ſaid I had not ſeen him in Fourteen Days. And ſo they may take Oaths to ſerve the King faithfully all the Days of their Lives, but in the Nights they may murder him, and keep their Oaths for all that.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. I would know, whether the Girald you know be a Prieſt or no?

Hill. He is not.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Then you do not know Girald the Prieſt?

Hill. No, I do not.

Mr. Recorder. Call Mr. Thomas Stringer. And he was ſworn.

Mr. Recorder. Pray Mr. Stringer, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what it was that Mr. Berry ſaid about any Directions he had to keep all Perſons out of Somerſet-Houſe, about the twelfth or fourteenth of October laſt?

Mr. T. Stringer. My Lord, npon his Examination before the Lords of the Committee, Berry did ſay he had Orders from the Queen, or in the Name of the Queen, That he ſhould ſuffer no Strangers, nor any Perſons of Quality to come into Somerſet-Houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was it he was to keep them out?

Mr.

Mr. T. Stringer. The 12th 13th and 14th of October.

Mr. Att. Gen. What, three Days?

Mr. T. Stringer. Two or three Days. And he ſaid that the Prince did come, and he did refuſe him, and ſent him back again.

Mr. Record. Did he ſay he ever had any ſuch Directions before?

Mr. T. Stringer, No: he ſaid he never before had any.

L. Ch. Juſt. It was a very unlucky thing that he had it then.

Berry. The Prince might have gone in if he would.

Mr. T. Stringer. You ſaid you did refuſe him, you had Order to let none come in.

L. C. J. Had you any ſuch Order?

Berry. Yes, my Lord, I had ſuch an Order from the Queen's Gentleman-Uſher.

L. C. J. Had you never had ſuch before?

Berry. Yes, I have had before, ſince the Queen came to Somerſet-Houſe.

L. C. J. Mr. Stringer ſwears you ſaid you had not any before.

Berry. Yes, I had.

L. C. J. Why did you deny it then?

Beery. I did not deny it; beſides, there were ſeveral went in.

Mr. Recorder. We have proved indeed five or ſix did go in.

L. C. J. For how many Days had you that Order?

Berry. Two Days.

L. C. J. Which two Days?

Berry. The eleventh and twelfth, I think thereabouts.

Mr. Recorder. Did you ſay before the Lords, that you never had ſuch Orders before?

Berry. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Mr. Berry, When you were examined before the Lords, Did you not ſay you never had ſuch Orders before?

Berry. No, I did not ſay ſo, my Lord, as I know of; for they did not examine me about that.

L. C. J. You ſaid you would prove it under his own Hand. Prove that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Stringer, Did he write his Name to his Examination?

Mr. T. Stringer. Yes, he did to one Examination.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray look upon that: Is that his Hand?

Mr. T. Stringer. This was read to him before he ſigned it, and then he did ſign it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would fain ſhew it to him, to ſee whether he would own it or no.

Berry. Yes, that is my Hand.

Then the Clerk of the Crown read it.

Cl. of the Cr. This is ſubſcribed by Henry Berry. The Information of Henry Berry, Porter at the Gate of Somerſet-Houſe; taken before the Right Honourable the Marquis of Wincheſter: This Deponent ſaith, That about the 12th, 13th, and 14th of October laſt, he had Order to tell all Perſons of Quality, that the Queen was private, and that they were not to come in: And this Deponent ſaith, The Queen continued ſo private for two Days.

L. C. J. Where is that part of the Examination wherein he ſaid, he never had any ſuch Order before?

Mr. T. Stringer. He did ſay ſo, but it is not in that that hath his Hand to it.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Pray, my Lord, obſerve this is a kind of reflecting Evidence, and I would have no more made of it than the Thing will bear.

L. C. J. They only bring it, and make uſe of it againſt Berry, as a pretence of his.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. But it is a very reflecting Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. Surely there is no body here that offers it as ſuch: We uſe it only to this purpoſe, to ſhew that Berry, who was a Party to this Murder, did uſe all the means that he could to keep it private; and endeavoured to prevent Strangers coming in that Night to diſcover it; and therefore pretended theſe Orders.

If he had any ſuch Orders, I ſuppoſe he will prove them, we do not ſay he had them; but 'tis a great Evidence, when he pretended to ſuch privacy, that he and his Fellows had ſomething to do that was fit to be known by every body.

Mr. Recorder. He may make uſe of any Body's Name, and pretend what he will; but I ſuppoſe he will prove it from the Gentleman-Uſher, if it be true.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have one Witneſs more to call, my Lord, and that is one Farr. Call Stephen Farr. Which was done, and he ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. He is a Neighbour to Berry, and will give your Lordſhip an Account what Applications have been made to him, to tamper with him for Money, to keep away, and not give Evidence in this Cauſe. Pray Sir, are you Mr. Berry's Neighbour?

Farr. Yes, Sir, I am.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray then tell what you know.

Farr. I know him very well, his Wife hath been with me laſt Week, and asked me if I knew what time he was with me on Wedneſday, the 16th of October. I deſired time to recollect my ſelf: And ſhe called four or five times after, and I did recollect my Memory and told her, That I was not with him at all that Wedneſday.

L. C. J. Why, this was reaſonable, and fair enough to do.

Mr. Att. Gen. It was ſo, my Lord, but pray had you no Money offered you?

Farr. No Sir, none at all; and I told her I could not remember that I was with him that Day.

Berry. But you may remember it very well, when I came from the Queen I came to you.

Farr. My Lord, I was out of Town that Wedneſday, from Two a Clock in the Afternoon, till Nine at Night.

L. C. J. Well, well, this is nothing: The Woman was willing, if ſhe could, to have counterproved the Evidence, and what ſhe did was fair; ſhe offered no Money, nor did it in an indirect way.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, We have now done with our Evidence for the King, and leave it till we hear what they ſay.

L. C. J. What do you ſay for your ſelves, you ſhall have all the free liberty you will deſire?

Hill. In the firſt place, I take God to be my Witneſs, that I am wholly innocent, as to the Matter that is charged upon me: And as to what is ſaid that I dogg'd Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, I can prove that I went into my Lodging at Eight a Clock, and did not ſtir out.

L. C. J. Come, call your Witneſſes.

Hill. Mary Tilden, Katharine Lee, Mrs. Broadſtreet, and Daniel Gray.

L. C. J. Let them come in there.

Then Mary Tilden was firſt examined.

Mr. Att. Gen. This is Doctor Godwin's Niece, and his Houſekeeper.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask her?

Hill. I desire to know what you can say about my being in my Lodging, and not going out.

Mary Tilden. He hath lived in our Family Seven or Eight Years.

L. C. J. Your Family, What is your Family?

Mary Tilden. With my Uncle.

L. C. J. Who is your Uncle?

Mary Tilden. Doctor Godwin: we left him in the House always, when we were absent from it; he was always a trusty Servant, never kept ill Hours, always came home by Eight a Clock at Night.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Always; For how long?

Mary Tilden. Ever since we came over last into England.

Mr. Just. Dolben. When was that?

Mary Tilden. In April last.

L. C. J. Were you there that Night Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was kill'd?

Mary Tilden. I was.

L. C. J. What Night was that?

Mary Tilden. I don't know, my Lord, I heard of it in the Town.

L. C. J. When did you first hear of it?

Mary Tilden. The Thursday that he was found.

L. C. J. Did you not hear of it on the Wednesday?

Mary Tilden. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Who could tell you the Wednesday before?

Mary Tilden. Why, my Lord, in the Town it was said he was missing from Saturday, and a Thursday he was found.

L. C. J. What can you say concerning Hill, that he was not out after Eight a Clock that Night?

Mary Tilden. He was a very good Servant to my Uncle, and never kept ill Hours, but always came in by Eight a Clock, or before.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Were you not out your self that Night?

Mary Tilden. No not I, never out after that Hour.

L. C. J. Pray how can you give such an account of Mr. Hill, as if he was always in your Company?

Mary Tilden. He came in to wait at Table, and did not stir out afterwards.

L. C. J. Pray, what Religion are you of? are you a Papist?

Mary Tilden. I know not whether I came here to make a Profession of my Faith.

L. C. J. Are you a Roman Catholick?

Mary Tilden. Yes.

L. C. J. Have you a Dispensation to eat Suppers on Saturday Nights?

Mr. Recorder. I hope you did not keep him Company, after Supper, all Night.

Mary Tilden. No, I did not, but he came in to wait at Table at Supper.

L. C. J. I thought you had kept fasting on Saturday Nights.

Mary Tilden. No, my Lord, not on Saturday Nights.

Mr. Just. Jones. How many Dishes of Meat had you to Supper?

Mary Tilden. We had no Meat, though we did not fast.

L. C. J. Can you speak positively as to this Night, the Saturday that he was kill'd?

Mary Tilden. He was at home that Night.

L. C. J. And where was he the Sunday?

Mary Tilden. He was at home.

L. C. J. And you are sure he was at home every Night?

Mary Tilden. Yes, while we were in Town.

L. C. J. Where was you all that Wednesday-Night you speak of?

Mary Tilden. I was at home in my Lodging.

Mr. Just. Wild. How is it possible for you to say, that Hill who was not your constant Companion, did not go out afterwards?

Mary Tilden. No, he was not my constant Companion.

Mr. Just. Wild. How then can you charge your Memory that he was at home?

L. C. J. Come, you are to speak truth, tho' you are not upon your Oath. Can you charge your Memory to say that he came in constantly at Eight a Clock at Night?

Mary Tilden. Yes I can, because I saw him come in constantly; and when he came in, I always sent my Maid to bar the Door.

L. C. J. Maid, can you say that he was always at home at Night?

Mary Tilden. I can say he never was abroad after Eight at Night.

Mr. Recorder. Why, you did not watch him till he went to Bed, did you?

Mary Tilden. We were always up till Eleven a Clock at Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he in your Company all that while?

Mary Tilden. I beg your Pardon; if your Lordship saw the Lodgings you would say it were impossible for any to go in or out, but that they must know it within. We were constant in our Hours of going to Supper; our Doors were never open'd after he came in to wait at Supper.

L. C. J. You may say any thing to a Heretick, for a Papist.

Mr. Just. Delben. This is a mighty improbable Business.

Mr. Just. Wild. Where was he a Wednesday-Night?

Mary Tilden. At home.

L. C. J. They have a general Answer for all Questions.

Mr. Just. Jones. Who kept the Key of your Lodgings?

Mary Tilden. The Maid.

Mr. Just. Jones. Hath Hill never kept the Key?

Mary Tilden. No, my Lord, the Maid.

Mr. Just. Jones. How do you know but that the Maid might let him out?

Mr. Praunce. My Lord, Mrs. Broadstreet said at first there was but one Key; but before the Duke of Monmouth she said there was six or seven Keys.

L. C. J. Look you what Tricks you put upon us to blind us: You come and tell us that he was every Night at home by Eight a Clock, and did not stir out, for there was but one Lock, and the Maid kept the Key; and yet there were three or four Keys to it.

Mary Tilden. There was but one Key to that which kept the Door fast.

L. C. J. Praunce, how many Keys were there?

Mr. Praunce. She confessed there were four or five.

Mr. Just. Wild. What time was it that you carried him out of Somerset-House on Wednesday-Night?

Mr. Praunce. It was about Ten or Eleven of the Clock. Hill went to fetch the Horse.

Mary Tilden. We had never been out of our Lodgings

Lodgings after Eight a Clock, ſince we came to Town.

Mr. Juſt Jones. When were you out of Town?

Mary Tilden. In October.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Nay, now, Miſtriſs, you have ſpoiled all; for in October this buſineſs was done.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You have undone the Man, inſtead of ſaving him.

Mary Tilden. Why, my Lord, I only miſtook the Month.

L. C. J. You Woman (ſpeaking to Mrs. Broadſtreet) what Month was it you were out of Town?

Broadſtreet. In September.

L.C. J. 'Tis apparent you conſider not what you ſay, or you come hither to ſay any thing will ſerve the turn.

Mary Tilden. No, I do not, for I was out of Town in September, came to Town the latter end of September.

L. C. J. You muſt remember what you ſaid, that you came to England in April laſt, and from that time he was always within at Eight a Clock at Night.

Mary Tilden. Except that time that we were out of Town, which was in September, the Summer-time. And it is impoſſible but if the Body was in the Houſe, as Praunce ſaid it was, but I muſt ſee him, or ſome of us muſt. I uſed to go every day into that little Room for ſomething or other, and I muſt needs ſee him if he were there.

L. C J. You told me juſt now you were not upon Confeſſion; and I tell you now ſo, you are not. Then Mrs. Broadſtreet was examined.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Well, Woman, what ſay you?

Broadſtreet. We came to Town upon a Monday, Michaelmas-day was the Sunday following; and from that time neither he nor the Maid uſed to be abroad after Eight a Clock: we kept very good hours, and he always waited at Supper, and never went abroad after he came in to wait at Supper: and the Lodging was ſo little, that nothing could be brought in, but they muſt know that were within.

L. C. J. This is a lower Room than the Chamber, is it not?

Mr. Praunce. 'Tis even with the Dining-Room, my Lord.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Sir Robert Southwell?

Sir Robert Southwell. My Lord, it is an extraordinary little Place; as ſoon as you get up eight Steps, there is a little ſquare Entry, and there is this Room on the one Hand, and the Dining-Room on the other. I think there is a pair of Stairs to go down at one Corner of the Entry, as I think, but the Body was laid in a little ſquare Room at the Head of the Steps.

L. C. J. And muſt you go into the Room to go to the Dining-Room?

Broadſtreet. No, 'tis a diſtinct Room; but the Key was always in the Door, and every Day ſome Body went into it for ſomething or another.

L. C. J. Will you undertake to ſay it was always in the Door?

Broadſtreet. Yes, it conſtantly was.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. For my own Part I will not judge you: but that his Body ſhould be carried there about Nine a Clock at Night a Saturday Night, and remain there till Monday Night, 'tis very ſuſpicious, that if you were in the Houſe, as you ſay you were, and uſed to go into that Room every Day, you muſt either hear it brought in, or ſee it.

Broadſtreet. But we did neither, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. It is well you are not indicted.

Broadſtreet. Mr. Praunce, you know all theſe Things to be falſe, Mr. Praunce.

Mr. Praunce. I lay nothing to your Charge; but you ſaid before the Duke of Monmouth, that Hill was gone from his Lodgings before that Time.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Sir Robert Southwell?

Sir Robert Southwell. There aroſe a little Quarrel between them, about the Time that Mr. Hill did leave thoſe Lodgings. Praunce ſaid it was a Fortnight after; Hill ſaid, when he was upon his Examination, that the ſame Saturday Night that Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was miſſing, he was treating with his Landlord, and from that Time, to the Time he went to his new Houſe, it was about a Week or a Fortnight.

L. C. J. But he did pretend he was gone before?

Broadſtreet. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Two Witneſſes upon Oath Sware it, and you ſaid it your ſelf, and gave it under your Hand.

Broadſtreet. My Lord? ———

L. C. J. Nay, you will not hear, but you will talk; you ſay one Thing now, and you ſet another under your Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you not a Brother that is in the Proclamation, one Broadſtreet a Prieſt?

Broadſtreet. I have a Brother, whoſe Name is Broadſtreet.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is he not a Prieſt, and in the Proclamation?

Broadſtreet. I hope I muſt not impeach my Brother here. I ſaid upon my Oath, he came to Town on Monday, and Michaelmas Day was the Sunday following, and Lawrence Hill went away a Fortnight after.

Sir Robert Southwell. She ſwore then, two or three Days after Michaelmas Day.

L. C. J. You muſt know we can underſtand you thro' all your Arts. It was not convenient for you at that Time to ſay, that Mr. Hill went away about a Fortnight after Michaelmas, for then the Thing that was charged to be done, part of it in your Houſe, would have been within the Fortnight, for it was the 12th of October, but then you ſaid only two or three Days.

Sir Robert Southwell. She did ſay, my Lord, that about Michaelmas two or three or four Days after he went away.

Broadſtreet. I beg your Pardon, I only ſaid, I could not tell the Time exactly.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more to ſay?

Mary Tilden. There was never a Day but I went into that Room for ſome thing or other, and if any Body came to ſee me, there was ſo little Space that the Footmen were always forced to be in that Room.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Were you there upon Sunday?

Mary Tilden. Yes, my Lord, I was.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, I will ſay no more; call another Witneſs.

Hill. Catharine Lee.

L. C. J. What can you ſay, Maid?

Lee. My Lord, I did never miſs him out of the Houſe at thoſe Hours.

L. C. J. May be you did not look for him.

Lee. I did go down every Night to the Door, to ſee if it were lock'd, and I went into the Parlour to ſee that Things were ſafe there.

L. C. J. You

L. C. J. You are a Roman Catholick, are you not?

Lee. Yes, I am.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Might not he go out of the Houſe, and you never the wiſer?

Lee. Yes, for I did not watch him continually.

Capt. Richardſon. All that ſhe ſays may be true by the Place. The Servants keep down a pair of Stairs in the Kitchin, and any one may come in, or go out, having ſo many Keys, and they not know it that are below.

Lee. I went into the Chamber every Morning, as I went to Market.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Have a care what you ſay, and mind the Queſtion I ask you, Were you there on the Sunday, in that Room where they ſay Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's Body was laid?

Lee. I cannot ſay, that I was in that Room, but I called in at the Door every Day, and I was the laſt up every Night.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. I'll ſay that for thee, thou haſt ſpoke with more Care than any of them all.

Then Daniel Gray was Examined.

L. C. J. What can you ſay? What Queſtions do you ask him?

Hill. I deſire him to ſpeak what he can ſay, where I was thoſe five Days that Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was miſſing.

Gray. I kept my Brother Hill Company, from the 8th of October, till he took his Houſe, which was about the 22d or 23d.

L. C. J. What Time did you uſe to go to Bed?

Gray. About Nine or Ten a Clock at Night.

L. C. J. What Time did he go?

Gray. When I did, but I did not ſee him go to Bed.

L. C. J. Where did you lie?

Gray. At my own Houſe.

L. C. J. And you went home about Eight or Nine a Clock at Night to go to Bed?

Gray. Yes, I did.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You ſay he took his Houſe the 8th of October, when did he go thither?

Gray. Yes, he took his Houſe the 8th of October, but he did not go thither till the one or two and twentieth.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But you cannot tell what he did at Night.

Gray. No, not I.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But you were in his Company till Eight or Nine a Clock at Night?

Gray. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. How far did you live off of him?

Gray. About a Bow's ſhoot.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Hill, he does you no Service at all, for he ſays he left you about Eight or Nine a Clock at Night, and he does not know what you did afterwards. Have you any more?

Hill. Robert How.

L. C. J. Come, what ſay you?

How. My Lord, I met with Mr. Hill the 5th of October, he asked me whither I was going? I told him, Home. I wiſh, ſaid he, you would go a little back with me; I am about taking of an Houſe, and I would have you view the Repairs; accordingly we did go, and treated in the Houſe about an Agreement; for ſaid he, I will not agree with you (to the Landlord) till we know what muſt be repaired. On Tueſday Morning we met again, about Eight a Clock.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month was that?

How. The 8th. And a Wedneſday about Noon we began to work for him, to repair his Houſe, and we wrought that Week every Day, and for twelve Days and an half in all, and he was every Day with us, looking after Coals or Beer or ſomething. On Saturday the 12th of October, we dined together, and parted with him about One or Two a Clock, and about Two a Clock I went back again to my Work, and he ſaid he was going towards Covent-Garden in St. James's, but he came back again, and I was gone firſt; I asked my Man whether he was gone or no, he ſaid, he was there, but did not ſtay.

L. C. J. What time was that?

How. A little before Night.

L. C. J. What Hour did your Man ſay that he was there?

How. About an Hour before they left Work.

L. C. J. What time was that?

How. About Four a Clock I think it was.

L. C. J. Can you ſay where he was that Night?

How. No, I cannot.

L. C. J. What Religion are you of, are you not a Proteſtant?

How. Yes, my Lord, I think ſo.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord asks you, are you a Proteſtant?

How. I was never bred up in the Proteſtant Religion.

Mr. Praunce. He is a Catholick, my Lord, he was the Queen's Carpenter.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Nay, now you ſpoil all; you muſt do Penance for this; what! deny your Church?

Hill. What time was it a Saturday Morning I was with you?

How. About Nine a Clock.

L. C. J. How long did he ſtay?

How. From Nine to Two.

L. C. J. Are you ſure 'twas Nine?

How. No Man can ſwear punctually to an hour.

L. C. J. What think you of Ten?

How. It was thereabouts.

Mr. Recorder. If I am rightly informed by the Clerks, he is Outlawed for Recuſancy.

L. C. J. Is he ſo? Pray let us know that.

Harcourt, (One of the Clerks of the Crown-Office.) My Lord, I have made out ſeveral Writs againſt him, for ſeveral Years together, and could never get any of them Returned.

Hill. He tells you, that I was with him from Nine a Clock on Saturday Morning, till One.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. But that is but as true as he is a Proteſtant, and how true that is, you know.

Hill. Here is another Witneſs; Mr. Cutler.

Tho. Cutler. Upon the 12th of October, Lawrence Hill did come into my Houſe, about Four or Five a Clock in the Evening, and he ſtaid there till between Seven or Eight, and then his Wife came for him, and ſaid ſome Gentlewoman was ready for her Supper, and ſo he went home; and I ſaw him no more, till the Day after he was taken.

L. C. J. Look you here, he ſpeaks only about Seven or Eight a Clock. Well, have you any thing more to ſay?

Hill. There is one Richard Lazinby.

Lazinby. My Lord, I was with him on Saturday the 12th of October, at the Door, about Twelve a Clock.

L. C. J. And you dined with him and How.

Lazinby. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. But you did not ſee him afterwards?

Lazinby. Yes, I did ſee him on Wedneſday Night, from Five to Seven at Night.

L. C. J. What Time was he carried out of Somerset-House?

Mr. Att. Gen. About Eleven or Twelve a Clock at Night.

Lazinby. That is the last time I was with him.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more?

Hill. Here is one Mr. Archbold, my Lord.

Archbold. My Lord, I had occasion for a Taylor, and I came to this Man's House, to seek for one Mr. Gray, that had formerly wrought for me.

L. C. J. When was that?

Archbold. That was on Monday Night. And he having formerly wrought for me, I found him at this Man's House; so Mr. Gray asked me, what News? I told him, Very good News; for Praunce was taken for the Murder of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey. Says Hill, I am glad of that; I wish they were all taken. I came the next Day after, and they told me he was taken out of his Bed, for the Murder of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey.

L. C. J. Was it that very Night that you came, that he was taken?

Archbold. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. You said he spoke of it before you at Seven a Clock, and you left him about Nine, and he was taken that Night; what then?

Hill. Why, then I had Time enough to make my Escape, if I had thought my self Guilty.

L. C. J. As no doubt you would, if you had thought they would have been so nimble with you.

Archbold. He knew it the Day before.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more to say?

Mrs. Hill. There is Mr. Ravenscroft, my Lord.

L. C. J. What, that Ravenscroft that is sent away?

Mrs. Hill. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then the Marshal must send for him, if he be a Witness for the Prisoner. In the mean Time, what can you say for your self, Mr. Green?

Green. My Lord, I would call my Landlord and his Wife.

L. C. J. What are their Names?

Green. James Warrier, and his Wife.

L. C. J. Call in Green's Wife, and all her Witnesses.

Then Mrs. Hill, the Prisoner's Wife, offered a Paper to the Court, containing Observations upon the Indictment, which she desired them to read; but it was refused, and she bid to give it her Husband.

Then James Warrier was Examined.

L. C. J. What say you to your Landlord?

Green. I ask him no Questions at all, but desire him to tell what he knows.

Warrier. I will say, that the 12th of October, he was at my House, half an Hour after Seven, and he was not out of my House till after Ten.

L. C. J. How can you remember that Day? what Day of the Week was it?

Warrier. It was a Saturday.

L. C. J. How do you remember it was so?

Warrier. I have recollected my Memory.

L. C. J. By what?

Warrier. By my Work, and every thing exactly.

L. C. J. When did you begin to recollect your self?

Warrier. A pretty while ago.

L. C. J. How long after Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was murdered?

Warrier. A Month after.

L. C. J. What made you to recollect your self a Month after?

Warrier. Because he was in Prison in the Gate-house.

L. C. J. When was he taken up?

Warrier. He was taken up in Somerset-House, and not in my House.

L. C. J. But when did you recollect your self?

Warrier. When he was in Prison.

L. C. J. But I pray remember the Time when you did recollect your self, and the Occasion that made you recollect your self when he was taken up.

Warrier. I remember it very well, for he had been in my House but fourteen Days, before he was taken up.

Sir Tho. Stringer. He was not taken up for the Murder of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, till the 24th of December.

Mr. Just. Wild. Pray did you never think of this till he was in Prison?

Warrier. It was when he was taken up.

L. C. J. But pray when you came to recollect your self, how did you come to do it?

Warrier. I recollected it by my Work.

L. C. J. But what gave you Occasion to recollect your self since he was in Goal?

Sir Tho. Stringer. My Lord, he was put into Goal, for refusing to take the Oaths; but he was not at all charged with the Death of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, at that Time.

L. C. J. When was he put in for the Death of Sir Edmund-bury?

Sir Tho. Stringer. The 24th of December.

L. C. J. Then there is all the remaining part of October, all November, and the former part of December, was past, how could you recollect your self of the particular Day?

Warrier. I call'd it to mind by my Work.

Capt. Richardson. My Lord, I will rectify this Mistake: Since their Arraignment, I went to them, to know what Witnesses they had, and Green told me of his Landlord and Landlady; I then asked them, If they could say any thing as to this particular Day? and they said they could not do him any Good at all.

Warrier. I did not then call it to Memory.

L. C. J. When did you call it to Memory?

Warrier. I did say I could not do it then presently, as I have done since, in five or six Days.

L. C. J. How could you recollect it then?

Warrier. By the Time he came into my House, which was a Week before, and by the Work that was done.

L. C. J. What could the Work do as to this? Can you tell by that, any Thing that is done at any Time? where were you the 9th of November last?

Warrier. Truly I can't tell.

L. C. J. Why how came you then to recollect what you did the 12th of October, when you did not know where you were the 9th of November?

Warrier. I can tell a great many Tokens, he was but fourteen or fifteen Days in our House.

L. C. J. What did he do the 12th of October, that you remember so particularly that Day?

Warrier. Sir, I remember other Days besides that; but I say, I never knew the Man out after Nine a Clock, in my Life.

L. C. J. Have you any body else; for this Man I can't tell what to make on't.

Green. Here is the Man's Wife to give Evidence.

L. C. J. First consider what you say.

Mrs. Warrier.

Mrs. Warrier. To tell you the Truth, I thought the Man was ſo clear of this Fact, that I never troubled my Head with it; but when Captain Richardſon came to my Houſe, I told him, that he was never in our Houſe by Day-time, except being Cuſhion-layer in the Chapel, he uſed to come at half an Hour after Eleven, and many times he did deſire me, becauſe we were Proteſtants, to put in a little Fleſh Meat with ours; ſometimes he would ſit down and eat his Meat in the Kitchin, and his Wife with him; and his Wife would ſay to him, 'tis a troubleſome Time, pray ſee that you come home betimes. I did not at all remember the Day of the Month at the firſt, nor the Action; but my Husband and I have ſince remembred. We were deſired by them once to eat a Fowl with them; and my Husband did command me the Sunday after to invite them to Dinner with us, and I went in the Morning very early, I think, and bought a dozen of Pidgeons, and put them in a Pye, and we had a Loin of Pork roaſted; and when he was gone to the Chapel on Saturday in the Afternoon, his Wife came to me, and ſaid, my Huſband is not well, and when he comes home will ask for ſomething of Broath; and away ſhe went to Market to buy ſomething to make Broath of. While ſhe was at Market, her Husband came home, and asked where his Wife was? Why Mr. Green, ſaid I, ſhe is gone to Market: what an old Fool, ſaid he, is this, to go out ſo late, ſuch a Night as this is? But, ſaid he again, I will go to the Coffee-houſe, and drink a Diſh of Coffee, and pray tell my Wife ſo. In the mean time ſhe returned, and by that time ſhe had been above a little while, he came in again. And Mr. Green being there, my Husband came in, and called to me, prithee, Sweetheart, what haſt thou got for my Supper? prithee, ſaid I, Sweetheart, thou art always calling for thy Victuals when thou comeſt in. Then Mr. Green goes to the Stairs, and calls to his Wife, and bids her bring him down ſome Victuals, and ſhe brings down the Bread and Cheeſe, and he ſtayed there till it was Nine a Clock; and then ſaith Mr. Green to his Wife, let us go up, for there is a Fire.

L. C. J. What Day was this, all this while?

Mrs. Warrier. Why, it was the Saturday Fortnight after Michaelmas Day.

L. C. J. Why might it not be that Day three Weeks.

Mrs. Warrier. It was that Day he was miſſing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why there was no Alarum taken of it a Sunday.

L. C. J. When did you begin to recollect what Day it was, that they ſaid he was miſſing?

Mrs. Warrier. On Friday Morning our Milkman came and told us, that one Mr. Godfrey was found murdered; now I knew one of the Exchange of that Name, and thought it might be he. And when we went up with him to his Chamber, we ſate there till the Tattoo beat.

L. C. J. All the Thing is, how do you know it was this Saturday?

Mrs. Warrier. It was the Saturday Fortnight after Michaelmas Day.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Are you ſure it was the Saturday Fortnight after Michaelmas Day?

Mrs. Warrier. Yes, we did look upon the Almanack, and reckon it ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Then that was the 19th of October.

L. C. J. Why you told him, you could do him no Good, and indeed you do not.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You and your Wife ſpeak of the ſame Time, don't you?

Warrier. Yes.

L. C. J. Have you any more, Green?

Capt. Richardſon. There is the Maid, let her come in.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Maid?

Maid. I can ſay, that he came in the Saturday Fortnight after Quarter-Day, pretty betimes.

L. C. J. Can you ſpeak of any other Time beſides that Saturday Fortnight?

Maid. I can tell he came in every Night before Nine a Clock.

Green. I can take my Oath, I was never out of my Lodging after Nine a Clock.

Hill. My Lord, here is Mr. Ravenſcroft now.

L. C. J. Mr. Ravenſcroft, what can you ſay?

Mr. Ravenſcroft. What I can ſay, my Lord, is this; This Lawrence Hill, I have known him Thirteen or Fourteen Years, and he ſerved my elder Brother ſo long, very faithfully. Afterwards he lived with Dr. Godwin towards the latter end of the two laſt Years, and he married my Mother's Maid.

L. C. J. What Religion are you of?

Mr. Ravenſcroft. My Father and Mother were Proteſtants.

L. C. J. But you are a Papiſt, are you not?

Mr. Ravenſcroft. I have not ſaid I am a Papiſt, yet.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. In the mean Time, I ſay you are one.

Mr. Ravenſcroft. Do you ſo? then pray go to Southwark and ſee.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think he hath taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy.

L. C. J. Well, pray Sir go on with your Story.

Mr. Ravenſcroft. If it pleaſe you, upon a Saturday, a little before Chriſtmas, there was ſomebody taken, I think it was one Mr. Praunce, for I never ſaw the Man, neither do I know him at all: And it was reported that he was taken upon the Death of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and I was glad to hear it. My Houſe was in the Savoy, and my Father's Houſe is in Holbourn; and I uſed often to go and ſee my Father, and coming home again, I went to ſee the Maid at her new Houſe, ſhe had not been long there, and ſhe was ſtanding at the Door of the Houſe. I asked her what News? ſays ſhe, Here hath been a Man here that tells us, that Praunce hath diſcover'd ſeveral of the Murderers of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey; and they talk up and down ſtrangely of it, and ask me whether my Husband be acquainted with him? Then ſaid I to her, Is he? She anſwered me, Very well, they have been often together; and ſo ſhe told me the People did mutter and talk of her Husband. But, ſaid I, what ſays your Husband to it? Says ſhe, He defies Praunce and all his Works. Said I, Where is your Husband? Said ſhe, He is within. I was very glad to hear it, for, ſaid I, he living in Somerſet-Houſe, and being acquainted with Praunce, I am glad to hear that your Husband can be ſo Courageous; ſo I went away, and came again thither the next Morning, and found he was taken the Night before. All that I ſay then, is, that it was a good Evidence of his Innocency, that when he had notice of it he did not fly.

L. C. J. So then your Diſcourſe was after Archbold had been there.

Mr. Ravenſcroft. Archbold was there before me, and had ſpoken this in their Company. I ſpake with her that Night, and the next Morning too; too; and all that I ſay is, if Flight be a ſign of Guilt, as no doubt it is, Adam ubi es? and Couragiouſneſs is a ſign of Innocency, then this Man is innocent.

L. C. J. But you ſay, ſhe told you they were acquainted?

Mr. Ravenſcroft. My Lord, I have one Thing more to ſay. Upon the Occaſion of theſe Things, this Woman hath been often with me, and hath deſired to know of me what Defence ſhe ſhould make, for I ſaw Hill's Wife and Berry's Wife were all ſimple People, without Defence for themſelves, and they did deſire that I would examine and ſee ſome of the Witneſſes, and ſee how it was, and ſhe had gotten me ſome Papers, and I conferred them together, there are Witneſſes that will atteſt the Copy.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is all this to the Purpoſe? Only this Gentleman hath a mind to ſhew that he can ſpeak Latin.

Mr. Ravenſcroft. I thank God I can ſpeak Latin as well as any Man in the Court.

L. C. J. Well, all this is nothing.

Mr. Ravenſcroft. I declare it my ſelf, if this Man were guilty, rather than I would ſpeak for him, if there wanted a Hangman, I would do it my ſelf.

L. C. J. Well, Berry, what have you to ſay?

Berry. I deſire Nicholas Trollop, and Nicholas Wright, and Gabriel Hasket, and Elizabeth Wilkes, and Corporal Collet may be called.

Corporal William Collet firſt Examined.

Berry. Did not you place a Centinel on Wedneſday Night?

Collet. What Wedneſday do you ſpeak of Sir?

Berry. That Night the Queen went from Somerſet-Houſe to Whitehall.

Collet. Yes. This Nicholas Trollop I placed there firſt, the 16th. of October.

L. C. J. How do you remember that?

Collet. Becauſe I have been called to an Account before, and have given good Reaſons for it. Our Company was at Somerſet-Houſe when the King came from New-Market, and the Queen went to Whitehall. Afterwards we were bid to fetch our Centinels off about Three or Four of the Clock in the Afternoon.

L. C. J. Did you leave any Soldiers there?

Collet. No, we did not, all our Company went to Whitehall.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Are you ſure there were no Soldiers that Night there?

Collet. Yes, we were commanded with a Party to go thither again that Night.

L. C. J. What did you do then?

Collet. I placed the Centinels by the Porter's Order.

L. C. J. Who was that, Berry?

Collet. No, it was one that uſed to go about, and give Orders where we ſhould ſet them.

L. C. J. How did you place them?

Collet. This Man I placed from Seven to Ten, then Nicholas Wright relieved him at Ten, and ſtay'd till One.

L. C. J. At what place?

Collet. To the Strand-ward.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. That was the Gate they carried him out at.

L. C. J. Do you hear; whereabouts did you ſet the Centinels? within the Gate?

Collet. Yes, within the Wicket.

L. C. J. That way he was carried out.

Nicholas Wright. There was no Sedan came out in my Time.

Trollop. There was one came in in my Time, while I ſtood there.

L. C. J. Was it an empty Sedan?

Trollop. I ſuppoſe it was, but we had no Order to keep any out.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. But you might know whether it was an empty Sedan or no, by the going of it through the Wicket.

Collet. There is an empty Sedan that ſtands there every Night.

Trollop. It was ſet down within the Gate.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. If any Sedan had gone out, you would not have ſtaid them, would you?

Collet. No, my Lord, we had no Order to ſtop any.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How can you then be poſitive, that no one did go out?

Trollop. None did go out again in my Time.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Could not the Porter open the Gate, as well as you?

Collet. Yes, my Lord, he could, but I ſhould have ſeen him then: he did not open it in my Time.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Let me ask you but one Queſtion; Did not you go to drink, nor tipple all that time?

Trollop. No, nor walk a Pike's length off the Place of Centry.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Has not Berry an Houſe there, hard by?

Trollop. Yes, but I did not drink one drop.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How can you remember ſo particularly, ſo long ago?

Trollop. Why, I was twice before the Committee.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. But how long ago was it that you were queſtioned about this thing, after this Night?

Trollop. A matter of a Month, or Six Weeks.

Collet. For we were examined before Prance was taken up.

L. C. J. You Trollop, Can you ſay whether it was the Sedan that uſed to be within?

Trollop. No, I cannot, but it was brought in in my Time, and did not go out again.

Then Gabriel Hasket was examined.

Berry. You ſtood there, Sir, from One to Four.

Hasket. Yes, after the Clock ſtruck One, I was put Centinel, and ſtood till Four.

L. C. J. What Night?

Hasket. That Night the King came from Newmarket, and the Queen went from Somerſet-Houſe.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month was that?

Hasket. The Sixteenth.

L. C. J. What Day of the Week?

Hasket. Wedneſday.

L. C. J. Did you not drink at Berry's then?

Hasket. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Did you ſee Berry then?

Hasket. No, I did not.

L. C. J. He was gone before you came.

Berry. I was faſt enough a Bed at that time.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you more?

Berry. Here is my Maid, Elizabeth Minſhaw, to give her Evidence where I was that Night the Queen went from Somerſet-Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. What can you ſay?

Minſhaw. May it pleaſe you, my Lord, my Maſter was within Doors, and about the Gate, when the Queen went away.

L. C. J. Who is your Maſter?

Minſhaw. Mr. Berry. He was about the Gates all the Forenoon.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. When was that?

Minſhaw. The 16th of October, Wedneſday. And as ſoon as the Queen was gone, my Maſter went out to Bowls; and when he came home again, he ſaid he had been at Bowls.

L. C. J. What Time did he come home?

Minſhaw. It was dusky, and he was not abſent all Night an Hour, till he went to Bed.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. When did he go to Bed?

Minſhaw. My Lord, I ſuppoſe he went to Bed about Twelve a Clock.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. They do not charge him with any thing, but what was done about the Gate.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What Time did you go to Bed that Night?

Minſhaw. Why I went to Bed about Twelve a Clock.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. And you ſaw him no more that Night?

Minſhaw. No, my Lord, but he muſt go thro' my Room to go to Bed at Night, and therefore I ſuppoſe he was a Bed.

Mrs. Hill. I deſire Mr. Praunce may Swear why he did deny all this?

L. C. J. Stand up, Mr. Praunce; that Gentlewoman does deſire to know, what induced you to deny what you had ſaid.

Mr. Praunce. It was becauſe of my Trade, my Lord; and for fear of loſing my Employment from the Queen, and the Catholicks, which was the moſt of my Buſineſs, and becauſe I had not my Pardon.

Mrs. Hill. I deſire he may ſwear whether he were not tortured?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Anſwer her; were you tortured to make this Confeſſion?

Mr. Praunce. No, my Lord, Captain Richardſon hath uſed me as civilly as any Man in England; all that Time that I have been there, I have wanted for nothing.

L. C. J. See what he ſays; That he did not make this Confeſſion by any Torture, but he made his Recantation thro' Fear, and the Thoughts of Death, becauſe he had no Pardon; and fear that he might live in Want, by the Loſs of the Trade, prevailed with him to deny what he had confeſſed.

Mrs. Hill. It was reported about Town, that he was tortured.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. No, it was no ſuch Thing; it was only the Tortures of his Conſcience, for being an Actor in ſo great a Sin.

Mrs. Hill. There are ſeveral about the Court, that heard him cry out: And he knows all theſe Things to be as falſe, as God is true; and you will ſee it declared hereafter, when 'tis too late.

L. C. J. Do you think he would ſwear three Men out of their Lives for nothing?

Mrs. Hill. I deſire he may be ſworn to that particular Thing.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. He is upon his Oath already, and ſwears all this upon his Oath.

Mrs. Hill. Well, I am diſſatisfied; my Witneſſes were not rightly examined, they were modeſt, and the Court laugh'd at them.

Berry. The Centinels that were at the Gate all Night, let nothing out.

L. C. J. Why you could open the Gate your ſelf.

Berry. He ſays, he could have ſeen if the Gate had been open; and that, as he ſaw, the Gates were never open'd.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Well, the Jury have heard all, and will conſider of it.

Mrs. Hill. Here is another Witneſs, my Lord, Mr. Chevins.

L. C. J. Well, Sir, what ſay you?

Chevins. I have nothing to ſay, but that I heard Mr. Praunce deny all.

L. C. J. Why he does not deny that now. Well, have you any more?

Chevins. We have no more.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I muſt crave leave to ſpeak a word, or two; and the Evidence having been ſo very long, I ſhall be exceeding ſhort. I intended (when I began to open the Evidence) to have made ſome Obſervations after the Evidence ended; to ſhew how each part of it did agree, and how the Main was ſtrengthned by concurrent Circumſtances. But, in truth, the King's Evidence did fall out much better than I could expect, and the Defence of the Priſoners much weaker than I could foreſee. So that, I think, the Proof againſt the Priſoners is ſo ſtrong, and ſo little hath been alledged by them in their Defence, that it would be but loſs of Time to do what I at firſt intended. Only I will obſerve, that Mr. Bedlow doth agree with Mr. Praunce as far forth as is poſſible; that is, in thoſe Parts of the Fact, of which he pretends to have any Knowledge. Yet had they never any Communication one with another, as both have Sworn. And your Lordſhip will obſerve in how many Particulars they do agree; namely, as to the Dark-Lanthorn, as to the Covering of the Body in the Room; how they intended to carry the Body out in a Sedan, and the reſt. So that if they had laid their Heads together to contrive a Story, they could hardly have agreed in ſo many Circumſtances; and yet this they do, without diſcourſing with each other beforehand.

My Lord, I muſt likewiſe obſerve to you, that the Servants of the Plow-Alehouſe concur as to Meetings there: The Maid agrees as to the Priſoners coming to Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's Houſe, and to the Time, viz. that Saturday Morning; nay, to the very Hours of Nine or Ten a Clock; That the Conſtable's Relation of the Poſture in which the Body was found in the Field, doth perfectly agree with the Account that the Murderers gave thereof to Mr. Praunce the next Morning. The Chirurgeons do agree with Mr. Praunce, as to the manner of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's being killed, the ſtrangling, the bruiſing of his Stomach, the twiſting of his Neck. And the Witneſſes from Bow make it out, that Dethick was ſent for; that they had a Dinner there. The Boy proves that he over-heard them reading ſomething about Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and that they were very merry; and that for his liſtning, he was threatned to be kick'd down Stairs.

So that, I think, there never was an Evidence that was better fortified with Circumſtances than this: My Lord, I ſhall be bold to ſay, here is certainly as much Evidence as the Matter is capable of. It is not to be expected, that they ſhould call Witneſſes to be by, when they do ſuch foul Facts; ſo that none can ſwear directly the very Fact, but ſuch a one as was an Actor in it. All Circumſtances relating to the Fact, both before, and after, are made out by concurrent Teſtimony. And, my Lord, I muſt obſerve, that this was a Murder committed thro' Zeal to a falſe Religion, and that Religion was a Bond of Secrecy. We all know, His Majeſty hath been grciouſly pleaſed, by his Proclamation, to propoſe a Pardon, and a Reward to the Diſcoverers. And yet almoſt without Effect: Their Zeal to their falſe Religion, was a greater Obſtacle, than the Proclamation was an Incitement, to the Diſcovery. And I do believe, if Mr. Praunce had not had ſome Inclination to change his Religion, you had ſtill been without ſo clear a Diſcovery of this Work of Darkneſs, as now you have. I ſhall ſay no more, but conclude to the Jury with that Saying, that I remember in the Book of Judges, (in the Caſe of a Murder too, tho' of another Nature) Judg. xix. 30. The People ſaid there was no ſuch Deed done, nor ſeen, from the Day that the Children of Iſrael came out of Egypt: And I may ſay, there was never ſuch a barbarous Murder committed in England, ſince the People of England were freed from the Yoke of the Pope's Tyranny; and as 'tis ſaid there, ſo ſay I now, Conſider of it, take Advice, and ſpeak your Minds.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I would only make one Obſervation to your Lordſhip, which is this; I do not find they do in the leaſt pretend to tax Mr. Praunce, that any Perſon hath bribed him to give this Evidence; nor, that there was the leaſt Reward ever propoſed to him to bear Witneſs againſt them, not ſo much as the hopes of that Reward contain'd in the King's Proclamation; yet Mr. Praunce, if he had had a mind to bear falſe Witneſs, might have laid hold of that opportunity; but ſo far was he from pretending to diſcover any thing, that he denied all when he was firſt apprehended. But after he was in Hold, and likely to be brought to Juſtice, and lying under the conviction of a guilty Conſcience, then, and not till then, does he diſcover it.

There is no Objection in the World to be made, but that ſince this Diſcovery, Mr. Praunce hath retracted what he ſaid before, but he gives you a very good account of it; the Terrors of Conſcience he then lay under, the Fears that he ſhould not be pardoned, and the Apprehenſions he had from the Threats on their Side, and the Danger of his utter Ruine, put him upon that Denial.

But, my Lord, he tells you likewiſe, That as ſoon as ever he was brought back to the Priſon, he owned all he had ſaid at firſt, and deſired he might be carried back again to teſtify the Truth of what he had firſt Sworn to. This, my Lord, he gives you an account of, and the ſame Account does the Keeper of the Priſon give too. I have nothing to ſay more, but only juſt to obſerve the many Circumſtances whereby Mr. Praunce's Teſtimony is fortified. Mr. Bedlow does agree with him in every Circumſtance, as far as his Knowledge went: The Maid of the Houſe agrees with his Teſtimony; that ſays, She ſaw Green at Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's ſeveral Times, tho' here he denies he knew him. That ſhe ſaw Hill there that very Morning her Maſter was miſſed; That he talked with her Maſter a quarter of an Hour: That ſhe knew him by a very good Token; not only by his Face, but alſo that he had the ſame Cloaths on then he hath now.

Mr. Praunce hath likewiſe told you of another Circumſtaance, the meeting at the Plow-Alehouſe, where they laid the whole Deſign of Intrapping Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey: and herein he is Fortified by the coucurrent Teſtimony of the Maſter of the Houſe, and the Servant too, tho' they now deny that ever they had been in his Company there; or that they ſo much as knew Girald; tho' when they were Examined at the Council-Board, they ſaid, they knew Girald, but not Kelly: and now they are preſt with it here, Hill retreats to this, That he knows one Girald, but not Girald the Prieſt.

My Lord, I think the Matter is ſo fully, and ſo plainly proved beyond Exception, that there needs no Repetition in the Caſe: It is impoſſible that Mr. Praunce a Man of that mean Capacity ſhould invent a Story with ſo many Circumſtances, all ſo conſiſtent; if there were not Truth at the bottom of it. He ſhews you the particular places, from place to place, where they decoyed him in, and how they diſpoſed of him, to the time they carried him out. And in each of theſe Circumſtances, there is not the leaſt improbability or cauſe to disbelieve him. It hath been already ſo fully repeated, and the plainneſs of the Evidence is ſo convincing, that I need not make more Obſervations upon it; But ſubmit it to your Lordſhip and the Jury.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice directed the Jury in this manner:

Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Inquiſition for Innocent Blood that hath been ſhed, and your Buſineſs is to ſee if you can find out the Murderers.

We would not add Innocent Blood to Innocent Blood: but, on the other ſide, if you have received Satisfaction ſo much as the Nature of the Thing can bear, then the Land is defiled, unleſs this be ſatisfied.

Now for that I will urge the Witneſs and Teſtimony no further than it does appear; for you and We are all upon our Oaths to do uprightly, neither to Spare Murderers, nor Condemn the Innocent.

In the firſt place, We began with Mr. Oates, and he told you, that he had ſome Converſe with Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and that he was threaten'd by ſome, and had no good will for his pains, in taking thoſe Examinations he had taken, and he was afraid his Life was in danger. This he tells you was the Diſcourſe before-hand, and this is produced to lead you to conſider what ſort of Perſons they were, of whom he was likely to have theſe Fears; for his Fears did ariſe from his having done his part, as a Juſtice of Peace, in taking the Examinations upon Oath.

For the Teſtimony of the Fact they produce firſt Mr. Praunce, wherein you will do well to obſerve all the degrees that he goes by, before the Fact, and all the Circumſtances in the Tranſaction of that Affair, and the Parties by whom it was to be Acted: Firſt he tells you, how long it was before they could entice him to conſent to ſuch a Villany as this was, To Murder a Man; he tells you by whom he was thus enticed, which makes the Story more probable; that is, by Girald and Kelly (two Prieſts) and he tells it you ſtill more probably by their Doctrine, that it was no Sin; but it was rather an Act of Charity to kill a Man that had done, and was like to do them miſchief: So that if you conſider the Perſons that Preached to him, and the Doctrine they taught, it carries a great ſhew and preſumption of Truth in it ſelf. When they had met together at the Plow ſeveral times (which was deny'd by ſome of them, but is moſt manifeſtly proved by the Maſter of the Houſe, and the Boy) and the wiſh'd for time was come; for they were to watch the opportunity, and Mr. Praunce was to be at home, and they would call him to give his helping hand; he tells you, That Mr. Hill did go that Morning; for tho' he talks of an Errand before, yet to keep to that which is moſt preſſing in the Evidence, he went to Sir Edmund-bury's Houſe. This he ſeems to deny; but the Maid does Swear it expreſly upon him; and ſays, She came firſt to him, and went up Stairs, and then came back again, and ſtill he was there. And ſhe ſwears poſitively ſhe knows him by his Face, and by the Cloaths he then had on, which are the ſame Cloaths he hath on now, and that that is the Man that was with her Maſter; and this, which they cannot diſprove, half proves the matter.

What had he to do at Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's Houſe? But that would be an hard puzling Queſtion to be put to him; What did you there? And therefore he is to deny it; but the Maid proves upon him, as well as Praunce. So that I would have you conſider how many Witneſſes you have to one thing or another, all conducing to this Point.

You have firſt Mr. Oates, that tells you the Diſcourſe that paſſed between Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey and him, the Maid tells you, that both theſe Men were there, one at one time, and the other at another; and you have Mr. Praunce that knew the whole Affair, who tells you ſo likewiſe, and that they were reſolved to do the Work that Day, in ſo much that if they could not do it, as they had before contrived it (and Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was ſenſible that he was Dogg'd up and down) Girald did reſolve to dogg him to his own Door, and kill him in the Lane that leads to his Houſe, he would have run him thro' himſelf, and this Girald is one of thoſe Prieſts, whoſe Church counts it no ſin, but an Act of Charity, to murder a Chriſtian, to propogate Chriſtianity.

When they had way-laid him and watch'd his coming, from what place Mr. Praunce cannot tell; for he knows nothing but what they told him, and they only named in general, that he was Lodg'd in St. Clement's; and thereupon one comes to acquaint him, that they would intice him in at the Water-gate, by Somerſet-Houſe, and they would do it with art enough, for they never want a contrivance for ſo charitable an Act; and it was upon this pretence that there were Two Men a wrangling and fighting, and then he being a Juſtice of the Peace, was a Perſon that would part the Fray eaſily.

And it was a probable Invention: for Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was a Man that was as willing to do all Acts of Juſtice as any one, and as little afraid to do it; for the Witneſs tells you before, that he ſaid, if they did do him a miſchief, they muſt do it baſely, for he did not fear the beſt of them upon fair play. Then when he was deſired to get himſelf a Man to follow him, he ſlighted the Advice: And we all know, that he was a Man of ſingular Courage, and therefore it was the eaſier to lay a trap for him. Then, ſaith Praunce, When he was got in, Berry and I were to have ſeveral Poſts, which we were to go to, I to one Place, and Berry to another; and I ſtaid, ſaith he, till Green threw the Cravat about his Neck, and was aſſiſted by Girald and the reſt that were there. And then, as ſoon as we could imagine the thing to be done, Berry comes in, and Praunce comes back from his ſtanding, and by ſome Motions finds that he was alive, and that till Green twiſted his Neck round; which the Chirurgeons ſay was plainly a Broken Neck, and nothing of the Wounds which were in his Body were given him while he was alive.

When they had done this, he tells you, they carried him to Mr. Hill's Chamber: Berry, Girald, Kelly and the reſt, all help'd him in, and there they leave him. Then Praunce goes away. This was on Saturday-Night. Then Praunce comes again on Monday-Night, and finds him removed to another Chamber hard by, where he ſaw him by the light of a Dark-Lanthorn, with ſomething thrown over his Face; and afterwards on Tueſday-Night following, they did remove him back to Hill's Lodgings, and there he lay till Wedneſday-Night, when they carried him out.

Saith Praunce, I ſaw him that Night; I was the Man that help'd to carry him out, for it was Praunce and Girald that carried him firſt, and it was Green and Kelly who went before, and took him up afterward. He tells you, they ſet him upon an Horſe-back, and Hill behind him. They carried him out in a Chair, which was a thing that uſed to come in and go out there, and ſo the leſs notice would be taken of it. I will obſerve to you afterwards, on the Priſoners behalf, what is ſaid for them to all this.

But as to Praunce, you ſee he hath given you an Account from the top to the bottom, from the firſt Tranſaction between them, from the Time of his being called by them to help in the Murder, and from his ſeeing the Handkerchief twiſted about his Neck, his Neck twiſted round; how they diſpoſed of his Body at firſt, what removes they made, and when they carried him out, who were in Company, who relieved them, and what became of him at laſt.

He ſays, he ſaw him ſet up before Hill on Horſeback, and they told him, they had thrown him in a Ditch, and Girald had run him through with his own Sword; and in that Poſture, and in that Place the Conſtable found him: The Chirurgeons tell you, that it was by the twiſting of his Neck, and the Strangling, that he was kill'd, and not by the Wounds; and the very Bruiſings which Praunce ſpeaks of, were found upon the view of the Body. So that here is not any one Thing, that is not back'd either in ſome particular Circumſtance or other; beſides Mr. Praunce's Teſtimony, who (alone) could give the Narrative of the Fact.

And it is no Argument againſt Mr. Praunce in the World, that he ſhould not be believed, becauſe he was a Party, or becauſe he after denied what he firſt ſaid: Firſt, Becauſe you can have no Body to diſcover ſuch a Fact, but only one that was privy to it: So that we can have no Evidence, but what ariſes from a Party to the Crime. And, in the next place, his Denial after he had confeſſed it to me, does not at all ſound as an act of Falſhood, but Fear. It is not a good Argument to ſay, that he is not to be believed, becauſe he denied what he once ſaid; for he tells you, he had not his Pardon, he was in great Conſternation; the horror of the Fact it ſelf, and the loſs of his Trade and Livelihood was enough to do it. But how ſhort was his Denial, and how quick was Recantation! for he denied it before the King, not upon Oath: He ſwore it upon Oath, but he denies it upon his Word only; but by that time he got home to Newgate, with Captain Richardſon, he fell down on his Knees, and begg'd him for God's ſake, to carry him back to the King, for what I did ſay at firſt, ſaid he, is true, and this Denial is falſe. And here could be no Tampering, no Contrivance made uſe of; no, 'tis plain there could be no Art uſed to make him retract from his first Testimony. And these are the Particulars, as to Praunce's Evidence.

from

Then comes Mr. Bedlow, and tells you, that he was commanded by Le Faire, and the Priests he was acquainted with, to insinuate himself into the Acquaintance of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey; they did not tell him why; they themselves knew privately wherefore, and they did intend him as an Instrument to do it, as appears afterward. He tells you, he got into his Acquaintance, by pretending to go for Warrants for the good Behaviour and the Peace, as he knew Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was willing to have the Peace kept; and he was with him every Day almost, for a Week or more.

Then the Priests come a little nearer, and tamper'd with him to kill a Man, an ill Man for their turn, and that Mr. Bedlow should be very well rewarded, he should have Four-thousand Pounds to kill that Gentleman; but still they kept the Name secret. He promised them fair, but broke his Word. Afterwards he meets this Companion that he had most confidence in, and being tax'd with his Breach of Promise, said he, I had Business, I could not come. Well, said his Companion, you should have been as good as your Word; but the Thing is done, the Person is killed, and I would have you help to carry him away. He promises to do it, and to meet him at Somerset-House; accordingly he comes upon Monday in the Evening, and about Nine or Ten of the Clock at Night Mr. Bedlow swears, that in this Chamber that Praunce says he was laid in, he did see the Body, by the help of a Dark-Lanthorn; and his Face was cover'd with a Cloak or Mantle, or some such thing thrown over him.

And these two Men, viz. Mr. Praunce and Mr. Bedlow, as the Council have observed, had not any Confederacy together, for they both swear, that they never had any Converse at all; and if it be so, then it is impossible for two Men so to agree in a Tale, with all Circumstances, if they never conversed together, but it must be true.

It is hardly possible for any Man to invent such a Story; for Praunce it is, I believe. I find it is no hard thing for the Priests to contrive such an Action; but for two Witnesses to agree in so many material Circumstances with one another, that had never conversed together, is impossible.

If all this had been a Chimera, and not really so, then Praunce must be one of the notablest Inventors in the World: And there must have been the mightiest Chance in the World, that Mr. Bedlow and he should agree so in all Things; and that the Maid should swear, that Hill was there that Morning; and that the Constable should find the Body, just as they told Praunce they had left him.

So that upon the Matter, you have two Witnesses almost in every Thing; for Mr. Bedlow, seeing him in the Place murdered, is a plain Evidence that the Thing was done; and all the other Witnesses, speaking to Circumstances both before and after, make the Evidence plain, that these were the Persons who did it. And I see nothing incoherent in all Mr. Praunce's Testimony.

I would not urge this so, if I was not satisfied in my own Conscience that the Relation is true. In the Prisoners Defence, there is but one Thing, that hath any sort of Weight; for the young Gentlewoman talking of his being constantly at home at Eight of the Clock, is nothing; for she says they always go to Bed about Nine a Clock, and they give no Answer to this, but that it could not be done in their House but they must know of it; but do not show how that must needs be; so that all their Evidence is slight, and answers it self, or else not possible to be true. All the Testimony that is considerable in this Matter, is that which Berry produces; and that is concerning the Centinels who kept the Guard that Wednesday Night the Body was carried out, and he says there was no Sedan carried out. And altho' this Evidence be produced but by one of them, yet 'tis to the Benefit of them all three; for if it were certain and infallibly true, that the Centinels did so watch at the Gate, that no Mortal could go out of the place, and if the Darkness of the Night might not hinder him from seeing what might go out, or that Mr. Berry's Voice being known to him, he might not call to him, and so Mr. Berry might open the Gate without any great Caution, or more particular Observation by the Centinel, so that this might escape his Observation or Remembrance, and yet that the Centinel be an honest Man, and speak true, as he thinks, to his best Remembrance, which I leave to your Consideration. But there is one Thing the other Centinel tells you, that about Eight or Nine a Clock (for he went off at Ten) there was a Sedan brought in, and he did not see it go out; and so says he that watched from Ten to One; and this is the only thing which hath any Colour in it, in Behalf of the Prisoners. But he that says there was no body went out, says also, that he never saw the Sedan; but the Centinel that was relieved, says, that he saw it go in. Now how far that single Testimony of Nicholas Wright the Centinel will weigh, who says that none went out, I leave with you, which may be mistaken, either by reason of the Darkness of the Night, or those other Particulars I have observ'd to you.

But this is all that can overthrow the whole Series of the Evidence that hath been given by Mr. Praunce, upon whom I find not the least Reflection, except you will call that one, which to me, as it is circumstanced, is rather an Argument for him, than against him, viz. his going off from what he said. And what Sir Robert Southwell says is regardable, that when he shewed them the Place where he was strangled, the House to which he was first carried, he did it very readily and confidently, but was puzzled to find out the Room where he was removed, when he saw him by the Dark-Lanthorn, and would not positively assert where it was; which shews the Integrity of the Man, who would else have gone thro' without boggling; for if all were a Lye, why should he stick at one Thing more than another, but have shewn some Room or other? but when he was confident, he appeared so, and when he was doubtful he appeared so, and so shewed himself an honest Man.

These are the particular Matters, and, as near as I can remember, all that hath been materially offered for the Prisoners, against the King's Evidence. For the Testimony of the Landlord, Warrier, and his Wife, it is plainly spoken of another Time, for it was the Saturday after the Thursday he was found, the 19th of October. So that they speak nothing but what is true, and yet nothing to the Purpose; for the Question is, of that which was done the 12th, but they speak of a Time when the Tragedy was passed, so that there is only the single Evidence of one Witness, the Centinel, which must be opposed to all the concurring Evidence given against them.

Berry.

Berry. There was Centinels placed at every one of the Gates.

L. C. J. That is nothing, for we ſpeak only of this Gate, the great Gate, but I will tell you what there is that does not ariſe from theſe Witneſſes, but from the Nature of the Thing they were about, and the Perſons that tranſacted it, that gives Credit to the Teſtimonies of the Witneſſes, ſo as to incline any one to believe them, as Things ſtand at this Day, in Reference to the known Deſign of the Prieſts to ſubvert our Religion, for they muſt juſtify one Ill by another, and the Miſchiefs they have done will not be ſafe, unleſs they do more.

And for the Prieſts being the Preachers of Murder, and your Sin, that 'tis Charity to kill any Man that ſtands in their Way; their Doctrine will make you eaſily believe their Practice, and their Practice proves their Doctrine. Such Courſes as theſe we have not known in England, till it was brought out of their Catholick Countries; what belongs to ſecret Stranglings and Poiſonings, are ſtrange to us, tho' common in Italy. But now your Prieſts are come hither to be the Pope's Bravo, and to murder Men for the Honour of his Holineſs: And as they are Inhumane, ſo they are Unmanly too; for Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey had not been afraid of two or three of your Prieſts, if they would have dealt fairly with him.

Berry. He was a Gentleman that I never ſpoke with in all my Life.

L. C. J. You muſt ſay and believe, as your Prieſt will have you, and in ſuch Actions as theſe, as your Prieſts ſuggeſt to you, ſo does the Devil to your Prieſts; if you are upon the Matter neceſſitated to what they will have you think; for tho' your Prieſts preach up Freedom of Will, yet they allow none to the Underſtanding. They hold you may do Good or Evil, but will not ſuffer you to underſtand Right and Wrong, for you cannot be perfectly theirs, if you have any thing of your own to guide your ſelves by.

I know that every Body of that Party is apt to ſay their Prieſts own no ſuch thing, but it is notoriouſly known to all the World, that they both Print it, and practice it. What! ſhall any of you diſpute the Power of a Pope? ſaith a Jeſuit: Or, of a Pope and a Council? ſay the moſt moderate Prieſts. Have you Power to ſay how far you will be a Papiſt, and how far not? You may as well bound the Sea, and bid it go thus far, and no farther, as limit the Pope's Authority. I wonder any Man ſhould be of that Perſuaſion, and yet keep his Reaſon; much leſs turn from our Religion to theirs, if he conſiders how they impoſe, and what Miſchiefs and Blood you are involved in by your Prieſts, that have allarmed the Nation. For I will affirm, the greateſt Miſchief the Papiſts have received, come from their Prieſts, who have ſuch unworthy and unmanly Ways of ſetting up their Religion: What! do they think it an Act of Charity to kill Men; or is the Chriſtian Religion or yours, to be promoted by ſuch Means as theſe? No, Gentlemen, 'tis the Fault of your Doctrine, and 'tis a monſtrous Miſtake in you, if you think that you have any Power of your own, whilſt you continue in their Perſuaſion.

I know ſome will aſcribe all to Conſcience that guides them, and that even theſe Miſchiefs are but the Effects of their Religious Obedience; but they are indeed the Conſequences of the Blindneſs of their Obedience. I wonder how any Man can have the Face, thus to diſorder a whole Nation, and yet pretend Conſcience for it. Let no Man tell me, O, Sir, we deſire none of theſe Miſchiefs you talk of: What, not if Religion requires it, or if the Pope ſays it does? Hath not the Council of Lateran decreed, That every Popiſh Prince ought to root out Hereſy upon Pain of Damnation? You muſt: Can you go and tell the Pope how far you will believe, or what you ought to do? You may as well tell me, that if he were once with us, and had the Power he once had, he would leave us to our ſelves, and that if he had the ſame Ability, he would not have the ſame Tyranny.

And therefore all the Roman Catholick Gentlemen in England would do very well to conſider, how much it concerns Chriſtianity not to give Offence; and if they cannot at this Time live in a Proteſtant Kingdom with Security to their Neighbours, but cauſe ſuch Fears and Dangers, and that for Conſcience ſake, let them keep their Conſciences, but leave the Kingdom. If they ſay, why ſhould not we ſtay here, while we do no Miſchief? alas, that's not in your Power. You cannot be quiet in your own Religion, unleſs you diſturb ours; and therefore, if to ſhew your Conſciences you acquit the Country, and let the Inconveniencies light on your ſelves only, I ſhould then think you had Zeal, tho' not according to Knowledge; and not aſcribe it to any Plot, but to the Simplicities of Underſtanding.

But, in ſhort, there is a monſtrous Evidence of the whole Plot it ſelf by this Fact; for we can aſcribe it to none, but ſuch Ends as theſe, that ſuch a Man muſt be kill'd; for it muſt be either becauſe he knew ſomething the Prieſts would not have him tell, or they muſt do it in Defiance of Juſtice, and in Terror to all them that dare execute it upon them; which carries a great Evidence in its ſelf, and which I leave to your Conſideration; having remembred, as well as I could, the Proofs againſt them, and all that is conſiderable for them. Add to this, the Condition that we are in at this Time, and the Eagerneſs of the Purſuit that theſe Prieſts make, to gain the Kingdom, that, for my own part, I muſt put it into my Litany, That God would deliver me from the Deluſion of Popery, and the Tyranny of the Pope: For it is a Yoke, which we, who have known Freedom, cannot endure, and a Burden, which none but that Beaſt who was made for Burden, will bear. So I leave it to your Conſideration upon the whole Matter, whether the Evidence of the Fact does not ſatisfy your Conſciences, that theſe Men are Guilty. And I know you will do like honeſt Men on both Sides.

Then the Jury withdrew, to conſider of their Verdict, and after a ſhort Space returned again.

Cl. of the Cr. Gentlemen, anſwer to your Names. Sir William Roberts.

Sir Will. Roberts. Here. And ſo the reſt.

Cl. of the Cr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of the Cr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Omnes. Our Foreman.

Cl. of the Cr. Robert Green, hold up thy Hand, (which he did). Look upon the Priſoner; how ſay you, is Robert Green Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of the Cr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements?

Foreman. None, to our Knowledge.

Cl. of the Cr. Henry Berry, hold up thy Hand, (which

(which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner. How ſay you, is Henry Berry Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of the Cr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements?

Foreman. None, to our Knowledge.

Cl. of the Cr. Lawrence Hill, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) How ſay you, is Lawrence Hill Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of the Cr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements?

Foreman. None, to our Knowledge.

Cl. of the Cr. Hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath Recorded it. You ſay that Robert Green is Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands Indicted. You ſay that Henry Berry is Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands Indicted. You ſay that Lawrence Hill is Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands Indicted; and that neither they, nor any of them, had any Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the Time of the Felony committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge. And ſo you ſay all.

Omnes. Yes.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, You have found the ſame Verdict that I would have found if I had been one with you; and if it were the laſt Word I were to ſpeak in this World, I ſhould have pronounced them Guilty.

At which Words the whole Aſſembly gave a great Shout of Applauſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to give Judgment this Evening, I know it is not uſual the ſame Day.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. My Lord, I am ready.

L. C. J. No, Brother, I am to ſit at Niſi prius this Afternoon, and 'tis time we broke up the Court.

Cl. of the Cr. Capt. Richardſon, you ſhall have a Rule to bring them up to Morrow. And then the Court broke up.

On Tueſday the 11th of February, the Priſoners were brought again to the Bar, in Order to receive their Sentence; and the Court proceeded thus:

Mr. Recorder. MY Lord, as I was directed by Mr. Attorney, theſe Priſoners being Convicted of Murder, I do, for the King, pray Judgment upon them; but I muſt firſt acquaint your Lordſhip, that immediately after their Conviction, one of the Officers, a Tipſtaff, pretending it was his Fee, took their Cloaths off their Backs.

L. C. J. Who is that Officer?

Mr. Recorder. One Aſhby.

L. C. J. Call him. Why do you offer to meddle with theſe Mens Cloaths?

Aſhby. It hath been an ancient Cuſtom this Forty Years, ſome of us have known it, that the Marſhal hath the Upper-Garment of all Priſoners Tried at this Bar.

Speaking to a Clerk of the Crown-Office. L. C. J. Is there any ſuch Cuſtom, Mr. Waterhouſe?

Waterhouſe. No, my Lord, that I know of.

L. C. J. Here is Mr. Waterhouſe, that hath known the Practice of the Court this Threeſcore Years, ſays there is no ſuch thing. Either reſtore them their Cloaths, or we will take ſome other Courſe with you. Are they in your Cuſtody, pray?

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. I do not know that, my Lord, I think they always plead in Cuſtody of the Marſhal.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. But this ſeems a very barbarous Thing, to take their Cloaths off their Backs.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. It doth ſo, Brother, and they muſt be reſtored.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, you muſt reſtore them.

Aſhby. They ſhall be, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. I pray your Judgment.

L. C. J. Ask them what they can ſay to hinder Judgment.

Cl. of the Cr. Robert Green, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Thou haſt been Indicted of Felony and Murder, thou haſt been thereupon Arraigned, thou haſt pleaded thereunto Not Guilty, and for thy Trial thou haſt put thy ſelf upon God and thy Country, which Country hath found thee Guilty, what haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf, why the Court ſhould not proceed to give Judgment of Death upon thee, and award Execution according to the Law?

Capt. Richardſon. What have you to ſay for your ſelf?

Green. I declare to all the World, that I am as innocent of the Thing charged upon me, as the Child that is in the Mother's Womb. I die innocent, I do not care for Death, I go to my Saviour, and I deſire all that hear me to pray for me. I never ſaw the Man, to my Knowledge, Alive or Dead.

Cl. of the Cr. Henry Berry, hold up thy hand, (which he did,) Thou haſt been Indicted of Felony and Murder, &c. What canſt thou ſay? &c.

Berry. I do declare, I am not guilty of any thing in the World of this.

L. C. J. We do not expect much from you, and it is no great matter; for your Confeſſion will do us little Good, but only for your ſelves. We regard it not otherwiſe, becauſe the Evidence was ſo plain, that all Mankind is ſatisfied, there is no Scruple in the Thing; and we know you have either downright Denials, or Evaſions, or equivocating Terms for every thing, yet, in plain-dealing, every one that heard your Trial hath great Satisfaction; and for my own Particular, I have great Satisfaction that you are every one of you Guilty.

Cl. of the Cr. Lawrence Hill, hold up thy Hand, (which he did,) Thou haſt been Indicted of Felony and Murder, &c. What canſt thou ſay? &c.

Hill. I have nothing to ſay for my ſelf, but that God Almighty knows my Innocence.

Cl. of the Cr. Cryer, make an O Yes.

Cryer. O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King doth ſtraightly Charge and Command all manner of Perſons to keep Silence whilſt Judgment is giving upon the Priſoners Convicted, upon pain of Impriſonment; Peace about the Court.

Then Mr. Juſtice Wild, who, as ſecond Judge in that Court, pronounceth the Sentence in all Criminal Matters, (except High Treaſon) ſpoke to the Priſoners thus:

Mr. Juſt. Wild. You that are the Priſoners at the Bar, you have all Three been Indicted for a deteſtable Murder, and thereunto have pleaded, Not Guilty, and put your ſelves, for your Trial, upo yo your Country, and your Country, upon a clear and pregnant Evidence, I believe to the Satisfaction of all good Men, that were indifferent, have found you Guilty. I have little Comfort to ſay any thing to you, becauſe I obſerve your Obſtinacy at the Bar; but it is ſo generally among you all, you will confeſs nothing to the Death.

Green. God forbid, Sir.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. But tho' I am of another Perſuaſion than you, and know you have no Charity for me, yet I have Charity for you. And if I ſhall ſay any thing, it is out of a zealous Affection I have for your Souls; God knows, I ſpeak it upon no other Grounds; tho' the Offence be horrid, yet I commiſerate your Perſons.

For the Nature of your Offence, it is Murder: He that ſheds Mans Blood, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed; for in the Image of God created he him. So ſaith God to Noah, intimating and declaring thereby, That the Intention of God Almighty, in the making of that Law, was, the Preſervation of Mankind; and that he will not admit or ſuffer his Image to be defaced or deſtroyed. If it ſhall be accounted Treaſon againſt Earthly Princes to deface their Images, is it not much more Treaſon againſt the great God of Heaven and Earth, to deface his Image, who is the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. The Greatneſs of this Sin ſtruck ſuch a Damp and Horror upon the Soul of Cain, that it made him cry out, His Puniſhment was greater than he could bear; or, as our Bibles have it in the Margin, His Iniquity was greater than could be forgiven; and it ſhall come to paſs, that whoſoever meeteth me, ſhall ſlay me: Being conſcious to himſelf, that it was juſt and lawful, that whoſoever did meet with him ſhould ſlay him. And God himſelf doth ſet forth the heinouſneſs of this Offence, when he tells him, His Brother's Blood cryed to him; that is, cried unto God from the Earth, for Vengeance. Blood, it is of a crying Nature, and will never ceaſe crying, till it find out the Man-ſlayer.

It is an Offence ſo heinous in the Eye of God, that he will not endure it in a Beaſt; God ſaith, he will require it of a Beaſt. And doth God require Blood of a Beaſt, a bruitiſh Creature void of all Reaſon, and will he not require it much more of Man, whom he hath endued with thoſe two great Faculties of Reaſon and Underſtanding? And certainly, if Murder in general be enquired after, I may well ſay this of yours, there hath not been committed a more impudent and barbarous Murder in this Civiliz'd Nation, by one Subject upon another. And obſerve how you did effect this Murder, with Baſeneſs enough. See the Baſeneſs of it; As the Devil was the Father of Lies, ſo he was a Murderer from the Beginning; and you firſt begun your Murder with an helliſh, ſtudied, and premeditated Lye. Knowing that this Gentleman was a Perſon very vigorous in the Execution of his Place, that would omit no Opportunity of doing his Office; you pretend you have occaſion for him, and by this Means draw him into your Snare; where what you do, you do cowardly and baſely, firſt diſarm him, then fall all upon him, and murder him; as the Prophet David ſaith of the Ungodly Man, firſt gets the Righteous Man in his Net, and then raviſheth him.

Had ſuch a Thing as this been acted by us Proteſtants in any Popiſh Country in the World, I doubt there would ſcarce have been one of us left alive. They would not have taken this Courſe that hath been taken with you, to admit us to a fair Trial; no, they would have made their own Hands their Avengers: But, God be praiſed, we are of another Religion, and of another Perſuaſion. We leave Vengeance to God, and, under him, to the Magiſtrate, who beareth not the Sword in vain, as you now find.

If I could abſtract Folly from Wickedneſs, certainly it was one of the greateſt Pieces of Folly and Sottiſhneſs in the World: For what could be your End in it? Did you think, that all the Magiſtrates in England were lodged in Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey? That, if he were taken out of the Way, there were not Men of Spirit and Courage, as faithful and diligent as he was? Trouble not your ſelves, nor let thoſe of your Perſuaſion trouble themſelves, there are a numerous Company of Magiſtrates in this Kingdom, that will do the ſame thing, and act in, and execute their Offices with the ſame Courage.

And as to the Manner of the Murder, whom have you deſtroyed? A Magiſtrate: For what? For the Execution of his Office. One that was a Conſervator of the Peace; and whoſe Study it was to preſerve you in Peace, on him you have violated the Peace, and nothing leſs would ſatisfy you than his precious Life: An Affront to the Law, to the Magiſtrate, to the King, to the Nation; yea, to God himſelf, upon whom an higher Affront could hardly have been put. For the Magiſtrate is God's Ordinance, God hath ſet him up to avenge himſelf upon the Wicked, and to reward the Good; and he doth not bear, as it is a ſign by you he hath not born, the Sword in vain.

I might ſay much more concerning the heinouſneſs of this Offence; but had I the Tongue of Men and Angels, I could not ſay enough to ſet out the Horror of it. And now, let me tell you, I do not ſpeak this to inſult and domineer over you; I praiſe God I am of another Spirit; he knows I have another End in what I ſay, and my End is meerly this, to perſuade you from the Foulneſs of your Fact, to make a good Uſe of it; that the horridneſs of your Sin, may make the greater and deeper Impreſſions on your Spirits; and ſo make your Repentance more ſincere and efficacious. Had you as many Years to live as you have Hours, it were little enough to bewail this horrid Offence. But, on the other ſide, as that will be little enough, yet let me give you this Comfort, you have Time enough, if you make a good Uſe of it, to make your Peace with God.

Pray let me dehort you from one Thing; and that is this, Do not be of the Opinion of thoſe wicked Miſcreants the Jeſuits, that have put you upon this Matter; for I have ſo much Charity for you as to believe, they made it a Matter of Religion to you, and juſtifiable upon that account. Do not think ſo, for the Law of God is indiſpenſible, and no Power under Heaven can Licenſe to murder. So that though the Offence in them is abominable, yet in you 'tis an Offence too, and an horrid one. And when you have conſider'd it as ſuch, I then deſire you to take a right Courſe to make your Peace with God: For you muſt paſs under another Judgment than that of Man, and that ſhortly you muſt ſtand before the Judge of Heaven and Earth. And therefore, if by this Means you can prevent that future Judgment, you will have juſt Cauſe to thank God that you had your Puniſhment here on Earth. Therefore let me adviſe you to ſpend every Minute you have left, in a free Acknowledgment of all your Offences: For certainly ſome Sin went before, or this had never come after. One Sin doggs another, ther, and makes way for the Commiſſion of another.

And what muſt you rely upon? not upon any Traſh or Trumpery, not upon any Merit of your own, there is but one Saviour and Mediator, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And I would adviſe you, in the Words of that Great Cardinal, one that was one of the greateſt Men of your Religion, Bellarmine I mean, who having made a Scrutiny, which was the ſafeſt Way for ſecuring Heaven, made the Concluſion thus, To Truſt only upon the Lord Jeſus Chriſt for Life and Salvation. Which I adviſe you to do.

I have now done what I intended to ſay to you; and what I have ſaid, I ſpoke to deliver my own Soul, and upon no other Account. I now pronounce the Judgment which the Law hath appointed to paſs upon ſuch Malefactors; and that is this:

That you go from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, where you ſhall be ſeverally hanged by the Neck, till you are ſeverally dead; and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

Hill. I humbly beg one Favour, that I may have the Privilege to ſee my Wife and Children, and my Brother, before I die, ſometimes.

L. C. J. God forbid elſe.

Hill. Any Day I hope, my Lord.

L. C. J. Captain Richardſon, let them have the liberty of ſeeing their Friends, but do it with Care and Caution.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. And I will ſay this more to you, if you will have any Religious Proteſtant Divines to come to you, they ſhall be ſent you; but none of your Prieſts.

Hill. I deſire only my Relations.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. You ſhall have them, and we offer you the others.

Green. I have no Relations that are Catholicks, but two, and they are not Prieſts. God bleſs the King: and I deſire all good People to pray for us.

L. C. J. Mr. Aſtry, let the Rule be entred for their Execution on Monday next.

Clerk of the Cr. Captain Richardſon, you ſhall have the Rule for their Execution on Monday next.

Then the Keeper carried away the Priſoners to the Goal, to be reſerved till their Execution.

On Friday the 21*ſt* of February following, the Priſoners, Robert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill, were Executed, according to the Sentence pronounced againſt them.

The Tryal of the Lord Conwallis.

AFTER my Lord High Steward was aſcended to the High Chair of State, and ſate down therein, the Commiſſion was delivered by the Clerk of the Crown in the Chancery, to my Lord, on his Knees, who delivered it to Sir Thomas Fanſhaw, Clerk of the Crown in the King's-Bench-Office, and he received it kneeling.

Then Proclamation was made by the Serjeant at Arms, who was Crier for the Day.

Serjeant. O Yes! O Yes! O Yes! My Lord High Steward of England ſtrictly chargeth and commandeth all manner of Perſons here preſent, upon pain of Impriſonment, to keep ſilence and give Ear to His Majeſty's Commiſſion, To my Lord High Steward of England, to his Grace directed.

The Clerk of the Crown with his Face to my Lord High Steward reads it thus:

Clerk of the Crown. Charles Rex Carolus Secundus, &c.

All which time my Lord and the Peers ſtood up bare.

Serjeant. God ſave the King.

Cl. Cr. Make Proclamation.

Serjeant. O Yes! The King at Arms, and the Uſher of the Black Rod on their Knees deliver the White Staff to my Lord, who re-delivered it to the Uſher of the Black Rod, who held it up all the time before him.

Cl. Cr. Make Proclamation.

Serjeant. O Yes! My Lord High Steward of England ſtrictly chargeth and commandeth all Juſtices and Commiſſioners, and all and every Perſon and Perſons to whom any Writ or Precept have been directed for the certifying of any Indictment, or of any other Record before my Lord High Steward of England to certifie and bring the ſame immediately according to the Tenor of the ſaid Writs and Precepts unto them, or any of them directed on Pain and Peril as ſhall fall thereon.

The Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench return'd his Certiorari, and the Record of the Indictment by the Grand Jury of Middleſex, which was read by the Clerk of the Crown, in hæc verba.

Cl. Cr. Virtute, &c.

L. H. Stew. Call the Conſtable of the Tower to return his Precept and his Priſoner.

C. Cr. Make Proclamation.

Serjeant. O Yes! Conſtable of the Tower of London, return the Precept to thee directed, and bring forth the Priſoner Charles Lord Conwallis, on Pain and Peril as will fall thereon.

The Lord Lieutenant of the Tower brought in the Priſoner on his left hand, with the Axe before him, born by the Deputy Lieutenant, which he held with the Edge from him, and returned his Precept in hæc verba.

Cl. Cr. Virtute, &c.

L. H. Stew.

L. H. Stew. Call the Serjeant at Arms to return his Precept.

Cl. Cr. Make Proclamation.

Serjeant. O Yes! Roger Harſnet Eſq; Serjeant at Arms to our Sovereign Lord the King, return the Precept to thee directed, with the Names of all the Lords and Noblemen of this Realm, Peers of Charles Lord Conwallis, by thee ſummoned, to be heard this day, on Pain and Peril as will fall thereon.

He delivered his Precept return'd with a Schedule annexed thus;

Cl. Cr. Virtute, &c. Make Proclamation.

Serjeant. O Yes! All Marqueſſes, Earls, Viſcounts, and Barons of this Realm of England, Peers of Charles Lord Conwallis, which by Commandment of the Lord High Steward of England, are ſummoned to appear this Day, and to be preſent in Court, and to anſwer to your Names, as you are called, every one upon Pain and Peril as will fall thereon.

Then the Panel was called over, the number of Peers ſummoned were 35. in order as followeth, Thomas Earl of Danby, Lord High Treaſurer of England, &c.

All that appeared, anſwered to the call, ſtanding up bare.

Then my Lord High Steward made a Speech to the Priſoner at the Bar thus;

Lord High Steward. My Lord Conwallis, The violation of the King's Peace, in the chief Sanctuary of it his own Royal Palace, and in ſo high a manner, as by the Death of one of his Subjects, is a matter that muſt be accounted for. And that it may be ſo, It hath pleaſed the King to command this High and Honourable Court to Aſſemble, in order to a ſtrict and impartial Enquiry.

The Wiſdom of the Law hath therefore ſtyled it the King's Peace, becauſe it is his Authority that commands it, it is his Juſtice that ſecures it, it is he on whom Men do rely for the ſafety of their Liberties, and their Lives; in him they truſt that a ſevere Account ſhall be taken of all the Violences and Injuries that are offered to them, and they that truſt in the King can never be deceived.

It is your Lordſhip's great unhappineſs at this time to ſtand Priſoner at the Bar, under the weight of no leſs a Charge than an Indictment of Murder; and it is not to be wondred at, if ſo great a misfortune as this be attended with ſome kind of confuſion of Face; when a Man ſees himſelf become a ſpectacle of Miſery in ſo great a Preſence, and before ſo Noble, and ſo Illuſtrious an Aſſembly; But be not yet diſmay'd, my Lord, for all this, let not the Fears and Terrors of Juſtice ſo amaze and ſurpriſe you, ſo as to betray thoſe ſuccours that your reaſon would afford you, or to diſarm you of thoſe helps which good diſcretion may Adminiſter, and which are now extreamly neceſſary.

It is indeed a dreadful thing to fall into the hands of Juſtice, where the Law is the Rule, and a ſevere and inflexible meaſure both of Life and Death. But yet it ought to be ſome comfort to your Lordſhip, that you are now to be tried by my Lords your Peers, and that now you ſee the Scales of Juſtice are held by ſuch Noble hands, you may be confident they will put into them all the Grains of allowance, either Juſtice or Honour will bear.

Hearken therefore to your Indictment with Quietneſs and Attention, obſerve what the Witneſſes ſay againſt you without Interuption; and reſerve what you have to ſay for your ſelf, till it ſhall come to your turn to make your Defence, of which I ſhall be ſure to give you notice; and when the time comes, aſſure your ſelf you ſhall be heard, not only with Patience, but with Candor too.

And then what Judgment ſoever my Lords will give you, your ſelf will (and all the World) be forc'd to acknowledge the Juſtice and Equity of their Judgment, and the Righteouſneſs of all their Lordſhips Proceedings.

Read the Indictment.

Cl. Cr. Charles Lord Conwallis, Thou ſtandeſt Indicted in the County of Middleſex, by the Name of, &c. How ſayeſt thou Charles Lord Conwallis, Art thou guilty of this Felony and Murder whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, Or not guilty?

Lord Conw. Not Guilty.

Cl. Cr. How wilt thou be try'd?

Ld Con. By God and my Peers.

Then my Lord High Steward addreſſed himſelf to the Lords thus;

L. H. Stew. My Lords, Your Lordſhips have here a Member before you of your Noble Body, expoſed to the ſhame of a publick Arraignment, and (which to a Man of Honour is much leſs) to the hazard, both of his Life and Eſtate; All that he hath and ever hopes to have, his Wealth, his Fame, his Poſterity. All that is valuable to him in this World intirely depends on your Lordſhips Judicature, who are now his Peers, and on whom he doth freely put himſelf.

My Lords, The Priviledge of this kind of Tryal and Judicature is a Part of the true greatneſs of the Engliſh Nobility: It is an eminent and an illuſtrious Priviledge. It is a ſolid Point of Honour and Dignity. It is a Priviledge that no Neighbour Nation ever had, and a Priviledge this Nation never was without.

It is not a Priviledge Created by the Great Charter, but confeſt and acknowledged by it. They look but a little way that find this in the ſteps of the Norman Conqueſt, for it is to be found even in the footſteps of the Saxon Monarchy, when Godwin Earl of Kent was Tried by Earls and Barons. And it is no improbable conjecture of theirs, who do think the Wiſdom of this Conſtitution was taken from that Law amongſt the Romans, whereby it was made unlawful for any Man to ſit upon a Senator, that was not himſelf of the ſame Order; a Priviledge, that (as learned Civilians tell us) continued with them during the Reign of many of the Roman Emperors. But, my Lords, as this is a Priviledge as aneient as Monarchy, ſo we have found by many old Experiences, that it cannot be taken away without the diſſolution of that Government: Therefore this is one of thoſe many tyes by which the Intereſt of the Nobility, as well as their Duty, have obliged them to the Service of the King.

In the exerciſe of this Priviledge at this time; I know your Lordſhips will weigh the Fact with all the Circumſtances, whereby it is to recieve its true and its proper Doom. Your Lordſhips are too juſt, to let pity make any abatement for the Crime, and too wiſe to let Rhethorick make any Improvement of it: This only will be neeeſſary to be obſerved by all your Lordſhips, that the fouler the Crime is, the clearer and the plainer ought the Proof of it to be. There is no other good reaſon can be given, why the Law refuſeth to allow the Priſoner at the Bar Council in matter of Fact, when his Life is concerned, but only this, becauſe the Evidence by which he is condemned, ought to be ſo very evident and ſo plain, that all the Council in the World ſhould not be able to anſwer it: upon this ground it is, that the Law hath truſted your Lordſhips with the Tryal of your Fellow Peers; no truſt can be more nobly lodged, nor no Judicature had ever more true ſubmiſſion made to it: Therefore it would be in me ſome want of reſpect to this Auguſt and Noble Aſſembly, ſhould I go about to put your Lordſhips in mind of your Duty: no doubt you will obſerve the Evidence carefully, weigh it diligently, and when that is done, it is impoſſible but the Judgment you will give, muſt be

Right

Right and Honourable, and worthy of ſo wiſe and ſo great a Body; Therefore I will not detain your Lordſhips any longer, from hearing the Evidence that is ready to be offered unto you.

Cl. Cr. Make Proclamation.

Serj. O Yes! if any will give Evidence for our Sovereign Lord the King, againſt Charles Lord Conwallis, Priſoner at the Bar, let him come forth, and he ſhall be heard; for the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his deliverance.

The Indictment was again read to the Peers.

Then Serjeant Maynard, the King's Serjeant at Law, began thus:

May it pleaſe your Grace, my Lord High Steward of England and this Great and Noble Aſſembly; The Priſoner at the Bar, Charles Lord Conwallis, ſtandeth Indicted of a great Crime, that he together with Charles Gerrard and Edward Bourne, not having in his Heart the fear of God, but inſtigated by the Suggeſtions of the Devil, the 18th of May laſt, did Feloniouſly and of his Malice forethought, aſſault one Robert Clerk in Whitehall, and that Mr. Gerrard took him up in his Arms, flung him down, and broke his Neck, of which he inſtantly died; to this he hath pleaded not guilty: It lies upon us who are Council for the King, in this caſe to proſecute it, and prove it to you.

Sir William Jones, the King's Attorney General, then ſpake thus:

Mr. Attorney Gen. May it pleaſe your Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, and my Lords ſummoned for the Tryal of the Priſoner at the Bar: This Noble Lord ſtands Indicted for Murder; an offence, my Lord, which is the firſt and greateſt that is forbidden by the ſecond Table, and an offence of that nature, that the Law of God hath by a moſt peremptory Sentence condemned and decreed, that whoſo ſheddeth Man's Blood, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed. Whether this Noble Lord be guilty of it, remains upon your Lordſhips to try, and I ſhall very ſhortly ſtate the matter of Fact, which we ſhall prove, and then let the Evidence be offered to you. We do not pretend, my Lords neither doth the Indictment lay it, that this great Offence was committed by the hand of my Lord Conwallis.

For I know your Lordſhips have obſerved the Indictment, by which it is alledged, that the hand of Mr. Gerrard did the Fact: But, my Lords, if we ſhall make it out that my Lord Conwallis did concur to this Act, and had in himſelf at that time an Intent to be a Murtherer; then it will be declared by his Grace my Lord High Steward, and my Lords the Judges, that tho' his hand did it not, yet he is equally guilty as if it had.

Now, to make out the Charge againſt him, our Evidence will be ſhortly thus:

On the 18th of May laſt, early in the Morning, between the Hours of One and Two, came down two Gentlemen with three Footmen behind them, out of the Gallery at Whitehall, by the Stairs that lead down to the Park: I call them two Gentlemen, becauſe it was not then diſcovered who they were, or of what Quality; but your Lordſhips will perceive, by the courſe of the Evidence, they were my Lord Conwallis and Mr. Gerrard, coming down at that unſeaſonable Hour; the firſt Queſtion they ask'd the Centinel (who watch'd at the Foot of the Stairs), was the Hour of the Night; and from him had account that it was ſo much.

The Priſoner and Mr. Gerrard were ſomewhat diſtemper'd with Drink, and made him a Reply, that he Lyed, with great Oaths accompanying it. At that time they did no more but go by him into the Park, where, after they had continued by the ſpace of an Hour, back they return'd to the Stairs, and the Centinel demanding, according to his Duty, who came there? They anſwe'd him in very obſcene and uncivil Language, and threatned they would kill the Centinel, who only did his Duty in enquiring who came by him at that time of Night. And we ſhall make it appear, they were in a kind of Contention among themſelves who ſhould kill him; for, as I am inform'd, (I know if it be not prov'd, your Lordſhips will obſerve it) one deſired, Pray let me kill him; and the other deſired, Pray let me kill him; and threatned no leſs than to run him through.

My Lords, the Centinel being of a good Reſolution, was not affrighted from his Place, but kept them off; and when they ſaw they could not win upon the Centinel that way, one of them delivered away his Sword, which he held in his hand not drawn, and then was pleaſed to come to the Centinel, and deſired to kiſs him, and ſwore he would do that: but that the Centinel did equally refuſe; and then they did uſe the ſame Threatnings again, and ſeemed to be in a Contention who ſhould run him through. My Lords, after ſome time, being now come to the top of the Stairs, and there ſtaying, it happen'd there came to the Stair-foot two Youths, and theſe young Men, were, it ſeems, going to Bed to their Lodging, which was very near, and did make it their Requeſt to the Centinel (one of them did) to call him up very early the next Morning, becauſe he was to go of a Meſſage out of the Town. My Lord Conwallis and Mr. Gerrard remaining on the top of the Stair-Caſe being (as we ſaid) in diſorder (which is the ſtrength of the King's Evidence, if proved) both of them ſaid, before they went thence they would kill ſome or other, which Evidence will go a great way to ſhew the concern that Noble Lord the Priſoner at the Bar had in the Buſineſs.

It happen'd as theſe Boys were making their Requeſt to the Centinel, my Lord and Mr. Gerrard took notice of it, and ſeem'd to be concern'd that they ſhould command the King's Soldiers, and bid the Centinel ſhoot him, who told them he conceiv'd the Boy had done him no wrong in asking a civil Kindneſs from him; they again call'd to ſhoot him, and they would bare him out; which he ſtill refuſed to do, finding no reaſon for it: then one of the two took occaſion to ſwear a great Oath, he would kick his Arſe to Hell; to which the Boy that ask'd the Centinel made ſome reply; wherein the word Arſe was repeated: now (whether they underſtood it as an Interrogation, Why kick my Arſe to Hell? as he intended it; or in a worſe ſence, Kiſs my Arſe) one of the Gentlemen in a Rage came running down the Stairs, and that Boy that in truth ſpoke the Word ran away, and the other poor Innocent Boy, truſting in his own Innocency, remained there, until the Perſon came to him, and did on his Knees (in a manner) deſire not to be miſtaken, he was not the Perſon that uſed any ill Words, and cry'd out, O my Lord it was not I, indeed my Lord it was not I; but ſuch, at that time, was the Intemperance and Wrath of the Perſon, who in ſuch a Fury deſcending the Stairs, that (whether with the Blow or the Fall) the Boy receiv'd his Death. We find by our Information formation of the Evidence, that he who did the Thing was, in truth, Mr. Gerrard, who is not yet taken; but whether my Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, did not concur in it, and had not an Intention to kill ſomebody, is the Queſtion left for your Grace and theſe Noble Peers to decide? This is the nature of the Fact; only I deſire to obſerve, that it is true here was ſome diſtance between the place where my Lord Conwallis ſtood, and the place where the Boy was killed. Of what conſequence that may be, I leave to your Grace's and theſe Noble Lords Conſideration: It was the diſtance of the Stairs; but, I think, as every one knows, they are not ſo many, but what is done below may be eaſily ſeen at the top.

We ſhall now, without detaining your Lordſhips any longer, call the Witneſſes, and prove what hath been opened: The Soldier prov'd the Fact, as it was open'd by Mr. Attorney General, except that part about both ſwearing they would kill one or other, which Paſſage was heard but by one of them, and was ſpoken but by one of the Gentlemen.

They could not ſwear, who were the Perſons, becauſe of the darkneſs of the time.

The Boy who was the Companion of him that was ſlain, and that uſed the Words that cauſed the Perſon to come down, ſwore them to be a Repetition only, by way of Interrogation, Why kick my Arſe to Hell?

Then Mr. Attorney deſired to call my Lord Conwallis's own two Footmen, who had been Indicted and acquitted at the King's-Bench-Bar.

Lord High Steward. My Lords the Judges, is there any Queſtion, whether a Perſon acquitted of an Offence be a good Witneſs againſt another charged with the ſame Offence?

Judges. None at all: when he is acquitted he ought to be admitted.

Then the Copy of the Acquittal (proved by a Clerk in the Crown Office) was read, and then were Sworn; who fixed it upon the Perſon of Mr. Gerrard, and ſwore that my Lord Conwallis was all the while upon the top of the Stairs, but after the Fact committed, haſted away for fear of being knock'd down by the Soldiers: And there ended the King's Evidence.

L. High Stew. Now, my Lord, is the time come for your Defence. You hear what is charg'd on you, Pray ſpeak what you have to ſay for your ſelf.

Lord Conwallis. Then the Priſoner at the Bar confeſſed himſelf to have been in the Company that Night when this Accident happen'd, which he hop'd would be a warning to him to ſhun ſuch Diſorders hereafter; but that he had no evil Intention, and but one Witneſs ſwore that both of them would have kill'd the Centinel, that he was not conſcious to himſelf to have had a hand in it, and therefore withdrew not himſelf, but yielded himſelf to the Coroner the next Day, (which he prov'd by the Coroner himſelf) and did therefore, in truſt of his Innocency, ſubmit himſelf to the Judgment of His Grace and his Peers.

Which being done, Sir Francis Winnington, the King's Sollicitor General, ſumm'd up the Evidence in this manner:

May it pleaſe your Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, and my Noble Lords the Peers of the Priſoner at the Bar. According to the Duty of my Place I am to repeat the King's Evidence, and ſtate it to your Grace and theſe Noble Lords, and ſubmit it to your great Judgments, how far it will go for the Proof of this Crime; wherein I ſhall obſeve the Duty of all honeſt Men, which is to do nothing either to wreſt any thing in diſadvantage of the Priſoner out of the King's Evidence, to go farther than it ought, nor ſhall omit any thing that ſhall require your Grace and the Noble Lords Juſtice; for we come to ſeek out the Truth, and we queſtion not but by this Honourable Trial it will be brought to light. But I beſeech your Favour, to take notice, in the firſt place, what Crime this Noble Lord ſtands accuſed of, and it is for Murder; wherein our Law takes notice, that Murder is where a Man unlawfully kills another under the King's Peace, with Malice forethought. Now that here is a Murder committed, I dare with all Humility averr. By whom? that is the Queſtion: For this Robert Clerk, the Perſon killed, doth appear, by the courſe of the Evidence, to have been doing his Duty, attending the Place his Employment required; gave no Offence to any whatſoever; but when the Perſon came down and fell upon him, the poor Youth cried, Indeed, my Lord, it was not I; yet, my Lords, the Hands of Violence ſeiz'd him and kill'd him. Let us then ſee how the Evidence brings it home to the Noble Lord the Priſoner at the Bar; wherein I muſt confeſs we have no expreſs Evidence (nay, we have Evidence to the contrary) that it was not his Hand that did the Fact actually, for it is by two Witneſſes; the Footmen ſwore that it was Mr. Gerrard who came down and gave the unfortunate Blow: But we have that which we think, with humble ſubmiſſion, may reach this Noble Lord: For I know your Grace and my Lords remember, that after they had been an Hour in the Park, both returning, did with horrid Oaths ſwear they would kill the Centinel; there the Evidence fixeth it, not upon one only, but upon both: it was at that time ſo dark they could not be diſtinguiſhed, but by the Voice: The Centinel hath given you an account how he perform'd his Duty, and in what Straight he was, he had much ado to ſave his own Life, or to prevent killing them: But when they came upon the Stairs, theſe two Boys came there in order to deſire the Centinel to call one of them the next Morning. Then one on the Stairs (no Man can tell who it was) with horrid Execrations, ask'd, Will you command the King's Soldiers? Shoot him, Centinel, we'll bear you out. But all this while it was Duſk, no diſtinction of Perſons could be made; whereupon it will fall out to come to this Caſe, If ſeveral Perſons intend to kill one, and happen to kill another, whether this be not Murder in them? For the urging of this, as to the Matter in Law, I leave to him that comes after me. The Centinel ſwears one of them did ſwear he would kill one or other; who it was took up that cruel Reſolution, is left to you to judge: But at that time they were both together upon the top of the Stairs; and my Lord doth not ſeem to give one tittle of Evidence, that ſhews any Endeavours of the Priſoner at the Bar to prevent the other, or diſprove of his Actions: If he had given an account of that, he had ſilenced Juſtice; but when they were all together, he not endeavouring to ſtop his hand, it is as much in Law as if he had ſtruck the Stroke.

The other Soldiers give you a particular Account to the ſame purpoſe.

The two laſt Witneſſes do bring it to the Perſon of my Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, and Mr. Gerrard, who, they ſwore, came down the Stairs,

Stairs, and his Man followed him to the bottom, and there ſtaid at ſome diſtance, till the Fact was done, and they all fled.

This I take to be the matter of Fact faithfully proved, before your Grace, and the Lords the Peers; and I would not trouble your Grace longer, becauſe I would not miſreport any thing, whereby I might do wrong, either to the Priſoner or the King's Cauſe; and becauſe I know your Grace and the Noble Lords will diſtinguiſh and find out where the Truth is. I muſt ſay it is a great Comfort to all the Subjects of England, that Crimes of this Nature are ſo carefully preſented, that whatſoever Honours and Dignities our Gracious Sovereign doth confer on any Perſon, it doth not exempt him from the Juſtice of the Law: It is not only a Comfort to this Aſſembly, but to the whole Nation, to ſee the King tender of his Subjects Perſons and Lives, in that he hath cauſed this ſtrict Courſe to be taken, where the Enquiry hath gone from the Grand Jury of the County, till the Bill came to this great Tribunal; where I doubt not but your Grace, and theſe Noble Lords, will give a righteous and juſt Judgment.

Then Serjeant Maynard concluded thus.

May it pleaſe your Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, and my Noble Lords the Peers.

I, according to the Duty of my Place, come now to conclude the Charge on the King's behalf; ſome Things are fit to be obſerved upon the Evidence, that may produce a Queſtion for the deciſion of the Fact, of what nature it is, that a Murder is committed, is upon Evidence without all Queſtion; and not only the Death of a Man, here is a Child ſlain, without any Provocation in the World given by him, to that Perſon that did it; and that did it too, notwithſtanding the Deprecations of the Boy, affirming his own Innocency, and that with as full Circumſtances as a Chriſtian almoſt could a thing: theſe came from the King's Palace-walk in the Park; call the Centinel Rogue, and when he doth his Duty, ſwear to murder him; with Oaths that a Chriſtian would bluſh at, and be afraid to hear: God damme oftentimes reiterated; and he that ſaith that Word, doth beg of God to hate him, and affirm that he doth hate God. The Obſcenity that they uſed I ſhall not mention again; theſe are Circumſtances of the Caſe; that all were guilty of much, is no doubt; but who of the Murder, is the Queſtion. And I humbly conceive, it is manifeſt, that this Noble Lord was concern'd in it. For it is not requiſite to make a Murder, that he who kills a Man hath conceiv'd a Malice againſt him; for if I have a Malice againſt any Man, and the effect of that fall upon another, it is Murder.

I apply it thus; If it be a Murder in Mr. Gerrard, if this Noble Lord partake with him in the Deſign which made it ſo; to wit, the Malice againſt the Centinel, he is as guilty, as if his Hand had been as much upon him as was Mr. Gerrard's; as in that known Caſe of the Man that poiſon'd an Apple, with an Intention to kill his Wife, and ſhe not knowing of the Poiſon, gave ſome of it to her Child, of which it died; tho' he had no deſign to kill the Child, yet the Malice he had conceiv'd againſt his Wife ſuppli'd the Defect of an expreſs Malice to make it Murder; and he was hang'd therefore. So if a Man aſſault a Maſter, in the preſence of his Servant, who defends his Maſter, and is ſlain, tho' the other had no purpoſe to kill him, yet it is Felony in him, for which he ſhall die; the Law implying a Malice. Then here was clearly a Malice to the Centinel; how near it comes to the Boy will come in Queſtion afterwards. I find the Objection made in my Lord's Caſe, That at the particular Time wherein the Fact was committed, my Lord was not with Mr. Gerrard: But that will be no Objection in the Caſe; for if he did partake in the Deſign of the other, I will anſwer it with the Caſe of my Lord Dacres of the South, who, with ſome others, went unlawfully to ſteal Deer, and the Keeper coming, ſome fled, among whom, my Lord was one: the Keeper was kill'd, my Lord Dacres being at that time without the Pales, a Mile off from the Place, and yet was found guilty of the Murder, and left both his Lands and his Life for it. But here, my Lord Conwallis was preſent, for the Witneſs ſwears the diſtance was not ſo great but it might be diſcern'd. Now whether he was aiding or aſſiſting, is the next thing in queſtion. What occaſion had they of Malice, Revenge, or Injury to the Centinel? They both ſwore they would kill him: Had there been any excuſe for the other, if one of them had killed the Centinel? that could not be. Well, they did not kill the Centinel, but at the ſame time take up a cauſeleſs Offence againſt another, and kill him. I argue, That the Malice againſt the Soldier was diffuſive to the Boy; and one of the Witneſſes proves, that one of them ſwore he would kill ſome Body: now, no one ſpeaks to any thing of my Lords reproving Mr. Gerrard. Thus ſtands the Caſe before your Grace and my Lords: It is a Caſe of Blood, and it cries loud: How far this Noble Lord and Priſoner at the Bar is guilty thereof, you are to enquire, and without all doubt will give a clear Verdict, according to Juſtice and Honour.

Sanders's Caſe in Plowden, fol. 473.

Anno 33 H. 8. Coke, 3 Inſt. fol. 211.

Lord High Stew. My Lords, you have heard the Evidence of your Lordſhips; Pleaſe, to go and conſider of it, you may.

Then the Priſoner withdrew into his own Apartment, with the Lieutenat of the Tower. The Lords went into a Room behind the Court of Chancery, and after a ſtay of two Hours, return'd, and being all ſate; the Earl of Danby, Lord High Treaſurer of England, who was the firſt of the Jury, addreſſed himſelf to my Lord High Steward, and ſaid;

Earl of Danby. My Lord High Steward there is a queſtion in Law, of which ſome of my Lords deſire to recieve ſatisfaction, before they can give in their full Verdict: and we deſire to know of your Grace, whether it be proper here to ask the Queſtion of your Grace, or to propoſe it to the Judges.

Lord H. Stew. If your Lordſhips doubt of any thing, whereon a Queſtion in Law ariſeth, the latter Opinion, and the better for the Priſoner is, that it muſt be ſtated in the preſence of the Priſoner, that he may know whether the Queſtion be truly put. It hath ſometimes been practiſed otherwiſe; and the Peers have ſent for the Judges, and have asked their Opinion in private, and have come back, and given their Verdict, according to that Opinion; and there is ſcarce a Preſident of its its being otherwiſe done; but there is a latter Authority in Print, that doth ſettle the Point ſo as I tell you; and I do conceive it ought to be followed; and it being ſafer for the Priſoner, my humble Opinion to your Lordſhips, is, that he ought to be preſent at the ſtating of the Queſtion.

Cooke's Inſt. fol. 3, 9. Paſch 20 Hen.

Call the Priſoner to the Bar. Who being come, my Lord ſpake thus to him:

Lord High Steward. My Lord Conwallis, My Lords the Peers, ſince they have withdrawn, have conceived a doubt, in ſome matter of Law ariſing upon the matter of Fact in your Caſe; and they have that tender regard of a Priſoner at the Bar, that they will not ſuffer a Caſe to be put up in his abſence, leſt it ſhould chance to prejudice him, by being wrong ſtated; therefore, your Lordſhip will do well to attend the Queſtion that is raiſed; and, my Lords, will you pleaſe to propound your Doubts?

Earl of Danby. It was taken notice of here, that by opening the matter by Mr. Solicitor, the matter of Murder was explained, to be meant by having a prepenſed Malice, and in that Caſe it was opened to us, that any Perſons then preſent, and that had in any ſort contributed to the Diſorders, they were as equally guilty, as they whoſe hand had ſhed the Blood of the Perſon killed.

Now the doubt of ſome of my Lords is, whether if it be found but Man-ſlaughter, thoſe are equally guilty, that are preſent (and have proved to contribute to the diſturbance) of that Crime, as they are in Murder; becauſe ſome of them have not the ſatisfaction that they are the ſame.

Lord High Steward. My Lords the Judges, I take it, the Doubt propoſed to you, is this; whether or no, thoſe that are preſent, and have contributed to the Diſorders, whereby ſuch an accident doth enſue, as proves to be Man-ſlaughter, be as culpable, as he that doth the immediate Fact, as it is in the Caſe of Murder?

After a little Pauſe and Conference, the Judges returned this Anſwer.

Judges. We have had Conference of this Caſe, and our humble Opinion is, If ſundry Perſons be together, aiding and aſſiſting to an Action, wherein a Man-ſlaughter doth enſue, as in Caſe of a ſudden buſineſs without Malice prepenſed, they are equally guilty with the Man-ſlaughter, as they are in the Caſe of Murder prepenſed.

Earl of Danby. The Lords deſire to withdraw once more, which they did, and after a ſhort ſpace returned; and being called over, anſwered to their Names, and all appearing, my Lord High Steward, took their Verdict ſeriatim, beginning at the Puiſne Lord in the following orders, they anſwering, ſtanding bare with their Hands on their Breaſts.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Duras, Is Charles Lord Conwallis guilty of the Felony and Murder, whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not guilty?

Lord Duras. Not guilty.

The ſame Queſtion he demanded of each; who anſwered thus:

Lord
- Butler, not guilty.
- not guilty.
- Maynard, not guilty of Murder, but guilty of Man-ſlaughter.
- Paget, not guilty.
- Berkly, not guilty of Murder, but guilty of Man-ſlaughter.
- Newport, not guilty.
- Hallifax, not guilty.
- Viſcount Cambden, not guilty.
- Guilford, not guilty.
- Aliſbury, not guilty of Murder, but guilty of Man-ſlaughter.
- Craven, not guilty.
- Bath, not guilty.
- Clarendon, not guilty.
- Sunderland, not guilty.
- Peterborough, not guilty.
- Devonſhire, not guilty.
- Northampton, not guilty.
- Bridgwater, not guilty.
- Dorſet, not guilty.
- Suffolk, not guilty.
- Bedford, not guilty.
- Derby, not guilty.
- Kent, not guilty.
- Oxford, not guilty.
- Arlington, not guilty.
- Brereton, not guilty.
- Lindſey, not guilty of Murder, but of Man-ſlaughter.
- Dorcheſter, not guilty.
- Angleſey, not guilty of Murder, but of Man-ſlaughter.
- Danby not guilty of Murder, but of Man-ſlaughter.

Lord High Steward. Call the Priſoner to the Bar.

Then the Priſoner came to the Bar, and the Deputy Lieutenant of the Tower held the edge of the Axe towards him, while my Lord High Steward ſpake thus unto him;

Lord High Steward. My Lord Conwallis, you have been Indicted for Murder, pleaded not guilty, put your ſelf upon your Peers; and your Peers upon conſideration of the whole matter, have acquitted you, and found you not guilty, ſo you are to be diſcharged.

Cl. Cr. Make Proclamation.

Serj. O Yes! my Lord High Steward of England willeth and commandeth all Perſons, to depart hence in God's Peace and the King's; for my Lord High Steward of England His Grace doth diſſolve his Commiſſion.

God ſave the King.

At which words my Lord High Steward holding the white Staff (which was delivered him by the Uſher of the Black Rod on his Knees) in both Hands over his Head, ſnapt in two, and the Aſſembly broke up.

The Tryal of David Lewis, a Jeſuit, at Monmouth Aſſizes.

THE 28th of March, 1679. the Aſſizes began at Monmouth, Sir Robert Atkins being ſole Judge, a Grand Jury of Gentlemen was Returned by the Sheriff, and called, againſt ſeveral of whom Mr. Arnold and Mr. Price excepted, and ſo put by, as ſuch they conceived might befriend me, a Challenge not known before; for in the Caſe between the Marquis of Worceſter, and the Tenants of Wentwood, upon a Riot, Henry Williams, Eſq; and others, would have excepted againſt ſome of that Grand-Jury, the ſame Judge Atkins then poſitively ſaid, It was ridiculous, and not uſual to Challenge out of a Grand-Jury. At laſt a Jury was Sworn, and an Indictment drawn up againſt me, upon the Statute of the 27th Eliz. and preferred to the Grand-Jury. That Evening, being Friday, I was Arraigned upon that Bill, to which I pleaded, Not Guilty. The next Day, about Ten of the Clock in the Morning, the Judge came from the Niſi prius Side, and ſate at the Crown Side, and I at the ſame Time being brought to the Bar, the Cryer made Proclamation for Silence, that a Jury for Life and Death might be Impanelled, and I made my Challenges; preſently a Jury from the other Bar was called, which was not uſual, and I to Challenge, the Judge telling me, I might Challenge without Hindrance; by gueſs I Challenged three; but out of that Niſi prius Jury called to the Crown Bar, and that by Mr. Arnold's own Suggeſtion, who had a ſtrong Influence upon the Judge, as being his Kinſman, and ſitting at his Right Hand, divers were excepted by Mr. Arnold; whereupon, to make up the Jury, the Judge commanded the High-Sheriff to call in ſome, and he called many, and of thoſe, ſtill Mr. Arnold excepted, as either being of my Neighbourhood, or Acquaintance, for there being many in the Country; the Sheriff ſeeing ſo many of his calling excepted, he deſired Mr. Arnold himſelf ſhould call whom he pleaſed; whereat the Judge checked the Sheriff, and ſaid he was ſawcy: At laſt, with much Difficulty, a Jury was Impanelled, a Jury now contriv'd, of none but ſuch as pleaſed Mr. Arnold, principal Proſecutor againſt me, which was very hard, and an ignorant Jury it was withal: The Jury being Impanell'd, it was ſworn, the Indictment read, and Witneſſes called, thus:

Clerk of the Aſſizes. David Lewis, hold up thy Hand.

Here thou ſtandeſt Indicted of High Treaſon, by the Name of David Lewis, for that thou, being a Natural Subject of the King of England, haſt paſt beyond the Seas, and haſt taken Orders from the Church and See of Rome, and haſt returned back again into England, and continued upwards of forty Days, contrary to the Statute 27 Eliz. in that Caſe made and provided, which, by the ſaid Statute, is High Treaſon. What haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf? Art thou Guilty, or not Guilty?

Priſoner. Not Guilty.

Clerk. By whom wilt thou be Try'd?

Priſoner. By God and my Country.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Clerk. Cryer, call William Price, Dorothy James, Maney Trott, John James, Catharine Thomas; he calls them, and they all appear. Then ſays the Clerk to the Cryer, Swear them: And he ſware them all.

Judge. (Sir Robert Atkins.) William Price, Look on the Priſoner, do you know him?

Price. Yes, my Lord, I do know him.

Judge. What have you to ſay of him?

Price. My Lord, about a Year and a half ago I ſaw him at Mrs. Bartlet's Houſe, at a Place called Caſtle-Morton in Worceſterſhire, and there I heard him read Maſs, I was at Confeſſion with him, and I received the Sacrament from him, according to that Way.

Judge. Was there any Altar, or any Crucifixes, or Coapes?

Price. Yes, my Lord, that there were.

Judge. How many Times did you ſee him?

Price. But that once, my Lord.

Judge. Were you of that Way then?

Price. Yes, my Lord, upwards of Eighteen Years.

Judge. What are you now?

Price. A Proteſtant, my Lord.

Judge. Well, Mr. Lewis, what have you to ſay to this?

Priſoner. With your Lordſhip's Leave, I will anſwer all together.

Judge. Very good, you do well, it will be ſo much the ſhorter. Dorothy James, look on the Priſoner, do you know him?

Dorothy. Yes, my Lord.

Judge. What have you to ſay of him?

Dorothy. My Lord, I ſaw him ſay Maſs, take Confeſſions, give the Sacrament, Marry, Chriſten, and heard him Preach in the Engliſh and Welch.

Judge. Were there Altar and Crucifixes?

Dorothy. Yes, my Lord, Altars, Crucifixes, Chalices, and ſuch other Things belonging to that Way.

Arnold. Did you ſee him give that they call Extream Unction?

Dorothy. Yes, that I did, to my Uncle, my Father's Brother.

Judge. Do you know what Extream Unction is?

Dorothy. Yes, that I do, it is anointing ſick People with Oil, when they are dying.

Judge. It's right, that's another Sacrament of their Church, grounding themſelves upon theſe Words of St. Paul, as I take it, If any be ſick among you, let him be anointed: But that was in Times of Miracles only.

Arnold.

Arnold. Did he take upon him to free Souls from Purgatory?

Dorothy. Yes, that he did, and he had of me, Eight Pounds in Silver, and one Piece of Gold, to free my Father's Soul.

Priſoner. God is my Witneſs, to my beſt Knowledge, I never had one ſingle Piece of any Money from her, or her Husband, upon any Account whatſoever.

Judge. Have you any more to ſay?

Dorothy. No, my Lord: And with that ſhe laughed at the Bar.

Judge. How now, Woman! do you make a laughing Game of it? Carry your ſelf more modeſt, for the Gentleman is for his Life, and it is no jeſting Matter. Well, William James, look upon the Priſoner, do you know the Priſoner, and what have you to ſay of him?

William James. Yes, my Lord, I do know him, and I have ſeen him read Maſs many Times, and take Confeſſions, and give the Sacrament, and Chriſten, and Marry.

Judge. Have you any more to ſay?

William James. No, my Lord.

Judge. Mr. Trott, what have you to ſay of the Priſoner, did you ever hear him read Maſs, was he reputed commonly a Jeſuit, or Popiſh Prieſt?

Trot. Yes, my Lord, he was commonly reputed ſo, and I heard him often read Maſs; and I ſaw him Marry Mr. Gunter's Daughter to Mr. Body.

Judge. Were you then of that Religion?

Trot. My Lord, I was deluded by my Wife out of the Proteſtant Religion, and was a Papiſt during her Life-time.

Judge. Are you of that Religion ſtill?

Trot. No, my Lord, when I ſaw their wicked Deſigns to kill my Gracious King, I abhor'd their Traiterous Proceedings, and left them, and am now a Proteſtant, in which I ſhall continue.

Judge. You do well.

Arnold. My Lord, there is Mr. Roger Sayes, a very material Witneſs.

Judge. Cryer, ſwear him. Mr. Sayes, what have you to ſay againſt the Priſoner?

Sayes. My Lord, I was employed, with others, on the 16th of November laſt, to go and ſearch for him, and we found him, and took him, with ſeveral Popiſh Things, which we carried away, &c.

Judge. Did you ſee him at Maſs?

Sayes. No, my Lord.

Judge. Then ſit down. What have you to ſay, John James? What, are you dead, or afraid to be whipt? Look upon me, and ſpeak out.

John James. He married me and my Wife.

Judge. Is that all you know? did you ſee him at Maſs?

John James. I know no more.

Judge. Catharine Thomas, did you ſee him at Maſs? why do not you ſpeak, Woman? ſpeak, Woman.

Catharine Thomas. Yes. I have no more to ſay, do what you pleaſe with me.

Arnold. My Lord, there is one Cornelius in Court, I ſee him, who was Clerk.

Judge. Cryer, call him, ſwear him. Well, Cornelius, did you ever ſee the Priſoner at Maſs?

Cornelius. I am an ignorant Fellow, I know not what Maſs is.

William James. My Lord, he was his Clerk.

Cornelius. No, I was his Servant.

Judge. Well, ſit down. Mr. Lewis, now what have you to ſay to all theſe Witneſſes, for your ſelf?

Priſoner. My Lord, my Indictment was, That being a natural Subject of the King of England, I was Ordained beyond the Seas, by a Juriſdiction derived from the See of Rome, and returned back again into England, &c. contrary to the Statute in that Caſe made and provided, 27 Eliz. Under your Lordſhip's Favour, I conceive, that there has not been here any one Witneſs, who hath proved the Indictment, or any Part thereof.

Judge. What then? Do you expect that we ſhould ſearch the Records at Rome, or ſhould bring Perſons to prove, that they ſaw you Ordained there? No, Sir, it is enough that you have exerciſed the Function of a Prieſt, in Copes and Veſtments uſed in your Church, and that you have read Maſs, taken Confeſſions, given Abſolutions, Married, and Chriſtned; if all this will not make you a Prieſt, what will? I have Tryed ſeveral Popiſh Prieſts, but never met with ſo full a Proof as this now.

Priſoner. All theſe Things ſuppoſed proved, will not make me a Prieſt, unleſs proved to be performed by me, as one Ordained beyond the Seas, by the Juriſdiction derived from the See of Rome; for the very Miniſtry of the Church of England take ſpecial Confeſſions, and give formal Abſolutions; many, in Caſe of Neceſſity, Chriſten, tho' no Prieſts, and lately, the Country knows it, one, no Popiſh Prieſt, ſolemnly married a Couple; neither can one prove to have ſeen me read Maſs, unleſs it be proved firſt, That I was Ordained beyond the Seas, by a Juriſdiction derived from the See of Rome; for, no ſuch Ordination, no Prieſt; and, no Prieſt, no Maſs.

Judge. To diſprove all theſe Witneſſes, by ſaying, it cannot be proved you were Ordained beyond the Seas, by a Juriſdiction derived from the See of Rome, is as much as that ſaying, Bellarmine thou lyeſt.

Priſoner. My Lord, Were it proved that I read Maſs, that were not Treaſon in me, for I am inform'd, that it were but the Forfeiture of 200 Marks, by a Statute of 23 Eliz.

Judge. 'Tis true, who hears Maſs, forfeits one Hundred Marks, But he that uſes to read it, commits Treaſon: But theſe are the Tricks of you all, yet all will not do: Have you any thing elſe to ſay?

Priſoner. With your Lordſhip's Leave, now I deſire to ſpeak ſomething to the Evidence of every particular Witneſs.

Judge. Speak then.

Priſoner. My Lord, as to the firſt Witneſs, Price: As I hope to be ſaved, to the beſt of my Memory, I never ſaw him, till this very Day, before. I never knew or heard, before now, of that Mrs. Bartlet, or of that Place Caſtle-Morton; I never was in that Place all my Life-time; nay, I never was in Worceſterſhire, or in any Houſe in Worceſterſhire, but twice, the laſt Time whereof was about five Years ago; and that was but at my Inn in Worceſter Town, where, with a Servant, I alighted, beſpoke my Supper, went to the Coffee-houſe, drank two Diſhes of Coffee, read the Gazette, returned to my Inn again, Supped, went to Bed, next Morning bought ſome few Books at the Stationers, Dined, took Horſe, returned Home again: This is all the being I ever was in Worceſterſhire.

Judge. Look upon him, do you know him?

Price. Yes, my Lord, he is the Man.

Judge. Have you any more to ſay?

Priſoner. Yes, my Lord, Mr. Trot was married to a Kinſwoman of mine, and ſhe was a conſiderable Fortune to him, which he having ſpent very idlely, idlely, and ſhe dying, he went to London, where finding an Imployment at Court, and there having done ſome unhandſome Things, he was baniſhed the Court, and now lives upon the Charity of Gentlemen and Friends for his Bread; ſo that with good Reaſon it may be believed, it is rather Poverty and hope of Gain, than any thing elſe, that brings him here to accuſe me.

He was a Dwarf. Judge. Paupertas ad Turpia Cogit. Little Gentleman, what can you ſay to this?

Trot. My Lord, I was over with the King, and he commanded me to attend him at White-hall on his Reſtoration, where I came when I returned, and I was received into his Service, but was never baniſhed the Court, only I came away upon Diſcontent, and ſtill I may go there when I pleaſe: My Lord, I am deſirous to do my King and Country good Service, but I am in danger of my Life amongſt them, and muſt look to my ſelf.

Judge. Ay Mr. Trot, have a care of yourſelf, you do well. Mr. Lewis, have you any more to ſay for your ſelf?

Priſoner. My Lord, Dorothy James, and William James her Husband, their Evidence is grounded upon plain Malice, and that Malice thus grounded; They pretending I owed them Money, they ſued me in Chancery; but, after a conſiderable Charge at Law, finding themſelves not like ſo to prevail, then they fell to threatning me, that they would have me in Hand, that they would make me repent, that ſhe would never give over to proſecute againſt me, till ſhe had waſhed her Hands in my Heart's Blood, and made Pottage of my Head.

Judge. Can you prove that?

Priſoner. Yes, my Lord, that I can.

Judge. Call your Witneſſes then.

Priſoner. Cryer, call Richard Jones, Anne Williams, Anne James, and Catharine Cornelius.

Judge. What can you ſay, Richard Jones?

Richard Jones. I heard William James ſay, he would make Mr. Lewis repent.

Judge. Anne Williams, what can you ſay?

Anne William. I heard from ſeveral Perſons, that Dorothy James ſaid to ſeveral Perſons, in and about Carlion, that ſhe would waſh her Hands in Mr. Lewis his Blood, and that ſhe would have his Head to make Pottage of, as of a Sheep's Head.

Catharine Cornelius. My Lord, and I heard the ſame.

Judge. Anne James, what can you ſay?

Anne James. I heard Dorothy James ſwear, that ſhe would waſh her Hands in Mr. Lewis's Heart's Blood.

Judge. Where did you hear her ſay ſo?

Anne James. I heard her ſay ſo in her own Houſe, at the Fire-ſide, when I lived with her.

Judge. Well, Mr. Lewis, all this will not do, all will not excuſe you from being a Prieſt, or were you a Hypocrite?

Priſoner. My Lord, I am a Native of this Country.

Judge. What, of this Country?

Priſoner. Yes, my Lord of this Country, and thoſe Years I lived in this Country, I lived with the Reputation of an honeſt Man, amongſt all honeſt Gentlemen and Neighbours.

Judge. Well, Mr. Lewis, have you any more to ſay?

Priſoner. My Lord, Mr. Sayes was one ſworn Witneſs againſt me, I deſire to ask him one Queſtion.

Judge. Do ſo.

Priſoner. Mr. Sayes, when you took me, was there a Juſtice of Peace with you, at taking of me?

Sayes. No.

Priſoner. My Lord, with this Opportuuity I humbly beg leave to clear my ſelf from a foul Aſperſion, wherewith I am calumniated over the whole Nation in a Printed Pamphlet, which Pamphlet I can here produce; and wherein there is not one Line of Truth. For it ſays at the end of it, that I was taken by a Juſtice of Peace, and others, in a Place cunningly contriv'd, under a Clay-Floor, which Mr. Sayes knows to be untrue; and whereas it alledges, That I cheated a poor Woman of Thirty Pounds, to redeem her Father's Soul out of Purgatory, the Pamphlet names neither the Woman nor her Husband, nor her Father, nor the Place nor Time, when nor where.

Judge. Does it not?

Priſoner. No, my Lord; ſo that the whole Pamphlet is one entire Lye, deviſed by ſome fooliſh Malice.

Judge. Mr. Lewis, I, for my part, do not believe it to be true. Have you any more to ſay?

Priſoner. No more, my Lord.

Judge. Then withdraw and repoſe. Gentlemen of the Jury, Here he ſtands Indicted, &c. (and ſumm'd up the whole Evidence;) if you believe what the Witneſſes ſwore, you muſt find the Priſoner guilty of High Treaſon; you have heard what was proved againſt him, therefore go together.

Priſoner. My Lord, before the Jury go, I deſire to ſpeak ſomething, which now occurs unto me, and is material againſt the Evidence of Price.

Judge. Jury, ſtay.

Priſoner. This very Morning that Price came to my Chamber, with the Goaler, (it ſeems it was to view me,) he took a Turn about the Room, all the Time eying me; at his going out, he was ask'd by the Goaler, whether I was the Man he meant? and he anſwered, If I was he, I was much changed, and if I was he, I had black ſhort curled Hair.

Judge. Can you prove that?

Priſoner. Yes, my Lord.

Judge. Where are your Witneſſes?

Priſoner. Cryer, call Elizabeth Jones, and Charles Edwards.

Judge. Woman, what can you ſay to this?

Eliz. Jones. My Lord, Price this Morning, after he had view'd the Gentleman in his Chamber, as he was going out, he ſaid, If he be the Man, he is much changed, and hath black curled ſhort Hair. Which is not ſo.

Judge. Charles Edwards, what can you ſay?

Edwards. I heard Price ſay the ſame Words ſhe relates.

Judge. Where is Price? Cryer, Call him. But he was not to be found, being gone out of the Hall. (This was the Trick of Coleman, to aſperſe the Witneſſes.)

Here the Jury went out, and immediately returned again.

Clerk. Are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jury. Foreman.

Clrk.

Clerk. David Lewis, hold up thy Hand. Do you find the Priſoner Guilty, or not Guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Judge. Have you any more to ſay?

Priſoner. No more, my Lord.

Clerk. David Lewis, hold up thy Hand.

Judge. Give me my Cap: David Lewis, thou ſhalt be led from this Place, to the Place from whence thou cameſt, ſo the Lord have Mercy on thy Soul.

Priſoner. I made a low Bow to the Judge, and the Court aroſe.

The Tryal of Nathaniel Reading, Esq;

ON Wedneſday the 16th of April, 1679. His Majeſty's Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer did meet at Weſtminſter-Hall, in the Court of King's-Bench, when and where the Commiſſion was read; and Proclamation for Attendance being made, and the Grand Jury ſworn, Sir James Butler, His Majeſty's Attorney General, and Chief Commiſſioner that then appeared, gave them their Charge thus:

Gentlemen,

His Majeſty, upon the Addreſs of the Honourable Houſe of Commons, hath been pleaſed to give Order for this Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer that hath been read, to iſſue out; and the Court thereby hath Authority to inquire of, hear and determine ſeveral other Offences: Yet, at this preſent, you ſhall have no other in Charge than the particular Offence recited in the Indictment in my Hand. It is a Crime of an unuſual and rare Nature: The Indictment is againſt Nathaniel Reading; it ſets forth the Plot againſt the King, the Government, and the Religion eſtabliſhed here by Law, the horrid and pernicious Miſchiefs and Conſequences of it: It ſets forth likewiſe, that ſeveral Perſons, (and names them) as Coleman, Ireland and Grove were Tried, Condemned, and Executed for the ſame: That ſeveral Lords in the Tower do ſtand Impeached in Parliament, of the ſaid High Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, that this was well known to Mr. Reading, and that notwithſtanding he hath ſo misbehaved himſelf, in endeavouring to leſſen and ſtifle (as much as in him lay) the King's Evidence, that, if it had not been happily prevented, might have been of moſt miſchievous Conſequence. I ſhall not take upon me to recite the whole Indictment to you, being very long, and not ſeen or peruſed by me till now; but you ſhall have the ſame along with you, it ſhall be read to you. Your Duty is, to examine and conſider of the Evidence to be offered you, on the Behalf of the King, for the Proof of the Charge againſt the Offender, if you find it amount to a Proof of what is laid therein: Nay, I muſt tell you, if you have but probable Evidence, you ought to find the Bill, becauſe your Preſentment and Verdict is not a Conviction, but in the Nature of an Accuſation, in order to bring the Priſoner to a fair Trial: And if you do not find the Bill, he ſhall never be brought to his Trial, but if you, (having probable Evidence) find it, he ſhall receive his Trial by the petty Jury; and upon the Merits, be either Acquitted or Convicted. This is as much as I think is fit for me to ſay to you at this Time, upon this Occaſion. You may pleaſe to go together, and take the Witneſſes along with you.

Then the Witneſſes were ſworn, and the Grand-Jury withdrew, and after the Space of about half an Hour, returned, finding it Billa Vera. After which, the Court adjourned to Thurſday, the 24th Day of April, at Eight a Clock in the Morning, in the ſame Place.

On which Day the Commiſſioners hereunder named being met, viz.

Sir Francis North, Knight, Lord Chief Juſtice of His Majeſty's Court of Common-Pleas.

William Mountague, Eſq; Lord Chief Baron of His Majeſty's Court of Exchequer.

Sir William Wylde, Kt. and Bar. one of His Majeſty's Juſtices of the King's-Bench.

Sir Hugh Wyndham, Kt. one of His Majeſty's Juſtices of the Common-Pleas.

Sir Robert Atkins, Knight of the Bath, another of the Juſtices of the Common-Pleas.

Sir Edward Thurland, Kt. one of the Barons of the Exchequer.

Vere Bertie, Eſq; another of the Juſtices of the Common-Pleas.

Sir Thomas Jones, Kt. another of the Juſtices of the King's-Bench.

Sir Francis Bramſton, Kt. another of the Barons of the Exchequer.

Sir William Dolben, Kt. another of the Juſtices of the King's-Bench.

Sir William Jones, Kt. His Majeſty's Attorney General.

Sir James Butler, Kt. one of the King's Council, and the Queen's Attorney.

Sir Philip Matthews, Bar.

Sir Thomas Orby, Kt. and Bar.

Sir Thomas Byde, Kt.

Sir William Bowles, Kt.

Sir Thomas Stringer, Serjeant at Law.

Sir Charles Pitfield, Kt.

Thomas Robinſon, Humphrey Wyrley, Thomas Haryot, and Richard Gower. } Eſquires.

Proclamation was made for Attendance, and the Grand Inqueſt being called, Sir Francis North, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, (the Lord Chief Juſtice being out of Town) ſpoke to them thus:

Lord Chief Juſtice North. You of the Grand Jury, This Seſſion is upon a particular Occaſion, and that which lay upon you was to find the Bill, and that that you have done, and we do not see any thing further for you to do, and therefore the Court discharges you from any further Attendance this Session.

Then Mr. Reading was sent for, and brought to the Bar, by Captain Richardson, the Keeper of Newgate, and Silence being Proclaimed, the Clerk of the Crown read the Indictment to him.

Clerk of the Crown. Mr. Reading, hearken to your Indictment.

You stand Indicted, by the Name of Nathaniel Reading, late of the Parish of St. Margaret Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, Esq; That whereas Edward Coleman, William Ireland, and John Grove, and other (unknown) false Traitors against our most Serene Lord King Charles II. the 24th Day of April in the Thirtieth Year of his Reign, at the Parish of St. Margaret's Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, had Traiterously, among themselves, Conspired, Consulted, and Agreed, our said most Serene Lord the King to bring and put to Death, and final Destruction; and to move War against him our Lord the King, within this Realm of England, and the Religion in the same Kingdom rightly and by the Laws of the same Realm Established, to Change and Alter to the Superstition of the Romish Church, and the Government of the same Kingdom to Subvert; for which certain most wicked Treasons, and Traiterous Conspiracies, Consultations, and Agreements aforesaid, They, the said Coleman, Ireland and Grove, in due Manner, and according to the Laws of this Kingdom of England afterwards were Attainted, and had therefore undergone the Pains of Death: And whereas William Earl of Powis, William Viscount Stafford, John Lord Belasis, Henry Lord Arundel of Warder, William Lord Petre, and Sir Henry Tichburn, Bar. the 30th Day of November in the aboveſaid 30th Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, at the said Parish of St. Margaret's Westminster, in the County aforesaid, were of the aforesaid Treasons in a lawful manner Accused, and thereupon, according to the due Form of Law, to the Tower of London (being the Prison of our said Lord the King) were Committed, there safely to be kept, to Answer the aforesaid Treasons, whereof the same William Earl of Powis, William Viscount Stafford, John Lord Belasis, Henry Lord Arundel, and William Lord Petre in Parliament, by the Commons in the same Parliament assembled, are Impeached: But you, the said Nathaniel Reading, the aforesaid Premises sufficiently knowing, and being Devilishly affected against our most Serene Lord the King, your Supreme and Natural Lord, and devising, and with all your Might intending, to Disturb the Peace and common Tranquility of this Realm, and the Government of the same Kingdom, and the sincere Religion of God in the same, rightly and by the Laws of the said Realm Established, at your Will and Pleasure to Change and Alter; and the State of this Kingdom, thro' all its Parts well Instituted and Ordained, wholly to Subvert; and to obstruct, hinder and stifle the Discovery of the said Treasons, and, as much as in you lay, the due Course of Law in that Part to shift off, and retard in the Prosecution of Justice against the said William Earl of Powis, William Viscount of Stafford, William Lord Petre, and Sir Henry Tichburn: You, the said Nathaniel Reading, the 29th Day of March, in the 31st Year of our said Lord the King, at the said Parish of St. Margaret's Westminster, in the County aforesaid, on the Part of the aforesaid William Earl of Powis, William Viscount Stafford, William Lord Petre, und Sir Henry Tichburn, falsely, advisedly, corruptly, and against the Duty of your Allegiance, did unlawfully solicit, suborn, and endeavour to persuade, one William Bedlow, (who, on the 29th Day of March, in the said 31st Year, in due Manner did give Information of the said Treasons; and whom You, the said Reading, the Day and Year last aboveſaid, did well know the Information of the said Treasons as aforesaid, to have given, on the Part of our Lord the King) upon the Tryal of the aforesaid William Earl of Powis, William Viscount Stafford, William Lord Petre, and Sir Henry Tichburn, for the Treasons aforesaid, to be had, to lessen and stifle, and to omit to give in Evidence the full Truth, according to his Knowledge, of the aforesaid Treasons, against Them, the said William Earl of Powis, William Viscount Stafford, William Lord Petre, and Sir Henry Tichburn, and to give such Evidence, as You, the said Nathaniel Reading, should direct: And You, the said Nathaniel Reading, sooner, and more effectually to persuade the aforesaid William Bedlow, to lessen and stifle, and to omit to give in Evidence the full Truth, according to his Knowledge, against the said William Earl of Powis, William Viscount Stafford, William Lord Petre, and Sir Henry Tichburn, upon their Tryals, and to give such Evidence as You, the aforesaid Nathaniel Reading, would direct: You, the said Nathaniel Reading. afterwards, on the said 29th Day of March, in the 31st Year aboveſaid, at the aforesaid Parish of St. Margaret's Westminster, in the said County, falsly, advisedly, corruptly, and against the Duty of your Allegiance, unlawfully did give to the same William Bedlow, Fifty six Pieces of coined Gold of this Kingdom, called Guineas: And also falsly, advisedly, corruptly, unlawfully, and against the Duty of your Allegiance, the Day and Year aboveſaid, at the aforesaid Parish of St. Margaret's Westminster, in the said County of Middlesex, did promise to the said Bedlow, that He, the said Bedlow, within a certain Time, by You, the aforesaid Nathaniel Reading, to the said Bedlow proposed, should have and receive, divers other great Sums of Money, and other great Rewards, for lessening and stifling, and omitting to give in Evidence the full Truth, according to his Knowledge, of the aforesaid Treasons, against the said William Earl of Powis, William Viscount Stafford, William Lord Petre, and Sir Henry Tichburn, and for giving such Evidence, as You, the said Nathaniel Reading, to the said William Bedlow should direct, to the great Hindrance, Obstruction, and Suppression of Justice, in manifest Contempt of the Laws of this Realm, to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Case offending; and against the Peace of our Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

How say you, Mr. Reading, are you Guilty of this Trespass and Misdemeanor, or not Guilty?

Mr. Reading. Not Guilty, in Thought, Word or Deed.

L. C. J. Not Guilty, is your Plea?

Mr. Reading. Yes, my Lord.

Cl. of the Cr. Cryer, make Proclamation. You good Men of this County of Middlesex, summoned to appear here this Day, to try the Issue joined between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Nathaniel Reading, answer to your Names, and save your Issues.

Then the Pannel was called over, and Proclamation for Information in usual Form was made.

Cl. of the Cr. Mr. Reading, look to your Challenges. Will your Lordship please to have Sir John Cutler to be Foreman?

L. C. J. Yes.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I have a very great Honour for this worthy Person, Sir John Cutler; he is in Commission of the Peace, I do therefore humbly desire he may be excused at this Time.

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, you cannot challenge him him peremptorily in this Case, it not being for your Life; and therefore you must shew cause if you have any, he is not in this Commission at all: and for his being in Commission of the Peace, that signifies nothing, for we oftentimes in the Circuits take them off the Bench to be Jury-Men; but if you can shew any cause of Challenge, it must be allowed you.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I look upon my self Indicted for Treason; (I desire God to give me Strength, and I am sure of your Lordship's Patience,) and I look upon the Indictment which hath been read to me, and upon which I have been arraigned, to be expresly Treason; and I do humbly pray your Lordship's Judgment in it, whether it be so or not: For, my Lord, (if your Lordship please) if it be so, as I understand my own Innocency, so your Lordship understands my Charge better then I do. And God knows I have neither strength of Body, nor presence of Mind to manage my own Defence; but my Happiness is, that I am alive at this Day, and am to be Tryed here before so Honourable a Bench. My Lord, I have not had the Advantage of any Council to assist me, nor the benefit of any Common Friend, no not my Wife to come to me. I have not been able to help my self thro' the great Indisposition which I have been under, reduced to it by that barbarous and illegal usage which I have had: For (my Lord) I hope I may say I am the first English-man that in my Circumstances hath ever been used as I have been; and my hopes are, whatsoever becomes of me, (the Lord's Will be done,) I shall be the last that ever shall be so used. My Lord, upon the weakness of my own apprehension, I do take it, that 'tis as high a Treason, nay a greater Treason, and that in the words of the Indictment, than ever Mr. Coleman or any of the others that have been Executed, dyed for; or the Lords now in the Tower stand Charged with; and therefore, my Lord, I pray your direction in it, if it is but a Misdeameanor, (for truly what the Crime is I know not,) but in construction of Law, admitting the Indictment true, the whole does contain in it the blackest Treason that ever Villain was guilty of. If it is so in your Lordship's Judgment, whatever should become of it now, I may be Indicted for it again; and should this Indictment be found upon me, I am as certainly in the Eye of the Law a dead Man, as thro' the Mercy of God I am now alive: And (my Lord) if it be so, I desire your Lordship's Judgment, whether I may not be allowed a peremptory Challenge.

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, You speak in due time, for 'tis pertinent to the matter of peremptory Challenge, to consider whether this be an Indictment of Treason; for if it be, the Law does allow in favour of your Life a peremptory Challenge to such a Number; and I will tell you, your apprehensions have something in them: That the Fact as 'tis laid in the Indictment, might have been laid so as to have made it an Indictment of Treason; and if you are Guilty of this Fact, and not Indicted for Treason, but only for a Misdemeanor, 'tis a favour to you, and that of which you cannot take Advantage or complain of. I'll now shew you that this Indictment is not an Indictment of Treason, nor can the Judgment of Treason be given upon you for it; and so thereby your Life is not in danger. First, here is not the word Proditorie, which is necessary in all Indictments of Treason: Next, you must observe that all Treasons are expresly particularized in the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. And nothing is Treason but what is contained in that Act, as Compassing the Death of the King, Levying War against the King, and other Facts mentioned in that Statute. Now if this Fact had been here laid as an Overt Act for the Evidencing of the Imagination of your Heart in Compassing the Death of the King, and the destruction of the Realm, there it had been an Indictment of Treason: But being there is no Treason formally laid, nor the word (Proditorie) which is necessary in all Indictments of Treason, 'tis only a Misdemeanor you stand Charged with; which I must tell you is a great ease and favour to you in such Circumstances as we are now; and if it be so, you must shew cause if you Challenge any Juror.

Mr. Reading. If I may (with your Lordship's favour) I am very highly disposed for the taking of the least of Favours that can be shew'd me, with the deepest acknowledgement that an Innocent Man, and one in Distress can make: But (my Lord) among the greatest of Misfortunes, this I own as my Happiness, that I am now on my Tryal before your Lordship. But pray (my Lord) may not I (having this favour shew'd to me, and should it be only found a Misdemeanor) afterwards be Indicted for Treason: And pray (my Lord) does there want any one Circumstance of the formality of an Indictment for Treason in this against me, but that one of Proditorie?

L. C. J. No, it is not laid that you did Compass the death of the King.

Mr. Reading. Then (with Your Lordship's Pardon,) I do not understand it; for the Indictment does set forth: That Coleman and others did Conspire the Death of the King, Levying War, the Altering of Religion, and Subversion of the Government; for which they justly suffered Death. And further, as to the several Lords in the Indictment mentioned, they are Accused for the same Treason; And justly, and according to Law sent to the Tower, to Answer what they stand justly impeached of by the Commons: And it sets forth further, that I præmissa prædicta satis sciens, did so and so: Were there no other Expression, that, my Lord, is expresly Treason, or no doubt Misprision of Treason; for, my Lord, it does Charge me that I am satis sciens particularly, sufficiently well apprised of those Treasons they were Executed for, these Accused. And that I did not this out of the weakness of my own Apprehension, but falsly, advisedly and maliciously. My Happiness is, I shall have your great Judgments to determine this matter for me.

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, you exercise great Elocution and Eloquence; but if I do apprehend you aright, what you say is this: That the Indictment sets forth, that you satis Sciens of those Treasons did so and so, which will amount to a Misprision of Treason. I must tell you, there is a difference between the knowledge of a Treason that is secret, for the concealing of that, and endeavouring to stifle the Evidence, is Misprision of Treason, but the knowing of a Treason that is revealed and discovered is knowing no more than all the World knows; and not laid as a Fault, but to aggravate the Fault afterwards charged. This Discourse is nothing to the Matter; if you would have our Opinion, whether you may afterwards be question'd for Treason, 'tis that we are not to give you; answer the Indictment as now it is: You have favour enough that it is laid this way, and not the other. An Indictment of Treason or Misprision must

muſt not be laid ſo as that the Crime muſt be collected out of the Matter of Fact only, but it muſt be formally laid. How you ſhall be Proſecuted hereafter, muſt depend upon the Juſtice of the Kingdom: We ſit here now to determine upon what Matter lies before us, and ſo cannot grant you a peremptory Challenge in this Caſe, which is only allowed in Matters Capital in favour of Life.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I do deſire to know whether this be Treaſon or no, That being deviliſhly affected to the King my Supreme and Natural Lord, and intending to levy War in the Kingdom, and to change the Government, and to alter the Religion, and ſubvert the Peace of England; whether that be not Treaſon?

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, We will anſwer none of thoſe Queſtions: But this I will ſay to you, no Judgment of Treaſon can be given upon you upon this Indictment; and tho' theſe Acts (if formally laid) might have been Treaſon, yet it not being ſo, we muſt proceed as it lies before us: And therefore if you have any particular Cauſe to challenge Sir John Cutler, ſhew it, and we will hear you.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I have this Cauſe, I have been but a little time acquainted with this worthy Gentleman; but, my Lord, I have ſeen him in Company with Mr. Bedlow, mine Accuſer, I know there is not a common Intimacy and Friendſhip between them: I am very certain, my Lord, that Sir John hath too much Honour to do me wrong; but I do humbly deſire that he may have his Eaſe, and be excuſed at this time: not that I do diſtruſt his Juſtice, but for the Reaſons I have humbly offered.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Reading. your Accuſers are Witneſſes for the King, and are neither to gain nor loſe by your Trial; and therefore cannot be preſumed to make any Party for your Conviction. And do you challenge a Juryman becauſe he is ſuppoſed to know ſomething of the Matter? for that reaſon the Juries are called from the Neighbourhood, becauſe they ſhould not be wholly ſtrangers to the Fact. If you can ſhew that he hath already given his Verdict by his Diſcourſe, and that you are already condemn'd in his Opinion, that may be ſome cauſe of Challenge; but that he hath diſcourſed with Neighbours as others do, it may be he believes it, and may be does not believe it, he is now to give his Verdict upon what he hears upon Oath.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I was very glad to ſee Sir John Cutler here, for I did intend to have his Evidence for me.

L. C. J. That you may have tho' he be Sworn.

Then the Jury were ſworn, and their Names were as followeth, viz.

Sir John Cutler.	Thomas Caſſe, Eſq;
Joſhua Galliard, Eſq;	Rainsford Waterhouſe, Eſq;
Edward Wilford, Eſq;	Matthew Bateman, Eſq;
Thomas Henſlow, Eſq;	Walter Moyle, Eſq;
Thomas Earsby, Eſq;	Richard Paget, and
John Serle, Eſq;	John Haynes, Eſq;

L. C. J. If Sir John Cutler deſires Pen, Ink and Paper, or any other Convenience, let him have it.

Cl. of the Cr. Gentlemen of the Jury hearken to the Indictment. He ſtands Indicted by the Name of Nathaniel Reading ——

L. C. J. You need not open the Indictment, let the Council do that.

Then Edward Ward, Esq; being of Council for the King in this Cauſe opened the Indictment.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of this Jury, Nathaniel Reading, Eſq; ſtands Indicted for this Offence: That whereas Edward Coleman, William Ireland, and John Grove, and other unknown Perſons, (Traitors againſt our Sovereign Lord the King,) the 24th Day of April, in the Thirtieth Year of the King, did traiterouſly contrive the King's Death, the ſubverſion of the Government of the Kingdom, and the Religion in the ſame Kingdom by Law eſtabliſh'd, to alter and change to the Superſtition of the Romiſh-Church; for which Treaſons they have been in due manner Attainted and Executed: And it farther lays, that whereas William Earl of Powis, William Lord Viſcount Stafford, John Lord Bellaſis, Henry Lord Arundel of Warder, William Lord Petre, and Sir Henry Tichburn, Baronet, were the 30th of November laſt, in a lawful manner, accuſed of thoſe Treaſons, and for them committed to the Tower; and thereof the ſaid Lords were and ſtand Impeached by the Commons in Parliament. The ſaid Mr. Reading being well knowing of theſe Things, and being devilliſhly affected to the King, his ſupream and natural Lord, and deviſing to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Government and Religion thereof rightly eſtabliſh'd, to change and alter the ſtate of the Kingdom well inſtituted; to ſubvert, and to obſtruct and ſtifle the diſcovery of theſe Treaſons, and as much as in him lay to ſhift off and retard the courſe of Law and Proſecution of Juſtice againſt the ſaid Lord Powis, Lord Stafford, Lord Petre and Sir Henry Tichburn; the ſaid Mr. Reading the 29th of March laſt paſt, at St. Margaret's Weſtminſter, on the part of theſe three laſt mention'd Lords, and Sir Henry Tichburn; did falſly, corruptly, adviſedly and againſt his Allegiance, unlawfully ſollicit, ſubborn and endeavour to perſwade one Mr. William Bedlow (who before had given Information of theſe Treaſons againſt the ſaid Perſons, and whom Mr. Reading knew ſo to have done) to leſſen, ſtifle, and omit to give in Evidence the full Truth according to his knowledge of the ſaid Treaſons againſt the ſaid three Lords, and Sir Henry Tichburn, upon their Trial to be had, and to give ſuch Evidence as he the ſaid Mr. Reading ſhould direct, and to that purpoſe, falſly, corruptly, adviſedly, and againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, unlawfully did give to Mr. Bedlow fifty ſix Guineas, and promiſed him, that within a certain Time (by the ſaid Reading propoſed) he ſhould have and receive divers other great Summs of Money and Rewards, for leſſening, ſtifling, and omitting to give in Evidence the full Truth, according to his Knowledge of thoſe Treaſons againſt the ſaid three Lords and Sir Henry Tichburn; and for giving ſuch Evidence as he ſhould direct: And this is laid to be to the hindrance and ſuppreſſion of Juſtice, in manifeſt contempt of the Laws of this Realm, to the evil Example of others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Indictment Mr. Reading hath pleaded not Guilty. If we prove the Offences aforeſaid againſt him, we doubt not but you will find him Guilty.

Sir Creſwel Levins, one of the King's Learned Council in the Law, thus opened the Charge.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council for the King in in this Case: Gentlemen, This Indictment is not an Indictment of High Treason, nor of Misprision of Treason; and truly the Gentleman at the Bar hath something wondred at the King's Lenity to him; the Fact in the Indictment does indeed sound of another Nature, than what it bears the Name of; it does in this Indictment carry the most moderate Character that the Fact will bear: It is only an Indictment of Trespass and Misdemeanor, but 'tis a very high Misdemeanor; 'tis to stifle the King's Evidence, and that not in an ordinary Case, but where it is attended with the greatest Aggravations that can be in any Case whatsoever. If a Man should endeavour to stifle the Evidence in an Action betwixt Party and Party, in the Courts of Westminster-Hall, for a Business of about 40 s. those Courts of Justice would find a ready way to punish him. This is a Crime of another Nature, for it is set forth in the Indictment, That Coleman, Ireland, and Grove had a Traiterous Design in hand, for the which they were Executed, that is, the Plot; and when I have said that, I have said all, That implies all; you all know what was thereby designed. 'Tis set forth in the Indictment, That such Lords, and Sir Henry Tichburn, were privy to the Plot, and accused for it, and to prevent the Evidence to be given against these Lords, three of them (for the Bargain was only made for three, viz. my Lord Stafford, my Lord Powis, and my Lord Petre; the rest were out of the Bargain, and had not, it seems, found out the Way of Commerce now used by these Persons) was this Gentleman, Mr. Reading's, Business. It was to diminish and lessen the Evidence that was to be given against them, who were charged and accused to be as highly Guilty of the Plot as any that were Executed for it. And when I have told you this, you will surely conclude 'tis an high Offence, and an high Misdemeanor: For if the Life of the King, if the Law of the Land, if the Religion Established, if the settled Government be valuable; if your own Lives, your own Liberties, and your own Fortunes, have any Consideration with you, this is a very high Misdemeanor; for you must look upon these as all at Stake: This Plot, as it was laid, did reach to all; so that an Endeavour to conceal the Evidence that should discover, and thereby prevent the Execution of so horrid a Conspiracy, is a very heinous Misdemeanor; and you will easily believe, that the Gentleman at the Bar, the Prisoner whom you are to Try, had reason to doubt within himself, why it should be called so small an Offence as an high Misdemeanor: But I will not, I need not aggravate this Offence, and the rather because the Gentleman that stands accused for it, is of a Profession (for which I am sorry) which obliges him to know and understand all the Aggravations of his own Crime. I will not open the Evidence, nor tell you what the Witnesses will say, I had rather you should have it from themselves; but, if I am rightly informed, you will have the Matter fully proved; and therefore we will call the Witnesses, and let them tell you what it is they have to say.

Mr. Ward. There are some Things laid in this Indictment, that are to be previously proved, in Order to the Charging of the Prisoner; as the Execution of Coleman, and the rest; and the Impeachment of the Lords. If Mr. Reading stands upon it, we have those here that will prove it.

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, Those Publick Passages that are laid in the Preamble of the Indictment, do you insist they should be proved first?

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I am very willing to save your Lordship's Time.

L. C. J. Do you admit that Coleman and Ireland, &c. were Executed for Treason?

Mr. Reading. Yes, my Lord, and very justly.

L. C. J. Do you admit that the Lords in the Tower are Accused and Impeached in Parliament for this Plot?

Mr. Reading. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. C. J. Then you ease them of the reading those Records.

Mr. Reading. And, my Lord, I do further say, I do verily believe there never was a greater Plot laid in Hell than this. I have abhorr'd it in my Thoughts, and have not only endeavoured to encourage the Discovery, but always gave it as my Counsel, that nothing that was true should be left out in the Evidence. And I do, and will, save your Lordship's Time as much as I can.

Sir Cr. Levins. Then, if your Lordship please, we will call our Witnesses, and prove the Fact; and if there be any thing that Mr. Reading doubts of, we will prove it afterwards. Swear Mr. Bedlow. Which was done.

Mr. Ward. Mr. Bedlow, I shall only ask you the general Question. Will you be pleased to tell my Lords and the Jury, what you know of this Business? Tell the whole Story, what Discourse and Bargainings there have been between you and Mr. Reading, for the diminishing and lessening of your Evidence.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, Mr. Reading was altogether a Stranger to me, till Sir Trevor Williams brought me acquainted with him; he was always very just to me, in whatsoever he did for me, and wherein he was employed by me. I found him very honest, in reference to my own Concerns. And tho' Mr. Reading will bring a great many People, perhaps, that he hath press'd me to discover the whole of the Plot; I do confess, he did it in a very high Measure, in all publick Company, and that I would not be baulk'd in any Point: And for the Discovery, and Convicting, and Executing, of those that had died about this Plot, he never deny'd but they suffered justly and lawfully enough: But in private Counsels where we have been together, he hath spoken to me to be cautious. Indeed he hath never endeavoured to have me stifle the whole Plot, but only for some particular People that he Solicited for; not but that he believed them Guilty, as well as the rest; but he desired me that I would not be so hot against them. And after he had made me Easy, (that was his Word that he himself used) he would have had me made Mr. Dugdale Easy too. At several Times, when we have been together, his very Expressions have been to me, Mr. Bedlow, Tho' there hath been so damn'd a Design on foot, and so terrible a one, yet it is not for your Safety nor Credit to run at the whole Herd of Men: For I was this Day, or Yesterday, he said, with my Lord Chief Justice, and he told me, That at this Rate that Mr. Bedlow accuses Men, none are safe, for he runs at the whole Herd; and seemed to me to intimate, that my Lord Chief Justice was not pleased with my Forwardness. And he told me likewise, You gain your Point with the Parliament, and with the King, and with the Kingdom, if some suffer, as I believe you can do it, and not run at the whole Herd, and 'tis an indifferent Thing to you, so you make the Parliament your Friend, by proving there is a Plot, and the King your Friend, in not charging all these Lords, and you'll You'll make all the Lords your Friends, by your Kindneſs to them. You ſhall take my Inſtructions, I will never adviſe you any thing that is ill, but I'll tell you how far you ſhall proceed. If you can fix any thing for them, you ſhall be ſure to be well gratified.

L. C. J. Did he name any Lords to you?

Mr. Bedlow. This was the beginning of the Diſcourſe, my Lord; and I anſwered him, Mr. Reading, This is a very nice Point, and I know them to be guilty of all the Things I charge them with, and I can prove it. If your Advice be ſo, I'll conſider of it. I think it was after the Prorogation of the laſt Parliament, and then my Encouragement for Diſcovery was not ſo great. But, ſaid I, if any of them deny it to you, that they are Guilty, then they muſt expect no Kindneſs from me at all, for I will ſwear all that I can againſt them; but if they acknowledge that I do them a piece of Service in not ſwearing too ſeverely againſt them, then I will be ready to take your Advice and Inſtructions. He told me many times, that Sir Henry Tichburn did think he had ſeen me in Paris, but he did not uſe this Expreſſion to me, That I charged him with bringing Commiſſions over from Rome. I anſwered again, you may tell Sir Henry Tichburn, if he denies any thing of the Fact that I have ſworn againſt him, he does me and himſelf a great Injury. And to take him off as an innocent Man, I cannot do it, I will never do it. But upon Acknowledgment, I may do them ſome Kindneſs. So likewiſe my Lord Powis and Caryll. The Gentlemen that he moſt Solicited for, were, my Lord Powis, my Lord Petre, my Lord Stafford, Sir Henry Tichburn, Mr. Roper, Mr. Caryll, and one Mr. Corker a Jeſuit. And likewiſe he made me Eaſy, upon that Day that Mr. Whitebread and Mr. Fenwick were upon their Trial; for I have enough againſt them, becauſe I could be no Stranger to Whitebread and Fenwick, two ſuch conſiderable Men, being ſo much concerned as I was in their Affairs. It was impoſſible I ſhould be ſo much a ſtranger to them as I ſaid I was, but it was becauſe Mr. Reading had then made me Eaſy, and I intended to carry on the Intrigue with him, till it could be handſomly diſcovered. But my Lord Chief Juſtice asked me whether that was all I could ſay? And I told him, my Lord, I have ſomething more to ſay, when Time and Place require it, and when I can be ſafe in telling it; that is, when I had found out all that Mr. Reading intended to do, how far he would go, and then I thought it would be a proper Time, when I could make out ſome ſuch Information as I now do; but I would not ſtifle that Treaty that was between him and me, about the Lords in the Tower, which I knew was of greater Conſequence than two old Prieſts. After the Diſſolution of the Parliament, he told me, We muſt ſee other Times, and other Changes, and that the Lords did not think themſelves in ſo much Danger as when the Parliament was Sitting. But at ſeveral Places, the Palſgrave-Head-Tavern, and others, we have had Diſcourſe to the like Effect. He would very frequently come to me, and talk with me about it. Now I asked Counſel of no Man, for I have no need of it in my Matter; 'tis not Matter of Law, but Matter of Fact, that I am to make out, therefore I had no need of his Advice, but he would be at my Bedſide very often in a Morning, and before I was dreſſed, and then we uſed to diſcourſe together about this Buſineſs, and the Manner and Form how it ſhould be done, and how well I ſhould be rewarded if I got off thoſe Lords, that is, my Lord Petre, my Lord Powis, and my Lord Stafford, and Sir Henry Tichburn; theſe were the Four that made the Promiſes: But Mr. Reading ſolicited for the other Lords too; they did promiſe a noble Reward, but I could never ſettle or fix what it ſhould be, but I ſhould have Acknowledgments both in Money and Eſtate, from the Lords, for ſhortning the Evidence, and bringing them off from the Charge of High Treaſon. We had ſeveral Conſultations about this, the Monday that my Lord Danby was ſent for by the Black Rod, Mr. Reading came to me in the Speaker's Chamber, and told me, Mr. Bedlow, Here is a great Turn, my Lord Treaſurer is ſent for by the Black Rod, and Things are like to go quite another way. Well, ſaid I, when were you with the Lords in the Tower? Said he, I have not been there theſe two or three Days, but ſaid he, I intend to go to Morrow, and then I'll bring you word what they ſay. And the next Day, or the Day following, he came to me, and told me, That the Lords did think, that I was in a great Meaſure capable of ſerving them now; and they would have an Account what I could ſay againſt them, that ſo they might view it and correct it. Accordingly, he did go, and appointed to meet me the 28th of March. I omit ſeveral other Times that we had Conſultations, and now come homeward to the Buſineſs. I had then a Command from the Lords to inſpect the Papers of the Spaniſh Ambaſſador's at Wild-Houſe, and I could not meet Mr. Reading according to Promiſe, and I think the other Witneſſes will give you Reaſons better than I. This Appointment was on Friday Night; on Saturday Morning, he, having miſs'd of me the Night before, came to my Lodging, where I had placed Mr. Speke and my Man ready againſt he came. None of all theſe Conferences did I conceal, but revealed them to ſome of the Members of the Privy Council, to the Prince, and to my Lord of Eſſex. As ſoon as ever I had diſcourſed with Mr. Reading about this Matter, I did write it in the very Words, as near as I could, and gave it to the Prince, and my Lord of Eſſex, and I think your Lordſhips are very well ſatisfy'd that the Prince and my Lord knew it. And I told it to ſeveral others, as Counſellor Smith, Mr Kirby, and ſeveral others, who I was certain would be true to the Secret, fearing that Mr. Reading had laid a Trap to catch me with, and therefore I was very Cautious, that no Particular of the Conference ſhould be unknown to them. Indeed, my Lord I was very ſorry to ſee Mr. Reading ſhould do ſo, for I had a very great Reſpect for him; and he did uſe to give me publick Advice in general, for the Diſcovery of the Plot; only for ſome particular People he did ſolicit me that I would be a little Eaſy, thoſe he did ſolicit for. Upon the 29th of March, which was Saturday Morning, when he came into the Room, he asked me, is there no Body here that can over-hear us? I told him, No, there was not. Now I had planted that Gentleman, Mr. Speke, behind my Hangings, and made an hollow Place in my Bed, and therein laid my Man, and cover'd him with the Rug ſo ſmooth, that it did appear as if it were but newly made, and he could not perceive there was any Body there; he would have ſpoke to me in the Dining-Room, but I excuſed it, telling him, That Madam Greves, who lay in the next Room, had over-heard ſeveral Diſcourſes that I had with ſome Perſons there, and therefore it would not be ſafe, but he had better go into my Chamber, (not that ſhe could hear thro' the Wall, but but it was to bring him into my Chamber;) he commended my Caution, and came in with me thither; and his first Word, as I said, was, Is there no Body that can over-hear? No, said I; 'tis my Concern to look to that, that all be private: But, said I, what say the Lords in the Tower? What says my Lord Stafford, what do they intend to do? I must know speedily, for I am to give in my Information to the Secret Committee of what I can say against them this Night. And I can stay no longer, but must have their final Answer, that I may know what to say when I come to the Secret Committee. Saith he, I will go and get their final Answer, but pray put it off till Wednesday, if you can. Saith I, I cannot do that, put it off so long, but I'll do what I can to put it off till Monday. Well, said he, on Monday you shall be sure to hear from me then, and I will have all things ready, as to what you have to say, and you shall have it from me. Accordingly I did stay till Monday, but the Committee of Secresy knew it all this Time, and when I met him on Monday, I had ordered the Witnesses that were by to over-hear us, to be present at the Delivery of the Paper; accordingly they were there, and Mr. Reading did bring it in his own Hand-writing.

Mr. Reading. What Room was it you were in, pray, Sir?

Mr. Bedlow. In the Painted Chamber. And as he gave me the Paper, pretending to put my Hand in my Pocket, I clapp'd it with my Hand privately behind me thus, and Mr. Speke took it out of my Hand, and he and my Man went into my Lord Privy-Seal's Chamber, and there they read it, and had it three Hours before ever I saw it. Well, said I, what will the Lords do? Why, saith he, tho' I have not a full Answer as to what they will do, yet you may expect a noble Reward; and I have Order to draw up Blank Deeds.

Mr. Reading. Who did you give that Paper to, Sir?

Mr. Bedlow. To Mr. Speke, the rest will justify it, 'tis your own Hand-writing. But saith he, I have Order to draw blank Deeds to be signed in Ten Days after their Discharge. And you may be sure that they shall be signed. Mr. Reading, said I, this is but a verbal Promise, and they may perhaps hereafter charge me for all my bringing them off, and do me a great deal of Injury. That cannot be, saith he, my Soul and my Life for it, I have taken their Words, and, if there be any Faith, Honour and Conscience in Men, it shall be done: I dare answer for them. And, Mr. Bedlow, your Safety doth most consist in it; for as they must never be false with you, so they must never be at Enmity with you; for at last if you charge them with corrupting of you, you will be able to ruin them, and it will not look ill upon you, so much as upon them. But, take my Word for it, you shall have a noble and worthy Acknowledgment. I have Authority to draw blank Deeds, both for Summs and Estates, which they will settle upon you, and likewise a speedy Supply of Money, as soon as they can get it in; for my Lord Stafford said, He is now cutting down Wood and selling it, and when he hath raised the Money, you shall have it; but he protests, at present he hath not now Money to defray the Charges of his Family; but I have Order at any time to give you what you need for present Occasions; and indeed accordingly I have had a great deal of Money from him, several Guineas. I had all I asked for, and many times Gold I did not ask for; upon what Terms, other Witnesses will prove better than I hereafter. When we had done, said he, Let me see what Papers you have, the Copy of what you have accused the Queen about, and the Lords, that I may carry them to the Lords, and have their Answer. Said I, They are at my Mother's. I must needs have them, said he. So, that I might give the Witnesses leave to come out, I went with him to my Mother's Lodgings, and pretended to look for them, but found them not, for none but the Secret Committee knows what is in them. But when I had look'd over my Papers, said I, My Brother, perhaps, hath got them away with him, I'll go back to my Lodgings and see. O! said he, you should make sure of such Copies as you have, in some Friend's Hands, to secure them, as well as the Original. I told him, I should be sure of them at Night; so he was satisfied: Tho' I never intended he should have them, because there was Business of so great Consequence in them. When we came back again, we found Mr. Speke, and my Man in the Chamber, writing. I asked Mr. Speke how long they had been there? he told me, As soon as I went out. Then said I to Mr. Speke, Pray withdraw, for now I am to have Mr. Reading's Instructions; if you'll go before by Water, I'll meet you at Westminster by and by. Then I lock'd up the Street Door, and came back to Mr. Reading, and then to work we fell, to write out those Things that he and I did conclude upon.

Mr. Reading. You say that you and I were then alone, and your Man gone away.

Mr. Bedlow. I said, that then you and I concluded upon what I should say, and what I should pitch upon, they were to correct, according to what they thought would most conduce to their own Safety. And when there were any Words, that seemed to urge any thing home upon them, then he would tell me what was Law, and that, perhaps, would reach them, and then altered it. And the Monday after brought a Copy to me, of his own Hand-writing, far from the Words that were set down in the Paper that he and I concluded of together, and delivered it to me privately, and I delivered it to this Gentleman, carrying it behind me thus, and he came after me and took it from me.

Sir C. Levins. Mr. Bedlow, This, you say, was for the shortning of the Evidence, how was it to be shortned?

Mr. Bedlow. To take off the whole Charge of Guilt, that I had sworn against them.

Sir C. Levins. Did that, which you agreed upon to shorten, take off from the Treason?

Mr. Bedlow. That which the Witnesses had in Writing did take off the Charge of Treason wholly.

Sir C. Levins. Was it less than the Information you had given in against them?

Mr. Bedlow. I told him, that it was not delivered into the Secret Committee, but indeed I had a great while before ——

L. C. J. I'll tell you what I apprehend he did say; if I mistake, he will set it right. He saith, When he came back with Mr. Reading, he found Mr. Speke and his Man in the Chamber together, he asked Mr. Speke how long he had been there, and how chanced he was up so soon? Mr. Speke said to him, I have been here ever since you went away. That, upon Mr. Bedlow's Desire, he went away before him to Westminster, and they went together to consult, and great Care was used, that they might not be hindered or surprized. Then

Mr. Bedlow was to pen his Teſtimony, and it was to be carried to the Lords in the Tower, and they were to conſider how to have it minced, that they might be out of Danger. And Mr. Reading underſtanding the Law, when ever Mr. Bedlow ſpoke plain, or dictated any thing that would come home to them, would tell him of it, and that Mr. Bedlow might correct and mitigate it himſelf. I underſtand you ſo, Mr. Bedlow.

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, my Lord, it was ſo. And that Paper, which he brought me back, was ten times ſhorter than that he had of mine, which was forty times ſhorter than what I had given in to the Secret Committee.

Mr. Ward. Mr. Bedlow hath fully proved the Diſcourſe and Bargain between him and Mr. Reading, for the leſſening of his Evidence.

Mr. Bedlow. All Mr. Reading's Words were, That I would ſo ſhorten and leſſen the Charge againſt them, that they might come off.

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, if you have a mind to it, you have Liberty to ask him any Queſtions.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I humbly deſire I may do it, when the Evidence for the King is all given.

L. C. J. It is moſt proper to do it now.

Mr. Reading. With your Lordſhip's Favour, I have this Reaſon for it, I do deſire that the Witneſſes may be Examined apart.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Mr. Bedlow, Pray let me ask you one Queſtion. I am upon the Indictment, for the Jury is charged upon that, and we muſt judge upon that, Was the Agreement between you and him, that you ſhould ſwear what he ſhould direct you?

Mr. Bedlow. It was, to what he and the Lords would direct.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Did the Lords correct your Paper?

Mr. Bedlow. As he ſaid, they had done it.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Did he acknowledge it?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. Mr. Bedlow, I don't underſtand, that you were to have any Conference with the Lords, but you were to be ſhy of that, leſt it ſhould be diſcovered, but what Conference you were to have was with Mr. Reading.

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, my Lord, and he was to give me an Account what they would have me ſay.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. Shew him the Paper, I ſuppoſe he will own his own Hand.

L. C. J. Is that your Hand, Sir?

Mr. Reading. My Lord, this is my Hand, and this is that Paper, that I did deliver to Mr. Bedlow before Mr. Speke in the Painted Chamber.

Mr. Ward. We deſire it may be read, if your Lordſhip think fit.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Methinks it ſhould be material to read the Paper that he gave to Reading firſt.

L. C. J. Have you it here, Mr. Bedlow?

Mr. Bedlow. No; he carried that Paper to the Lords, and brought me this again.

L. C. J. But had you never that other Paper again?

Mr. Bedlow. No, I had not.

L. C. J. Did you ever take a Copy of it?

Mr. Bedlow. No, I did not. But this is that corrected Paper that I was to give in to the Secret Committee, and corrected by the Lords.

Sir C. Levins. We do prove it in Fact, that he had before given further Evidence, and by this Agreement he did contract to give leſs.

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, what do you ſay to Mr. Bedlow?

Mr. Reading. My Lord, if I have your Lordſhip's Direction that I may not examine my Witneſſes apart, I'll go on.

L. C. J. But what ſay you to the Paper?

Mr. Reading. I do own, the Paper that was ſhewn to me, is my Hand, and that I delivered it to Mr. Bedlow.

L. C. J. Then it muſt be read.

Sir C. Levins. My Lord, we don't deſire it ſhould be read, for we cannot ſhew the former Paper, that did contain more, and therefore what will the reading of the latter, which contains leſs, ſignify?

L. C. J. If you do not deſire to have it read, we won't read it.

Sir C. Levins. Mr. Bedlow's Evidence is, That there was a Paper much more large than this, and yet both thoſe ſhort of the Information he had given in, now what will the reading of the one ſignify, without the other?

L. C J. Do you conſent to the reading of it?

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I would ſave your Time, and make it plain.

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, You muſt not come to make your Fence yet, till the King's Evidence is over.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I do it to open his Evidence, and for your Information. My Lord, Mr. Bedlow charges me, That I did write in his Chamber, when his Man and Mr. Speke were gone, a Paper that was much larger than the Paper your Lordſhips have before you; he does ſay, that he did deſire me to go with that to the Lords, and that they did Correct it in ſeveral Places, and being ſo Corrected, I did bring him this Paper back, and delivered it to him in the Painted Chamber, before Mr. Speke. My Lord, I do pray your Lordſhip's Favour in it; when I had the King's Directions for giving in to the Secret Committee, what Information I had to give, I did deliver it into the Chamber, where were Mr. Sacheverel, and others, that very Paper, which was written at his Chamber. My Lord, I have ſent to him ſeveral Times, that he would deliver that to me in order to my own Juſtification, at my Trial. I did deſire likewiſe, that ſome other Papers which I did receive from Mr. Bedlow under his own Hand, and which would be very material to my Defence, might be brought to me, but I have not had the Favour of an Anſwer from Mr. Sacheverel, to this very Hour. I do humbly deſire that he may be ſent to, for the Delivery of them.

L. C. J. I do not know how we can ſend for them, if the Committee will not deliver them.

Mr. Reading. Will your Lordſhip give me leave to ſend to him?

L. C. J. But not by our Direction, to bring them as by our Command.

Mr. Reading. No, my Lord, but by my own Intreaty.

L. C. J. Do what you will, as from your ſelf. Mr. Reading, your Wife was with me Yeſterday, and ſaid, you could not get Subpœna's for your Witneſſes; and I ſent for the Clerk about it, and he told me, there never was any Subpœna's denied you, but you might have had them at any Time. But what ſay you to this Paper, you of the King's Council?

Sir C. Levins. My Lord, we do not deſire to have it read without the other.

L. C. J. Look you here, this Paper muſt be read, for we would ſee whether there was a Paper under your Hand expreſſing what Evidence Mr. Bedlow

Bedlow was to give in this matter, and whether you did one way or other put any thing in Writing which he ſhould ſwear to leſſen his Evidence. As for the other matter of tampering, we ſhall hear from others concerning it; but let us have this read, not for comparing it with the other Paper, to ſhew the Teſtimony is leſs in this than in the other, but as an Evidence of the Fact in it ſelf, for we will expect a good Account from you Mr. Reading, what you had to do to preſcribe him his Evidence in writing, therefore pray read the Paper.

Then the Paper was read in hæc verba.

Lord STAFFORD.

On diſcovery of the Plot, to me, I asked Harcourt and le Phaire how things were to be managed, they told me that his Lordſhip was to be Treaſurer, and he, and Ireland, and Coleman had money to defray all Charges; I then ſaid, I never heard that his Lordſhip was engaged before; they ſaid he had not been long concerned, nor was he acquainted with the affair much, but that the money which was lodged with him was to be diſpoſed of by him for the uſe of the Church and the Catholicks, and they had bound his Lordſhip up by Sacraments not to diſcover what the money lodged with him was to do till the time of uſing it, and then his Lordſhip ſhould know what great Truſt he had upon him for them, and till things were ripe he was not to be acquainted with the depth of the Plot, for they knew he would never conſent to the King's Death till it was done. His Lordſhip always promiſed to be ready to ſerve the Church with his Life and Fortune.

Lord POWIS.

That the Lady Abbeſs of Panthois told me, That his Lordſhip had ſent his Daughters over to be Educated in the Monaſtery, but that his Lordſhip's Lady had declared to her by Letter, that ſhe meant them as Pledges according to her promiſe, to aſſure her that her Lord was real to carry on what he had promiſed concerning the Inrtoducing the Roman Catholick Religion into England. I brought over a Letter from the Monks in Paris, directed to his Lordſhip, with ſevetal other Letters to other Popiſh Gentlemen, tending to the Death of the King, and ſubverting of the Government; but what was in that Letter to his Lordſhip I know not, for that I did not open it, as I had done the others, it being directed to a Peer, but I believed it might be to the ſame Effect, the Monks having informed me ſo at the delivering them to me; ſeveral other Letters to the ſame effect (as the Prieſts told me) I ſaw in the Prieſts hands, directed to his Lordſhip; but I never did read any of them, nor can I ſay that his Lordſhip ever received any of them; but I ſaw them put into the Poſt-houſe to ſend forwards, and I never ſaw his Lordſhip at any Conſultation, neither did I ever hear his Lordſhip named at any Conſultation where the killing of the King was mentioned or debated of: But I verily believe that his Lordſhip was acquainted with the Deſign of Introducing Popery, for that the Lady Abbeſs and the Prieſts have ſeveral times told me ſo, or to that Effect.

Lord PETRE

Mr. Tyrrel a Prieſt, and Madam Thimbleby his Lordſhip's Sifter, told me, that Mr. Thimbleby was gone to my Lord Petre's Houſe to conſult with him how to proceed in the managing of their buſineſs. Mr. Thimbleby having received Letters from beyond Sea in order to the Introducing the Roman Catholick Religion into England, and that his Lordſhip would not in any ſort be perſwaded to bring it in by force, but rather by policy; and tho' his Lordſhip had truly engaged himſelf never to quit the Deſign, yet She was ſure he would not do it by foul means. I told her at her Husband's Houſe at Ernly, that where a Deſign was to be carried on for ſo general a Good, no particular way was to be pitched upon, but any thing, and all means was to be uſed to bring it to paſs, rather than loſe the Deſign; To which ſhe replied, that ſhe believed and approved the ſame, but that ſhe well knew his Lordſhip's mind, that he would never agree to do it by force; but as he would not hinder it, ſhould it go on by force, ſo he would further it by any other means whatſoever.

L. C. J. Here is an Evidence indeed, but ſo minced, that it would have ſignified nothing as to the Charge againſt them.

Mr. Bedlow. In the Information that I gave into the Secret Committee, there is ten Sheets of Paper in every Evidence againſt every Lord.

L. C. J. Now go to the other Witneſſes.

Mr. Ward. Pray ſwear Mr. Speke. Which was done.

Mr. Ward. Come Mr Speke declare your Evidence, and pray come over on this ſide.

L. C. J. I would have him ſtand on the other ſide, becauſe Mr. Reading deſires to examine them apart.

Mr. Speke. My Lords, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I ſhould have been very loth and unwilling to have made my ſelf ſo publick as to have appeared here as a Witneſs againſt Mr. Reading the Priſoner at the Bar, upon any other account than this: but at ſuch a time as this, and in ſuch an Intrigue as this was, in which both the King and Kingdom was concerned, I thought my ſelf bound both in Duty and Allegiance to appear in what I have done, and to teſtifie the Truth of what I know for the Preſervation and Defence of both; and therefore ſhall declare to you the Treaty that was in my hearing the 29th of March laſt between Mr. Bedlow and Mr. Reading now at the Bar, and I ſhall not for the World atteſt any thing but what I heard diſcourſed between them, but will relate it to you in their own Expreſſions as near as poſſibly I can remember; and as to the Matter and Subſtance of what I ſhall declare to you to be diſcourſed between them, I will and can both poſitively ſwear.

But before I acquaint you thereof, I muſt beg leave to tell you, that I knew almoſt daily from Mr. Bedlow for ſome conſiderable time before, what was in the Treaty between him and Mr. Reading, and how they proceeded in this Affair, and therefore could the better charge my Memory with their Diſcourſe, and with the Paſſages which paſſed between them; and Mr. Bedlow having himſelf told you that he acquainted two or three Perſons likewiſe of very great Quality all along with this Treaty between him and Mr. Reading, and with Mr. Reading's conſtant and almoſt daily Conſultation and Advice to him upon this Account, and with his large Promiſes to him from theſe Popiſh Lords and other Gentlmen accuſed and in Cuſtody upon the account of this horrid Plot.

I ſhall not now tire your patience ſo much as to acquaint you with what I had from Mr. Bedlow from time to time, after Mr. Reading had been with with him discoursing of this Affair; but I shall be as short as I can in coming close to the point, and therefore shall only acquaint you with the matter and substance of what I my self heard discoursed between Mr. Reading and Mr. Bedlow the 29th of March last.

The 28th. of March last, I met with Mr Bedlow here at Westminster, who privately told me, that Mr. Reading had appointed to be with me in the Evening about the old Affair, and therefore desired me to come to his Lodgings about seven a Clock, and there should be some private place found out for me advantageously to hear their Discourse: I went to Mr. Bedlow's Lodgings at White-Hall about the time he desired me to come; where I met with Mr. Reading, who was then just come, and asking Henry Wiggens whether his Master was at home, who told him, that he was not; upon which Mr. Reading went away, and left word with this Young-man that he would come again presently, and desired him to acquaint his Master with it as soon as he came home: I staid there with this Young-man a short time after Mr. Reading was gone, asking him whether he could tell where his Master was, who told me, he could not, but told me that there was some Company at the King's-Head Tavern at Charing-Cross which staid there for him, and that his Master would call there before he came home; upon which I immediately went to the King's-Head Tavern, and asked whether Mr. Bedlow was there; but I understood that there was some Company staying there, expecting to speak with Mr. Bedlow, but that he was not then come to them; upon which I went then to Man's Coffe-house, and staid there a while, but had ordered one of the Boys of the Tavern to come and acquaint me as soon as Mr. Bedlow came; but finding that no one came from the Tavern, after some time I went thither again, and understood that he had not been there, and that the Company was gone which staid for him, and then I went back again to Mr. Bedlow's Lodgings, where as soon as I came, this Young-man came out and told me, Mr. Reading was above, and staid there to speak with his Master; on which I call'd him out to me, and told him I was desired by his Master to come to be hid in some private place conveniently to hear the Discourse between them, and therefore I contrived some way to get Mr. Reading out, that I might in the mean time convey my self into some private place, where I might be able to hear their Discourse; whereupon I ordered this Young-man (whilst I was walking without at some distance) to go up and tell Mr. Reading that there was one which came from the King's-Head Tavern at Charing-Cross to acquaint him that his Master was there with some Company, and to tell Mr. Reading that his Master would not be able to get away from them, if he did not go to him, whereupon this Young-man went immediately to Mr. Reading, and acquainted him with it according to my desire and direction, and then Mr Reading went presently to the Tavern, and in the mean time I got up into the Bed-Chamber, and placed my self between the Hangings of the Bed and the Wall, but Mr. Reading finding not Mr. Bedlow at the Tavern, went away home, and left word with this Young-man, that he would be with his Master by Seven a Clock in the morning, and ordered him to acquaint his Master with it, that he might be up when he came, and as soon as Henry Wiggens returned back and acquainted me that Mr. Reading was gone home, and had left word with him that he would be with his Master by seven a Clock in the morning, I went home, but left word with this Young-man, that I would be with his Master by five or six a Clock in the morning, and desired him to acquaint his Master with it. I got up the next morning by five a Clock, and went immediately down to Mr. Bedlow's Lodgings.

Mr. Reading. Sir, You are pleased to say, that the Twenty-eighth of March you was told, that I would be there about Seven of the Clock in the Morning, and that you at first met me there, and that the Appointment failing, then you came the next Morning, which was the Twenty-ninth.

L. C. J. I'll tell you how I apprehend him: The first Appointment was the Twenty-eighth of March, which was on Friday, and then failing, the other was the next Morning, which was the Twenty-ninth.

Mr. Speke. As soon as I came to Mr. Bedlow's Lodgings, I caused the Centinel to knock hard at the Door to raise them up; and in the mean time I went into King-street, expecting to have got into some Coffee-house or other for to drink a Dish of Coffee, whilst they were rising, but it was so early that there was no Coffee-house open; upon which I was forced to return back again to Mr. Bedlow's Lodgings, and then this Young-man and Maid were both got up, and did let me in, and I went up immediately to Mr. Bedlow, and raised him out of his Bed; and somewhat before Seven a Clock we plac'd this Young-man upon the Bed, with the Rug only on him, and prepar'd a place for me on the inside of the Bed, between the Hangings of the Bed and the Wall.

L. C. J. You say he was on the Bed, and you between the Bed and the Wall.

Mr. Speke. Yes, my Lord, between the Bed and the Wall I was, and he on the Bed, and as soon as ever I heard some Body knock at the Door (the Door being lock'd by Mr. Bedlow's Order, to give me notice of his coming) I ran immediately into my Station before he came up, and presently after the Door was open, I heard Mr. Reading's Voice as he was coming up Stairs, (which I know almost as well as his Person) as he was speaking to the Maid, and afterwards to Mr. Bedlow, who met him either in the Passage or at the Stair-head, and then they came both into the Bed-Chamber, (where, I believe, Mr. Reading little thought any Body was) tho' he was so cautious as to ask whether there was no Body there that could over-hear him; to which Mr. Bedlow reply'd, No, no, or some words to that effect. And then Mr. Bedlow began, and said to Mr. Reading, What says the Lords in the Tower now? and what says my Lord Stafford as to the Estate in Glouceſterſhire? to which Mr. Reading then reply'd, and said, My Lord has faithfully promised me to settle that Estate upon you, and I have Orders from my Lord to draw up a Blank Deed in order to settle it on you; which Deed my Lord hath engaged to me to Sign and Seal Ten Days after he shall be discharged, you bringing him off from this Charge of High-Treason, by shortning and contracting of your Evidence. And Mr. Reading said, My Lord Powis, my Lord Petre's, and Sir Henry Tichburn have faithfully engaged and promised me, that they will every one of them give you a very large and noble Reward, which shall be suitable to the Service you shall do them, by shortning and contracting of your Evidence against them, and in bringing them off likewise from this Charge of High-Treason. To which Mr. Bedlow reply'd and said, I will not rely upon their

Promises

Promiſes only, but do expect to have ſomething under their Hands. To which Mr. Reading then reply'd and ſaid, They do not think it fit and convenient for them to do that as yet, but you may ſafely and ſecurely take my Word, as I have done theirs, they having all ſo faithfully promiſed me to perform all I have told you from them. And Mr. Reading finding that Mr. Bedlow doubted their Performances, according to their Words, did moreover uſe theſe very Expreſſions, and ſaid, I'll engage my Life for it. To which Mr. Bedlow then reply'd, I'll then take your Word, as you have done theirs. And alſo told him, The Committee do preſs upon me to deliver in what I have to ſay againſt the Lords, and therefore I deſire I may have their Anſwer ſpeedily, that I may know what they intend to do, and what they do reſolve upon, becauſe I cannot well deferr delivering in what I have to ſay againſt them any longer than this Night, becauſe I hear they come very ſpeedily upon their Trials. To which Mr. Reading then reply'd, That he was ſure they could not be brought to their Trials before Eaſter, telling Mr. Bedlow what the Parliament muſt do firſt, and how they were to proceed in this Caſe. That they muſt come down to be Arraigned, and after that, they muſt have time to give in their Anſwer; and after that, they muſt have Time to prepare for their Trials; and told him, that he might very well defer it till Wedneſday; but Mr. Bedlow told him, that he could not defer it till Wedneſday, but that he would put it off till Monday, and longer he could not: And then Mr. Reading ſaid, that he would go preſently to the Lords and acquaint them with what he ſaid, and that he ſhould not fail of having their Anſwer by him on Monday, and that it ſhould be ready for him to deliver it into the Committee that Night. And after this Dialogue was over between Mr. Reading and Mr. Bedlow, they went out into the Dining-Room, and there Mr. Reading ſtay'd till Mr. Bedlow had quite dreſs'd himſelf, and afterwards went out both together, and ſtay'd away about half an Hour; and when they return'd, I and this Young-man were both together in the Dining-Room, and then Mr. Bedlow ſpoke to me as if I were but juſt come, asking me how long I had been there, I told him I juſt call'd on him as I was going to Weſtminſter, or ſomewhat to that purpoſe, ſo that Mr. Reading might not any ways ſuſpect my being there before-hand, to hear the Dialogue which paſſed between them. Mr. Reading then call'd for a Sheet of Paper and Pen and Ink, and went into the Bed-Chamber, ſpeaking and deſiring Mr. Bedlow to follow him; but after Mr. Reading was gone into the Bed-Chamber, Mr. Bedlow came to me, as I was ſtanding by the Chimney, and whiſpered to me, that they were then juſt going to draw up what they had concluded on, that the Lords might ſee it and correct it, as they thought fit, and that they might ſend him on Monday, in Writing, what he ſhould deliver into the Committee to ſwear againſt them; which I ſaw deliver'd by Mr. Reading, according to his Promiſe to Mr. Bedlow on the Monday Morning following, in the Painted Chamber at Weſtminſter, which Paper was writ by Mr. Reading's own Hand, Mr. Bedlow delivering it to me as ſoon as ever Mr. Reading left him; and then I and another Gentleman of Quality went up immediately into the Room they call the Lord Privy-Seal's Room, where the Committee of Lords uſe to ſit, and there Mr. Wharton and I read the Paper ſo delivered, being writ by Mr. Reading's own Hand.

Jury. Did you ſee Mr. Reading's Face?

Mr. Speke. Ay, between the Door and the Wicket, but not in the Room. On the Monday morning following Mr. Bedlow deſired that I would be here at Weſtminſter before hand, and he would come thither. And he told me they were to correct the Paper, and he was to bring it corrected, and, ſaid he, pray follow me, and ſee the Paper delivered.

Mr. Reading. What Day was that he deſired you?

Mr. Speke. It was upon Saturday, the 29th of March that I over-heard what was ſaid, and it was upon the Monday morning following that I met with Mr. Bedlow, and he bid me go to Weſtminſter before. And I did ſo, and when we met at Weſtminſter I went after Mr. Bedlow at a diſtance: And in the middle of the Court of Requeſts he met with Mr. Reading, and they went together into the painted Chamber, and I followed them at a diſtance, my Eye was very much upon them, but I ſaw Mr. Reading was very cautious that I ſhould not ſee the Paper deliver'd; and indeed I was as ſhy as he, that he ſhould not ſee, that I took notice of it, but I did direct my Eye ſomewhat careleſly that way, and at laſt, I ſaw the Paper delivered by Mr. Reading to Mr. Bedlow, and as Mr. Bedlow told you, I and another Gentleman of Quality went away to the Lord Privy-Seal's Lodgings, where we opened the Paper, and ſaw what was delivered to him, and read it: and this is all I have to ſay.

L. C. J. Shew him the Paper, Is this that Paper, that you ſaw him deliver to Mr. Bedlow?

Sir Creſwel Levins. Look upon it, Sir, is that the Paper?

Mr. Speke. Yes, my Lord, certainly I take it ſo to be.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. He hath owned it.

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, if you would ask this Gentleman any Queſtions, this is your proper time.

Mr. Reading. I hope your Lordſhip will give me the favour to examine them apart.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Mr. Reading, you do confeſs what Mr. Speke ſays to be true?

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I did deliver that very Paper to Mr. Bedlow in the Painted Chamber in the Court of Requeſts before Mr. Speke, and 'tis every word of it of my own Hand writing.

Mr. Juſt Dolben. Did you ſee Mr. Reading in the Room?

Mr. Speke. I did not ſee him, till he was between the Wicket and the Door.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Mr. Speke let me ask you one Queſtion, Did not you know his Voice?

Mr. Speke. I knew his Voice almoſt as well as his Perſon.

L. C. Baron. You are ſure it was he?

Mr. Speke. Yes, I am very confident it was he.

L. C. J. And the Diſcourſe was, that he would have it put off till Wedneſday, but Mr. Bedlow would not, but only put it off till Monday, and then they agreed upon a Paper, an account of which Mr. Reading promiſed to give on the Monday following?

Mr. Speke. Yes, my Lord, it was ſo.

L. C. J. So that the Fact does anſwer the Diſcourſe, for on the Monday following, the Paper was delivered.

Mr. Ward. Here is only one other Evidence, and that is Mr. Bedlow's Servant, that was put in the Bed, as Mr. Bedlow tells you. Pray ſwear Henry Wiggins. Which was done.

Sir

Sir C. Levins. Come on, Young-man, ſpeak your Knowledge of this Matter.

Wiggins. My Lord, what I have to ſay is this.

L. C. J. Speak out.

Wiggins. What I have to ſay, is only what Mr. Speke hath ſaid before, and indeed he hath been ſo very plain, and ſo exact in all Particulars, that I need ſay but little, and therefore ſhall be very ſhort. My Lord, on Saturday the 29th of March laſt, Mr. Reading came to my Maſter's Lodging between Seven and Eight in the Morning. I was placed on the Bed, with the Rug only on me; and Mr. Speke was behind the Bed, between the Hangings of the Bed, and the Wall. As ſoon as Mr. Reading came into the Room, he asked my Maſter, If there were no Body there that could hear them? My Maſter ſaid, No. Then my Maſter asked, What ſay the Lords in the Tower now? And, What ſays my Lord Stafford, as to the Eſtate in Glouceſterſhire? Saith he, My Lord hath promiſed faithfully to ſettle it upon you; and has given me Order to draw up Blank Deeds, which, in Ten Days after his Diſcharge, he will Sign. And this was for the leſſening the Evidence. I think thoſe were the Words. And juſt then the Rug troubling me, that I could not Hear well, I put it off my Head; and, my Lord, I ſaw Mr. Reading ſtand by my Maſter in the Chamber. Saith he, My Lord Powis, my Lord Petre, and Sir Henry Tichburn, have all promiſed you a ſuitable Reward, to the good Service you ſhall do them, in bringing them off from their Charge. Saith my Maſter, I don't think fit to rely upon their Promiſes only; but do expect ſomething under their Hands. No, ſaid he, they don't think it convenient for them to do that, as yet; but you may ſafely take my Word, as well as I have done theirs: And I will engage my Life for it. (Which were the Words Mr. Reading uſed.) Saith my Maſter, The Committee do preſs upon me to give in my Evidence, and I cannot defer it any longer than this Night. Saith Mr. Reading, They cannot come to their Tryal till Eaſter; becauſe ſuch and ſuch Things are to be done, as Mr. Speke have told you, before they can come to their Tryals, which cannot be done till then: And you may very well defer it till Wadneſday. No, ſaid my Maſter, I cannot; but I will do what I can to defer it till Monday. Saith Mr. Reading, I will then go to the Lords, and acquaint them with what you ſay; and bring you an Anſwer from them, on Monday Morning.

And that Day, when he came to the Painted-Chamber, I ſaw him deliver that Paper to my Maſter, and my Maſter carrying it behind him; and I ſaw Mr. Speke take it from him; and Mr. Speke and another Gentleman went afterwards together, up into my Lord Privy-Seal's Room to read it.

Jury. How long was it e're you ſaw Mr. Reading, after the Diſcourſe in the Room?

Wiggins. I got up preſently after they were gone out, and I ſaw them together at the Door; and as ſoon as they were gone, (as I told you) we both went out, into the Dining-Room, and went to write down what was ſaid: And within half an Hour, they came back again into the Room. And ſaith my Maſter to Mr. Speke, What makes you ſo early here? How long have you been here? Said he, I called upon you as I was going to Weſtminſter. And then my Maſter deſired Mr. Speke to go before to Weſtminſter: And Mr. Reading called for Pen, Ink, and Paper; and went into the Bed-Chamber, ſpeaking to my Maſter to follow him: And ſo we went away.

Jury. You ſay, That you ſaw him there? and not only Heard them Talk, but Saw him?

Wiggins. When he came into the Room, the Rugg was over my Head, and they ſpoke ſo ſoftly, that I could not hear him very well; but I put it off, without his perceiving me, and ſaw him then, and heard him plain: And when they went out again, I ſaw them both.

Mr. Speke. We open'd the Hangings, my Lord, a little at the Bottom, that he might not ſuſpect any thing, and the Curtains were but half drawn, or a little more: So that, when he put off the Rug, he might eaſily ſee him.

L. C. J. Have you any further Evidence for the King?

Sir C. Levins. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, we ſhall trouble you with no further Evidence: We have proved it by Three Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Then, Mr. Reading, now is the Time for you to make your Defence: They have concluded, that are for the King.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I am very unwilling to ſpend any of your Lordſhip's Time in vain. There is one Part of the Indictment, which I do humbly take Notice of to your Lordſhip before-hand; they are ſo far from Charging me to be of the Plot, or knowing of the Plot, that Mr. Bedlow hath declared the Preſſingneſs of my Perſuaſions to him, from Time to Time, that he would be very full and poſitive, in Charging any Man according to his Knowledge. Therefore, I ſhall not ſpend any Time, my Lord, in ſpeaking to that. I am obliged to Mr. Bedlow, that he hath done me ſo much Right, in ſaying what he hath ſaid of me about that: But I ſhall apply my ſelf ſingly to what he hath given in Evidence againſt me; and what hath been ſpoken to, by Mr. Speke, and his Servant.

My Lord, the Indictment is, That I ſhould endeavour to perſuade, to leſſen his Evidence againſt thoſe Lords, and Sir Henry Tichburn; that is to ſay, my Lord Powis, my Lord Stafford, and my Lord Petre: They prove nothing againſt me, as to the other. And, my Lord, becauſe the Indictment doth likewiſe ſet forth, that this was done on the Behalf of theſe Lords, and on their Account, as it ſays, I ſhall humbly (before I go on to cenſure the Evidence) give your Lordſhip an Account, upon what Occaſion it was, and how I went to ſee any of theſe Lords, and Sir Henry Tichburn here mentioned.

My Lord, within a few Days after the Lords were ſent to the Tower, Mr. Bulſtrode, a Gentleman of the Privy-Chamber to His Majeſty, did come to me, from my Lord Stafford; telling me, That my Lord Staffora deſired to be remembred to me, and to pray me to come to him.

My Lord, I did tell that Gentleman, That tho' I had a very great Reverence for my Lord, having known him long, and having been my Client for ſeveral Years; yet, conſidering how his Circumſtances then were, I ſhould not venture to go to him, till I had acquainted ſome of the Lords of the Cloſe Committee with it, and had their Leave.

Mr. Bulſtrode ſaid, I acted very prudently in it: And accordingly, I did go, and acquainted the Prince, my Lord Treaſurer, the Marquis of Worceſter, and ſome other Lords with it: And they told me, That my Profeſſion did priviledge me to go; And God forbid, but that Reſpect ſhould be ſhewn him, and the reſt of the Lords. Hereupon, my Lord, I did go; and when I was there, I acquainted the Lieutenant of the Tower with it; who invited me to Dinner with him: I did ſo, my Lord, and my Lord Stafford was there: And afterwards he he did desire me to go to his Quarters with him: And being there, he told me, That I was not ignorant of what he was Charged with, and upon what Account he was there: And he was pleased to say much concerning his own Innocency. I told his Lordship, I heartily wished, it might appear he was as innocent as he said he was.

Then he desired me to move for his Habeas Corpus. I told him, I thought it not seasonable yet to do it: I also told him, I would not at all admit my self to be of Council for him, but for his Innocency, and as an innocent Man; with this, that I did so expresly abhor and detest the Crime that he was charged with, that tho' I were of Council with him, or in the very highest Degree of Friendship imaginable, should I discover he was guilty of it, I would be so far from continuing of Council for him, that I would come in as a Witness against him.

My Lord, upon these Terms it was, that my Lord took my Advice, and he gave me my Fee, which was two Guineas.

My Lord, afterwards I was desired by several of the Lords, to speak with Sir Henry Goring, and Sir John Gage, then Prisoners in the Tower: And, my Lord, they did desire me, that I would move for their Habeas Corpus's; and, my Lord, I did so. I was then sent to by my Lord Brudnel, and several other Gentlemen in the King's-Bench, Prisoners upon this Account: And, my Lord, I did, at this Bar, move for several of their Habeas Corpus's. And having the Direction of the Court, that tho' they did not deny the granting of the Writ; yet notwithstanding, no Benefit should be had of that Writ, unless Mr. Attorney, being attended in it, should give Consent to their being Bailed. Accordingly, my Lord, Mr. Attorney did attend in it, and he was pleased to say, That he would not do any thing for the Bailing of any, for all that the Writ was granted, till he knew what their Accusers charged them with. I then knew, it was in vain to bring them up, till Mr. Attorney was satisfied.

Mr. Scroggs and I did go from Mr. Attorney to Mr. Bedlow and Mr. Oates: And the several Persons for whom we were of Council, being set down in a List, we did also set down our Directions from Mr. Attorney about them; and did pray them to let us know what they had to charge any of them with. And if they were easy in their Consenting to their being Bailed, then we did go to Mr. Attorney, to let him know it; and he being satisfied from their own Mouths, did consent to the Bailing of several of them.

My Lord, this did occasion my discoursing several Times with Mr. Bedlow and Mr. Oates, concerning the Nature of the several Charges, against the Gentlemen they had accused. My Lord, during the whole Time of my being conversant with Mr. Bedlow, (and he hath given your Lordship an Account how I came acquainted with him) tho' I did desire Sir Trevor Williams might be here; and did send him a Subpœna, because I knew he was unwilling to come, unless he were Summon'd; and I should be glad to see him here.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, Sir Trevor Williams is in the House of Commons; and ordered me to send for him, if there were Occasion.

L. C. J. Then pray send for him, because Mr. Reading desires it. (Which was done.) In the mean Time, pray, Mr. Reading, will you go on in your Defence. But all that hath been spoken, is not much to the Purpose. I would have you apply your self to the Fact Sworn, which is comprehensive of all the Indictment; and that is, what happened in the Chamber, the 29th of March last: Answer that Fact.

Mr. Reading. I shall, my Lord; but I desire Mr. Bulstrode may be Examined to those Points I have spoken to.

Mr. Bulstrode. My Lord, I desire you would hear me, for he is very much mistaken in what he hath said concerning me: For he seems to say, I came to him, which I did not do; but accidentally met him at White-hall.

L. C. J. Look you, unless he calls you, you are not to be called by us, as a Witness for the King.

Mr. Bulstrode. My Lord, he served me with a Subpœna.

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, Would you have my Bulstrode Examined?

Mr. Reading. Yes, my Lord, if you please; I did pray him to be here to that End.

L. C. J. In this Case, tho' he be a Witness for Mr. Reading, he must be Sworn: Therefore swear Mr. Bulstrode. (Which was done.) Well, what do you ask him?

Mr. Reading. My Lord, all I do humbly desire is, That he will give your Lordship an Account whether he did not come unto me in the Name of my Lord Stafford?

Mr. Bulstrode. My Lord, I happened, one Day, to go see Sir William Goring, who was my Neighbour in the Country: And, as I was going out, I saw my Lord Stafford Walking: And Saluting him, he asked me, Do you know one Mr. Reading, a Lawyer? I asked him, What Reading? He answered, That used to be at the Parliament-House. I said, I did. Then said he, Pray tell him, when you see him, I would speak with him, and should be glad to see him. And in two or three Days after, I met with him; and said I, Mr. Reading, my Lord Stafford asked me, If I knew you? and desired me to tell you, He would be glad to see you. My Lord Stafford! said he; and seemed surprized at the Name; and I repeated it to him: And this was all that past between me and him. And this was some Time in Michaelmas Term last.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Reading, we know, that the Acquaintance you had with Bedlow, and your going to the Lords, was in Michaelmas Term: The Habeas Corpus's, and the Matter of Bailing, was in Hillary Term, which ended the 12th of February; and therefore, the Business between Mr. Attorney and You, must be during Hillary-Term. But this Fact charged upon you in the Indictment, and sworn by the Witnesses, being on the 28th, 29th, and 31st of March, that is a quite other Thing: And therefore, I would have you apply your self to that.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I shall humbly observe your Lordship's Directions in that: But I desire to be heard in this other Thing also, which was in Michaelmas-Term. I say, my Lord, they were desiring of me to advise them, whether they should move in the House of Lords, whence most of the Commitments were issued. For as to some, the Charge was against them in the House of Commons, some in the House of Lords, some were generally Committed by my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs; and according to the Nature of the Cases: So they did desire me, that I would advise them, how to address themselves, by one way or other, for procuring their Liberty by Bail, or otherwise. And as to the Writs obtained, and the Bailing of ſeveral of them, it was in Hillary-Term, which was before the Fact charged upon me. But I did give your Lordſhip an Account how it was, in order to have it appear naked before you; and then I ſhould be in your Lordſhip's Judgment, which, I am ſure, will be right. And I do ſay, my Lord, that afterwards I met ſeveral Times with my Lord Powis, and my Lord Petre, at the Lieutenant of the Tower's Houſe.

L. C. J. Here is now Sir Trevor Williams; do you deſire he ſhould be Sworn?

Mr. Reading. I do, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then give him his Oath. Which was done.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, with your Lordſhip's Favour, that which I deſire Sir Trevor Williams to give your Lordſhip an Account of, is this, Whether he was not pleaſed to bring Mr. Bedlow to my Chamber, and to recommend me to him about his Pardon?

Sir Tr. Williams. My Lord, Mr. Reading was an Acquaintance of mine; and upon what I knew, I had a great Opinion of his Knowledge in the Law; and Mr. Bedlow was a Country-man of mine, and I was very deſirous he ſhould have his Pardon as perfect as could be: And in Order to that, I recommended him to Mr. Reading, and deſired him to be careful about it. And that is all that I can ſay.

L. C. J. What further Queſtions would you ask him?

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I deſire to know of him, What Advice he hath heard me give Mr. Bedlow, in Order to his dealing ingenuouſly, and my preſſing of him to a full Diſcovery of the Plot.

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, as to that, Mr. Bedlow hath already clear'd it himſelf, that in all publick Diſcourſes between you and him, you did carry it very plauſibly; yet we will not preclude you from having your Witneſſes ſpeak to that, if you will have them Examined to it.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I will trouble Sir Trevor Williams with no more Queſtions.

L. C. J. You need not, as to this Point; Mr. Bedlow hath teſtified, that publickly you did adviſe him to make full Diſcoveries, and ſpare no Perſon.

Mr. Bedlow. I did ſay ſo at firſt, and I will do him Juſtice, he did really, and honeſtly, I believe, give me that Advice, as to all in publick, and only ſpoke about thoſe Men he was concerned for, towards whom he would make me Eaſy.

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Reading, will you come to the Fact?

Mr. Reading. My Lord, at the Time of my being Examined before the Committee, I did deliver ſome Papers, which I had from Mr. Bedlow, and under his Hand, and which do concern the Evidence I am to give in my own Defence: Theſe I do beg the Favour may be ſent to me, to make uſe of them for my ſelf, and I ſhall, as ſoon as the Court hath looked upon them, return them again.

Mr. Bedlow. There was a Propoſition about it, in the Houſe of Commons, and the main Paper, which, I ſuppoſe, Mr. Reading deſires to produce, is in Mr. Clare's Hand, to be produced, when called for, if the Court think fit.

L. C. J. Have you it there, Mr. Clare?

Mr. Clare. Yes, my Lord, I have.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, when the Priſoner calls for a Paper, which he himſelf delivered in, I think it is but fair it ſhould be produced.

Mr. Att. Gen. (Sir William Jones). Yes, my Lord, I do not oppoſe it.

Sir C. Levins. My Lord, Mr. Reading muſt underſtand, that this is no Hinge from us, but he deſires ſuch a Paper, which let him make what Uſe of it he can.

Mr. Bedlow. I ſuppoſe it is about the Protection for Prickman.

Mr. Reading. Mr. Bedlow, if you pleaſe to anſwer it by and by, when it is read, and let me open it my ſelf.

L. C. J. Here is now Mr. Sacheverel, what have you to ſay to him?

Mr. Sacheverel. My Lord, in the Houſe of Commons we have received a Letter from Mr. Reading, by which he doth deſire, for his own Juſtification, to have ſome Papers ſent him, which were delivered to the Secret Committee; I ſuppoſe he means a Paper about Mr. Prickman, and a Letter concerning him, and likewiſe a Paper that contained a State of the Evidence againſt the Lords, which he pretended Mr. Bedlow had dictated to him: That, I ſuppoſe, Mr. Clare hath; for the other two, the Houſe of Commons hath ordered me to bring them here, that if he can uſe them, or any other, in his own Defence, he may have free Liberty ſo to do.

L. C. J. Is there any other thing you would have with Mr. Sacheverel?

Mr. Reading. Nothing, my Lord; I humbly thank him for this Favour, and the Houſe too.

L. C. J. Mr. Sacheverel, theſe Papers you have brought, ſhall be put into the Hands of Mr. Clare, to carry to the Secret Committee, when the Trial is over.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Mr. Reading, pray ſpare me one Word; You are a Lawyer, and you know how to make your Defence, ſpeak ad idem, the Thing you are Charged with, the tampering with Bedlow to take off his Evidence againſt thoſe Lords, or elſe you do nothing; for we are not about the Plot in general, nor are you charged with it.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I ſhall do nothing elſe, I ſhall not give you the Trouble of ſpeaking to any thing elſe; my Lord, Mr. Bedlow will give your Lordſhip an Account of the Diſcourſe that I had with him, at the Time that I had been to wait upon my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs; I went to him upon this Occaſion, Mr. Bedlow deſired me to go wait upon my Lord Chief Juſtice, to give him an Account about the particular Evidence he had given; I think it was againſt Mr. Coleman, and that he being with my Lord Chief Juſtice, my Lord was pleaſed to treat him, not as he expected from him; whereupon he fell into great Expreſſions of Paſſion, and went down Stairs, and ſaid, It would never be well in England, till there was an honeſter Man than the Lord Chief Juſtice. When he had told me this, I told him, at what Rate his Lordſhip had endear'd himſelf to the whole Nation, by his Zeal againſt the Plot; however, ſaith he, do me the Kindneſs to beg my Lord's Pardon, and pray him to accept of this Paper. My Lord, I was extreamly ſorry, that Mr. Bedlow had ſo misbehaved himſelf; I had a great Kindneſs for Mr. Bedlow, I have ſufficiently teſtify'd it, and now ſufficiently ſuffer for it: And in Kindneſs to him, I went to wait upon my Lord, and deliver him the Paper; I told his Lordſhip, that I was heartily ſorry, that he had carried himſelf in ſuch a Manner towards his Lordſhip, but I did deſire his Lordſhip to paſs it by, for I did believe Mr. Bedlow was very ſorry for it. My Lord ſaid, It was ſufficiently ficiently known that he was not a Man of Paſſion, but that he pitied Mr. Bedlow, and deſired he would be more careful and diſcreet for the Time to come, for his own ſake, and for the Kingdom's; I returned to him, and gave him this Account, and what was my Lord's Advice to him. My Lord, when he had his Pardon a drawing, and when he was asked by the King and my Lord Chancellor, Who was his Friend? Who was his Council? he was pleaſed to ſay, that I was his Council, and his Friend, recommended by Sir Trevor Williams, as hath been proved, and when His Majeſty was pleaſed to ask him, What Advice I had given him? he returned the King this Anſwer; That I had bid him ſpeak the Truth with Courage; to ſpare no Man, where he could juſtly charge any Man; and to truſt God and His Majeſty for a Reward. The King was pleaſed to ſay, the Advice was honeſt; and bad him follow it. What I did in this matter, I did in Friendſhip to him, becauſe I had a great Kindneſs for him: I have ſupply'd him with ſeveral Guineas, with a Guinea or two, when he told me he has not had Bread. He was pleaſed to tell me, that he was very ſenſible of the Service I had done him. I appeal to him, whether ever I ſaw a Peny of Money from him in my Life; he was pleaſed to tell me, that upon the receiving of the 500 l. in the Proclamation, he would give me a Third Part, for that Service I had done him, and would certainly repay me whatſoever I had lent him, and the Fees that were due to me. And, my Lord, upon this I did likewiſe tell him, That he had not carried himſelf well, that he had been a very great Scandal, Abroad and at Home, and that he would not do himſelf Right, till he had adviſed with Dr. Stillingfleet, Dr. Tillotſon, and Dr. Lloyd, I did adviſe him to go to the Chapel, and, upon Conference with thoſe worthy Men, I deſired him ſeriouſly to conſider, how he could digeſt ſo many as Thirty Sacraments, which he had taken, as Obligations of Secrecy; my Lord, Mr. Wharton was at that Time by, and he hath often heard me give him Advice to this Effect. Mr. Wharton undertook to go to Dr. Stillingfleet, but he deſired to be excuſed; I did then pray him to go to Dr. Tillotſon, Mr. Bedlow told me, it was no great Matter, and ſo likewiſe for Dr. Lloyd. He told me they were all mercenary Men, that valued 10 s. above any Man's Soul: And at this Rate he was pleaſed to treat them. I told him, I was very ſorry, and diſpleaſed to hear him to ſpeak ſo ill of Men of ſo great Eminency in the World for Learning and Piety. My Lord, in further diſcourſing with Mr. Bedlow, he told me he was overjoyed, that His Majeſty had been pleaſed to take off the Confinement they were under, for they had not Liberty to ſpeak to one another; he, and Mr. Oates, and Mr. Dugdale; but when it was ſo granted, that they might now ſpeak together, he told me, with exceeding Rejoicing, that they could now lay their Stories together. He did further tell me, that he had now by him ſeveral Witneſſes, that whatſoever he bid them ſwear, they would ſwear; and he did confeſs he had not done well in ſome Things, particularly in charging Mr. Griffith. Now, my Lord, that Mr. Griffith was Steward to Mr. Sheldon.

L. C. J. Before you go on in this Kind, Mr. Reading, I muſt tell you, 'tis not fair: Here is Oath made of ſuch and ſuch Facts againſt you, and you talk of Diſcourſes between you and Mr. Bedlow; either produce Mr. Bedlow to ſay upon his Oath, what he hath told you, or elſe produce ſome other Witneſſes to prove it, if you think it material: Do you think your Word ſhall paſs for Truth, by telling this Story? All this Matter will be nothing in the Caſe, unleſs you apply it to diſcredit the Witneſſes, therefore pray produce ſome Proof, and we will hear it; if you'll ask Mr. Bedlow any Queſtions, whereby you may entrap him, and make him contradict himſelf; or if you will produce any other Witneſſes againſt him, do it; but you muſt not be ſuffered to go on in ſuch Diſcourſes as theſe, and ſpend Time to no Purpoſe.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe to give me leave, I will anſwer him.

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, I muſt tell you, I have as much Patience as another Man, and when you are charged with a Crime, which you your ſelf know, and at firſt ſaid, cannot be aggravated, I thought it fit you ſhould have all fair liberty of ſpeaking to defend your ſelf; I have had a great deal of Patience to hear you already, and ſo have my Brothers: I cannot ſay you have ſpoke unskilfully; I confeſs your Defence is Artificial, becauſe 'tis nothing to the Purpoſe: But, we muſt hold you to the Point; if you can ſay any thing to diſprove the Fact of the 28th, 29th, and 31ſt of March, that's the whole Matter that lies upon you, as to all other Things, they ſignify nothing.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, if I underſtand any thing in my own Defence, I did look upon this as ſo material, as nothing more. My Lord, when I did find this, I appeal to Mr. Bedlow, and ask him this Queſtion upon his Oath, Whether I did not deſire him, as I had deſired him before, to ſpeak home, in what he knew for Truth; that he would do well to remember, that this Land groaned for the ſhedding of innocent Blood; and whether I did not tell him, That if he ſhould go on to add Sin to Sin, and charge any Man unjuſtly, to take away his Life, whether, inſtead of preſerving the Nation, by which he thought he might well deſerve of it, he might not ruin it?

L. C. J. Do you deſire that he ſhould be asked that Queſtion?

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I do.

L. C. J. Mr. Bedlow, you hear the Queſtion, pray anſwer it.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, I do not deny, but that he hath publickly given me ſuch Advice, and hath charged me with doing of Wrong, in particular to Mr. Griffith; and I do acknowledge, that Mr. Griffith had a great deal of Wrong; but, How was it? It was by the Miſtake of them that Took him; the Uncle was Taken for the Nephew, who was really concerned in the Plot, and that occaſioned his Trouble: And I told him I was very ſorry for that.

Mr. Reading. Pray, Sir, did he give you a Gold Watch?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, he did, and I told the Committee and the Prince of it preſently.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Mr. Bedlow, you received ſeveral Summs of Money from Mr. Reading, by the Oath you have taken, were thoſe lent to you, or did you take them to be given?

Mr. Bedlow. Whereas he ſays, That I told him I wanted Bread, it was an unreaſonable Thing for me to ſay ſo, for I have five Diſhes of Meat every Day allowed me, and, How could I then want Bread?

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. And you had good Summs of Money too given to you?

Mr. Juſt. Wild. But, as I underſtood you, you ſaid, whenever you wanted Money, he ſupplied you.

Mr. Bedlow. And ſometimes gave me Money when I did not ask it.

Mr. Juſt Wild. But anſwer my Queſtion. Did he give you that Money for the intent that you ſhould leſſen your Evidence againſt the Lords in the Tower?

Mr. Bedlow. This Money that I received of Mr. Reading, he told me, that he had received Orders from the Lords, that I ſhould have what Money I came for; that at preſent I could not have any great Summ, becauſe they could not have Money, for my Lord Stafford, ſaith he, is ſelling his Wood, and till that be come in, he hath not wherewithal to provide for his Family, but I have Order to let you have what you want.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. And he gave you Money after that?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, he did.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. And upon that occaſion?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, I thought ſo. And whereas he ſays, my Lord, that I was to pay him the Money again, I muſt confeſs he was to have 100 l. a Year out of every 1000 l. a Year of my Reward.

Mr. Reading. By the Oath you have taken was that the Reward?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, by the Oath I have taken, ſo it was agreed.

L. C. J. I never knew any Man go about ſuch a buſineſs as this without ſome invention to palliate it with; they don't uſe to go down-right in ſuborning Witneſſes, and ſay, here is ſo much Money for you, pray forſwear your ſelf, or pray be a Knave; but pray remember that you ſpeak nothing but the truth, and be cautious that you don't ſwear too much; and ſo 'tis all gilded with pretence of the deſire of Truth, but then they add, You ſhall have a very good Reward for your Care in it, but if this way ſhould be allowed, to Bribe Witneſſes to ſpeak the Truth, or upon Colour of ſpeaking nothing but the Truth, I cannot tell what will be Subornation. For it is always done upon this Pretence.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Mr. Reading, There fell ſomething from your own mouth that was diſcouragement enough, you asked him how he could digeſt 30 Sacraments, which he received as Obligations of Secrecy, and adviſed him to go to Divines to receive Satisfaction about it. That was a diſcouragement.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I did not mean it ſo; I did as a Chriſtian, and a Loyal Subject, adviſe him not to ſhed Innocent Blood. Mr. Bedlow, you have brought me here to this Bar, pray remember you and I muſt be at a Greater.

Mr. Bedlow. I always remember it.

Reading. Pray, Sir, anſwer this Queſtion upon your Oath. Did I ever directly or indirectly deſire you to leſſen any one Syllable of your Evidence you knew to be true?

Mr. Bedlow. I ſuppoſe there is no need to prove that, for there are two other Witneſſes have prov'd it already.

Reading. But, pray Sir, anſwer my Queſtion upon your Oath.

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, my Lord, I do upon my Oath declare, That upon my bringing the Lords off from the Charge that was upon them, I was to have ſuch a Reward, and you told me, you had order to draw up blank Deeds.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Mr. Reading, pray hear me; He hath gone farther than that, and hath Sworn that he did leſſen his Evidence againſt Whitebread and Fenwick upon your Inſtigation, which is not indeed in the Indictment.

Mr. Bedlow. I did then ſay at the Old-Bayly (becauſe I would not ſpoil the Deſign I had upon him, when my Lord Chief Juſtice asked me, if that were all I could ſay) I told him, it was all I could ſay at preſent, but in time and place convenient I could ſay more.

L. C. J. That is not the Matter in queſtion now here, but the other Witneſſes have it ſworn ſufficiently. The young Lad ſwears expreſly, that he remembers his Maſter asked about the Land in Glouceſterſhire, and you anſwered you had Order to draw up a Blank Deed for the Settlement: and as for the other Lords, you told him, he ſhould have a good Reward ſuitable to the ſervice you ſhould do them. And you, as to that, make no kind of Defence, but think we ſhould forget it by your long Diſcourſe to other purpoſe.

Mr. Reading. I would not deſire to ſpend your Lordſhip's Time in vain Diſcourſes. It lies purely on my Negation, and his Affirmation.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. No, no, it is not, here are two more Mr. Speke and his Man, that ſwear the ſame.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I come to that; and I take it for granted the Law is this, That in Caſes of this Nature, nay, of a much leſs Nature, no Man ſhall be accuſed but by lawful Witneſſes; And, my Lord, I do inſiſt upon it as Law; So is my Lord Lovelace's Caſe, and 1 & 5 Ed. 6. If mine is not Treaſon, yet it is a very heinous Crime; and I am in your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether there is a poſſibility of having theſe, Mr. Bedlow, and the others, to be lawful Witneſſes. Mr. Speke, how worthy a Gentleman ſoever he is, is one to whom I have done particular Service, I have lent him Money, and to this day have it not. That he ſhould go, my Lord, and place himſelf behind an Hanging, and put a Servant on a Bed, to overhear, and to Eves-drop, which is the Term of a Crime in Law. That ſuch ſhould paſs for lawful Witneſſes, my Lord, I hope it was never pretended to before, nor will be admitted againſt me: But, my Lord, all my Comfort is, that when I went to him, I did never propound ſuch a thing to Mr. Bedlow ſince I was born. And God deal with me here, and in the next World, according to the Intregrity of my Heart, and the Truth of what I ſpeak now. Yeſterday Sevennight, when I did not hope to ſee another Sunday, ſo ſpent I was with the barbarous uſage I have received, I did deſire Dr. Tillotſon to give me the Sacrament, for I did not expect to live till the next morning. And I did pray him to remember, againſt the Time when he and I were to meet before the great God, that what I was charged with in this Indictment, is as expreſly falſe, as ever any thing that was ſworn againſt an Innocent Man. I can but ſay this now, come Life, come Death, the will of His Majeſty, and of your Lordſhips be done. There never ſtood a more Innocent Man at this Bar then I am of this Fact I am charged with. And I do ſay, my Lord, that having ſaid this, I muſt with your favour, proceed to tell you, that I deſire Mr. Bedlow will be pleaſed but to give an Anſwer to theſe two Queſtions, and I have done. Pray Sir, by the Oath you have taken, did you lay in Proviſions of Fire, Coal, and Billets behind the Palſgrave's-Head Tavern, and hard by Charing-Croſs, to burn the City of Weſtminſter.

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, we muſt ſee Juſtice done on all ſides: if you offer to ask him any Queſtion upon upon his Oath, to make him accuſe himſelf, we muſt oppoſe it.

Mr. Juſt Dolben. He hath his Pardon my Lord, and it ought not to be objected againſt him, if ſo.

Mr. Reading. The Pardon of the King doth remit the Puniſhment, but it doth not hinder its being objected to invalidate his Teſtimony.

L. C. J. It doth ſo far ſet him right, that you ſhall not make him calumniate himſelf.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. No, you ſhall never object it againſt him to accuſe himſelf.

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, We are in a Court of Law, and you are skilled in the Law; you have no Evidence to defend your ſelf by, and ſo you think your Proteſtations muſt ſerve for Evidence; When that will not ſerve your turn, you ſtrive to lead us out of the Way. Upon this Queſtion to Mr. Bedlow there lies this Dilemma againſt you: Either he hath his Pardon for what you object againſt him, or he hath not; If he hath not his Pardon, then he is in danger of Death for the Crime, and muſt not accuſe himſelf; if he hath his Pardon, it doth take away, as well all Calumny as liableneſs to Puniſhment, and ſets him right againſt all Objection. So, you know, after an Act of general Pardon, 'tis a Scandal to reproach a Man for that which he is thereby pardoned for. So that if he have not his Pardon, his Life is in danger, if he hath, neither his Life nor Name muſt ſuffer, and therefore ſuch Queſtions muſt not be asked him. But if you have any other Queſtions that are pertinent to the Buſineſs, propound them, and they ſhall be heard and anſwered.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I took the Law to be, that no Man ſhould be accuſed but by lawful Witneſſes, which I took him not to be, tho' he hath his Pardon.

L. C. J. I underſtand Lawful Witneſſes, or Accuſers, to be ſuch whoſe Teſtimony is not taken away by the Law; if a Man ſtands ſo in Court that he cannot be received to give Evidence, he is no lawful Witneſs: As if a Man be convicted of Perjury, he is not a lawful Witneſs, becauſe he cannot be heard at all. But every thing that leſſens the Credit of his Teſtimony doth not make but that he is a lawful Witneſs; for I take him to be a lawful Witneſs as long as he can be heard at all. And as for the Eves-dropping which you from the Term of Law would inferr a Scandal upon Mr. Speke: I take it to be a thing that makes much for the Credit of the Gentleman. For he was not the Man that did firſt detect you, you were detected before by Mr. Bedlow; and as it ſtood only upon his Teſtimony, ſhould you deny it, it was but your Negation and his Affirmation, and therefore it concerned him (being a deed of Darkneſs in its own Nature, when he engaged himſelf by his Diſcourſe as much as you) to have ſome of unqueſtionable Integrity and Credit to detect you further in it, and for his own Vindication. And it is therefore a Credit to Mr. Speke that he was thought ſuch a Perſon, whoſe Credit was not to be ſuſpected, and ſo was ſet to convict you. So that it is ſo far from detracting from his Credit, that it ſhews him a Man reputed to be of undoubted Integrity.

Mr. Bedlow. I ſay this, my Lord, we did deſign to propoſe it to another Gentleman of Quality, who had been before acquainted with the Deſign in general, but we could not find him out to acquaint him with it.

Mr. Speke. As for what he ſays of Money he lent me, I will acquaint your Lordſhip how it was. There was a Double-Return in the Caſe of my Brother's Election for this Parliament, and he and the other Gentlemen that ſtood with him (for there were four returned) had gotten Order for the hearing of their Cauſe, and I had taken a Copy out before, and paid Six Shillings and Eight Pence for it, or thereabouts, and afterwards Mr. Reading comes to my Chamber and brings me another Order, and I told him I had one already, and asked him what he paid for it, he told me Ten Shillings. Now I knew it was but Six Shillings and Eight Pence, for I had paid ſo before: ſaid I, what need I have another? but I ſuppoſe my Brother will pay you. I had before recommended him to my Brother, to manage his buſineſs in Parliament, and I did deſire he might be of Council for him. I knew what paſſed concerning the Treaty between Mr. Bedlow and him daily; but becauſe he ſhould not ſuſpect me, I did carry my ſelf very fairly and friendly to him, and, as I ſaid, I deſired my Brother to imploy him, and let him be of his Council, but my Brother refuſed, and told me he would have nothing to do with him, for, ſaid he, I hear an ill Character of him. And the Ten Shillings for the Order is the Money he ſpeaks of.

L. C. J. Is that all the Money he lent you?

Mr. Speke. Yes, that is all.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Mr. Reading, this I muſt ſay to you, your Aſperſion of theſe Perſons with being Eves-droppers, is no Aſperſion at all. For it was neceſſary for Mr. Bedlow to take this Courſe, and it was prudent for him to make uſe of unſuſpected Perſons, to have it underſtood by the Mouth of more than one Witneſs what your practices were. For if he had not done it, and it had been otherwiſe diſcovered, he had been in the ſame danger that you are in now.

Mr. Reading. My Lord I have done. Since Mr. Speke hath been pleaſed to give you an account of this matter, I deſire I may ask him one Queſtion: Whether he did not come to me to be of the Council with his Brother?

L. C. J. He hath ſaid ſo already.

Mr. Reading. Did not you bring this Gentleman, your Brother, to my Chamber?

Mr. Speke. Yes, I did.

Mr. Reading. Did not you deſire me to draw up his Caſe?

Mr. Speke. Yes, I think I did.

Mr. Reading. I ſpent moſt of a whole morning in it: Pray did I ever receive a Peny of money of you?

Mr. Speke. No, I ſpoke to my Brother to imploy you, but he ſaid he had heard an ill Character of you, and he would have nothing to do with you. And you asked Ten Shillings for an Order which I had before for Six Shillings and Eight Pence.

Mr. Reading. Here is this Gentleman, Mr. Hayes, who hath been a Clerk there, and knows it to be Ten Shillings every Order.

L. C. J. It is not at all pertinent to the Buſineſs we are upon.

Mr. Reading. He hinder'd me from receiving a Fee from the other Side, and I am Twenty Shillings out of Pocket, and yet am thus treated for my Kindneſs. There were three Orders I paid for.

Mr. Speke. There were more concern'd than my Brother: You deliver'd but one to me, I know not how many you deliver'd to the reſt.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. I am ſorry you diſgrace your Profeſſion by making ſo weak a Defence. What ſay

ſay you to that which paſt on Saturday morning at Mr. Bedlow's?

Mr. Reading. Mr. Bedlow did deſire me to go to the Lords in the Tower, to tell them that he was called upon to give in his Evidence againſt them, and that he could delay it no longer; and he bid me tell them, that is to ſay, my Lord Staffford, my Lord Powis, and my Lord Petre, that if they did not aſſure him of a good Reward he would give in ſuch an Evidence againſt them as ſhould take away their Lives, and he had Witneſſes to do it, as well as he himſelf; but he bid me tell them, if they would give him a Reward, he would put in ſuch an Evidence as would do them no hurt at all.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. This is directly againſt you, and within the Words of the Indictment, 'tis a Contracting with him for a Reward to leſſen his Evidence againſt the four Lords. He told you, as you ſay, thus and thus, and you agreed to do as he ſaid.

Mr. Dolben. You do ſpeak the Truth plainly now.

Mr. Reading. My Lord I do ſay this, that what I have ſaid is true; in the Preſence of God I ſpeak it. The Lords do know this, and the Lord of Heaven doth know it, he propoſed it firſt to me.

Mr. Juſt. Atk. It is to no purpoſe to talk, unleſs you can prove it.

L. C. J. Call your Witneſſes and we will hear them. Will the Jury give in their Verdict upon your bare Aſſertion? We have heard you a great while, if you will call any Witneſſes, do.

Sir James Butler. My Lord, I deſire Mr. Reading may be ask'd, whether 56 Guineas were not brought by him to Mr. Bedlow, and paid to him for to leſſen his Evidence againſt the Lords?

Mr. Bedlow. I had ſometimes Two Guineas, ſometimes more, but not any ſuch great Summ at once, but I believe more, at ſeveral times, and he told me that he had order to ſupply me at any time with what I wanted.

L. C. J. Come, where are your Witneſſes, Mr. Reading?

Mr. Reading. Here is Mr. Palmer, my Lord. (Who was Sworn.) My Lord, I deſire this Gentleman may give you an account what Mr. Bedlow did ſay to me concerning the borrowing of any Money, upon the Tueſday Morning before I was clap'd up. The 30th of March, as I take it, in the Morning.

Mr. Juſt. Atk. That was Sunday.

Mr. Reading. It was on Tueſday, my Lord, the Day before he receiv'd the 500 Pounds. I believe it was the firſt or ſecond of April. My Lord, this Gentleman was there in the Room.

Mr. Palmer. My Lord, Mr. Bedlow at that time had Twenty Shillings in his Hand of his Mothers, as he ſaid: Mr. Reading came in, ſaid he, Mr. Reading, all my Money is gone, and I have no more than this, and this I borrowed of my Mother: with that Mr. Reading clap'd his Hand in his Pocket, and gave him Two Guineas. God-a-mercy, ſaith Mr. Bedlow, you are an honeſt Man, and my chief Fountain.

Sir Cr. Levins. When was this Money delivered?

Mr. Palmer. It was about three Weeks ago.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. But he tells you, you were to have a Sup out of this Fountain.

L. C. J. He doth prove this (what uſe you will make of it I know not) that on Tueſday three Weeks ago, which we find to be the firſt of April, he ſaw Twenty Shillings in Mr. Bedlow's Hand, and he ſaid, This is all the Money I have; and you clap'd your Hand into your Pocket, and gave him Two Guineas, and he ſaid, God-a-mercy, you are my chief Fountain.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. This was after you ſaw Mr. Bedlow was for your turn. This makes againſt you.

Mr. Reading. I deſire he may be asked, whether he hath not heard Mr. Bedlow confeſs that he hath had Money ſeveral times from me.

L. C. J. Mr. Bedlow hath confeſſed it.

Mr. Reading. I deſire him to tell, whether Mr. Bedlow did not confeſs, that he did lay Fewel behind the Palſgrave-Head-Tavern to burn Weſtminſter.

Mr. Bedlow. I acknowledge it, that was part of the Treaſon I was guilty of, and for which the King pardon'd me.

Mr. Reading. I deſire to ask Mr. Bedlow's Man one Queſtion, whether your Maſter, when I went along with him to fetch the Privy-Seal for the 500 Pounds, did not deſire me to lend him Money for the Privy-Seal?

Wiggins. He ſaid he had no Money about him, and asked you if you had any, and deſired you would lend him ſome; and then I ſaid I had ſome, and ſo he ſaid no more.

Mr. Reading. Was there any thing of the Conſideration ſpoken of?

Wiggins. I don't know that, I could not hear it. He ſpoke it in the open Court, where there were a great many by.

Mr. Reading. I have ſeveral other Witneſſes, that will give you an account, that when he hath not had any Money to pay a Reckoning, he hath had it from me at ſeveral times, and the very Day when he had got this Money, the 500 Pounds, and it was laid upon the Table in the Room, in the Tavern where he was, he did then deſire me to let him have a Guinea for to pay the Reckoning. And he would pay me in the Afternoon.

Mr. Bedlow. I do not deny it, but that I have received ſeveral Summs of Money, for he always told me, I muſt trouble no Body elſe when I wanted Money, but him.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. They who have to deal with Men of ſuch Art as you are of, muſt uſe ſome Art with you.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Did you ever promiſe to pay him back the Money again?

Mr. Bedlow. No, my Lord, but he was to have a Hundred Pounds a Year out of every Thouſand Pounds a Year that I ſhould have from them Lords.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I do here declare, that I never had any more from the Lords in the Tower, than thus: I had from my Lord Stafford ſix Guineas, and I do not know I had one more; I had never from my Lord Bellaſis more than two Guineas; nor from my Lord Petre than five, and that was at the time when I carried him the Paper, which I'll give your Lordſhip an account of, by an by. I never ſpoke to my Lord Arundel, tho' I met him often; nor with my Lord Powis, than upon this account: Mr. Bedlow did deſire me to go and tell the Lords in the Tower, that if they did well Reward him, he would make the Charge he had againſt them very eaſy. My Lord, I did tell him, This is an Affair which I cannot in prudence deal in, for, ſaid I, you are a deſigning Man, and how you will deal with me afterwards I don't know. Said he, 'Tis in your Power, Mr. Reading, by this that I have ſaid, to do me a Miſchief, becauſe if you do diſcover what what I have ſaid to you, you will be believed, but if I ſhould offer this againſt you, I ſhall never be believed. And with all the Imprecations in the World I do curſe my ſelf, if I did directly or indirectly offer to perſwade him to diminiſh his Evidence, but he propoſed it to me. But, ſaid I, here is one Mr. Dugdale, and he may give Evidence againſt my Lord Stafford, tho' you don't, and what will you do as to him? Believe me, ſaid he, that I deal entirely with you, by this Token: Did not Dugdale come to you to deſire you to draw up his Evidence? And ſo he did, my Lord, and told me he would be reſponſible for it. I told him I was unwilling to meddle with ſuch an Affair, but if he would come to my Chamber I would give him what leiſure I had, in order to the drawing up of his Evidence into a Method, but he never came. Mr. Bedlow told me, ſaid he, believe me in all the reſt by this Token, have a care of him, he is ſet on purpoſe to inſnare you. Saith he, Tell from me, he ſhall do him no harm, for he hath promiſed to ſay nothing againſt my Lord Stafford, but what I will have him to ſay. I deſire Mr. Bedlow will anſwer this upon his Oath: Did I ever know one Nicholas Jordan till you acquainted me with him? Had not he ſome Eſtate in Glouceſterſhire?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, my Lord, I did tell Mr. Reading, that I would have ſuch an Eſtate ſettled upon me, of my Lords, in Glouceſterſhire, and his words to me were theſe: That he had Order to draw blank Deeds for the conveying of that Eſtate, which my Lord would ſign in Ten Days after his Diſcharge.

Mr. Reading. He told me, that for the other Witneſſes he would do well enough with them, and deſired me to tell my Lord Stafford, that he would do ſo and ſo, let him have but a Reward; and, believing of it, I went to the Tower, I asked my Lord Stafford if he knew one Nicholas Jordan, he told me he did, he had been a Tenant of ſome Eſtate of his. Mr. Bedlow bid me ask him, whether he ſhould not have a Proviſion of Money ſecured to him out of that Farm. My Lord, I told him I would acquaint His Lordſhip with it. I did ſo, and my Lord Stafford was pleaſed to tell me, that he would not give him Six Pence; that he did value himſelf upon his own Innocency, and the Infamy of his Accuſers; that if he ſhould offer to give him any thing, he ſhould look upon it as the greateſt part of his Guilt. But, ſaid he to me, Mr. Reading, this I muſt confeſs, you have been often with me, I am much indebted to you for Fees for coming to me, if you will but write a Letter to me, that you are not able to attend my Buſineſs, and neglect other Mens at this rate of being paid; and that therefore I ſhould not take it ill that you do not come to me any more, unleſs you may have an aſſurance of being ſatisfied and rewarded for it. And, ſaith he, thereupon I'll write you this in Anſwer, That I'll give you the Sum of Two-hundred Pounds, to be paid to you within Ten Days after my Acquittal; and, ſaith he, I will give you this aſſurance too, that you ſhall have this Two hundred Pounds ſecured to you as ſoon as ever you ſhall deſire it. My Lord, this being the Summ; But withal remember, ſaith he at the ſame time, I do here declare, and pray do not fail of remembring it, that I will not, directly nor indirectly, promiſe Mr. Bedlow Six-pence. I went to my Lord Powis, from whom I never ſaw Six-pence in my Life, and he did declare to me, that he would not for any thing in the World be guilty of the making him a Promiſe of one Six-pence, (and this is certainly ſo); nevertheleſs, if Mr. Bedlow will not go on to do me a Miſchief, as hitherto he hath done, and ſhall not go on to charge me unjuſtly, when I am acquitted he ſhall find that I will do what ſhall be like a Gentleman, but I won't promiſe one Farthing.

L. C. J. You have ſaid enough, Mr. Reading.

Mr. Reading. My Lord Petre ſaid he would give never a Farthing.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. This is againſt your ſelf.

Mr. Reading. I can't help it, I did it to ſave innocent Blood, God's Will be done with mine, I think I was bound to do this, and I had ſinned againſt God Almighty and my Country if I had not done it. My Lord, I did come back to Mr. Bedlow, and he did ask me if I had been with the Lords in the Tower, I did tell him, Yes; and I did ask him whether there was any Body in the Bed by him. He asked me, What ſay the Lords? I think I did tell him in very little different Terms from what I have now told you, be it of what conſtruction it will. And whereas he ſays, that there was a Thouſand Pounds, and Writings to be drawn, I never opened my Mouth to him of ſuch a thing.

L. C. J. What ſay you to the Eſtate in Glouceſterſhire?

Mr. Reading. That was only to ſecure the Two hunded Pounds to me pro conſilio impenſo & impendendo. My Lord, when that was done, Mr. Bedlow was pleaſed to tell me, for I muſt confeſs, he did deſire me to give him an account, and I did come very late, as Mr. Speke ſays. I was in his Chamber about an Hour; it ſeems it was that time that this Gentleman, as he ſays, was there, but Mr. Bedlow not being at home I went away; and being to give him an account next Morning, it ſeems this Gentleman was there alſo, for he hath ſworn it; when I came I gave him this account, and God knows it was no other; nor did I ever hear talk of any Deeds drawing.

Mr. Speke. Did not you ſay, that the Deed was to be ſigned in Ten Days?

Mr. Reading. I did tell him, that my Lord would give me a Letter, wherein he would promiſe me to ſecure the payment of Two-hundred Pounds within Ten Days after his Acquittal.

Mr. Speke. I ſay what you ſaid. You had orders to draw up a Deed, from my Lord of Stafford; which my Lord had promiſed faithfully to ſeal within Ten Days after he was diſcharged.

Mr. Reading. It was only a Deed for 200 l. to be paid to me pro Conſilio impenſo, & impendendo; and to be ſecured upon that Eſtate in Glouceſterſhire.

Mr. Speke. Nay, I don't know; I heard no Latin there.

L. C. J. But what is that to Mr. Bedlow?

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Why ſhould you diſcourſe with Mr. Bedlow about your Penſion?

Mr. Reading. My Lord Stafford did ſay, When you have the money, the 200 l. do you diſpoſe of it as you think fit.

L. C. J. This is nothing to the purpoſe, but an endeavour, by multiplicity of words, to make us forget what has been ſworn. Anſwer the matter of the Paper whereby the Evidence was leſſened.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, upon this, Mr. Bedlow was pleaſed to tell me thus in Anſwer: That he would take their Lordſhip words; and bid me go along with him, and he would go fetch that Evidence that he had, and would put in ſuch and ſuch Evidence I ſhould write, and he ſhould dictate. I went along with him to York-buildings, where he ſaid his Mother lay: And there he ſaid he had left his Papers; but when he came there, they were not there, but he told me his memory ſhould

ſhould ſerve: and we went back to the Chamber. And, my Lord, it ſeems theſe Gentlemen were there before, and Mr. Bedlow ſent them away; and when they were gone, we went into a Room together, where he did dictate to me every Syllable I wrote. And when he had dictated, and I had writ it, I read it, and he read it again himſelf. And having peruſed it, he ſaid, This is that which, I think, is kind to them; and this is that I can come off with well enough in ſaying it: for I can make it out afterwards, that it was by hearſay. And this, ſaith he, do you take along with you, and carry it to the Lords, and let me have their Anſwer. And this is that very Paper that I did write in Mr. Bedlow's Chamber by his directions, and dictated from his mouth.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. And you did carry it to the Lords?

Mr. Reading. Yes, I did. And, my Lord, when I had done this, I did ask him this Queſtion, (I did not direct him any one ſyllable; but as he dictated, ſo I wrote:) What he had to ſay againſt my Lord Bellaſis, and my Lord Arundel? He told me, that tho' he was reſolved to be kind to thoſe Lords, yet he was reſolved the other ſhould die. And he told me, That the 4000 l. and the 1500 l. that was to be paid to Sir George Wakeman, was to be paid by my Lord Bellaſis. And, my Lord, I began to write, and did write five or ſix Lines here in this Paper, and then left off. My Lord, when I had done this, I went to the Tower the firſt Opportunity; I did come to my Lord Stafford, and I ſhewed him this. He told me, That he did find that Mr. Bedlow would now begin to be an honeſt Man. My Lord, afterwards I went to my Lord Petre's, and ſhewed it to him; and he did, at that Time, my Lord, give me five Guineas; and before that I never ſaw a Peny of his Money in my Life. I went to my Lord Powis, and when I came, I found Sir Henry Tichburn in the Chamber; and it being late at Night, and it being Parliament-time, and I having Perſons that ſtaid for me, I did deſire to be excuſed: Tho' Sir Henry was pleaſed to walk out upon the Leads, leaving my Lord and me together, yet did not I ſhew him any one Syllable of this Paper, nor did I ſay any thing to him concerning it. My Lord, I think it was upon the Monday morning that I came to Mr. Bedlow's: He was not within; I then came to the Painted Chamber, and I was going up to the Houſe of Lords, and Mr. Bedlow met me in the Court of Requeſts, or the Painted Chamber, one of them, and this Gentleman was with him. And there he asked me for a Paper: I had writ it out before, and 'tis this very Paper that is now with Mr. Clare. He did deſire me after I had been with the Lords, to deliver a Copy of this to them to write it out: And I did ſo; and this is writ in the Third Perſon, the other was writ in the Firſt Perſon. And, I think, there is no other Alteration in it. My Lord, that which I did deliver to this Gentleman, Mr. Bedlow, before Mr. Speke, was in the Firſt Perſon, the other was in the Third. What they did with it afterwards, I cannot tell. My Lord, after this the 500 l. was received, and he promiſed to pay me all, the next morning; and prayed me that I would come to his Chamber. But when I came, I miſſed of him. His Clerk told me, he was gone Abroad. I came here to Weſtminſter; and when I came there, I went up to the Speaker's Chamber, to ſpeak with my Clients there: But when I came up, the Door was faſtned, and I was Arreſted. My Lord, I have done; and, let it be with me, or againſt me, this is what I ſaid to the Committee of Secrecy; and I ſpeak to your Lordſhip under the greateſt Tie and Obligation to ſpeak Truth, in the World, that this is all I know. And whereas Mr. Bedlow did tell your Lordſhip, that this Writing that I have drawn was not as he directed, but that I had carried it to the Lords, and their Lordſhips did correct it, and I brought it back again; that I did bring him another Paper; That very Copy which I writ out, in the Chamber, in the Third Perſon, I have; and this that is produced againſt me, is in the Firſt Perſon, and I deſire your Lordſhips to look upon it, and judge whether there be any Correction, more than the Alteration of the Perſon.

Then both the Papers were ſhewn to Mr. Bedlow.

Mr. Bedlow. Your Lordſhips may ſee both theſe Papers are fair written, without interlining: But there were above Forty Interlineations in that Paper that was written in my Chamber.

L. C. J. This agrees with what you ſaid before, that when you did put in any thing that was home, he would correct it, and ſay, This is Treaſon, and this will charge them; and ſo mended it. And it was natural there ſhould be two Papers: That which was to be kept for the Lords, was in the Third Perſon, importing, That He ſaith ſo and ſo; and the other was in the Firſt Perſon, which was to be kept by Mr. Bedlow, for the helping of his Memory, I heard ſo and ſo; that he might know how to obſerve his Contract. But what ſay you to this, that the firſt Paper was, as Mr. Bedlow ſays, corrected, and had many Interlineations, and cannot, therefore, be the ſame with that you produce?

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I hear it; I have but this Thing to anſwer, let it avail me any thing or nothing. I ſpeak it in the Preſence of God, (pray favour me) this Paper, is the very Paper that I did write out; there is no other Interlineation in it, than what you ſee. It never went out of my Hand, from the Time of my writing it in Mr. Bedlow's Chamber, till the Time that I ſhew'd it them in the Tower, and I did deliver it to Mr. Sacheverel.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. Ay, but there was another Paper, there was a Paper corrected according to your Intention; and then you cauſed this Paper to be writ out, and it was never ſeen ſince.

Mr. Reading. No other, upon my Word.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. But he ſwears it, and 'tis obvious to the leaſt Underſtanding here.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I have only this to ſay, That 'tis not true.

L. C. J. But it is very probable, and it is ſworn to be true.

Mr. Reading. I can only ſay, 'Tis not true.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. I have one Thing to ſay to you: With what Colour could you juſtify what you did, to carry the King's Evidence to the Priſoners, if it were no more than that?

Mr. Reading. I have but this to anſwer for that, I did not know it was a Crime.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. There is no mean Capacity, but what knows that is a Crime.

Mr. Reading. I did look upon it as a Crime if I had not done it, and Conſcientia errans ligat; it was a Point of Conſcience to me to do it. I did think it a Duty I owed to God, to prevent Perjury; and a Duty I owed to my Country, to prevent innocent Blood.

L. C. J. Will you Impeach the Juſtice of the Kingdom in that manner? You are a Man of the the Law, don't you know, that no Man ought to be of Council for a Priſoner in Felony or Treaſon, till they are aſſigned? and for you to carry the King's Evidence to the Priſoner, as you your ſelf confeſs, how can you excuſe it? and here are Witneſſes that heard you contract with him to leſſen his Evidence, and cui bono? Was not this out of Favour to the Lords in the Tower, to get them off? Now you by multiplying your Diſcourſe, inſtead of vindicating your ſelf, have ſpoiled the matter, and confeſſed that which amounts to the whole Charge.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. And you confeſs you were to have Two Hundred Pounds from my Lord Stafford, which you were to diſtribute, as you thought fit.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. And you have confeſſed, Mr. Reading, that not only you have endeavoured to take off Mr. Bedlow, but Mr. Dugdale too; for it was you firſt ſtarted that Point.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I have no more, I did never deſire him to ſpeak one Word leſs than the Truth, and the whole Truth; but I did my Endeavour to prevent Perjury, and the ſhedding of innocent Blood; and this I did as a good Chriſtian. My Lord, I did deſire alſo to ſhew you this Paper, but you were pleaſed to over-rule it, that it ſhould not be read.

L. C. J. We think it not material; we over-rule it not, but by Way of Admittance that you ſay true.

Mr. Reading. Pray will you ſee, is there any variance between the two Papers?

L. C. J. There is only the Addition of the Words concerning my Lord Bellaſis, and that was to ſtrike Terror in him, to make him come into the Bargain too.

Mr. Reading. I deſire Mr. Bedlow would look upon this Paper alſo: Is this your Writing, Sir?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, it is.

Mr. Reading. Since your giving me this Paper in your Chamber, have you ever ſeen it till to Day?

Mr. Bedlow. No, I have not.

Mr. Reading. Then, my Lord, I pray this; there is one Prickman a Merchant in Town, that is broke, he wrote to me for a Protection, and I deſired Mr. Bedlow that he would help him to a Protection; he ſaid he would, and ſpoke to the Prince, and others of the Lords, but could not get one, for I call'd upon him to know his Anſwer; but withal, told me, he had a better Contrivance than any Protection could be given him from a ſingle Lord, and that is this, That he would ſay, he was one of his Witneſſes, and that upon that Account, he would get him a Protection from the Committee of Secrecy, and they would believe whatever he ſaid to them. I told him, I did not know of what Signification that might be to my Friend; he told me, Yes, for he had given it to ſeveral already. I asked him, how he could juſtify it if it were queſtioned? Oh, ſaid he, let him ſay any thing, That he hath heard ſome Body or other, in a Coffee-houſe, call me, Rogue. My Lord, I never ſaw Mr. Prickman ſince; but ſaith he, Here, I'll give you this Buſineſs for the Protecting of him; and he under-writ this, as from Mr. Treby: Pray do not fail to come to me every Hour, to receive what Orders the Committee ſhall ſend to you by me, that we may not neglect His Majeſty's ſpecial Buſineſs; and if you do receive any Lett or Hindrance, by any Perſon whatſoever, ſend to me, and I will cauſe thoſe People to be ſo ſeverely puniſhed, as ſo great a Contempt does merit. This was, my Lord, before my Treating with the Lords, in Time, the 25th of March. My Lord, when I did find he had got ſuch Tricks and Ways, I did apprehend and reſolve (pray give me your Favour in the Expreſſion) not to do any Prejudice to the King's Evidence; for, my Lord, I do think he is not an Evidence for the King, that does go about, by any indirect Means, to commit a Crime. But, my Lord, I think he is a Servant to the Nation, and does a very good piece of Service to the King, that goes about the taking away the Guilt of Innocent Blood.

L. C. J. Indeed, Mr. Reading, we muſt not ſuffer this: I told you before, that by ſuch Diſcourſe you impeached the Juſtice of the Kingdom. If you had ſuſpected Mr. Bedlow's Honeſty or Truth, you ſhould have gone to the King or Council, or the Secret Committee, (they are Men of Honour, and would have been as tender of Mens Lives, as you or any other Man) but for you to do it of your ſelf, in this Way, ſhews it is but for a plauſible Excuſe to colour your corrupt Dealing.

Mr. Bedlow. This Protection was given us by the Secret Committee, for Mr. Prickman.

L. C. J. It does not appear but that Prickman might be a Witneſs.

Mr. Reading. My Lord, I have but this, and I have done. At the Time when I was Taken, I have ſeveral Witneſſes to prove it, that I was reſolved to give His Majeſty, or the Secretaries, an Account of it; and I did ask Mr. Bedlow for an Account he had given againſt the Queen; and I had the Paper by me, at the ſame Time when I was Taken: and I have ſeveral Witneſſes by me, to prove that at that Time ———

L. C. J. Mr. Reading, this is nothing to the Purpoſe: Will you have done? unleſs you can ſpeak to the Fact you are Charged with. The Court hath had a great deal of Patience with you alalready.

Mr. Reading. I have done, my Lord.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, Your Patience hath been very much exerciſed already, by the long Diſcourſes Mr. Reading hath made; I ſhall therefore be ſhort in my Directions. He ſtands Indicted for Suborning Mr. Bedlow, in the Evidence that he was to give, concerning the Lords in the Tower, that were Impeached of Treaſon, by the Houſe of Commons, and Sir Henry Tichburn. This is the Subſtance of the Indictment. There is an Inducement in it concerning this horrid Conſpiracy, and the Perſons that have been Executed for it, Coleman, Grove, and Ireland; but as to that, it is admitted by Mr. Reading, and it lies ſo much in every one's Knowledge, that it ſhould hardly need to be proved. So then the Queſtion remains only a Queſtion of Fact, concerning Subornation of Perjury; which hath been fully proved to you, not only by Mr. Bedlow, who hath related the whole Tranſaction, but alſo by Mr. Speke, who tells you that Mr. Bedlow did inform him how it went on from Time to Time: And thereupon, to make the Matter plain, and to ſuppreſs ſo abominable a Practice, it was thought there was no better Way to diſcover this Deed of Darkneſs, and to catch a Knave, but to bring him into a ſecret Place, where he might ſpeak freely, thinking there were no Witneſſes to teſtify againſt him; which was intended to have been done the Evening of the 28th of March, which was Friday: But Mr. Reading and Mr. Bedlow not then meeting, the next Morning at Seven a Clock was appointed, when Mr. Reading did come, and asked if no Body were there; of which being aſſured, he thought himſelf ſecure and ſecret. Then Mr. Bedlow asked him, What ſay the Lords in the Tower? What ſays my Lord Stafford? Mr. Reading told him, That as to my Lord Stafford, he ſhould be ſure of the Eſtate in Glouceſterſhire, for my Lord Stafford had ordered him to prepare a Blank Deed, which, within Ten Days after his Diſcharge, ſhould be perfected. And the reſt of the Lords did aſſure him, That after they were acquitted, in Proportion to the Service he did them, in leſſening of his Evidence, he ſhould have a very plentiful Reward. Thereupon, there aroſe farther Diſcourſe. Saith Mr. Bedlow, I won't rely upon their Promiſe, I will have ſomething under their Hands. No, ſaith Mr. Reading, that they think not convenient. Saith Mr. Bedlow, I muſt go and deliver in my Teſtimony to the Secret Committee immediately, and therefore, Mr. Reading, the Writing muſt be made preſently, or nothing can be done. Why, ſaith Mr. Reading, can't you put it off till Wedneſday? No, I cannot, ſays he. Well then, ſaith Mr. Reading, I will go ſpeak with the Lords in the Tower, and I'll bring you their Anſwer, and be with you on Monday morning. Afterwards, when they went out of the Houſe, Mr. Speke and the other Witneſs, came from the Places where they were privately put, and they ſaw Mr. Reading going out. Mr. Reading and Mr. Bedlow, within half an Hour, came back again to the Houſe, and were private together. Upon Monday morning, Mr. Speke was to watch, and ſee the Delivery of this Paper, and he gives you a very rational and diſtinct Account, (and he is not a Man that the Priſoner can any way impeach in his Credit) he tells you, He ſaw him deliver the Paper out of his Hand to Mr. Bedlow, and Mr. Bedlow put it towards his Pocket, but afterwards put it behind him, and he followed him, and took it out of his Hand. And this Paper is here, which contains the Purport of the Evidence to be given againſt the Lords in the Tower; but ſo minced, that it is all but Hear-ſay, and nothing will touch them, as to the Matters for which they are Charged: Here you have the Paper under his own Hand.

Now he comes to make his Defence; and what hath he done? He hath made a very long Diſcourſe, but no Defence at all to the Matter of the Indictment. He ſays nothing againſt the Credit of the Witneſſes, but hath confeſſed, in Effect, the whole Matter that he was charged with; for what had he to do, to carry the Evidence to the Lords in the Tower, and to go from one to another, to tell them thus and thus, and to receive Promiſes from them of Rewards, either in general or particular? He hath made Confeſſion of the whole of his Charge in the Indictment; and without it, there is ſuch undoubted Teſtimony, nothing impeaching the Witneſſes, that I ſhall need to trouble you no further. Do you go together and conſider of it, and we will receive your Verdict.

L. C. Baron. Gentlemen of the Jury, It hath been ſo fully repeated by my Lord, that I ſhall not need to do any thing of that; but there is one little Piece of the Evidence, which I deſire you would take notice of: Mr. Bedlow ſays, the Paper given him upon Monday, in the Painted Chamber, which he carried behind him, and Mr. Speke took away, and which Mr. Reading brought him from the Lords, did contain ten times much milder Evidence than the Paper dictated by him on the Saturday; and that Paper was forty times leſs than that which he had given into the Secret Committee.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. (to Sir John Cutler.) Sir John, What Paper is that you have in your Hand?

Sir John Cutler. 'Tis only the Names of the Jury, my Lord.

L. C. J. You do well to take the Names of the Jury with you, if you withdraw, that you may know one another: But I ſuppoſe you won't be long out.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. I ſpoke it, becauſe you are to have no Papers with you, but what are under Seal.

Then the Jury withdrew, and after a ſhort Receſs, returned again to the Bar; and being called by their Names, ſeverally anſwered.

Cl. of the Cr. Gentlemen, Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of the Cr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of the Cr. How ſay you, Is Nathaniel Reading Guilty of the Offence whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of the Cr. This is your Verdict, you ſay, that Nathaniel Reading is Guilty of the Offence whereof he ſtands Indicted, and ſo you ſay all.

Mr. Juſt. Wild. 'Tis a very good Verdict.

L. C. J. It is a very good Verdict, the Matter lay in a ſmall Room, and I wonder how Mr. Reading could make it ſo long.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. He was the greateſt Witneſs againſt himſelf.

L. C. J. You of the Jury may take your Eaſe.

Then the Court adjourned till Two of the Clock, being then half an Hour paſt One.

About half an Hour after, the Court returned again; and Proclamation being made for Attendance, the Lord Chief Juſtice ſpoke to the Priſoner Convicted, then ſtanding at the Bar, thus:

MR. Reading, You have been here upon your Trial to Day, and you are Convicted of a very Great and Heinous Crime; there remains nothing now, but to receive the Judgment of the Law: And the Rule of Law is, That in all Caſes the Court ſhould conſider quantitatem delicti, & qualitatem perſonæ, and accordingly pronounce their Judgment.

As to the Quantity of the Offence, you your ſelf did admit, in the Beginning of your Defence, that it was not capable of Aggravation, but looks rather like Treaſon than a Miſdemeanor; and ſo I ſhall not ſpeak to that, for any Flouriſhes would but ſound in Diminution of it.

Then we have nothing to conſider, but the Quality of the Perſon; and of that there might be a great deal ſaid, if we conſider your Perſon as a Lawyer, one that ſhould be a Man of Knowledge, to be able to adviſe, a Miniſter of Juſtice, to aſſiſt the Court wherein he pleads; and ought to be a Perſon of untainted Fidelity, that he may keep his Clients Secrets; and for a Lawyer to be Convicted for ſuch an Offence, is that which aggravates it beyond all Expreſſion; and I think we can do no leſs to evidence the Care we have of the King's People, than to ſhew that there ſhall be greater Severity uſed againſt ſuch Perſons offending; and 'tis a great Credit and Benefit to the Profeſſion, that the Members of it, for ſuch Offences, ſhall be dealt with more ſeverely than we ſhould deal deal in any other Case: So far will we be from lessening it in this Respect. For I would have no Man of the Profession of the Law, that should do thus, be able afterwards to draw People to him, to trust him with their Business; but his Offence should be publickly known to all the World, that Men might know him, and not employ him. In one Sense, 'tis true, he may be trusted with a Secret, by the same Reason that a known Liar may be, because his Word is never to be believed.

There is another Thing that we regard in your Person too; if you were a Man of a great Fortune, or a large Estate, I do not see but we should set that which might be called a Ransom, rather than a Fine, in this Case; but it not being so, we have taken it into our Consideration to do it with Measure; but we will supply that Defect, by a Punishment of another Nature, according to the Old Saying, Qui non habet in crumena luat in corpore.

Therefore the Judgment of the Court is this; That you be Fined 1000 l. That you be Imprisoned for the Space of one Year; And that upon Monday next, between the Hours of Eleven and Twelve, you be set in the Pillory, for the Space of one Hour, in Palace-Yard in Westminster.

And I will tell you, Your Offence is so great, and hath such a Relation to that which the whole Nation is concerned in, because it was an Attempt to baffle the Evidence of that Conspiracy, which if it had not been, by the Mercy of God, detected, God knows what might have befallen us all, by this Time; and still the Parliament have it under their Consideration, how to prevent any further Mischief by it; and for you, in such a Way as this, to do what you can to suppress the Evidence, is such a Crime, that we have Reason to suspect, that the Rage of the People will be so great against you, that it might endanger your Life. Therefore we have taken Care to give a Charge to the Sheriff, and the Justices, that the Peace might be kept, and that no ill Consequences may happen to you, but only the Shame and Infamy to which you are condemned; and which you do deserve as well as any Man that ever was Convicted.

Then the Court adjourned to Hicks's-Hall, upon Wednesday, the 30th of April: And the Keeper went away with his Prisoner.

On the Monday following, the Prisoner was set in the Pillory according to the Judgment of the Court.

The Tryals of Thomas White, alias Whitebread, Provincial of the Jesuits in England, William Harcourt, pretended Rector of London, John Fenwick, Procurator for the Jesuits in England, John Gavan, alias Gawen, and Anthony Turner; all Jesuits and Priests.

ON Friday the 13th of June, 1679, at the Sessions-House in the Old Baily, the Court being met, at which all the Judges of England were present; Proclamation was made, of Silence and Attention, whilst the King's Commission of Oyer and Terminer, and of Goal-Delivery were openly read; and after the usual Proclamation of Attendance upon the Sessions, the Court proceeded to call the Juries impanelled, and to the Trials of the Prisoners, thus:

Clerk of the Crown. Set Thomas Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, John Gavan, Anthony Turner, and James Corker, to the Bar.

Capt. Richardson. They are all on.

Cl. of the Cr. Thomas White, alias Whitebread, hold up thy Hand; John Fenwick, hold up thy Hand; William Harcourt, alias Harrison, hold up thy Hand; John Gavan, hold up thy Hand; Anthony Turner, hold up thy Hand; James Corker, hold up thy Hand. Which they all severally did.

And James Corker presented a Petition to the Court, to this Effect.

'That about Eight Months since, the Petitioner 'was Committed for refusing to take the Oaths of 'Allegiance and Supremacy, that he had lately re- 'ceived Notice to prepare himself for his Trial, a- 'gainst this present Day, but that the same was af- 'terwards contradicted, and that Yesterday a Gen- 'tleman informed him from the Attorney-Gene- 'ral, that a Bill was found against him of High- 'Treason, and that he was to prepare himself for 'his Trial thereupon accordingly; and forasmuch 'as the Petitioner is altogether ignorant of the 'Matters charged upon him in the same, and by 'Reason thereof is absolutely surprized, and un- 'prepared for his Defence, and divers Goal-Deli- 'veries having been held since his first Commit- 'ment, and he never called to his Trial; he doth 'humbly beseech Their Honours, that he may not 'be Tried till the next Sessions, and that in the 'mean Time, he may have Copies of such Infor- 'mations as are given in against him.

Lord Chief Justice. (Sir William Scroggs.) Mr. Corker, have you really any Witnesses, without whom you cannot make your Defence.

Corker. No, my Lord, I have none.

L. C. J. You do not understand my Question; Do you want any Witnesses now, that you may have another Time?

Corker. I am a Stranger to the Things charged upon me.

L. C. J. Can you not tell, whether you have any Witneſſes or no? the matter is this, both for you and all the reſt of you, that there may be no exception; you are upon the Tryal of your Lives, and we upon our Oaths, and therefore I ſpeak it, if ſo be you have any Witneſſes, becauſe you pretend you are ſurpriſed, if you have really any, whereby you can make a better defence for your ſelves, than now, the Court will incline to your Requeſt; but if you have not, then 'tis in vain to tarry.

Corker. My Lord, I verily believe I ſhall have Witneſſes.

L. C. J. As for the Copy of the Indictment it is never granted to any Perſons, and therefore muſt not be to you.

L. C. J. North. You muſt give us clear ſatisfaction, that you are real in your Pretences; and muſt give us the Names of your Witneſſes, where they live, and let us know what they can ſay for you, that we may be ſatisfied; for ſuch a general Allegation as this, any Man living may make.

Mr. Recorder. He was one of the ten that was appointed by the Council to be tried.

L. C. J. Why, you had notice a Week ago.

Corker. But it was contradicted the next Day.

Capt. Richardſon. I heard Mr. Clare ſay that he ſhould be tried then.

Mr. Attorney General. (Sir William Jones.) He had notice together with the reſt, but he was not in the firſt Order of Council for the Trial of theſe Perſons, he ſent to the Clerk to know who were to be tried and his Name was left out; and ſo underſtood he was not to be tried. On Tueſday laſt I moved that he might be put into the Order, and ſo he was, and now there is an Order of Council for it; but he had notice a Week ago as well as the reſt.

Capt. Richardſon. I gave them notice that all were to prepare for their Trial as this Day, and in order to that, I went to the Council, to ſee what Order was taken about it, and the Clerk ſhewed me their Names, amongſt which Corker was left out, and I told him Corker had notice of Trial, and therefore I deſired I might have an Order for him too; they told me, that there was no Order taken about him.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would have all the Gentlemen have all the fair play in the World, therefore if he can ſatisfie your Lordſhip, that he can have any Witneſſes that he hath not now, I am content the Trial ſhould ſtay to another time.

L. C. J. You ſhall hear the Indictment read, and there you will know what ſort of Treaſon it is you are charged with, and after that you will make your anſwer, whether you have any Witneſſes.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, it will be neceſſary that I give your Lordſhip an account of one thing. On Saturday Night there came a Gentlewoman to me, on the behalf of all the Priſoners, and ſaid there were ſome Witneſſes that ſhe was under apprehenſion would not appear for the Priſoners, unleſs they had ſome Order; her Name, ſhe told me, was Ireland, and ſhe came in the Name of all the Priſoners, ſhe ſaid. I told her, if ſhe would bring me a Note of the Witneſſes Names they did deſire, they ſhould have all the aſſiſtance the Court could give them for the getting of their Witneſſes this Day; but ſince that time I never heard of the Gentlewoman, or from the Priſoners.

L. C. J. Mr. Corker, you will do well to take notice what you are charged withal, and afterwards tell us, if there are any Witneſſes that can ſay any thing for your Defence, at your Trial for thoſe Matters.

Cl. of Cr. You ſtand Indicted by the Names of Thomas White in the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields in the County of Middleſex Clerk, otherwiſe called Thomas Whitebread of the ſame Pariſh and County Clerk, John Fenwick of the ſame Pariſh and County Clerk, William Harcourt of the ſame Pariſh and County Clerk, otherwiſe called William Harriſon of the ſame Pariſh and County Clerk, John Gavan of the ſame Pariſh and County Clerk, Anthony Turner of the ſame Pariſh and County, Clerk, and James Corker of the ſame Pariſh and County, Clerk: For that you, as falſe Traitors againſt the moſt Illuſtrious, moſt Serene, and moſt Excellent Prince, Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. your Supream and Natural Lord; not having the Fear of God in your hearts, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the Devil, the Cordial love, true, due, and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, towards him ſhould, and of right ought to bear; wholly withdrawing, and deviſing, and with all your Strength, intending the Peace and common Tranquility of this Realm to diſturb, and the true Worſhip of God within this Kingdom of England uſed, and by the Law Eſtabliſhed, to overthrow, and the Government of this Realm to Subvert, and Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England, to move, ſtir up and procure, and the Cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, towards him ſhould, and of right ought to bear, utterly to withdraw, put out, and extinguiſh, and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring, and put, on the four and twentieth day of April, in the thirtieth year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord K. Charles the Second, at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid; You the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gavan, Anthony Turner, and James Corker, with diverſe other falſe Traitors, Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown, falſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly, did purpoſe, compaſs, imagine, and intend Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England, to move, ſtir up, and procure, and a miſerable Slaughter among the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to procure, and cauſe, and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, of his Kingly State, Title, Power, and Government, of his ſaid Kingdom of England, utterly to deprive, depoſe, caſt down and diſinherit, and him our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to Death and final Deſtruction, to bring and put, and the Government of this Kingdom of England, and the ſincere Religion of God within the ſame, rightly, and by the Laws of the ſame Eſtabliſhed, at your will and pleaſure, to change and alter, and the State of this whole Kingdom of England, thro' all its parts, well inſtituted and ordained, wholly to ſubvert, and deſtroy, and War, within this Kingdom of England, againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to levy: And to accompliſh, and fulfil your ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons and Traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes; You the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gavan, Anthony Turner, and James Corker, and other Falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid ſovereign Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown, the ſaid four

How ſay'ſt thou Thomas White alias Witebread, art thou guilty of this High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not guilty?

Whitebread. My Lord, I deſire to ſpeak one word; I am adviſed by Council, and I may, and ought to repreſent it to this Court, for not only my own Life, but the Lives of others of His Majeſty's Subjects, are concerned in it, That upon the 17th of December laſt, I was Tryed upon the ſame Indictment, the Jury was impannell'd and called, I put my ſelf into the hands of the Jury, and the Evidence was brought in and examin'd, particularly againſt me, and was found inſufficient, ſo that the Jury was diſmiſſed without any Verdict, I humbly ſubmit my ſelf to your Lordſhips and this noble Court, whether I may not have Council in this point of Law, to adviſe me, whether I may and ought to plead again the ſecond time, for according to Law, I am informed, no Man can be put in jeopardy of his Life the ſecond time, for the ſame Cauſe.

L. C. J. You ſay well Mr. Whitebread.

Whitebread. I ſpeak it not for my ſake only, but the ſake of the whole Nation, no Man ſhould be Tried twice for the ſame Cauſe, by the ſame Reaſon, a Man may be Tried 20 or a 100 times.

L. C. J. You ſay well, it is obſerved, Mr. Whitebread; but you muſt know, that you were not put in jeopardy of your Life for the ſame thing, for firſt the Jury were diſcharged of you, it is true, it was ſuppoſed when you were indicted, that there would be two Witneſſes againſt you, but that fell out otherwiſe, and the Law of the Land requiring two Witneſſes to prove you guilty of Treaſon, it was thought reaſonable, that you ſhould not be put upon the Jury at all, but you were diſcharged, and then you were in no jeopardy of your Life.

Whitebread. Under favour, my Lord, I was in Jeopardy; for I was given in charge to the Jury; and 'tis the Caſe of Seyer, in 31 Eliz. he was Indicted for a Burglary committed the firſt of Auguſt, and pleaded to it; and afterwards another Indictment was preferr'd, and all the Judges did declare, that he could not be Indicted a ſecond time for the ſame Fact, becauſe he was in Jeopardy of his Life again.

L. C. J. Surely, you were not in Jeopardy, and I'll ſhew you how you were not, ſuppoſe you had pleaded, and the Jury were ſworn.

Whitebread. They were ſo in my Caſe.

L. C. J. 'Tis true they were, but ſuppoſing that preſently upon that, ſome Accident falls out, a Witneſs is taken ſick, and be feign to be carried away; or for any reaſonable Cauſe, it ſhould be thought fit by the Court to diſcharge the Jury of it, that they ſhould not paſs upon your Life, are you in Jeopardy then?

L. C. J. North. I would have you be ſatisfied with Reaſon, and the courſe of Law, that other Mens Lives are under, as well as yours. The Oath the Jury take, is that they ſhall well and truly try, and true deliverance make, of ſuch Priſoners as they ſhall have in Charge, the Charge of the Jury is not full, till the Court give them a Charge at the laſt, after Evidence had, and becauſe there was a miſtake in your Caſe, that the Evidence was not ſo full as might be, the Jury, before ever they conſidered concerning you at all, they were diſcharged, and ſo you were not in Jeopardy, and I in my experience know it to be often done, and 'tis the courſe of Law, the Clerks will tell you 'tis frequently done here and at other places; and this is not the ſame Indictment, and it contains further matter, then that you pleaded to before. And then if you will make this Plea good that you go upon, you muſt alledge a Record, and ſhew ſome Record to make it good, and that cannot be, becauſe there is none, and ſo it will ſignifie nothing to you, as you have pleaded it.

Whitebread. I deſire the Record may be viewed, it remains with you, I do only preſent this to your Lordſhip and the Court, and deſire I may have Council.

L. C. J. No, not at all, there is no entry made of it.

White-

Whitebread. I desire that Council may advise me, for I am advised, that according to the Law of the Land, I ought not to plead again, and I hope your Lordships will be of Council for me.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Whitebread, there is no entry made upon it, and the reason is, because there was no Tryal, and there was no Tryal, because there was no Condemntion or Acquittal, if there had been, then you had said something.

Whitebread. That which I ask is, whether I ought not to be condemned or acquitted.

L. C. J. No, it is only in the discretion of the Court. For if a Man be indicted for murder, and some accident should happen, (when the Witness come to prove it) that he should be taken ill, and so be carried away, should the Murtherer escape?

Whitebread. That is not in my Case, you may do as you please.

L. C. J. But we shew, that it is in the discretion of the Court to discharge the Jury upon such Accidents, and then the Party is not in Jeopardy.

Whitebread. I have only pray'd your Lordship's Discretion in this.

L. C. J. You ought to plead, and must plead.

L. C. J. North. I suppose if any of my Brethren are of another Opinion, than what we have expressed, they would say so.

Court. We are all of your Opinion.

L. C. J. All the Judges of England are of the same Opinion.

Mr. Record. 'Tis the constant Practise.

L. C. J. 'Tis frequent in all Places, it is no new thing.

Whitebread. My Lord I am satisfied.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas White alias Whitebread, art thou guilty of the High Treason whereof thou standest indicted, or not guilty?

Whitebread. Not guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Whitebread. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good deliverance. John Fenwick, art thou guilty of the same High-Treason, or not guilty?

Fenwick. Not guilty.

Cl of Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Fenwick. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good deliverance.

Fenwick. I was tried before with Mr. Whitebread, our Case is the same, the only reason, why (I presume) we were not proceeded against, was, because the second Witness declared he had nothing to say against us, that was Mr. Bedlow, who said, as to Mr. Whitebread and Mr. Fenwick, I have nothing to say against them; if he had given the same Evidence against us, as he had done against the rest, we had been condemned, and had suffered, and so I suppose we ought to have been discharged.

L. C. J. No, it was not reasonable you should be discharged, it remains in the discretion of the Court, not to let a Man, that is accused of a great and capital Crime escape, if there be one Witness that swears expressly: do you think it reasonable such a Man should go scotfree, tho' there wanted two that the Law requires? You were not in danger, your Lives were not in Jeopardy.

Fenwick. My Lord, we were in the same Danger with those Three that suffered.

L. C. J. No, we never let the Jury go together to consider whether you were guilty, or not guilty, we did prevent your making your Defence, because we thought it not a sufficient Charge.

Cl. of Cr. William Harcourt alias Harrison, how say'st thou, art thou guilty of the High-Treason whereof thou standest indicted, or not guilty?

Harcourt. Not guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Harcourt. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good deliverance. How say'st thou John Gavan alias Gawen, art thou guilty of the same High Treason, or not guilty?

Gavan. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, how wilt thou be Tried?

Gavan. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send the a good deliverance. How say'st thou Anthony Turner, art thou guilty of the same High-Treason, or not guilty?

Turner. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, how wilt thou be Tried?

Turner. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good deliverance.

L. C. J. Mr. Corker. you have heard the Indictment read, and what it consists of, a Traiterous Endeavour to subvert the Government, to murder the King, to change the Protestant Religion into Popery; if you have any Witnesses that can be serviceable to you, as to these matters, name who they are, and where they live; if you cannot, you had as good take your Tryal now, as at another time.

Corker. I not only have no Witnesses ready, but there are substantial Circumstances, which peradventure may arise, which may induce your Lordship to believe me innocent, and therefore I humbly beg, I may stay some short time to consult with those that are better skill'd in the Law than I am.

L. C. J. What do you mean to have Council assigned you?

Corker. My Friends, my Lord.

L. C. J. Every Man knows his own Case best, you have been bread a Scholar, and so you cannot be so ignorant as other Men are: you can tell whether you have any Witnesses that you think are material for your Defence.

Corker. That Day of the 24th of April, spoken of in the Indictment, I truly and really believe I was not in Town that Day; but I cannot positively prove it, because I heard not of it before.

L. C. J. Is there any body that can testifie where you were that Day? Can you name any one?

Corker. Yes, I believe I can name one, and that is one Alice Gaton, that is now 30 Miles out of Town at Tunbridge, who can prove where I did go about that time.

L. C. J. I'll tell you what, if my Brothers will, this Woman you suppose can say something for you, we will respite your Trial for to Day, send some body for her, and we will Try you to morrow.

L. C. J. North. Or any other Witnesses, for as to this 24th Day of April it is known to all the World to have been the Day of the Consult. But because you pretend a surprise, I must tell you, that Mr. Attorney sent you notice with the rest; but because you might be led into another Opinion that the Council did not order it, you have the favour to be put off till to morrow: Get your Witnesses ready if you can.

L. C. J. If you have any other Witnesses, or desire any order for their appearance, let us know it.

Corker. I desire I may have liberty to have my Trial put off till Monday.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. North. No, it cannot be, Monday is the Eſſoign Day, and then the Commiſſion will be out.

L. C. J. Call the Jury.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas White alias Whitebread, hold up thy Hand, (and ſo as to the reſt.) You the Priſoners at the Bar, thoſe Men that you ſhall hear call'd and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your ſeveral Lives and Deaths; if therefore you or any of you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn. Call Sir Philip Matthews.

Whitebread. We Challenge him. My Lord, that there may not be any further trouble, it is our general Petition, that none of thoſe that were for any of the former Trials may be of this Jury, they having already paſs'd their Judgment upon the Evidence they have heard.

L. C. J. You may Challenge them. And therefore (ſpeaking to the Clerk of the Crown) don't take any that were upon the laſt Jury for this Cauſe.

Gavan. Nor any of the former Juries; we do this that we may avoid giving your Lordſhip any further trouble, becauſe if we ſhould ſtay upon particulars we ſhould too much trouble the Court.

L. C. J. North. Look you, I will tell you by the way, you have the Liberty to Challenge peremptorily ſo many. All we can do, is to give direction to the Clerk, if he do not purſue it, we do not know them, we can't tell, you muſt look after that.

Mr. Record. You have the Books, wherein are Notes of all their Names by you.

Then the Jury that were Sworn were theſe Twelve.

Thomas Harriott.	Rainsford Waterhouſe.
William Gulſton.	Matthew Bateman.
Allen Garraway.	John Kaine.
Richard Cheyney.	Richard White.
John Roberts.	Richard Bull, and
Thomas Caſh.	Thomas Cox.

Cl. of Cr. Cryer, count theſe: Thomas Harriott.

Cryer. One, &c.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas Cox.

Cryer. Twelve, good Men and true, ſtand together and hear your Evidence.

Then the uſual Proclamation for Information was made, and the Jury-Men of Middleſex, Summon'd and not Sworn, were diſmiſs'd till next Morning Eight of the Clock.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas White, alias Whitebread, hold up thy Hand; (and ſo to the reſt.) You Gentlemen that are Sworn, look upon the Priſoners, and hearken to their Cauſe; they ſtand Indicted by the Names of Thomas White, &c. (put in the Indictment Mutatis Mutandis) and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. Upon this Indictment they have been Arraigned, and thereunto have ſeverally pleaded, Not Guilty, and for their Tryals have put themſelves upon God and their Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire, whether they, or any of them are guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof they ſtand Indicted, or not Guilty. If you find them, or any of them Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements they had at the time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any time ſince. If you find them, or any of them, not Guilty, you are to enquire whether they fled for it; if you find that they fled for it, you are to enquire of their Goods and Chattels, as if you had found them Guilty: if you find them Not Guilty, nor that they, nor any of them fled for it, ſay ſo and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Then Mr. Belwood, of Council for the King in this Cauſe, open'd the Indictment thus:

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

The Priſoners at the Bar, Thomas White, alias Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, alias Harriſon, John Gavan, and Anthony Turner, together with James Corker, ſtand Indicted of High-Treaſon; 'tis charged in the Indictment, That the 24th of April, in the Thirtieth Year of the King that now is, theſe Perſons, with other Traitors unknown, did purpoſe and conſpire to ſtir up Sedition and Rebellion: to cauſe a miſerable ſlaughter of the King's Subjects; to depoſe the King of his Government, and bring him to death; and to change the Government and Religion by Laws eſtabliſhed, and to Levy War againſt the King. And 'tis further charged in the Indictment, that purſuant of this Intention of theirs, and the better to bring it to paſs, They did Aſſemble, Conſult and Agree, firſt, to bring His Majeſty to death, to murther the King, and thereupon to change the Religion eſtabliſhed by Law, to the Superſtition of the Romiſh-Church, and to ſubvert the whole Government; and it was agreed, that Pickering and Grove ſhould murther the King, and that therefore Whitebread, and the reſt of the Perſons Indicted, ſhould ſay a number of Maſſes for the Soul of Pickering: and Grove, for this Piece of Service, was to have a Summ of Money. And the Indictment ſays further, That theſe Perſons did take the Sacrament to commit this Treaſon with more Secrecy; and that they did likewiſe Prepare, Excite, Abett and Counſel Four other unknown Perſons to kill the King at Windſor. All theſe Facts are ſaid to be done Adviſedly, Maliciouſly, Traiterouſly and Deviliſhly, and againſt their Allegiance to the King. To this they have pleaded Not Guilty; if the King's Evidence prove it, you are to find it ſo.

And then Sir Creſwel Levins, one of the King's Learned Council in the Law, proved the Charge thus:

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

Theſe Priſoners at the Bar, are by Perſuaſion Papiſts, by Order and Degree they are all Prieſts. By the Law of the Land, viz. by a Statute made the 27th of Eliz. they are all guilty of Treaſon, for being Prieſts, and they might be Tryed as ſuch, and ought to die for it; but that is not the Fact they are charged with, nor will they have the ſatisfaction to ſay, that they ſuffer for their Religion: No, they are charged with a Treaſon of a blacker and darker Nature. And tho' I muſt tell you, that it is now almoſt an hundred Years ago ſince that Statute was made againſt Prieſts coming into England, yet Examples have been very rare, that any of this ſort of Men have died for their Religion, within that Queen's Time, or any of her Succeſſors; yet they have died upon worſe Accounts, and upon ſuch Accounts as they are now brought to this Bar for. Such is the difference between Their Religion and Ours, they have been ſuffered to live here

here under a Law by which they ought to die. They kill the Protestants by Thousands, without Law or Justice, witness their bloody Doings at Mirendol, their Massacre at Paris, their barbarous Cruelty in Ireland, since the Year 1640. and those in Piedmont, since 1650. But these are not the Crimes they are Charged with, they are not accused for their Religion, but for the blackest and darkest Treason that Men can be Charged with. They are Charged with an Endeavour to murder the King, under whose Protection they lived. This Murder of the King hath been carried on in the Design of it, with all the Malice and Resolution that can be, from the first Time that we can give you an Account of it, which was the 24th of April, 1678. When these Persons, and several others, did first assemble about other Matters of their own, and among the rest to murder the King: There they came to a Resolution that it should be done, and Persons were appointed to do it, these were Grove and Pickering, who have been Executed for it; they were to kill the King in St. James's Park, but it pleased God, that the Flint of the Pistol failed, to which we are more beholding, than to them, that he escaped that time. They were not satisfied with that, but they send down Four Butchers to murder him at Windsor, who being disappointed, they sent down others after that to murder him at New-Market; and when all these failed, they had Recourse to that Treacherous and Unmanly Way, of Poysoning him, and hired one so to do, and they did not only intend to murder the King, but to make it good by Force when they had done. They intended to raise an Army; they had got Commissions to several Persons in the Kingdom, to command these Forces. They designed to raise 50000 Men, to maintain the Injustice, when they had done it. And that was not all, they had a Recourse to Foreign Assistance, and depended upon Foreign Succours, if they were not made good at home. Gentlemen, they have been disappointed in all these Things; they had an Intention further (as I find it in my Brief,) to make a general Massacre of all Protestants here. A Thing that they have done, and we have heard of Abroad, but Thanks be to God, we never knew it Experimentally at Home. And I hope God that hath preserved us hitherto, will preserve us still.

The Mercy these Men have met with, in being suffered to live under the Danger of the Statute, by which they might have justly died, hath not prevailed upon or bettered them at all, but been turned into monstrous Ingratitude, and made them more desperate than other People would have been. Gentlemen, when all this is opened, I must tell you, if these Persons be innocent, God forbid they should suffer, but if they be guilty, surely they are not fit to live among Men: And truly if they be guilty, they do not only deserve to die, but to die a more cruel and miserable Death, than either the Mercy of our Prince, or the Moderation of our Laws hath provided for such Offenders. I shall detain you no longer, but will call the Witnesses, and then you shall judge whether they be Guilty or not. And we begin with Mr. Oates. Who was Sworn.

Sir Cr. Levins. Pray what can you say to these Gentlemen? Begin with Mr. Whitebread first.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, apply your Evidence as distinctly as you can to one Person at first, unless where the Matter will take in all, or more than one of them.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I have Evidence I desire may be called in, I shall have Occasion to use them.

Gavan. It may be inconvenient. He may instruct his Witnesses.

L. C. J. North. No, he shall not, for we will take care of that: But name your Witnesses.

Dr. Oates. There is Sir Richard Barker, Mr. Walter, a Minister, Mrs. Mayo, Philip Page, Mr. William Smith, and one Mr. Clay, Mr. Butler, Mrs. Sarah Ives.

Mr. Just. Atkins. Take a Note of their Names, and send for them.

L. C. J. Now, Mr. Oates, go on with your Evidence; and when there is Occasion to make use of these Persons, they shall be call'd.

Dr. Oates. The Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Whitebread, was made and constituted Provincial, so as it was publickly known to us, in the Month of December last was Twelve-Month; and he did order, by Vertue of his Authority, one Father George Conyers, to preach in the Sodality of the English Seminary, on the Holyday which they call St. Thomas of Canterbury, i. e. Thomas of Becket's Day, in which there was Order given that Mr. Conyers should preach and assert this Doctrine; That the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy were Heretical, Antichristian, and Devilish: Accordingly, this Order was Executed, and the Sermon preached. Mr. Whitebread, in the Month of January, wrote Letters (or, at leastwise, in the beginning of February, I will not be positive, as to the Time, because it does not occur to my Memory,) to St. Omers, concerning the State of Ireland, of which he had an Account from Archbishop Talbot, who wrote him word, that there were several Thousands of Irish, that were ready to Rise, when the Blow should be given in England.

L. C. J. Was that in Whitebread's Letter?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, and Mr. Whitebread did say, He did hope it would not be long e're it was given. Now, my Lord, by the Word, Blow, we did use to understand, and had Instructions to understand, the Death and Murder of the King; and in the Month of January, I think it was, that he sent over two Jesuits into Ireland, to see how the State of Affairs stood there: In the beginning of April they return'd, of which we had an Account from Mr. Whitebread, by Letters, wherein there was mention of a Consult to be held in the Month of April Old Stile, and May New Stile; and according to the Order there given, there met at that Consult, the Prisoners at the Bar, Whitebread, Fenwick, Harcourt and Turner, and, if it please your Lordship, all these at that Consult did sign a Resolve, Mr. Whitebread at his Chamber, which was at Wild-House, Mr. Fenwick at his Lodgings in Drury-Lane, and Mr. Harcourt, who had some at his Chamber in Duke-Street. But, my Lord, I am to premise this, before I go any further, That the Consult was begun at the White-Horse-Tavern in the Strand, and there they did agree to send Father Cary to be their Procurator at Rome; and after some such Things were done, they adjourned into several Clubs or Colloquies, or what you please to call them. One was at Mr. Whitebread's Chamber, another at Ireland's Chamber, that is Executed, another at Harcourt's, and another at Fenwick's; now here was a Resolve Signed by these Prisoners at the Bar, in which ——

L. C. J. That is four of them, Whitebread, Fenwick, Harcourt and Turner.

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was Gavan there?

Dr. Oates. I dare not, my Lord, affect him with that, because I cannot be positive, but I'll give you my Evidence against him by and by. My Lord, these four Gentlemen, with the rest of their Accomplices, did sign a Resolve which was this, That Pickering and Grove should go on in their Attempt to dispatch the King; and this they did resolve upon, and and gave it as their Judgment, as a very excellent Expedient. My Lord, after this Conſult we did return, (we were Eight or Ten that came over) and may it pleaſe your Lordſhips, in the Month of June, (I think it was June) he came to Flanders, in order to viſit his Colleges, being Provincial of the Jeſuits of England: He did ſtay there (as near as I can remember) till the 10th of June, and enquiring of the Fathers how Squares went in Town, among other Expreſſions he uſed, this was one, That he hoped to ſee the black Fool's Head at Whitehall, laid faſt enough; and that if his Brother ſhould appear to follow in his Footſteps, his Paſport ſhould be made too, (or to that Purpoſe) he ſhould be diſpatch'd. Upon the 13th of June, Old Stile, the 23d, New Stile, I had Orders to come for England; according to which Order I came, and did take the Pacquet-Boat, as near as I can remember, the 24th, which was 14th Old Stile, and we landed at Dover the 25th, very early in the Morning; and when I was at Dover, I met with the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Fenwick, and he, my ſelf, and ſome others, did take Coach, and come as far as Canterbury; after we had eaten and drunk there, we came ſix Miles further, where there was a Box ſeized by the Searchers of the Town of Borton, and this Box was brought up by Mr. Fenwick, and directed to one Blundel, and the Superſcription was, as near as I can remember, in theſe Words, To the Honourable Richard Blundel, Eſq; at London. And this Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Fenwick, did deſire that the Searchers would ſend it to him, (it was full of Beads and Crucifixes, and ſuch Things,) to the Fountain-Tavern near Charing-Croſs, and write a Letter to him, by the Name of Mr. Thompſon, as that was the Name he uſually went by, when he came to Dover, and he had then brought ſome Students there, to ſend over to St. Omers.

L. C. J. When went Fenwick?

Dr. Oates. When I came to Dover, I met Fenwick, by the Name of Thompſon, going to ſend over the Students, and Fenwick did ſay, If they had ſearched his Pockets, as they had ſearched his Box, they had found ſuch Letters, as would have coſt him his Life; for, ſaith he, they were about our Concern in Hand. Then we came up to London, and arrived at London the 17th of June, Old Stile, for we lay a part of the Way at Sittenburn, in the Morning, and in the Afternoon we came to Darford, and came to London, Monday Noon, the 17th, Old Stile. And in the Month of July, there was one Richard Aſhby, whoſe right Name indeed is Thimbleby, but he went by the Name of Aſhby, and this Gentleman did bring over Inſtructions from the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Whitebread, who was abroad in Flanders, wherein he was to propoſe 10000 l. to Sir George Wakeman, to poiſon the King, and ſeveral other Inſtructions there were, of which I cannot now give you an Account; and withal, that a blank Commiſſion ſhould be fill'd up, and ordered for Sir John Gage, to be a Military Officer in the Army, and by that Gentleman's own Order I delivered that Commiſſion into Sir John Gage's own Hand, on a Sunday.

L. C. J. Where had you that Commiſſion, from Whitebread?

Dr. Oates. It was Signed and Sealed by him, but it was a Blank, and was to be fill'd up.

L. C. J. Where?

Dr. Oates. It was at Wild-Houſe.

L. C. J. How was it fill'd up?

Dr. Oates. It was fill'd up by Mr. Whitebread's Order, it was Signed and Sealed blank, and he ordered it to be fill'd up, and me to take that Commiſſion, and carry it to Sir John Gage.

Whitebread. Did I order you?

Dr. Oates. You ordered Aſhby; I ſaw the Letter, and knew it to be Whitebread's Hand.

L. C. J. Was it before he went to St. Omers?

Dr. Oates. It was while he was at St. Omers.

Whitebread. What Day was it? what Hour?

Dr. Oates. It was in July.

Whitebread. What time of the Month?

Dr. Oates. The beginning or middle.

Whitebread. Are you ſure it was in July?

Dr. Oates. I cannot be poſitive, but I think it to be in July, for Aſhby went to the Bath the latter end of July, or the beginning of Auguſt, and it was before he went.

Whitebread. Who was preſent at the Signing of this Commiſſion?

Dr. Oates. There was preſent at the filling up of this Commiſſion, Mr. Harcourt, Mr. Aſhby, and Mr. Ireland.

Fenwick. Was not I there?

Dr. Oates. I think I fill'd it up. I'll tell you when you were there preſently. My Lord, when Aſhby went away, Fenwick went out of Town, but returned again preſently, to give an Account how Squares went, and really I cannot remember where he had been, but as near as I can, it was in Eſſex, I will not be poſitive in it; but my Lord, this ſame Gentleman, Mr. Fenwick, with Mr. Harcourt, did adviſe Mr. Aſhby, that as ſoon as he had been at the Bath, he ſhould go and give an Account to the People in Somerſetſhire, and thereaway, his Circuit would be ſhort and very eaſy, and he did not queſtion, but before he came up to Town again, to have the Gentleman at Whitehal diſpatch'd, whom they call'd the Black Baſtard, now I leave that to the Jury, to expound whom they meant by it.

Fenwick. What time was that, Sir, pray? You muſt time Things, or you do nothing at all.

Dr. Oates. It was the latter end of July, or the beginning of Auguſt, it was about the Time of Aſhby's going to the Bath.

Fenwick. Juſt now he ſaid, it was in the beginning or middle of July.

Dr. Oates. I'll tell your Lordſhip what I ſaid, that this Aſhby, or Thimbleby, came from St. Omers with thoſe Orders or Inſtructions, either the beginning of July, or the middle of July.

Fenwick. I would not interrupt you, Mr. Oates, this was ſome time before Mr. Aſhby went to the Bath, was it not?

Dr. Oates. It was about a Day before.

L. C. J. He ſays a Thing that is plain enough: Aſhby came over about the beginning or middle of July, with Inſtructions about the Commiſſion; and about the latter end of July, or beginning of Auguſt, as he remembers, this Advice was given.

Dr. Oates. And ſo we are arrived at the Affairs in Auguſt, which reflects upon theſe Gentlemen; but now I muſt ſpeak a Word to this Gentleman, Mr. Gavan, the Priſoner at the Bar, whom when I ſaw come into the Lobby, he had gotten on a Periwig; ſo there was one asked me, whether I knew him? I know him now, but truly then I did not well know him, becauſe he was under that Mask, and I could not ſay any thing againſt him then, becauſe he being under an ill-favoured Periwig, and being a Man that I knew had a good Head of Hair of his own, I did not well underſtand the Myſtery of it, and ſo ſpared my Evidence at that Time, from informing the Council againſt him; but the Priſoner at the Bar came by the Name of Gavan, and we uſed to call him by the Name of Father Gavan: And this Gentleman did in the Month of June write Letters——

Gavan. What Year?

Dr. Oates. In the Year 1678. and did give the Fathers at London an Account how Affairs ſtood in Staffordſhire and Shropſhire, and how diligent one Father Evers was to manage Affairs in thoſe Countries.

Gavan. From whence were thoſe Letters ſent?

Dr. Oates. There was only the Day of the Month, you know it is not the Cuſtom to date the Place. When I ſaw the Letter firſt, I did not know it was his Hand, I took it upon Report; but I will tell the Jury, by and by, how I came to know it was his Hand: As near as I can remember, it was in the Month of July, (it was July or Auguſt) this Gentleman came to Town, and I ſaw this Gentleman at Mr. Ireland's Chamber.

Gavan. What time of the Month?

Dr. Oates. It was in July 1678. as near as I can gueſs.

Gavan. Upon my Salvation, I am as innocent as a Child unborn.

L. C. J. North. By this Means you may put out any Witneſs in the World, by interrupting of them. When the Witneſs hath done his Teſtimony, you may ask him any Queſtions, to aſcertain the Time, or any thing, but you muſt not interrupt him till he hath done.

Dr. Oates. In the latter part of July, I think it was, but it was, as I remember, while Mr. Aſhby was in Town, I met him at Mr. Ireland's Chamber, for he was a ſaying he would go ſee Father Aſhby, before he went out of Town, and he gave ſuch an Account to Father Ireland, of the Affairs in Staffordſhire and Shropſhire, as he had given in the Letters before; but to prove his Hand, he did draw a Bill upon one Sir William Andrews in Eſſex, for the Payment of ſome Money, of ſome little ſucking Prieſts, that were ſtroling up and down the Country. I ſaw him write it, and it was the ſame Hand with that Letter.

Gavan. What did I write?

L. C. J. You drew a Bill upon ſuch a Perſon, and he names him.

Dr. Oates. We are now come to Auguſt.

L. C. J. But you ſay he diſcourſed about the ſame Things with Ireland, that he had wrote in the Letter.

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord.

Gavan. And what were thoſe ſame Things?

Dr. Oates. Why, how the Affairs ſtood in Staffordſhire and Shropſhire, how my Lord Stafford was very diligent. I deſire to be excuſed as to that, becauſe it will diminiſh my Evidence in another Part of it: I'll tell you part of what was then diſcourſed of.

Gavan. My Lord, he is ſworn to ſpeak all the Truth.

L. C. J. You muſt ſpeak the whole Truth, as far as it concerns any of theſe Perſons.

Dr. Oates. He gave an Account how proſperous Things were in thoſe Countries, and did ſay, that there was at leaſt Two or Three Thouſand Pounds that would be ready in that Country, for the carrying on the Deſign, I think it was Three, but it was betwixt Two and Three. Now, my Lord, we are arrived to our Buſineſs in Auguſt; about the 12th of Auguſt, as near as I remember, but it was between the 8th and the 12th, therein I am poſitive, Ireland, which is Executed, took his Leave of us, as if he were to go to St. Omers.

L. C. J. Where did he take his Leave?

Dr. Oates. At his Chamber in Ruſſel-Street. Ireland went out of Town, and Fenwick, by that means, was to be Treaſurer and Procurator to the Society altogether. He had that Employ afterward upon him during his Abſence, let Mr. Ireland go whither he would. And the 21ſt of Auguſt, which, as near as I remember, fell upon a Wedneſday, Mr. Fenwick and Mr. Harcourt were met together at Wild-Houſe, and ſome other Fathers, as Father Kaines, and one Father Blundell, and ſome other Fathers, whom I cannot remember.

Gavan. Was I there, pray Sir?

Dr. Oates. No, no, Sir; I am not to talk to you ſtill, I am to ſpeak to the Court.

L. C. J. North. We would recommend this to you, to name Perſons when you ſpeak of them.

Dr. Oates. Where I have Occaſion I will name them, my Lord. Mr. Fenwick and Harcourt were together at Wild-houſe, and Mr. Kaines and Mr. Blundel, and, as near as I remember, Mr. Langworth was there, but I won't be poſitive. And there lay before them at Wild-houſe Fourſcore Pounds, the moſt of that Money was Guineas, which was to be paid to the four Iriſh Ruffians that were to murder the King at Windſor. After it was agreed that they ſhould do it, and Coleman, who was Executed, came thither, and gave the Meſſenger a Guinea to expedite the Journey. We drew off from Wild-houſe, and went to Mr. Harcourt's Chamber, and becauſe Mr. Harcourt had there left his Papers that were to be ſent down to Windſor, there he paid the Meſſenger the Money. And that Gentleman was preſent there, Mr. Fenwick, and this is another Part of Auguſt's Buſineſs. No ſooner was this Meſſenger diſpatch'd, but within a Day after, or a Day before; but it was a Day after, as near as I can remember, there was a Conſult held at the Benedictine's Convent, at which Mr. Fenwick was preſent, and Mr. Harcourt, and there they had ſome more Iriſh News from the Iriſh Archbiſhop Talbot, who did give an Account of the Iriſh Affairs, how they did conſpire the Death of the Duke of Ormond; and deſired to know how Affairs went in England, and deſired ſome Commiſſions might be ſent over to ſome particular Perſons, there to raiſe Forces for the carrying on of the Deſign, and ſome Money to be tranſmitted to them. And Mr. Fenwick did bring the Commiſſions from Wild-houſe (as near as I remember) but he did bring them with him, and ſent them down by a ſpecial Meſſenger to Cheſter, and ſome Letters by the Poſt. That of the Poſt I know of my own Knowledge, but that of the ſpecial Meſſenger I had only from his own Mouth. My Lord, from the 24th of Auguſt, as near as I remember it fell of a Saturday, Bartholomew-day it was, but whether it fell of a Saturday, I cannot be poſitive, but if the Court pleaſe to inform themſelves of it by their Almanacks, they may.

L. C. J. There is no great Matter in that I ſuppoſe.

Dr. Oates. But this Gentleman, Mr. Fenwick, did deliver me ſome Money for my neceſſary incident Charges, but did admoniſh me to procure ſome Maſſes to be ſaid for a proſperous Succeſs upon the Deſign. Upon the 25th Day, I ſaw Mr. Fenwick in the Afternoon at his Chamber, and he was to go on the 26th Day, the next Day, to St. Omers, and to carry Eight or Ten Students to go there to ſtudy Humanity: And this is the Account I have to give to Mr. Fenwick. For after I took my leave of him here, I ſaw him no more till he was apprehended.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. This was about the 26th of August, was it not?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, it was the 26th of August.

L. C. J. Well, go on, Sir.

Dr. Oates. The 1st or 2d of September, we receiv'd a Letter (in the Beginning it was) from Mr. Whitebread, and this Letter they did ſay was a Foreign Letter, and yet it paid but Two-pence, by which I did conclude that Mr. Whitebread was come into England, and lay ſome where privately, or was not yet come to Town. On the 3d of September I went to Mr. Whitebread's Chamber, at Night, but he being at Supper, was not to be ſpoken with; but when he ſaw me the next Morning, he did revile me, and ſtrike me, and asked me with what Face I could look upon him, ſeeing I had dealt ſo treacherouſly with them? Now, after that I had enquired, in what Reſpect? He anſwered, In the diſcovering of the Buſineſs, for there was a Gentleman that went to the King in this Buſineſs, to whom I had communicated much of my Information by Dr. Tongue. This Gentleman had the ſame coloured Cloaths that I had, and ſo they not being able to give an Account of the Name of the Perſon, gave only an Account of the Habit he was in, and therefore they Charged me with it. After I had juſtified my ſelf as well as I could, Mr. Whitebread did ſhew me a Letter, which came from one Bedding field, alias Benning field, which did ſhew the Plot was diſcovered, and they were like to be undone, if it had not been for the five Letters that were ſent down to Windſor and intercepted, which made all to be looked upon as Counterfeit; after that, I juſtified my ſelf as well as I could. He told me he would be Friends with me, provided I would give an Account of the Party, and of the Miniſter that went with him. And this is what I have to ſay againſt Mr. Whitebread, and the Priſoners at the Bar; but only this, becauſe Sir George Wakeman did not accept of 10000 l. that was propoſed to him to poyſon the King, this Gentleman offered that 5000 l. more ſhould be added.

L. C. J. Which Gentleman?

Dr. Oates. Mr. Whitebread. And 15000 l. was accepted, and when it was accepted, Whitebread did greatly rejoice that the Money was accepted to poyſon the King.

Whitebread. Did I tell you ſo?

Dr. Oates. No, there was a Letter told me ſo, but you were in Flanders then.

Sir Cr. Levins. What have you to ſay againſt Mr. Turner.

Dr. Oates. I ſpeak as to his being at the Conſult in April, and ſigning the Reſolve of the Death of the King.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Gavan at that Conſult the 24th of April?

Dr. Oates. Mr. Gavan was Summoned to that Conſult, but among Forty Men I cannot particularly ſay he was there, but I ſaw his Name Signed as to the King's Death, but I cannot ſay I ſaw his Perſon.

L. C. J. Can you ſay you ſaw his Hand-Writing?

Dr. Oates. I do believe it was his.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee any Writing of his, but when he Signed the Bill of Exchange?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I never ſaw him Write but that Time. It was an ill Pen as it ſeemed that he writ his Name with to the Conſult, and I did not take ſo particular Notice of the being of his Name there, till we ſaw the Inſtructions in July, and then I did look over the Conſult particularly

L. C. J. But I ſay, Did you ever ſee his Hand-Writing, before he writ the Bill?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I never ſaw his Hand but that Time.

L. C. J. And That, by your comparing, was like the Hand of the Letter about Staffordſhire?

Dr. Oates. By that I prove the Letter to be written from him. It was like it, and was all as one.

L. C. J. Was it like the Hand that was to the Conſult?

Dr. Oates. That I cannot ſay.

L. C. J. I thought you had ſaid he confeſs'd the Contents of the Letter, when he came out of Staffordſhire?

Dr. Oates. I do ſay this of Mr. Gavan, that he wrote ſuch a Letter, and when he came to Town, he did give an Account of all the Paſſages that the Letter did contain, which was concerning the raiſing of Money in Staffordſhire, and the Parts he was concerned in: And this was the Account he gave.

L. C. J. Dr. Oates, you poſitively ſay, that Whitebread, Fenwick, and Harcourt were there?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, for Mr. Whitebread was Provincial and Preſident of the Aſſembly.

Sir Cr. Levins. And Turner was there?

Dr. Oates. Yes, he was.

Sir Cr. Levins. Dr. Oates, what was that Money rais'd for?

Dr. Oates. They ſaid it was for the carrying on of the Deſign.

L. C. J. And what Deſign was that?

Dr. Oates. Our Deſign. And that was, the Subverſion of the Government, and Deſtruction of the King.

L. C. J. Now, if you pleaſe, you may ask him any Queſtion.

Gavan. Mr. Oates, you ſay you ſaw my Name to a Letter for the taking up of Money: To whom was that Letter writ?

Dr. Oates. There was a Letter from you, to Mr. Ireland. And he did receive it by the Hands of Grove.

Gavan. Where was that Money to be taken up?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I ſay, that Letter was received by Grove, who is out of the way, and can't prove it, and was delivered to Ireland.

L. C. J. I perceive your Memory is not good.

Gavan. I perceive his Memory is very good.

Dr. Oates. This Letter did give an Account of the Buſineſs of Staffordſhire, and the Particulars of that Mr. Gavan did afterwards give an Account of by Word of Mouth, and ſome other Things not fit to be named.

Gavan. Pray, where was it, Sir, that I gave an Account of it; in London, or in the Country?

Dr. Oates. In London.

Gavan. In what Month?

Dr. Oates. In July it was.

Gavan. What part of July?

Dr. Oates. It was when Mr. Aſhby was in Town, the beginning or middle.

Gavan. Juſt now, you ſaid it was in the latter end.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I beg this Favour, that if the Priſoners at the Bar ask any Queſtions, they may be propoſed to the Court, for they are nimble in their Queſtions, and do a little abuſe the Evidence. They put Things upon them that they never ſay.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Propoſe your Queſtions to the Bench, that you would have asked.

Gavan. I will do ſo, my Lord, in whoſe Honour I have more Confidence, than in whatſoever Mr. Oates ſays or ſwears.

L. C. J. But he tells you who you drew your Bill of Exchange upon, and that was Sir William Andrews.

L. C. J. North. Don't give the King's Witneſſes ill Words.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ask, any of you?

Whitebread. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. See if you can catch him, he gives you a long and exact Account as can be given by any Man in England; and pray direct your ſelf, Mr. Whitebread, to the Court.

Whitebread. He ſays he was here in April, and at the Conſult; now I deſire to know, how long before that Time were you and I acquainted?

Dr. Oates. Why, before that Time I never ſaw Mr. Whitebread's Face.

Whitebread. What Imployment were you to have, and what Reward?

Dr. Oates. When I came away from St. Omers, I was to attend the Motion of the Fathers at your Chamber, and to carry the Reſolve from Chamber to Chamber, where the Fathers were reſpectively met.

Fenwick. Was not you at the White-Horſe-Tavern?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I was there.

Fenwick. Did you dine there?

Dr. Oates. No, our Stay was ſhort there.

Fenwick. How long did you ſtay in Town?

Dr. Oates. Truly I can't tell you exactly, but from the Time I came into England, to the Time I went out again, was under Twenty Days.

Fenwick. Who were they that came over with you? Name the Parties.

Dr. Oates. I will tell you who they were; but it's ſo long ſince, I can't exactly remember.

Fenwick. You need not trouble your Memory, you have them in your Narrative.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, there was Father Williams, the Rector of Wotton, the Rector of Liege, Sir John Warner, Sir Thomas Preſton, and ſome others.

Whitebread. Was not Mr. Nevil there?

Dr. Oates. I believe he was, it is like he might be there.

Whitebread. Was not Sir Robert Brett there?

Dr. Oates. I believe he might.

Whitebread. You have ſaid ſo in your Narrative.

L. C. J. Perhaps a Man will venture to Write more than he will Swear; not that he does Write what he does not believe, but that he knows he ought to be more cautious in his Oath, than in his Affirmation.

Fenwick. My Lord, with your Lordſhip's Favour, it is upon Oath.

L. C. J. North. Fenwick, you are in a Court of Law, and we muſt go according to the Law; if you will prove any Contradiction in him to his Oath, you muſt bring the Perſons here that ſaw him take the Oath; and you muſt not think to take a Pamphlet for Evidence.

Fenwick. It was ſworn before a Juſtice of Peace, and will not, I ſuppoſe, be denied, and therefore he muſt make his Evidence agree with it, being part of his Narrative.

Gavan. You ſpeak of one Thing in Auguſt, and of another in July; which Month ſaw you me in?

Dr. Oates. I told you, I ſaw you in Town in July, and when Father Aſhby, or Thimbleby, was in Town. And you ſaid you would go and ſee him.

Juſt. Pemberton. He ſays it was in July, and that's enough.

Gavan. What Time in July?

Dr. Oates. It was towards the middle or latter end.

Gavan. Was it before Mr. Aſhby went to the Bath?

Dr. Oates. It was ſo.

L. C. J. He ſays he ſaw you in Town, when Aſhby was in Town, which was towards the latter end of July, or beginning of Auguſt. He cannot tell exactly whether, but poſitively he ſays before Mr. Aſhby went to the Bath.

L. C. J. North. Well, to ſatisfy you, we will ask Mr. Oates the Queſtion again. Can you recollect whether it was the middle or latter end of July?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, as near as I can remember, it was about the middle of July that Aſhby came to Town, and he did not ſtay in Town above a Fortnight: And it was whilſt he was in Town, and deſigned to go down to the Bath, that this Gentleman came to Town, and gave Account of the Particulars of that Letter.

L. C. J. North. You may ask him any Queſtions, but I would have you obſerve what Account he gives, That about the middle of July, Aſhby came to Town, that he ſtay'd in Town about a Fortnight, as he believes, that during that Time, you came to Town, and then was this Diſcourſe.

Dr. Oates. During that Time I ſaw him in Town, but I know not exactly when it was.

Gavan. My Lord, I would ask him one Queſtion; the Thing that is brought againſt me is this; He ſays, Mr. Aſhby came to Town in the middle of July, that he ſtaid in Town a Fortnight, that while he was there I came to Town, and had ſuch Diſcourſe: Now, my Lord, I deſire to know, whether it was the firſt Week, or laſt Week that Aſhby was in Town, that he ſaw me.

L. C. J. If he can anſwer it, let him.

Dr. Oates. My Lord I cannot.

L. C. J. He tells you, he cannot charge his Memory with it.

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, nor will not.

L. C. J. Really I believe there is ſcarce one in all this Company, able to give an Account of a particular Time of a Paſſage ſo long ago.

Gavan. No doubt he hath an excellent Memory.

L. C. J. And if he had not ſome Memorials of this, he could not do it. And tho' he hath Memorials of the moſt Eminent Paſſages, yet we can't ſuppoſe he hath of all Circumſtances.

Gavan. But this is the Subſtance; and your Lordſhip may conceive, that not without Reaſon I urge it; for if Mr. Aſhby came to Town the beginning of July, and ſtay'd but a Fortnight in Town, and I came to Town while he was here, it muſt be in one of the two laſt Weeks. Now I would have it aſſertain'd, becauſe I may diſprove it in one Week or in the other.

L. C. J. 'Tis true, you did not amiſs in asking the Queſtion, if he were able to anſwer it; but if it be either, 'tis enough to prove you Guilty.

Gavan. Pray was it only one Time, or diverſe, that you ſaw me in London?

Dr. Oates. It was but one Day, but as near as I remember, I ſaw you twice that Day; and I'll tell it you by a particular Circumſtance, That I ſaw you you in the Afternoon when you were a little illish, and there was a Cordial brought to you by an Apothecary, that went by the Name of Walpoole.

L. C. J. Here is Memory refresh'd by a Circumstance, you see. Whither was it brought to him?

Dr. Oates. To Ireland's Chamber.

Gavan. Who brought it, Sir?

L. C. J. An Apothecary, he says, whose Name was Walpoole.

Gavan. My Lord, I never saw Walpoole in all my Life.

L. C. J. I believe he is known well enough, such an one as Walpoole the Apothecary. But ask what Questions you will.

Dr. Oates. I cannot say whether it was Walpoole himself, or his Man, that brought it.

Gavan. I do as truly believe there is a God, and Heaven, and an Hell, as any one here does, as I hope for Salvation, as I hope to see God in Heaven, I never saw Mr. Oates before the Day in January when he says I had the Periwig on, and he did not know me: And as for July, I call God to witness, I never saw him then.

L. C. J. You were in Town in July?

Gavan. Upon my Salvation I was not in London.

L. C. J. You'll prove that by and by.

Fenwick. I hope, my Lord, we may ask him any Questions in the Court, of our Evidence, to make Things clear?

L. C. J. Yes, you may.

Turner. Did you ever see me in all your Life, before you saw me at VVhitehal?

Dr. Oates. You were then in a disguised Habit, and a nasty Periwig, and I did not know you so well.

Turner. You, at VVhitehal, was pleased to tell me, I went by another Name.

Dr. Oates. I don't value Names, but your Person: You are the Man.

L. C. J. You are the Man he says.

Turner. Did you see me at the Consult?

Dr. Oates. I saw the Man that speaks to me.

Turner. Who were there? and how many were present?

Dr. Oates. There were about forty or fifty.

L. C. J. When you have but one Name apiece, then he can hit it right; but when you have so many Names, then you are too hard for him.

Turner. Did you see me at the VVhite-Horse?

Dr. Oates. That I will not say; for when they were in lesser Clubs or Colloquies, I was sure of better Acquaintance with them.

Turner. Where was it you saw me?

Dr. Oates. At Mr. Fenwick's Chamber.

Turner. At Whitehal; you said it was at Wild-House.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, because the chiefest part of the Consult sat at Wild-House, we call'd it all, The Consult at Wild-House.

L. C. J. I see your Defence will be little else but Captiousness, to disprove him in Circumstances of Time, Place, Persons, or Numbers; now all these are but little Matters to the Substance: 'Tis true, Mr. VVhitebread, if you can prove you were not at that Place at that Time, it will do you great Service. Have you any thing more to say to him?

L. C. J. North. I hope your Witnesses are in readiness, that you were speaking of, to fortifie your Testimony?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, they are, I desire they may be heard.

L. C. J. By and by, when occasion is.

Jury. My Lord, I desire he may be asked one Question.

L. C. J. Mr. Garraway, what Question would you ask him?

Jury. Where it was that he saw Mr. Turner at the Consult.

Dr. Oates. I saw him at Fenwick's Chamber, where he was a Member of the Consult; and being so, I saw him Sign the Resolve of the King's Death.

L. C. J. Did you see him?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I did.

Sir Cr. Levins. Then we desire Mr. Dugdale may be Sworn. (which was done.) Come Mr. Dugdale, pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know concerning Whitebread, and Harcourt? First about Whitebread.

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, I have very little Acquaintance with the Man, I have seen him at Tixall, with my old Lady Aston.

L. C. J. When?

Mr. Dugdale. I dare not speak the time, but appeal to him himself, about the truth of it.

L. C. J. Is it Years ago?

Mr. Dugdale. It is two or three Years ago.

L. C. J. Well what can you say against him?

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Whitebread did write a Letter that I saw under his own Hand, inclosed in a Letter from Mr. Groves, to Mr. Ewers, wherein he gave Mr. Ewers a caution, to be sure to choose those that were very trusty, it was no matter whether they were Gentlemen or no, so they would be but stout and couragious: This was the purport of the Letter, I cannot say the words exactly, but that he should choose those that were hardy and desperate, or to that purpose.

L. C. J. Pray where was it you saw that Letter?

Mr. Dugdale. At Tixall.

L. C. J. How came you to see it?

Mr. Dugdale. Because all the Letters were directed to me, that came to Mr. Ewers inclosed in Mr. Grove's Letters: And so I intercepted the Letter, and read it.

L. C. J. What was Mr. Ewers?

Mr. Dugdale. A Jesuit, my Confessor; for I was entertained by Mr. Gavan to be in the conspiracy of the King's Death, and so I was by several others.

L. C. J. You were not acquainted with Mr. Whitebread's Hand, were you?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, I only came acquainted with Mr. Whitebread's Hand, by seeing him write a Letter at Tixall, which he delivered to me to send.

L. C. J. I pray let me understand you: You say that Mr. Whitebread did write a Letter to Mr. Ewers, inclosed in one from Mr. Grove, wherein he advised that he should entertain lusty stout Fellows, and no matter whether they were Gentlemen, or to that effect: Now I ask you, how you do know that was Whitebread's Hand? or was it his Name only that was to it.

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, I saw his Name at it.

L. C. J. When you saw that Letter, had you seen his Hand before?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, I saw it to another Letter which I saw him write.

L. C. J. And that was like the Hand in the Letter to Ewers, was it?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I do almost positively Swear it was the same Hand.

L. C. J. But what say you to Gavan and Ewers?

Mr. Dugdale. There were several Consultations in

in Mr. Ewers's Chamber, my own, and at Boscobel, and several other Places, Mr. Gavan might be so ingenious to confess it.

L. C. Bar. What were those Consultations for?

Mr. Dugdale. For conspiring the King's Death, and introducing of Popery, Mr. Gavan was chiefly made use of, as a good Orator and Learned Man, and a good Scholar to perswade People into the Design; this I speak as to these Persons.

L. C. J. Pray go on Sir, for you shall have a full Scope, for you never were a Witness in any of the Trials before: and you may take your own way, and you shall be heard, you shall not be interrupted; for what you say, is very considerable.

Mr. Dugdale. One meeting I think was in September last, it was at Tixall, and there was my Lord Stafford, and several others.

L. C. J. Was Gavan there?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, Mr. Gavan was there, I suppose he will not deny it.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Don't rely upon that, he will deny it, you may be sure; go on. You say he was there?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, and that was to carry on the Design: And I was by to hear. I think Mr. Ireland was in the Country then, there was you, (speaking to Mr. Gavan) Mr. Peters, Mr. Lewson, and Mr. Ewers, at this Consult, and there was another, my Lord Stafford, and others that I cannot now Name.

Gavan. What time?

Mr. Dugdale. It was in September, 1678.

Gavan. What Day?

Mr. Dugdale. I think it was 21st September.

L. C. J. What was that Consult and Conspiracy about, in short?

Mr. Dugdale. It was for the introducing of Popery, and taking away the Life of the King, I being a Person chosen out for that purpose, and was to be sent to London by Mr. Harcourt, to be under the Tuition of Mr. Parsons.

L. C. J. Pray who mentioned this? was that the first time that ever they discoursed of the death of the King?

Mr. Dugdale. No, my Lord, it was two Years ago, but I speak of a shorter time.

L. C. J. Who began the Discourse?

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Gavan often discoursed of it, and incouraged me to it.

L. C. J. Who broke it first to you? who seemed that Principal Man?

Mr. Dugdale. Ewers and Gavan.

L. C. J. By the Oath that you have taken, Repeat it once more, for this is new to us.

Gavan. 'Tis so to me too upon my Soul, for upon my Conscience I never heard of it before.

L. C. J. 'Tis a mighty Confirmation of what was before Discovered.

Mr. Dugdale. But I speak to Mr. Gavan, and appeal to him himself.

Gavan. Look upon me with Confidence, if you can.

Lord Just. Pemberton. You must not threaten the King's Witnesses.

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Gavan, I desire you to inform the Lords and all here present, whether I was not under your Tuition? And whether you knew any unjust Action by me?

Gavan. You were never under my Tuition.

L. C. J. Did you ever know him?

Gavan. Yes, my Lord, he used to come sometimes where I was, and so we were acquainted: and I lived within 11 Mile of Tixall, my Lord Aston's, and having Acquaintance in that Family, Mr. Ewers, whom I know very well, I used to come there sometimes, but I never was in his Chamber in my Life. In what Room of my Lord Aston's House was this Discourse?

Mr. Dugdale. Some of it was in the little Parlour, and some in Mr. Ewers's Chamber.

Gavan. Were any present there? And who were they?

Mr. Dugdale. I have told you there was Mr. Ewers, and Mr. Lewson, and Mr. Petre's, and some others; and for a further Confirmation of this, That Mr. Gavan may know that I had a great Zeal for him, and that they did love me well, I gave them an Estate, or else I believe they would not have trusted me so well as they did. I gave them 400 l. to pray for my Soul, and for the carrying on of this Design, and when they told me they doubted they should want Money, I promised them 100 l. more for the carrying on the Work. Upon which Mr. Gavan promised me that I should be Canoniz'd for a Saint.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Mr. Gavan himself?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Belwood. What do you know of any Foreign Assistance?

L. C. J. I would feign have all the World hear this; pray what was Discoursed in the Parlour in my Lord Aston's House, and in Ewers's Chamber?

Mr. Dugdale. It was about taking away the King's Life, and Introducing the Popish Religion.

L. C. J. By the Oath you have taken, was that their Discourse?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, They were contriving how to kill the King and Introduce Popery.

Sir Cr. Levins. Pray, have you heard any Discourse of an Army, or about making a Massacre?

Mr. Dugdale. It was spoken in my hearing, and there was some Discourse why they should expect Forces from Beyond Sea, and this Gentleman said (meaning Mr. Gavan) tho' they Beyond the Seas had Troubles enough upon themselves, yet if we could effect it, Men and Money would not be wanting. I will add nothing more than the Truth in what I say.

L. C. J. You deliver your Testimony like a sober modest Man, upon my word.

Sir Cr. Levins. What say you as to a Massacre?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, I have at some Consultations heard speak of it, but the Chief Thing that they aimed at was first, there was a Letter that came out of Paris, and came thro' Mr. Harcourt's Hands, and so came down into the Country, to prove that it was the Opinion of them at Paris, and St. Omers, to fling all this upon the Presbyterians, that is, the Death of the King; That if any thing of that nature should happen, they should be ready to give the first Alarm, and give out, That it was those Still King-killing Presbyterians, that had done the Fact: And so they thought they should easily have brought in the Episcopal Party into their Company, to revenge themselves of the Presbyterians.

L. C. J. It was pretty Advice indeed, to have it first laid on the Presbyterians, that they might get Protestants to joyn and cut them off, and then their own Throats should be cut.

Mr. Dugdale. And then my Lord, there was to be a Massacre; and if any did escape, that they could not be sure of were Papists, they were to have an Army to cut them off.

Mr. Belwood. Did he ever use any Arguments to you, to prove the Lawfulness of the Design?

Mr. Dug-

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, he hath, and ſhewed me ſeveral Examples for confirming me in it.

L. C. J. What, for killing the King?

Mr. Dugdale. For the killing of any, to introduce their own Religion.

Mr. Belwood. Pray, will you name ſome.

Mr. Dugdale. He endeavoured to prove it by Scripture, I can't now call the Text to mind; but it was to ſhew, how it was lawful and good to deſtroy any for the Advantage of their Religion, and then he ſhew'd the Example of Father Garnett. How ſeveral of his Reliques being Beyond Sea, Great Miracles had been done by them.

L. C. J. And ſo now there is by St. Coleman too.

Sir Cr. Levins. What Letters have you received from Mr. Harcourt?

Mr. Dugdale. I have received ſeveral Pacquets of Letters from ſeveral Perſons Beyond Seas, which were, by his Inſtruction, communicated by Mr. Grove, to Mr. Ewers, which Letters did contain Treaſon in them, for the introducing of Popery, and killing and deſtroying the King.

L. C. J. How can you tell that?

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Harcourt hath given it under his own Hand, and I have intercepted the Letters, and read them.

L. C. J. You were acquainted with the Hand.

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. You read the Letters?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. How many Letters have you intercepted? Have you intercepted Twenty?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, 100 my Lord? Mr. Harcourt was the firſt that gave intelligence into the Country (as I know of) of the Death of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey.

Sir Cr. Levins. Tell when it was given and how.

Mr. Dugdale. I have made it out already upon Oath, and I have Witneſſes to prove it.

Sir Cr. Levins. Pray Sir tell it now.

Mr. Dugdale. It was directed to Mr. Ewers, and it was three Days before he was found, for it was received on the Monday, and he, as it is proved, was killed on the Saturday. The words were theſe, This very Night Sir Edmond-bury Godfrey is diſpatched. And I very much rejected Mr. Ewers for this Action, and then told him, This will overthrow the Deſign, or I will be hanged.

L. C. J. What Day did you receive the Letter?

Mr. Dugdale. I have proved I received it on a Monday.

L. C. J. But pray what Date did it bear?

Mr. Dugdale. That Letter muſt come by Saturday Poſt, for it ſaid, This Night Sir Edmond-bury Godfrey is diſpatched.

L. C. J. He did not name any Body, by whom?

Mr. Dugdale. No, but it ſaid he was kill'd, and we knew by whom.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And are you ſure that was Mr. Harcourt's Letter?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes; for he did uſually ſign his Letters with two Letters W. H. which ſtood either for Harcourt, or Harriſon.

Mr. Belwood. Did you acquaint any Body with this, or did you conceal it?

Mr. Dugdale. I did go to an Alehouſe that is hard by my Lords the next Day, which was Tueſday, and there I asked, If they did not hear ſome News of a Knight's being kill'd at London? And I have an Evidence here, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I will call him, who, I deſire, may teſtifie the ſame thing.

L. C. J. Yes by all means.

Sir Cr. Levins. Mr. Dugdale, Pray, will you give us ſome more account of the Letter that came from Mr. Whitebread to Mr. Ewers.

Mr. Dugdale. I remember one particularly, but I cannot tell what number I have ſeen.

Sir Cr. Levins. Did you ſee more than that one?

Mr. Dugdale. I particularly remember that.

L. C. J. What was that one particularly?

Harcourt. My Lord, I deſire to ask him one Queſtion, When was the laſt time that you received any Letters from me?

Mr. Dugdale. The laſt I received from you (to my beſt remembrance) was that about Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and it was in October.

Harcourt. I have not writ to that Perſon this Year and half.

L. C. J. Let that Man be called, that proves this buſineſs of the Death of Sir Edmund-bury, and the talk of it.

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Harcourt, you know very well, that when Mr. Ireland was laſt in the Country laſt Year, you were to ſend him the Anſwers that came by Letters from St. Omers, and thoſe were ſent down to my Lord Aſton's, and I ſaw them, eight of thoſe Letters, I am ſure. And I can prove it by one Circumſtance, two of them came relating to Mr. Edward Aſton's Death, from Paris; I intercepted them, and talking of it, that I could Conjure, and tell of the Death of Mr. Edward Aſton, before any of his Friends knew of it. And Mr. Ireland writ a chiding Letter about it, that he had not heard it ſooner, and you ſent down word, That you did write thoſe Letters, and yet you ſay you have not written to me of a Twelve-month, or more.

Harcourt. This Gentleman does pretend to know my Hand, and 'tis true, I have writ ſeveral Letters for Mr. Ewers, and directed to him; but as to this Time he ſpeaks of, I have left off Writing for divers Years. He pretends to know me, and yet this Gentleman before the Committee of Commons in Parliament, which was Yeſterday was five Weeks, as well as he knew my Hand, came and ſaid I was a Gentleman he did not know. He came alſo to entrap me at the Gatehouſe before thoſe Gentlemen of the Committe of the Houſe of Commons; but becauſe he ſaid he knew my Hand ſo very well, and teſtifies thoſe Expreſſions in the Letter, I muſt ſay this, I never did write any ſuch Letter, nor did I ever in my Life ſeem to approve of any Man's Death or Murder. But the thing is this, he pretends to know my Hand and to prove it, the Gentlemen deſired me to write my own Hand and my Name, and he in the mean time did withdraw, and three of them did write their Names, and afterwards they called him in again, and asked him which was Harcourt's Hand, and he was not able to ſay which it was.

L. C. J. You write more Hands, as well as have more Names, and can counterfeit your Hands as well as change your Names.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You ſpeak before your time, and your bare word goes for nothing.

L. C. J. But, Mr. Dugdale, where is your Witneſs?

Harcourt. I don't know any thing of this.

L. C. J. But if he calls up a Witneſs, of whom you can have no Suſpicion, that can teſtifie, that at this time Mr. Dugdale ſpoke about the Death of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, what will you ſay to that?

Harcourt. I believe there is no ſuch thing at all.

Sir

Sir Cr. Levins. My Lord, here it Mr. Chetwin, pray ſwear him? (which was done.)

L. C. J. Mr. Chetwin, Do you remember that Mr. Dugdale came to you any time laſt Summer, and what time, and what Diſcourſe had you.

Mr. Chetwin. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I was moſt part of the Summer in the Country, I came into Staffordſhire about the 29th of Auguſt. My Lord, there is a Gentleman, one Mr. Sanbidge, that is a Kinſman of my Lord Aſton's, that was very well acquainted with the Family where I was, which was half a Mile off my Lord's, and uſed to come and play with me at Tables. My Lord, at that very time in October he came to me, and there, ſays he, Do you hear nothing of a Juſtice of Peace in Weſtminſter, where you Live, that is killed? or to that effect. No, ſaid I, and I had Letters yeſterday, and heard nothing of it. Saith he, I was this Morning at Elds, and there a Girl of the Houſe told me, Mr. Dugdale had been there, and reported that there was a Juſtice of Peace of Weſtminſter was killed; but who he ſhould be I never heard named, and on Saturday following my Letters brought it down to me.

L. C. J. When was it that this was ſpoken?

Mr. Chetwin. It was Tueſday Morning, (as I remember) and that by a very good circumſtance, I went that day for Litchfield, and the Saturday after the News came to me to Litchfield, that Sir Edmund-bury was found Murdered.

L. C. J. The Jury would do well to obſerve this in point of Time, Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was kill'd, as it was ſince proved, a Saturday, but on Monday he was miſs'd, on Thurſday he was found, and on Saturday the News was ſpread all over the Country. Now, ſaid he, the Tueſday before the News came down, which muſt be the Tueſday after the Saturday he was kill'd, one comes from the Alehouſe and asks, Do you not hear of a Juſtice of Peace at Weſtminſter that is kill'd? for the Wench at yonder Alehouſe ſays, Mr. Dugdale was here this Morning and reported ſuch an one was kill'd. So that it is moſt notorious, as any thing in the World can be, that this thing was known to them, before any of us knew what was become of him.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. How do you further know it to be upon Tueſday?

Mr. Chetwin. I know it to be that Tueſday, my Lord, very well, for we all went about ſuch a time to my Couſin's Mother, to ſtay a Week there, and after I returned back, and on Tueſday the 15th of October I went to the Race to Litchfield, and ſtay'd till Saturday there, and came thence to London, and was here the Wedneſday, being the firſt Day of the Term. But I remember particularly the firſt Information Mr. Dugdale gave in the Country, came to my Couſin's Hands from the Mayor of Stafford, and I happen'd to ſee him, I think it was Chriſtmas-Day. It came incloſed in a Letter, upon the Apprehenſion of Mr. Dugdale, I remember I met him, and he told me of it, and, ſaid he, the Parliament did not ſit that Day: So he went to acquaint the Lord Lieutenant of the County, that is, the Duke of Monmouth with it, who carried it to the King. But when Mr. Dugdale was ſent for, my Couſin went down, and writ me a good Character of him. As ſoon as ever Dugdale came to Town, before he went to be examined by the Council, as I remember, I went with ſome Gentlemen to ſpeak with him, and ſaid I to him, Can you ſay any thing about Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's Death? Said he, I remember ſuch a Letter came at ſuch a time from Father Harcourt to Father Ewers, wherein were theſe words; This Night Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey is diſpatched. And, ſaid he, I remember I asked the Queſtion of Ewers, Is not this likely to ſpoil all the Deſign? No, ſaid he, he was a Man that proſecuted Perſons that went to debauch'd Houſes, and it will be ſaid to be ſome of them that did revenge themſelves of him; or words to the ſame effect. This made me recollect the Time I had the Diſcourſe with the Gentlemen in the Country, I happened to be out of Town when the Murtherers of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey were Tryed; as ſoon as I came to Town, and found that the Murtherers of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey were Condemned, I was at a Coffee-houſe enquiring how it was managed; ſome I found ſlighted it, others did not know what to make of it. Was not Mr. Dugdale there? ſaid I. No, ſaid they. Then I preſume, ſaid I, that a very material Evidence was omitted. Upon this I went to Mr. Dugdale's Chamber, and there, ſaid I to him, What was the Reaſon you were not produced as an Evidence, at the Tryal of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's Murtherers? Said I, You told ſuch a thing, and I hope you told Truth, for I don't hear that you have ever contradicted it, that you ſaw a Letter about the Monday after he was murthered. In my judgment it is very material, if you have ſworn it; if your Depoſition be true, or elſe you did ill to report it. Said I, Pray let me ſee the Copy of your Depoſition ſworn before the Council. He ſhew'd it me, and there was not a Syllable of it, that I could ſee, but afterwards appear'd to be there.

L. C. J. That is not very material, if the thing it ſelf be true.

Mr. Chetwin. But its not being there, made me remember it.

Mr. Recorder. Pray ſet up Mr. Dugdale again. Now pray tell the Contents of Mr. Whitebread's Letter.

Mr. Dugdale. The Contents of it was, to encourage Mr. Ewers to go on to be careful whom he did intruſt, that they ſhould be ſuch Fellows as were deſperate, hardy, couragious and ſtout, or to that purpoſe; it was no matter whether they were Gentlemen or no, ſo they were but courageous and deſperate.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. What were they to do?

Mr. Dugdale. For the killing of the King.

L. C. J. Was that in Whitebread's Letter?

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Whitebread did write thoſe words, they were in the Letter.

Whitebread. Was that very word in the Letter, for killing the King?

Mr. Dugdale. It was, that they ſhould be ſtout and couragious Perſons.

L. C. J. For what End?

Mr. Dugdale. It was for taking away the King's Life.

L. C. J. I ask you, recollect your ſelf, was it by way of deſcription of ſome Deſign or Plot, that thoſe Perſons were to be choſen out? or was it in downright words, for killing the King?

Mr. Dugdale. To the beſt of my remembrance they were thoſe very words.

L. C. J. It was much he would write ſuch words in a Letter.

Mr. Dugdale. I was one that was made choice of about it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Were you to be one?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, I was.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Mr. Gavan, you know who it was you entertain'd for this Buſineſs, and you could truſt them.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. How were theſe Letters conveyed? Were they ſent by the Ordinary Poſt?

Mr. Dugdale. Yes, they were, and they truſted me with them, becauſe, being directed to me, if they were intercepted, I ſhould be hang'd, and they ſaved.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Upon theſe Letters, what were you entertained to do?

Mr. Dugdale. My Lord, I was entertained before by my Lord Stafford, and Mr. Ewers.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What to do?

Mr. Dugdale. To kill the King.

Whitebread. Pray, Sir, how came you to ſee theſe Letters? Did you intercept them, and read them your ſelf?

Mr. Dugdale. I did intercept them, and open them of my own ſelf.

Whitebread. Pray take notice of what he ſays, Gentlemen.

Mr. Recorder. The Jury do take notice.

L. C. Baron. Do you know any thing againſt Mr. Turner and Mr. Fenwick?

Mr. Dugdale. Mr. Ewers hath told me by Word of Mouth, that he was to carry on the Deſign in Worceſterſhire, but I ſaw him with Mr. Ewers and Lewſon, and others, when he was going to his Brother Turner's, then in Nottinghamſhire, and they did conſult and agree there, in my Hearing, to all that I have ſaid before.

Turner. What did I aſſent to?

Mr. Dugdale. Why this Deſign, you and Mr. Ewers and Lewſon, and others, agreed to what I ſaid before.

Turner. Where was this?

Mr. Dugdale. At Tixall and other Places.

Turner. In what Month?

Mr. Dugdale. It was about two Years ago, about the beginning of the Buſineſs.

Turner. Where was it?

Mr. Dugdale. It was at Mr. Ewers Chamber, you know me very well.

Turner. I have not been in Staffordſhire theſe four Years.

L. C. J. Why, don't you know him, Mr. Turner?

Turner. I do know I have been there a matter of three or four times in my whole Life, but have not been there theſe four Years.

Mr. Juſt. Windham. Have you any thing to ſay againſt Fenwick?

Mr. Dugdale. I don't know that I ever ſaw him before.

Mr. Recorder. But he ſpeaks fully as to the other Four.

Sir Cr. Levins. Call Mr. Prance, and ſwear him. Which was done.

Sir Cr. Levins. Come on, Mr. Prance, What can you ſay to Mr. Fenwick, or any of the others?

Mr. Prance. Mr. Harcourt, I made him an Image of our Lady about a Year ago, and when I was receiving Money for it, (it was to be ſent into Maryland) you told me then that there was a Deſign of killing the King.

L. C. J. Who told you?

Mr. Prance. Mr. Harcourt, that very time.

Sir Cr. Levins. When was it?

Mr. Prance. It was when it was ſent to Maryland, in the Portugal's Country; you know it well, Mr. Harcourt.

Harcourt. I know nothing of it.

Sir Cr. Levins. Pray let him alone, till we have done with him.

Harcourt. I deſire but to know when it was.

Mr. Prance. When I received the Money for the Picture, it was a Year ago.

Sir Cr. Levins. What ſay you to Mr. Fenwick?

Mr. Prance. I was in Mr. Ireland's Chamber in Ruſſel-ſtreet, and there was Ireland, Fenwick, and Grove, and they were talking of 50000 Men that ſhould be raiſed, and be in readineſs to carry on the Catholick Cauſe, and ſettle the Catholick Religion. I asked who ſhould Govern them? They told me, my Lord Bellaſis, my Lord Powis, and my Lord Arundel.

L. C. J. Who told you ſo?

Mr. Prance. Mr. Fenwick.

L. C. J. How long ago?

Mr. Prance. About a Fortnight Michaelmas laſt. Mr. Grove came to me two or three Days afterward, to buy two or three Silver Spoons to give away at a Chriſtning, and then I asked him, What Office he ſhould be in? He told me, He could not tell: But he told me, My Lord Arundel, my Lord Bellaſis, my Lord Petre, and my Lord Powis, had Commiſſions for theſe Things to give.

L. C. J. This Grove told you?

Mr. Prance. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. But what did Fenwick tell you?

Mr. Prance. He told me who were to Govern the Army, my Lord Bellaſis, my Lord Powis, and my Lord Arundel of Wardour.

Sir Cr. Levins. Had he any Diſcourſe with you about Trade?

Mr. Prance. He ſaid, I ſhould not fear Trade, I ſhould have Church-work enough.

Mr. Belwood. Pray ſpeak that again.

Mr. Prance. I asked him, What ſhall we poor Tradeſmen do, if we have Civil Wars in England? O, ſaid he, you need not fear having Trade enough, you ſhall have Church-work enough, to make Images, Chalices, and Crucifixes, and Vaſes, and ſuch like Things.

Mr. Belwood. If you will ask Mr. Prance any Queſtions, pray do.

Fenwick. My Lord, I am certain of this, that he never ſaw me at Mr. Ireland's Chamber, in that Company, nor did I ever ſpeak of any ſuch Thing before him.

Mr. Prance. Mr. Ireland and he have been ſitting together whole Hours, and conſulting about ſome Concern or other, Miſchief, no doubt. My Lord, I went to Mr. Fenwick's Chamber, after my Ghoſtly Father was dead.

L. C. J. What was his Name?

Mr. Prance. Father James. And he importuned me to come to Confeſſion to him; I told him, I was not yet very well ſatisfied who I ſhould go to, to be my Ghoſtly Father.

Fenwick. When was this, Mr. Prance?

Mr. Prance. Before Michaelmas, about a Week or Eight Days.

L. C. J. Did not you know him, Mr. Fenwick?

Fenwick. Who, Father James? yes, very well, and I know Mr. Prance, but not upon that Account.

Mr. Prance. And I brought you a Bell home, for the Altar, at the ſame Time.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Who was it importuned you to have him for your Confeſſor?

Mr. Prance. It was Mr. Fenwick; and I told him, when I did come to Confeſſion, I would come to him. And he injoined me, once or twice, to ſay nothing of what I heard ſaid.

L. C. J. If Harcourt have any Queſtions to ask him, let him.

Harcourt. Can you ſay that ever I ſpoke to you about any ſuch Buſineſs?

Mr. Prance. Yes, as ſure as I ſtand in this Place, and you in that. And one Thompſon came with you, when you paid me for four Candleſticks.

L. C. J. Do you know Mr. Thompſon?

Harcourt. Yes, I do.

L. C. J. Had you any Candleſticks from Mr. Prance?

Harcourt. I had, a great while ago.

Mr. Prance. He paid me 44 l. that Time for them.

Mr. Recorder. Call Mr. Bedlow. Who was Sworn.

Sir Cr. Levins. What can you ſay to any of the Priſoners at the Bar?

L. C. J. What can you ſay, as to Mr. Whitebread and Mr. Fenwick?

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, I do not queſtion, but Mr. Whitebread and Mr. Fenwick will object againſt me, my refuſing to give in Evidence againſt them at the former Trial, but I think that there are ſome upon your honourable Bench, that can make my Apology for not giving in all my Evidence againſt them then; for it was not convenient, becauſe it would have ſtopt a Deſign I was then upon, and could not get off from, that was about Mr. Reading, whom I was then treating with, for Mr. Whitebread and Mr. Fenwick, as well as the Lords in the Tower, and he told me, that he would depend upon my Confidence and Juſtice as to the Lords, according as I did deal with theſe Men; if I brought them off, he would believe, and the Lords in the Tower would believe that I would bring them off too. So that I did make an Apology then in the Court, that I could not ſafely ſay all that I had to ſay at that Time. Some of the Juſtices, I believe, do remember it, and in that which I did give in againſt them, I did not ſay all, nor half, that I could have ſaid.

Whitebread. Did you ſay any thing of that at the laſt Trial?

Mr. Bedlow. I will anſwer that Matter to the Court, but 'tis the Meaſure they always take to intrap the Witneſſes; for now I am out of a Country that will give me an Indulgence and Diſpenſation to ſpeak exactly to a Day, or an Hour, as their St. Omer's Witneſſes have.

L. C. J. But what ſay you now to them?

Mr. Bedlow. I did then ſay, that I did ſee Mr. Whitebread, and he hath been in ſeveral Conſultations for the carrying on of the Plot; but then I did it with a Caution, that I never heard of Mr. Whitebread, that he was ſo very much concerned; and indeed I had no Reaſon to ſay ſo, becauſe I heard him my ſelf, and could not well ſpeak from the Hear-ſay of another. And as for Mr. Fenwick, I never heard him give in any Anſwer, but I have ſeen Fenwick at the Conſult there.

L. C. J. Have they ever told you any thing concerning the killing of the King?

Mr. Bedlow. Whitebread told Coleman, at Mr. Harcourt's Chamber, the Manner of ſending the four Ruffians to Windſor, about September.

Harcourt. I never ſaw him twice in all my Life, before.

Mr. Belwood. Do you know of any Reward thoſe Ruffians were to have?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, I ſaw Harcourt take the Money out of a Cabinet, I think it was Fourſcore, or One Hundred Pounds; the Summ I don't well remember. Harcourt paid them the Money, by Mr. Coleman's Order, and gave the Meſſenger a Guinea from Mr. Coleman, to drink his Health. Mr. Coleman was gone a little before I came in, and ſo I could not know that Coleman gave it, but he ſaid ſo.

Sir Cr. Levins. What was Pickering and Grove to have?

Mr. Bedlow. Grove was to have 1500 l. and a Promiſe of the Favour of the Lords: 1500 l. was the Sum appointed at Mr. Harcourt's Chamber, and doubtleſs in ſeveral other Places, but there I heard it from Mr. Whitebread, and Pritchard, and Le Faire, and Kaines; and Pickering was to have a Number of Maſſes, I can't tell exactly how many, but they were ſo many, as at 12 d. a Maſs would amount to be equal to Mr. Grove.

Mr. Belwood. Pray, Sir, what was that for?

Mr. Bedlow. For killing the King. But Pickering had been diſciplined before, and received a Check from the Superiors, becauſe he had been negligent, and ſlipt many Opportunities. One Time the Flint of his Piſtol was looſe, another Time there was no Powder in the Pan, another Time, he had Charged with all Bullets, and no Powder.

L. C. J. Did you ſee Harcourt deliver the Guinea, for the Expedition of the Windſor Buſineſs?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, my Lord, as from Coleman, to drink his Health.

Mr. Belwood. Pray, was either Whitebread or Fenwick knowing of the Agreement, when it was ſpoken of?

Mr. Bedlow. I have ſeen Fenwick at Harcourt's and Whitebread's Chamber, when it was ſpoken of; they were all of one Opinion, they had decreed it. I never ſaw Whitebread but twice at Harcourt's Chamber, where one time was Harcorrt himſelf, at another time was Pritchard, and Le Faire, and others; at which Time Sir George Wakeman's Buſineſs was ſpoken of, and becauſe he would not accept the 10000 l. 15000 l. was agreed to be given him; and upon Sir George's Trial, I ſhall let you know where he had the Money too, but I deſire to be excuſed at preſent. I ſhall ſpeak it to Morrow.

L. C. J. What did they conſult there?

Mr. Bedlow. They were Conſulting how it ſhould be done, and what ſhould be done, if they did not do it. Then Ireland propoſed, that the moſt certain Way was to do it at his Morning-Walks in New-Market; Fenwick was to go, and with him went Conyers; I heard Seven or Eight of them were to go.

L. C. Baron Montague. What ſay you to Turner?

Mr. Bedlow. Of Mr. Turner, I know nothing, but what I have heard others ſay.

L. C. Bar. What ſay you to Gavan?

Mr. Bedlow. I know nothing of him, but only I have heard Mr. Harcourt ſay he hath been a great Manager of this Buſineſs.

L. C. J. That is nothing to the Purpoſe, what others ſay.

Mr. Bedlow. Mr. Harcourt is no Stranger to my bringing of Pacquets and Portmantles over to him, from Beyond the Seas.

Harcourt. He never brought but one in all his Life-time.

Mr. Bedlow. What, Did I never bring but one Pacquet? Have not I brought divers, and divers Portmantles?

Harcourt. You never brought a Portmantle in your Life.

Mr. Bedlow. I have brought divers.

Harcourt. You know I never ſaw you but twice in my Life, before to Day, and when I met with you at the Privy-Council.

Mr. Bedlow.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, the Trials have been ſo put off, that I could never get all my Witneſſes together, but I have Seven or Eight of my Witneſſes that are out of Town, that would make this very clear. My Lord, there was never a Pacquet of Letters that I brought over to Mr. Harccurt, but did contain in it a Deſign of the Subverſion of the Government; and it muſt be more than two Pacquets that I have brought over; for I have brought Letters from Watton, and Letters from St. Omers, and Letters from Bruges, and from Paris, and from Valledolid and Sallamanca; and all theſe Letters contained in them the Management of this Plot, how far they had proceeded beyond Sea, and Anſwers how far they had proceeded in England, from him, and to them, to and again, from Time to Time, in carrying on the Deſign of Subverting the Government, and altering the Religion; wherein was given an Account of the Army and Forces that were to be raiſed, both Here, and Beyond Sea; what Contributions were made, or expected, at Home, or Abroad, all was lodged in Mr. Harcourt's Hands, at leaſtwiſe an Account of the greateſt part. And I have been ſent to Mr. Langhorne with Papers from Harcourt, about this Affair, to Regiſter them; and of that I ſhall give you an Account, upon Mr. Langhorne's Trial.

L. C. J. Well now ask him what you will.

Whitebread. Sir, I deſire to ask you one Queſtion.

Mr. Bedlow. I deſire it may be asked the Court.

Whitebread. I deſire to ask him whether he was a Lieutenant in Flanders or no?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, I was.

Whitebread. Of Horſe or Foot?

Mr. Bedlow. Of Foot.

Whitebread. Take notice, there is no ſuch Officer of Foot in all Flanders.

Mr. Bedlow. I was then in the Regiment of the Prince of Freizland.

Whitebread. There are no Lieutenants in all the Flanders Companies, only Captains and Alfara's.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, I had a Commiſſion, and I have a Commiſſion to be ſo, and I deſire I may ſend for it.

L. C. J. It is no very material Thing, as ſoon as it comes, they ſhall ſee your Commiſſion.

Harcourt. You ſay you have had Papers from me, and been very familiar with me; Pray how can this be, when, as I did declare before the Lords in Council, that was the third Time I ever ſaw your Face? The firſt Time he came to me, he brought Letters from Dunkirk, five Years ago; when I opened them, I found them directed to other Perſons, and to them I ſent them, my Name being only uſed in the outſide Cover; and it ſeems upon that Confidence that he had in me at that time, not long after, he came to my Chamber, and told me, He had lately become a Roman Catholick, and by that means had loſt his Friends, and that he then was in Want, and, unleſs I did aſſiſt him, it would be very hard with him; tho' his Father diſſerted him, yet he had ſome Friends, whom he expected would do ſomething for him, and then I will repay you.

L. C. J. When was this?

Harcourt. The ſecond Time that I ever ſaw him in all my Life, and this is four Years ſince. Then ſaid I, What will ſerve your Turn? He told me, 20*s.* which I lent to him; and I never ſaw his Face afterwards, till I met him at the Privy-Council; and therefore, how ſhould a Man believe a Word he ſays?

L. C. J. But how ſhall a Man know, that what you ſay is true?

Mr. Bedlow. I will make it appear, at the Trial of the Lords, that I ſent to him for 10 l. and had it, I cannot now prove it, without bringing ſome Witneſſes that I have behind a Curtain, and I will not diſcover them till then, they ſhall not know who they are.

Mr. Juſt. Windham. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, I have not ſaid the One hundredth Part of what I can ſay, honeſtly, and like a Chriſtian, of Mr. Harcourt.

Harcourt. You may ſay what you will, but you won't ſpeak Truth.

Mr. Bedlow. Mr. Harcourt went with me to Mr. Coleman's, when I carried over the Conſult. There was the greateſt part of the Deſign, in that which I was to carry over to St. Omers, and that Conſult did I fetch from Mr. Coleman, and Mr. Harcourt was with me, and I had Thanks from Mr. Coleman for my Fidelity in the Buſineſs, and Expedition in bringing and carrying the Pacquets. I was recommended to my Lord Arundel, by Mr. Harcourt, and was promiſed, by his Lordſhip, all the Friendſhip and Favour imaginable, when the Times were turned.

L. C. J. Why here, you ſee, he names ſeveral Places, and Times, wherein he met with you.

Harcourt. Not one Word of all this is true.

Mr. Bedlow. I deſire you to ask Mr. Harcourt, my Lord, Whether he was not, in Auguſt, or September laſt, in Company with me and Le Faire?

Harcourt. Le Faire! I know no Le Faire.

Mr. Bedlow. Le Fevre, then.

Harcourt. Le Fevre, I believe I did ſee at that Time, but not ſince.

Mr. Bedlow. Pritchard did recommend the Care of me to him.

L. C. J. There, he names another Time, when you and Pritchard were there together.

Mr. Bedlow. Pritchard was my Confident, and my great Friend, and told them, This is a Perſon whoſe Fidelity you have tryed, in carrying over ſuch and ſuch Letters, and therefore you may very well truſt him, and take care of him: And ſo he recommended me, as one that was really fit to underſtand the Bottom of the Deſign. And Pritchard did tell me, before them, that the King's Death was intended as a part of it; and he ſent again another Time to Mr. Harcourt, but it was about no material Buſineſs; and Harcourt gave a Bill of Exchange to carry to what Citizen I don't know, but to Sir George Wakeman, to have 2000 l. by whoſe Orders, as they ſaid, your Lordſhip ſhall know upon his Trial, but I ſaw Harcourt give him the Bill of Exchange.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Who gave the Bill?

Mr. Bedlow. It was Harcourt, my Lord.

Harcourt. Who was by, when this Bill was given?

Mr. Bedlow. Kaines, and Sir William Anderſon.

Harcourt. How was this Bill drawn?

Mr. Bedlow. It was drawn upon a Citizen, and left in your Hands.

Harcourt. I deſire he may name the Citizen, and, if he can, make it out; if he do, it will appear upon the Merchants Books.

Mr. Bedlow. Sir George Wakeman received a Bill of Exchange from Mr. Harcourt, and he was told, Here is a Bill of Exchange for 2000 l. as part of a greater greater Summ; to which Sir George Wakeman answered, That 15000 l. was a small Reward for the settling of Religion, and preserving of the Three Kingdoms from Ruin; but if it were not for such a Woman, he would never undertake it, but for her he would do any thing. And after he had given Sir George Wakeman the Bill, Sir George Wakeman opened it, and read it, but I did not read the Name that was to it.

Fenwick. My Lord, it seems not sufficient Proof, that he says, he saw a Bill of Exchange, unless he says from whom, and to whom, that it may be proved by the Books, or otherwise.

L. C. J. You say well, Mr. Fenwick, if so be he had been the Person concerned in the Bill, that he were either one that drew it, or was to receive the Money, then it were strange that he should not know the Parties to it; but I must tell you, where he was not one nor the other, it was a collateral Matter. Do People take notice of every particular Bill of Exchange that they see, which they are neither to pay nor receive?

Fenwick. But what Reason does he give your Lordship, or the Jury, to believe that there was such a Bill, unless he does produce either the Bill, or the Person that paid it?

Mr. Bedlow. I did only see the Bill out of Mr. Harcourt's Hand, but it was read there only by Sir George Wakeman.

L. C. J. Is it a Pin matter, whether there was such a Bill or no, or whether he had mentioned it or no?

Fenwick. But seeing he hath mentioned it, I say there is nothing of Proof of it, but only his bare Word.

L. C. J. Yes, there is his Oath.

Sir Cr. Levins. And I desire the Jury to take notice how unreasonable a Thing it is that you ask. You would have Mr. Bedlow produce the Bill of Exchange, that was given to Sir George Wakeman to receive Money.

Mr. Bedlow. I have only one Word more. Sir George Wakeman received the Bill of Exchange from Mr. Harcourt, read it himself, folded it up, and went and received the Money; and that the Court will be pleased to see my Commission, for now I have it here.

Which was read, by my Lord Chief Justice North, and several others.

Sir Cr. Levins. We have only this one Matter to trouble your Lordship and the Jury with. You perceive by the Evidence that hath been given, that the main Matter begins at the Consult of the 24th of April, when the Consult was; now to fortify this Evidence, we are now to produce a Letter, that was written from one Petre, a St. Omers Jesuit, wherein is mention made, that he was to give Notice, Mr. Whitebread had appointed a general Meeting, just at that Time, in London, at which they were to consult of very great Matters; and they were to be very private in their coming to, and appearing about the Town. And this Letter was taken amongst Mr. Harcourt's Papers, and to prove it, we call Sir Thomas Doleman. Who was Sworn.

Sir Cr. Levins. Pray what can you say where this Letter was found?

Sir Thomas Doleman. It was found amongst Mr. Harcourt's Papers, in a Bag of his Papers that was committed to my Care to search.

L. C. J. Can you tell what Day you found it?

Sir Thomas Doleman. It was a matter of six or seven Days after Mr. Oates had given his Information of this Plot to the Council.

Harcourt. What Paper is it?

Mr. Just. Atkins. Hear it first.

L. C. J. It is a Letter found amongst your Papers.

Harcourt. Who is it from?

L. C. J. It is from one Mr. Petre, do you know such a one?

Cl. of the Cr. It is subscribed, E. P.

Harcourt. Yes, my Lord, I do; I will deny nothing of the Truth.

Then the Letter was read, in hæc verba.

Honoured Dear Sir.

I Have but Time to convey these following Particulars to you. First I am to give you notice, that it hath seem'd fitting to our Master Consult, Prov. &c. to fix the 21st of April next, Stilo veteri, for the Meeting, at London, of our Congregation; on which Day, all those that have a Suffrage, are to be present there, that they may be ready to give a Beginning to the same on the 24th, which is the next Day after St. George's Day: You are warned to have jus suffragii, and therefore, if your Occasions should not permit you to be present, you are to signify as much, to the end, others, in their Ranks, be ordered to supply your Absence. Every one is minded also, not to hasten to London long before the Time appointed, nor to appear much about the Town, till the Meeting be over, lest Occasion should be given to suspect the Design. Finally, Secrecy, as to the Time and Place, is much recommended to all those that receive Summons, as it will appear of its own Nature necessary.

Tertio pro Domino Solono Disco.
Benefact. Prov. Lunensis.

I am straitned for Time, that I can only assure you, I shall be much glad of obliging you any ways.

SIR,
Your Servant,
Edward Petre.

L. C. J. Come, now, Mr. Harcourt, will you expound this Letter to me, that speaks of this Meeting and Privacy?

Harcourt. Yes, my Lord, tho' it was not my Letter, yet I will tell you what the Meaning of it was. That Letter was writ to one, who had Jus Suffragii, a Right to come and vote in our Congregation, which, according to the Constitution and Orders of our Society, is within the Compass of three Years, where they meet about the particular Affairs of the Society.

L. C. J. What was it about?

Harcourt. It was about choosing an Officer; choosing a Procurator to send to Rome; that was the chief Point: And Secrecy was a Thing that was recommended to every one, as it was fit it should be, we living in a Country, where every one's Eye was upon us, and we were an Eye-sore to them, we ought to be cautious of meeting in such Numbers, as might give an Offence, and this was the only Thing, indeed.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Harcourt, you say well, but we are not to be altogether Disciples of yours, so as to have no Sense of our own, and to be impos'd upon so weakly as this. Here is the Thing, says the Letter, I would not have you come too soon to London, nor appear too much in publick, for fear of discovering a Design, which requires Secrecy in its own Nature. What, was that your Design, of choosing a Proa Procurator? Tell me but one Thing that can bear the Name of a Deſign, which muſt have that Secrecy in it, that People muſt not appear much about Town, and that in its own Nature requires ſuch a Thing.

Whitebread. My Lord, the Thing it ſelf is Evident, what was the Deſign.

L. C. J. Come, Mr. Whitebread, you will do it better.

Whitebread. It is evident it was a Deſign to chooſe an Officer.

L. C. J. Why, good Mr. Whitebread, do any write after that manner? Were you to write to any one, or ask the Jury, if they were to chooſe ſome Collector for the Receipt of ſome charitable Money that ſhould be employed for the Relief of Proteſtants in France: Do you think any Man would ſay, Do not appear much in London before-hand, nor come too ſoon, for fear of diſcovering the Deſign, which in its own Nature requires Secrecy: Will this endure the Name of a Deſign?

Whitebread. Firſt, it is a very hard Thing to bring ſo many Mens Lives in Danger, meerly upon the Interpretation of a Word, which may as properly ſignify one thing as another. Is it not proper for me to ſay, I have a Deſign to Dine with ſuch a Man, to morrow, or the like?

L. C. J. 'Tis true now, but hearken ———

Whitebread. But that was the Thing deſigned, to have a Congregation for the chooſing of an Officer, and it was, I think, very properly ſaid, and that it ſhould be kept ſecret, was as prudential a Thing as poſſibly could be. Was it not proper here, becauſe our Profeſſion was not publickly permitted in this Kingdom; and therefore that was the Reaſon, why Secrecy was injoin'd? And this, upon my Salvation, was all that ever was intended or thought.

L. C. J. North. This now is the Interpretation you put upon the Letter, but we underſtand by the Witneſſes what was done at that Meeting.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Whitebread, this Letter without Queſtion, hath been well ſtudied by you all; and it requires it mightily.

Whitebread. It needs none.

L. C. J. This is not the natural Expoſition of the Words of the Letter, that you give, but a forced one; for firſt, there is a difference between ſaying, I do deſign to Dine to Day, tho' it be a uſual matter, but it is another Thing, when I call a Thing by the Name of a Deſign, accompanied with a requiring of Secrecy in its own Nature, and when I give Advice, that they muſt not appear in Town too ſoon, nor too much about the Town, for fear of diſcovering the Deſign, which in its own Nature requires Secrecy: Muſt all this amount but to the chooſing of an Officer? You'll never make one Papiſt of all this Company, if you make no better Work of it.

Whitebread. My Lord, I humbly deſire your Lordſhip would not ſtrain a Word which may be well enough ſaid, whether it be properly ſaid or no.

L. C. J. 'Tis not one Word alone, but 'tis the whole Senſe.

Whitebread. 'Tis evident, there was juſt Cauſe of Secrecy, becauſe of our Profeſſion.

L. C. J. Mr. Whitebread, 'Tis not one Word that is relied upon, for the Buſineſs is perſued. 'Tis not ſaid, Pray meet at ſuch a Time, but, Be careful you do not diſcover the Deſign; if it had been only ſaid ſo, it would have been a Strain, to have made this Conſtruction of a ſingle Word, to make this that Deſign, but as it is here, we make no ſuch Conſtruction; it had been hard indeed to put that Meaning upon it as you do, even then, for 'tis ſeldom ſo uſed, for no Man writes after that manner; but when it follows in a continued Senſe of ſo many Lines, be ſure you meet on the 24th of April, the Day after St. George's Day, but come not too ſoon to Town, nor appear too much about the Town, for fear of diſcovering the Deſign, which you know in its own Nature does require Secrecy: Can we make any ſuch Interpretation of it? If you have no better Arguments than theſe, you muſt have People loſe their Underſtandings, or have a very blind Obedience to yours, or it will never down. Ay; Come, Mr. Gavan, how do you ſay is the Meaning of this?

Gavan. For my part, I'll aſſure your Lordſhip, I was not there, but this is known to all the Chriſtian World, that there is ſuch a Meeting in Spain, France, Germany, &c. that wherever the Jeſuits are, once in three Years they have a Meeting among themſelves, for the ſettling of their Affairs. Indeed the Words have given your Lordſhip an occaſion to raiſe a Difficulty, what the Word Deſign ſhould mean? Which I do give this Anſwer to: Your Lordſhip's Difficulty is, That the Word Deſign, here, ſhould not be made uſe of to ſend one poor Jeſuit to Rome. My Lord, do but mark the End of the Congregation, and you will ſay to us, that we might well uſe that Word, becauſe the Word may import ſome great Buſineſs of Concernment; now what Buſineſs of greater Concernment for poor religious Men to meet together about, than thoſe Things that may promote their better State in another World, and the Regulation of what is amiſs in their Order. My Lord, upon my Conſcience and Salvation, this was the End of the Congregation, to meet, and ſee what is amiſs in their Order, who do their Duties, and who not, who are irregular in their Offices, and whoſe Office is vacant, and to be ſupplied.

L. C. J. But muſt no body come to Town, nor appear too much about the Town for this?

Gavan. Therefore, my Lord, as to the Word Deſign, it concerning the whole ſpiritual Good of the whole Body of the Engliſh Jeſuits, it might well be uſed for the Conſultation of that Body, about all their Good, Temporal and Spiritual, which was all concerned in it.

L. C. J. Theſe are a many Words, but to no Purpoſe.

Gavan. Now, my Lord, for the ſecond Thing that you object, your Lordſhip remembers very well, that the Continuation of the Senſe in ſo many Lines made the Thing the more ſuſpicious, that more was intended by it than ſo: Now to this I ſhall be able to anſwer, if there can be given a particular Reaſon why we ſhould add that Word of Secrecy, to the other of Deſign, having anſwered to the one Part, we now give an Anſwer to the other, and ſo to the whole. Now, my Lord, becauſe of the Time, the Parliament was then Sitting, and that we might not offend the King and all Civil Magiſtrates (whom we honour from our Hearts and Souls) that Word was uſed that it might be kept ſecret.

L. C. J. It was not out of Love to the Parliament, it was the Nature of the Thing required it, nor was it out of Fear you had of them. I did never find, tho' you are as good at it as ever any I met with (for I never met with a Prieſt that had much more Underſtanding) but really you do not anſwer me. You are ſo far from Scholars, and Arguing like ſuch, that you do not maintain the Matter ter with common and rational Underſtanding, but only heap up ſo many vain Words (like a Rope of Sand put together) which hath no natural Coherence, for you cannot poſſibly make this reaſonable, that People ſhould have ſo much Caution, that they ſhould not come too long to Town before-hand.

Gavan. Not to be taken Notice of.

L. C. J. Not to appear in Town when they come.

Gavan. Not to be taken Notice of.

L. C. J. I ſay ſo, you cannot tell why all theſe Cautions ſhould be uſed, meerly for chooſing an Officer.

Gavan. My Lord, our Lives depended upon it, if we were taken, being ſuch Men as we are.

L. C. J. You can make nothing of it, and you will find it an hard Task to Anſwer it; for if half the Evidence that hath been given, were not given, yet this Letter of your own, which cannot be denied, is an unanſwerable Proof. It does monſtrouſly confirm Mr. Oates's Teſtimony to be undeniable, as to the Meeting at the Conſult; for he, four or five Days before-hand, comes and tells the Council, the very Day which, five or ſix Days after, this Letter makes good, which is found in Harcourt's Cuſtody. Then there was a Conſultation upon the Day, the very Day that Mr. Oates ſays, and what he calls a Conſultation, your own Letter ſays is a Deſign.

Gavan. It was a Deſign of a Congregation.

L. C. J. What Senſe is there in that? Will any Man in England, or did any Man in England ever ſay, Take heed of diſcovering our Deſign of going to Church, or chooſing a Collector?

Gavan. There is Reaſon for the one, and Reaſon for the other too.

L. C. J. I would appeal to your ſelves, and all here preſent, what the natural Import of ſuch a Letter is, whether it does not carry a Matter more than ordinary, whether its natural Intendment doth not look at that? And the next Thing is this; Does any Man write plainer than this, when they write of a Thing that is of ſuch a Nature? Is not the Danger too great to hazard that Fact, which they call the Nature of the Thing, to intruſt it in a Letter? Is it not vain to put that in a Letter, in Words at length, which they, to whom it is writ, know what the Thing means? And if it ſhould be further known than they would have it, the Thing could never be done: And if you conſider the Perſon that writes, a Jeſuit, or a Prieſt; Are Prieſts ever plain? And will you expect Plainneſs here, when, in Things of Ten thouſand times leſs Moment, they don't write plainer? Is it not known, you have not a Proſelite, that you do not keep under Obligations as cloſe as your Confeſſions are? Have you not taken here, as it is ſworn, a Sacrament of Secrecy? Is there a Woman that you Convert, but in the dark? Or a Papiſt made, out of a Prieſt's Hole? Are not all your Deeds underground? and do you work with any Light, but that of a Dark-Lanthorn? This is plain, unleſs you give a better Anſwer to this Letter, the Letter will hang about your Necks.

L. C. J. North. Mr. Oates will tell you what the Deſign was.

Mr. Juſt. Ellis. He can tell you what it was.

L. C. J. The Letter ſpeaks it ſelf.

Dr. Oates. Mr. Gavan and they, now, tell your Lordſhip what this Conſult was for, but they deny'd this Conſult at firſt, when there was but one Man to juſtify it. I juſtified it before Mr. Fenwick, who denied it at the Council-Board, though now they pawn their Salvation upon the Juſtification of it.

Fenwick. I never denied that there.

L. C. J. Come, have they any thing to ſay for themſelves?

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, whereas, as Mr. Gavan ſays, that in Obedience to the King and Parliament they would have their Conſultations ſecret, and that they always deſired to conceal themſelves then; the Time of Seſſions of Parliament was the only Time that I and others have been employed to fetch over more Jeſuits than at any other particular Time.

Dr. Oates. And there are more of them then, in the Court of Requeſts, and in the Lobbies, barefaced, and threatning the Proteſtants, than at any other Time.

Mr. Bedlow. We uſed to fetch them againſt the Parliament always; they were in leſs Danger then, than at other Times.

L. C. J. You could give a very good Interpretation of the Letter, I ſuppoſe, that Mr. Dugdale ſpeaks of, that came from Whitebread, That he ſhould be ſure to entertain ſuch as were hardy, ſtout Fellows: I ſuppoſe you can make all this to ſignify nothing more than a Deſign for a Game at Cudgels.

Sir Cr. Levins. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, we muſt deſire that one Letter more may be read. Your Lordſhip hath been told of Commiſſions for raiſing an Army, here is a touch of them mentioned in this Letter, found amongſt Mr. Harcourt's Letters too.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Harcourt, you had beſt attend, here is another Letter found amongſt your Papers, concerning ſome Commiſſions. You look ill to your Letters; you are to blame, indeed, Mr. Harcourt.

Sir Cr. Levins. Pray, Sir Thomas Doleman, look upon that Paper, and tell us how you came by it.

Sir Tho. Doleman. This Letter in my Hand I found amongſt Mr. Harcourt's Papers, about ſome two Days after I found that other that was read before. Having heard Mr. Oates give in his Information to the Council, That there were ſeveral Commiſſions given out to ſeveral Perſons, and finding ſome doubtful Clauſes and Expreſſions in the Letter, I did preſent this Letter to the Council, and made a Mark upon it, Enquire what is meant by the Word Patents.

L. C. J. Pray let it be read, becauſe we ſhall deſire a little more of their Interpretation.

Cl. of the Cr. It is Signed, Chriſtopher Anderton, Hilton, February the 5th 167⅞.

Dr. Oates. Hilton, that is Rome.

L. C. J. Mr. Harcourt, you underſtand, that by Hilton, is meant Rome?

Harcourt. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. C. J. Well, then go on, and read it.

Cl. of the Cr. Worthy Sir, I know not from whence it proceeds, but I perceive that both your Letters and mine have bad Fortune by the way, for my Correſpondents with you complain, they hear not from me, whereas I write conſtantly intire Pacquets; and ſince the Bills I received from your ſelf, for Sir William Goring, and for Mr. Ireland, from Mr. Shelly, I have not had one Letter, but what I received this Week, which, in part, made recompence for the former, for it brought me three of yours, and one of Mr. Ireland's, for which I render you many humble Thanks, and acknowledge the Fifteen Pounds from my Lord Caſtlemain, tho' Mr. Ireland made no mention of it in his. We are all here very glad of the Promotion of Mr. Thomas Harcourt. When I writ

that

that the Patents were ſent, altho' I gueſs for whom they were, yet I knew not for certain, becauſe our Patrons do not uſe to diſcover things or reſolutions till they know they have effect. And therefore in theſe kind of Matters I dare not be too haſty, leſt ſome might ſay, A Fool's Bolt is ſoon ſhot.

L. C. J. What is the meaning of theſe Patents?

Fenwick. This Gentleman will tell you, my Lord

Whitebread. My Lord, they were the Patent for my being Provincial.

L. C. J. How many Patents had you?

Whitebread. But one, my Lord.

L. C. J. Is that Patents?

Whitebread. Literæ Patentes.

L. C. J. Is it Patent or Patents?

Cl. of Cr. Patents.

L. C. J. Read thoſe words again.

Cl. of Cr. We are all here very glad at the promotion of Mr. Tho. Harcourt, when I writ that the Patents were ſent, altho' I gueſs for whom they were, yet I knew not for certain, becauſe our Patrons do not uſe to diſcover things or reſolutions, till they know they have effect.

L. C. J. Now you have not interpreted well this neither.

Sir Cr. Levins. It is ſaid, I knew not for certain who (they) were for; but to make it clear, I would deſire Mr. Whitebread to anſwer me one Queſtion, How long is it, Sir, ſince you were made Provincial?

Whitebread. The 14th of January was Twelvemonth.

Sir Cr. Levins. And this was dated the 5th of February, which was after your Commiſſion.

Whitebread. That may be, and they not know till then.

L. C. J. And ſo you expound thoſe latter words of the Letter, That the Reſolution of making you Provincial was not diſcovered till the Effect was known.

Whitebread. Becauſe it is not known, whether the Perſon that is nominated might not be excepted againſt: and it is Literæ Patentes.

L. C. J. But here is but one Perſon to anſwer the word Patents, and there ſhould be more than one Man.

Whitebread. Every Patent is called Literæ Patentes, tho' it be but for one Perſon.

Mr. Recorder. They were in great doubt that you would refuſe the Place, I warrant.

Dr. Oates. He is bound on pain of Damnation not to diſobey his Superiours, if they chuſe him to a Place, he muſt take it upon him.

Whitebread. It is not the firſt, ſecond, or hundreth time that one hath been appointed by the Superiour to a Place, and hath refuſed it; and if I had known the hundredth part of what I do now, of the Trouble of the Place, I would never have accepted it.

Mr. Recorder. Ay, if you had known the difficulty of this Deſign, you would never have ingaged in it, eſpecially if you had known what is come to paſs.

Whitebread. No, Sir, I never had a Hand in any ſuch thing in all my Life: this is coram Deo that I now ſpeak, and as I am to appear before the great Tribunal at the Day of Judgment, I know nothing of all this Matter.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, theſe Patents, of which this Letter makes mention, a great many of them came down in the months of April and May before.

L. C. J. Methinks he interprets them plainer than you do.

L. C. Baron. Now what have you to ſay every one of you for your ſelves, make your Defence?

L. C. J. Mr. Whitebread, do you begin.

Dr. Oates. While the Priſoner's Evidence is calling in, I deſire that my Witneſſes may be ſworn.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Mr. Oates, be quiet, there is no need of it yet, till they have made their Defence.

L. C. J. But ſend for them, that they may be ready.

Whitebread. My Lord, that which I have to ſay for my ſelf is this, I thank God, my Lord, I am not afraid of Death; but I ſhould be very loth to die unjuſtly, and I hope your Lordſhip will conſider, that every Man's Blood is dear to him, and is concerned for his own Life to preſerve it, he ought to be allowed Liberty and Freedom to preſerve himſelf as much as he can. Life is a thing not to be thrown away, but charily to be lookt after, and that there is ſuch a thing as taking away Mens Lives by Perjury, as well as by a Knife or Piſtol, is without contradiction. Now whoever comes againſt a Man for his Life, I ſuppoſe he is to be looked upon not only by the Priſoner, but alſo by the Jury and the Court, that he ought to be Probus Teſtis, and a Man fit to be admitted to be a Witneſs. Now I have ſomething to offer, That Mr. Oates is not any ſuch Perſon. Your Lordſhip was pleaſed to ſay, That he was the Perſon who proved the Deſign mentioned in the Letter that was read. Now I hope your Lordſhip will give me leave (and I hope I may do it without offence to this Court) to ſay that he is perjured in what he ſays.

L. C. J. You mean that his Evidence is falſe, you may do it if you can.

Whitebread. He ſays he came over hither, and was here preſent the 24th of April with me, and that I did appoint him to do ſuch and ſuch things, and diſcovered the whole Buſineſs to him. Now I deſire your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to conſider whether this were probable, and whether I had not been a very much miſtaken Man all this while to truſt a Man with ſuch a Buſineſs, and whether I ought not rather to be ſent to Bedlam than Newgate, for truſting ſuch a Man as he, whom by his own confeſſion I never ſaw till that time. 'Tis not rational that a Man would truſt him; and then, my Lord, that this Buſineſs ſhould be diſcovered to him, a Man that depended wholly upon us to live, and had no Livelihood but what he had from us, who maintained him at St. Omers long, as well as the beſt Man in the Houſe.

L. C. J. Did you do it?

Whitebread. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. You ſhould conſider how in that you anſwer your ſelf.

Whitebread. I, that is, when I came to the Office, and I and my Predeceſſors. When I was Superiour I found him not a fit Man for that Purpoſe and Deſign he pretended to. He was very zealous to be entertained amongſt us, and therefore I deſired him to abſent himſelf.

L. C. J. Why was he not fit to be employed among you?

Whitebread. For ſeveral Reaſons of our own: Firſt of all it was doubtful, whether he was a good Catholick: for he had oftentimes maintained ſeveral Propoſitions that were not ſoundly Catholick: and then, ſecondly, he led a very idle Life,

Life, and he was not found a Man we were obliged to accept of, and therefore we desired him to retire. And to that purpose we furnished him, gave him a good Suit of Cloaths, and a Periwig, and four Pounds in his Purse, and he promised me to pay me again when he had sold his Library, which he said he had a very good one in London, but he never did. But that I should be so strangely overseen and mad, as at the first sight of such a Man as this, to trust him with such a great Intrigue as this was, and to write in such a plain strange Manner, and send by Post to Mr. Dugdale, as your Lordship did and justly might wonder at, had been a Madness. It was much that any Man would write so plain of such a thing. But then my Lord, the chief thing is this, That I hope your Lordship will give us leave to produce our Witnesses to prove, that he was not from St. Omers from the 10th of December till the 23d. of June following, and never lay out of the House but one Night from December till June.

L. C. J. Name your Witnesses.

Whitebread. I desire first Mr. Hilsley may be called.

L. C. J. Call him; but I'll tell you what is strange, You say it is wonderful that you should trust a Man you had so little Opinion of his Abilities or Fidelity; but I wonder that you should maintain him after that.

Whitebread. No, my Lord, we did not.

L. C. J. You say you did.

Whitebread. No, my Lord, he pretends he was here in England sent over by us, but we will prove he was not.

L. C. J. But you maintained him abroad?

Whitebread. That was before?

L. C. J. Is it so great a wonder that you should take into your Confidence and Consultation that Man, whom for a considerable time before you had maintained abroad?

Whitebread. But, my Lord, I suppose there is some difference between charitable Acts to a Man in Want and a Scholar, and trusting him with such an Intrigue as this.

Fenwick. Pray my Lord, be pleased to take notice, that this Man's Evidence all along is, that he saw such and such Letters from such and such Persons. They have no Evidence but just that they saw such and such Letters, and how is it possible that a Man who was turned away from St. Omers for his Misdemeanors, that I should shew him all my Letters? Now, my Lord, I have had a thousand Letters taken from me, not any of these Letters had any thing of Treason in them, or solliciting of Persons to come into England, let the Letters be produced, and then your Lordship will see what is in them. All the Evidence that is given, comes but to this; there is but saying and swearing. I defie them all to give one probable Reason to satisfie any reasonable uninterested Man's Judgment how this could be.

L. C. Baron. There can be no Reason given why you should sign an Instrument to kill the King.

L. C. J. You say there is nothing but saying and swearing, but you do not consider what you say in that Matter. All the Evidence and all the Testimony in all Trials is by swearing. A Man comes and swears that he saw such a Bond sealed, or heard such words spoken, this is saying and swearing, but it is that Proof that we go by, and by which all Mens Lives and Fortunes are to be determined. But then say you, 'tis wonderful, that since they say they saw such and such Letters, they should not produce them; why? they did not belong to them: Ay, but then say you, 'tis strange they should not find one Letter in all those numerous Papers that were taken that contains any Traiterous Matter; but, I say, 'tis forty times more a wonder that one should be taken, than for all the rest to be undiscovered. I suppose Mr. Harcourt, amongst those Papers that he let be surprised did not think that Letter that hath been read to have been of such Consequence, nor the sence of it to be so bad.

Fenwick. I dreamt no more of my Apprehension, when I was taken, than the Day of my Death, it was so unexpected; nor what I should be accused of: I had no fear of it, no thought of it, so that I took nothing out of the way. They took five or six Thousand Pound Bonds and Bills, besides Letters; methinks something of the Effects of those Letters might be produced, and some of the Design appear. For God's sake, where are the Commissions signed, and Moneys paid?

L. C. J. They talk of a Patent. Mr. Whitebread construes it, that it is his Commission; if so, does it lie in Oates or Bedlow's Power to shew that Commission? (this is just like that of the Bill of Exchange) neither does it in any of the Letters.

Fenwick. Here is Mr. Hilsley, my Lord.

Whitebread. My Lord, we pray we may have the favour that they may be Sworn.

L. C. J. North. By Law they cannot.

L. C. J. In no Capital Case against the King can the Witnesses for the Prisoner be Sworn, but I will say this to the Jury, That they are not Sworn, is, because they cannot, but the Jury is to take great heed of what they say, and to be governed by it according to the Credibility of the Person and of the Matter.

Gavan. My Lord, if you please to give me leave, my Lord Coke in his Institutes says expressly, That there is no positive Law against it, his Words are, there is not so much as Scintilla Juris against it.

L. C. J. North. We know that the constant Usage and Practice is so, and you cannot produce any Man, that in any Capital Case had his Witnesses sworn against the King.

L. C. J. My Lord Coke says otherwise, That the Evidence should be so plain that nothing could be answered to it; and therefore no Evidence should be sworn against the King.

Gavan. My Lord, those are the Words of my Lord Coke.

L. C. J. You argue against the known Practice of all Ages.

L. C. J. North. There was never any Man, in a Capital Cause, sworn against the King. The Common Law is the Custom of the Kingdom, and we are bound to know it, and must be all governed by it.

Whitebread. In Mr. Ireland's Tryal, pag. 35, 36. he says, he came over with Sir John Warner, Father Williams, and Mr. Hilsley, from St. Omers.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Nay, you must not resort to the printed Tryals for Evidence.

Fenwick. If we can prove him perjured at any time, I hope we may.

L. C. J. Suppose upon the taking of those printed Tryals they mistake, shall Mr. Oates therefore be thought guilty of Perjury? If you have any thing to ask of your Witnesses which you can apply to the Evidence given now, you may.

Fenwick. Mr. Oates, did not you your self own then you came over with Mr. Hilsley?

Dr. Oates.

Dr. Oates. Ask me any Queſtion about what I have given to Day, and if the Bench think it reaſonable, I will anſwer it.

Fenwick. My Lord, he did then affirm, that he came over with theſe Perſons, in which he is forſworn.

L. C. J. He is not convicted of Perjury, and therefore that muſt not be urged.

Fenwick. My Lord, we will prove by Witneſſes that were at the Tryal, that he did affirm ſo: And I do deſire now to know of you, Mr. Oates, whether ever you came over with Mr. Hilſley?

Dr. Oates. That which I ſaid then, and that which I ſay now, is, (becauſe you ſhould not puzzle your ſelves) that one Mr. Hilſley did come over with us when we did.

Hilſley. My Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. How can you tell?

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Oates?

Dr. Oates. 'Tis true, Mr. Hilſley did leave me at St. Omers, becauſe he went out a Sunday Morning, and I came out of the Monday Morning, but I overtook him at Calais.

Hilſley. My Lord, that is falſe, and I have a great many here that can prove it.

L. C. J. What Religion are you of?

Hilſley. I am only to ſerve His Majeſty.

L. C. J. Are you not to ſerve God too?

Hilſley. I am firſt to ſerve God, and then His Majeſty.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Are you a Catholick?

L. C. J. Are you a Roman Catholick?

Hilſley. Yes, my Lord, I am.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Be not aſhamed of your Religion, do not deny that; your Provincial here can give you a Diſpenſation for what you ſay.

Hilſley. I hope a Roman Catholick may be a lawful Witneſs?

L. C. J. Yes, I deny it not. This is that you ſay, you left him at St. Omers; you muſt call more Witneſſes to back him: Maſter Oates ſays 'tis true, you left him at St. Omers, but he overtook you at Calais.

Dr. Oates. This Gentleman loſt his Money at Calais, and Father Williams did relieve him by my means.

L. C. J. What ſay you to that?

Hilſley. Why, my Lord, yes, it is true, I did loſe my Money there, but it is nothing to the purpoſe, for I will affirm, I was never in the Ship with him in all my Life.

Dr. Oates. I deſire he may be asked, whether he be in the Degree of a Prieſt, or not?

L. C. J. That would be a hard Queſtion to put to him, to make him accuſe himſelf. It would bring him into danger of Treaſon.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He is a Boy very fit to make a Jeſuit of.

L. C. J. How could he then come to know this?

Hilſley. I confeſs 'tis true, that Mr. Oates did never come over with me. And I have Witneſſes to prove, that they ſaw him there next Day at St. Omers, and two or three ſeveral Weeks after.

Sir Cr. Levins. Mr. Oates hath another Circumſtance to prove it by.

Dr. Oates. He went from us by the way, and did not come up with us to London.

Hilſley. I know how he underſtood this: There was a Gentleman that the Witneſſes will prove he was very familiar with, the ſecond of May, that told him.

L. C. J. Is that Gentleman here?

Hilſley. Here is one here to prove it.

L. C. J. And did he tell him how you loſt your Money?

Hilſley. Yes, my Lord, I ſuppoſe ſo.

L. C. J. I ſpeak ſeriouſly, I do not underſtand how he could come by theſe Things.

Parry. My Lord, I can teſtifie, if it were lawful for us to ſwear, and prove that he was at St. Omers that Day, when he ſays he came over.

L. C. J. What is your Name?

Parry. My Name is William Parry.

L. C. J. What Countryman are you?

Parry. I am a Flintſhire Man.

L. C. J. When was he at St. Omers?

Parry. He was there that 25th Day, that Day he ſays he came over.

L. C. J. Was he there all Day?

Parry. He did not ſtir thence all the Day.

L. C. J. How can you tell that?

Parry. I din'd with him; that Day he went into the Infirmary, he did not go out of the College, he was ſick.

Fenwick. Mr. Parry. How long did Mr. Oates ſtay there at St. Omers?

Parry. He ſtaid till after the 20th of June, I am ſure; for on the 20th of June I know he was preſent, by a very good Circumſtance, he was at an Action of ours, a Latin Play.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, as to the going into the Infirmary at that time, I deny it. My Lord, (if your Lordſhip pleaſe) I will ſhew that this Gentleman is not only a Votary of the Jeſuits, but hath been one of the Sodality ſeveral Years. And they have Diſpenſations, and are bound by an implicit Obedience to ſay what the Jeſuits bid them, who are their Superiors.

L. C. J. What ſay you to the 20th of June, the time he ſays you were there at the ſeeing of the Play?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, as to that twentieth of June, I was there, and there was an Action at that time, for I was then returned thither from London.

Parry. I deny all that, for he never ſtirr'd out of the College.

L. C. J. Youngman, in what Quality were you there?

Parry. I was a Student there, a Poet.

L. C. J. How can you ſay he did not ſtir thence all the while?

Parry. I know by a particular thing; I din'd and ſupp'd with him there, but when he was in the Infirmary; but the particular paſſage was this, He did there fall out with a Gentleman that was in the Infirmary too.

L. C. J. When was that?

Parry. It was at the time that he ſays he came away.

L. C. J. When went he in?

Parry. The 25th of April, Old Stile, and ſtaid a Matter of three or four days.

Dr. Oates. Will you be pleaſed to take notice of this? he ſays that Hilſley left me at St. Omers when he came away, and that the next Day he dined with me, and that I went into the Infirmary, which, he ſays, was the 25th of April, Old Stile. Now we will run to argue ad hominem; If this were the 25th of April, Old Stile, how did Mr. Williams meet with Mr. Hilſley at Calais, and reſtore him his Money, when the 24th Old Old Stile, Mr. Williams was at the Conſult in London?

L. C. J. When was it that you ſay Mr. Hilſley was at St. Omers?

Fenwick. Anſwer my Lord's Queſtion.

Parry. He went away the 24th of April, as I remember.

L. C. J. What, Old Stile?

Parry. Yes, Old Stile, according to the reckoning there.

Dr. Oates. But, my Lord, upon the Oath that I have taken; if he mean New Stile, all that this Gentleman hath ſaid about this is falſe, except that I was there the 20th of June.

L. C. J. Was it New Stile or Old Stile that you ſay Mr. Hilſley went away?

Mr. Recorder. He does not know New Stile from Old Stile.

Parry. He went the 24th, that is the Old Stile beyond Sea.

Whitebread. I do deſire he may anſwer, whether he does know that Mr. Oates was ever out of the Houſe from the time he came in December till June, but one Night.

Parry. No, he never was out but one Night at Watton.

L. C. J. From what time to what time?

Parry. It was but two Days and one Night.

L. C. J. What time was it that he was there firſt?

Parry. He came thither in December.

L. C. J. And he did ſtay there all the while?

Parry. He did not ſtir from the College till the end of June; and never went out but a Day or two as I know of.

L. C. J. Not as you know of; but might not he go, and you not know of it?

Parry. I am ſure of it.

L. C. J. How can you tell?

Parry. Not a Scholar goes from thence to England, but the whole College rings of it.

Gavan. And then, my Lord, when they go out they go in ſecular Cloaths, that none but muſt know when any Perſon leaves the College.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, in ſuch caſes, tho' 'tis true in a general ſenſe, yet it is but a general Rule, and every general Rule admits of its Exceptions, and my Caſe was a particular Exception. I put on the Habit of the Houſe as ſoon as I did return from London, and did not appear as if I had gone out of the Houſe, nor did I know that it was known that I had been out; for I did never appear in the College in a ſecular Habit.

Whitebread. What his Cloaths were, does not change the Place he ſate in; he being Ancienter than the Boys, had a priviledge to ſit in a particular Place, which muſt be known to all the Houſe at Dinner and Supper. He was viſible every Day there.

L. C. J. I do believe it; and therefore he ſays, not only that he was reported to be there, but that he ſaw him there almoſt every Day.

Then another Witneſs for the Priſoner ſtood up.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Young Lad?

Doddington. I ſay, my Lord——

L. C. J. What is your Name?

Doddington. Doddington.

Dr. Oates. Pray, my Lord, ask him if he went by that Name at St. Omers.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What was your Name at St. Omers?

Doddington. My Name was Hollis there.

L. C. J. How old are you?

Doddington. Eighteen Years and an half.

L. C. J. What can you ſay? Where was Mr. Oates?

Doddington, He never went out of the College, but one Night to Watton, till the end of June.

L. C. J. When came he into the College?

Doddington. A fortnight before Chriſtmas, I did not mind the Day, he ſays himſelf it was the 10th of December.

L. C. J. Was he there till June?

Doddington. Yes, he never went out till June but one Night.

L. C. J. Where was that? At Watton?

Doddington. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Doddington. I only know that by what all the Houſe ſaid.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him every Day, except that Day?

Doddington. I cannot ſay I ſaw him every Day, becauſe he was in the Infirmary once, and he was there that very Day after Mr. Hilſley went away.

L. C. J. What Day was it that Mr. Hilſley went away?

Doddington. The 24th of April New Stile; and that Day he fell ſick, and went into the Infirmary the Next.

L. C. J. What Day of the Week was that?

Doddington. It was of a Sunday.

L. C. J. And when did you ſee Mr. Oates?

Doddington. On Monday or Tueſday, I am not certain.

L. C. J. How often did you ſee him from the 24th of April to June? Did you ſee him every other Day?

Doddington. Yes, that I am ſure of for every other Day, I am not certain every Day.

L. C. J. Are you poſitive?

Jury. We deſire to know what time of the Year he was in the Infirmary.

Doddington. I diſcourſed with him in the Infirmary two or three Days after Mr. Hilſley went away.

L. C. J. But what time of the Year was it?

Doddington. He was there firſt in Winter, and then afterwards he was in at this time, which was in April.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ſay?

Doddington. I can ſay more, that I ſaw Mr. Oates the ſecond of May with one Blood or Burnaby, and I am ſure I ſaw him in his Company.

L. C. J. Where did you ſee him?

Doddington. I ſaw him walking in the Garden with Mr. Burnaby.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. When did you come into England?

Doddington. I came over the 24th of April.

L. C. J. How long have you been in England?

Doddington. About two Months.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton. Why did you come over, were you ſent for over upon this occaſion.

Doddington. No, I was not.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton. Why did you come over?

Doddington. I came over partly upon the King's Proclamation.

L. C. J. What Proclamation was that?

L. C. J. North. That thoſe that were in the Seminaries ſhould come over again.

Doddington. And partly becauſe I had not my Health.

Fenwick. Mr. Gifford, what do you know about Mr. Oates's coming from St. Omers?

L. C. J. When came you from St. Omers?

Gifford.

Gifford. I came over about a Month ago.

L. C. J. Upon what occaſion?

Gifford. To juſtifie that Mr. Oates was there all the while that he ſays he was here.

L. C. J. You ſpeak like an honeſt Man, there is no hurt in that.

Fenwick. We did ſend for him over.

L. C. J. When did you ſee Mr. Oates there?

Gifford. I ſaw him the firſt of May was Twelvemonth with us, and the 21ſt of April.

L. C. J. And how long after that?

Gifford. I was in his Company for a whole Week after, I am ſure.

L. C. J. You ſay the firſt of May he was there, how can you tell?

Gifford. The firſt of May there came one Mr. Burnaby to the College, and he fell into Acquaintance with him, and I ſaw him with him: He was with us an whole Week at leaſt every Day after Dinner: We have an hour always after Dinner to recreate in, and this Gentleman was there with us, and Mr. Burnaby; for Mr. Oates ſeeing us in the Garden at firſt, put himſelf into our Company, and kept with us.

L. C. J. Was he not in the Infirmary?

Gifford. Not at that time, my Lord.

L. C. J. When was he in the Infirmary?

Gifford. The Day after Hilſley went away.

L. C. J. Do you remember that?

Gifford. Yes, I do.

L. C. J. North. How long did he ſtay in the Infirmary?

Parry. About three Days.

L. C. J. And for how long together did you ſee him after Mr. Hilſley's Departure?

Gifford. I can ſwear that I ſaw him at leaſt till June, if I can believe my own Eyes.

L. C. J. Your Religion does not allow you to believe your own Eyes.

Gifford. I can in my Conſcience ſay, I believe I did ſee him every Day or every other Day.

L. C. J. Which do you ſay, Did you ſee him every other Day, or every Day?

Gifford. If I ſay I ſaw him every other Day, that is ſufficient.

L. C. J. Do you know that he went out of the College at any time?

Gifford. Yes, he went for one Night.

L. C. J. Whither?

Gifford. To a place called Watton.

L. C. J. What did he go thither for?

Gifford. For his Relaxation.

L. C. J. How came you to take ſuch particular notice of him, that he was there?

Gifford. It is impoſſible but we ſhould ſee him, and take notice of him, for we Dine all together in one Room, and we could not but take notice of him, for he was at a diſtinct Table by himſelf.

L. C. J. How many are there that Dine in one Room?

Gifford. One hundred and fifty.

L. C. J. How could you know him when there were ſo many?

Gifford. He was at a diſtinct Table by himſelf, between the Boys and the Religious.

Then ſtood up another, one Palmer.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask him?

Fenwick. The ſame Queſtion as the reſt.

L. C. J. When came you from St. Omers?

Palmer. I came two or three Months ago.

L. C. J. Why did you come over?

Palmer. I had no mind to ſtay any longer.

L. C. J. Where does your Father live?

Palmer. By Windſor.

L. C. J. When did you ſee Maſter Oates?

Palmer. I ſaw him the firſt Day of May, New Stile, and I know it for a particular Reaſon; there were Strangers dined at the College that Day, whereupon Maſter Oates, and ſeveral other Boys played at Nine-Pins, in the Afternoon, I ſaw them.

L. C. J. Why, you do not count all Boys there, do you?

Palmer. All but thoſe that are the Religious.

L. C. J. Why, you did not count Maſter Oates a Boy, did you?

Palmer. He was none of the Religious: He ſate indeed at a Table by himſelf, but he went to School with the Boys, and we called all the Scholars Boys.

L. C. J. How often did you ſee him?

Palmer. I'll tell your Lordſhip, I ſaw him the firſt of May, for that Reaſon; the ſecond of May I ſaw him with Maſter Burnaby, a Man that he had never ſeen in all his life before, and we wondred that he had ſo much impudence to inſinuate himſelf into his Company.

L. C. J. What is he?

Palmer. He is a Gentleman that is now in Flanders.

L. C. J. How do you know that Maſter Oates had no Acquaintance with him before?

Palmer. Becauſe I know he was in England, and came over while Maſter Oates was actually at St. Omers.

L. C. J. But he might be of his Acquaintance in England.

Palmer. I heard Maſter Burnaby ſay, he never ſaw Maſter Oates in all his life before. The ſecond of May I ſaw him at the Action, the fifth of May Maſter Killinbeck went away, and I ſaw Maſter Oates actually there then, and one Maſter Poole went away; and I remember Oates was there for a particular Reaſon; he was a kind of a weak Man, ſomething ſoft, not over-wiſe, and we were asking him, why he would go away by himſelf; and talking of it afterwards, ſays Maſter Oates, (I will not ſay poſitively thoſe were the words, but that was the ſence) He does not go alone, for there goes Eſquire Poole and Eſquire Fool together. The eleventh Day we had an Action, a Play alſo whereupon there was a particular place for the Muſicians to play in, where no one elſe was to ſit; Maſter Oates would ſit there, and thereupon there was one Maſter Watſon quarrell'd with him, and they had like to have fought.

L. C. J. This was the 11th of May?

Palmer. Yes, my Lord, New Stile, and the other was the 5th.

L. C. J. But you ſaw him betwixt that Time?

Palmer. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. And ſo for how long?

Palmer. I ſaw him at four a Clock in a Morning, reading Father Worſley's Controverſies, and ſo for ſeveral Days together.

Fenwick. Did he go away before June?

Palmer. No, he did never ſtir till June.

Sir Cr. Levins. Did not you go ſometime by the Name of Sanders or Hill?

Palmer. No, only by the Name of Thomas Palmer.

Sir Cr. Levins. Hark you, Sir, who maintained you at St. Omers? Do not you know one Mr. Caryl?

Palmer. No, my Father maintained me.

L. C. J. Who is your Father?

Palmer. Sir Philip Palmer.

L. C. J. What Country Gentleman is he?

Palmer. Buckinghamſhire.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He is Cup-bearer to the King.

Then ſtood up one Maſter Cox.

L. C. J. How long have you been from Saint Omers?

Cox. Two Months.

L. C. J. What Country-man are you?

Cox. I was born at Bruſſels, to ſerve you.

L. C. J. Do you know Maſter Oates?

Cox. Yes, I did, very well.

L. C. J. Where?

Cox. At St. Omers.

L. C. J. When?

Cox. I left St. Omers Seven Months ago, and I came away in the Month of November, after Maſter Oates. My Lord, I can prove that he was there in April and May. I went from St. Omers to Bruſſels, and from Bruſſels I came ſtrait to London.

L. C. J. But when did you ſee Maſter Oates there?

Cox. I can prove I ſaw him at St. Omers, when he ſays he was in England, and that by this Circumſtance; Maſter Pool, who was my Muſick Maſter, was ſick there, and Maſter Oates was often with him.

L. C. J. Were you there all the Time he was there?

Cox. Yes, I was, till he went away.

L. C. J. When did he go away?

Cox. Maſter Oates went away in the Month of July.

L. C. J. Are you ſure of that?

Cox. Yes, my Lord, I am.

L. C. J. Not in June?

Cox. No, my Lord, July.

L. C. J. Why he differs from all the reſt.

Cox. My Lord, I can prove he was at St. Omers when he ſays he was in England.

L. C. J. Why, what Month did he go away?

Cox. My Lord, I can prove that Mr. Oates was never abſent from St. Omers, till he went away for good and all.

L. C. J. When was that?

Cox. He went after the Conſult of the Jeſuits, which he ſays was in England in April.

L. C. J. Come, come, anſwer me plainly, if you can, in what Month Mr. Oates left St. Omers?

Cox. I ſay, Mr. Oates was never abſent from St. Omers, till the Conſult of the Jeſuits was over, which he hath confeſſed himſelf to be at.

L. C. J. When was that?

Cox. Why it was after May, 'tis no matter what the Month was, whether June or July. (At which the People laughed.)

Cox. What do you laugh at, Sirs? why, ſuppoſe I miſtake the Month, it is no matter.

L. C. J. Look you, we are now upon a Queſtion of Time, and you cannot tell that a Man is there at a certain Time, unleſs you can prove the certain Time when he came away.

Cox. I can prove, that he was there till after the Conſult of the Jeſuits. (And then the People laughed again.)

L. C. J. Ay, I believe you there, 'tis enough for you, but you have done a very great Prejudice to thoſe Perſons that you came for, for you come to prove the Concluſion, but do not take Notice of what Mediums you are to uſe. Say you, if I can but prove that he was there till after the Conſult of the Jeſuits, that is the Thing in Queſtion, and I need no more; but this is ſerving a Turn only: Pray can you tell me what Month he came to St. Omers?

Cox. Yes, he came thither in the Month of December.

L. C. J. And when did he go away again?

Cox. He was never abſent from St. Omers, out of the View of the Scholars, except one Night, that he went to Watton, and one Day, when he was in the Infirmary, but even at that Time he was ſeen by ſome of the Scholars.

L. C. J. Yet you cannot tell the Time that he went away?

Cox. He was never abſent all the while.

Mr. Juſt. Windham. Do you know when the Conſult of the Jeſuits was? upon what Day?

Cox. He ſays he went away with Mr. Hilſley, but he did not, I can prove the contrary.

L. C. J. No, no, he ſays he followed him, and overtook him at Calais.

Cox. That is falſe, and I can prove it by this Circumſtance: One Mr. Conqueſt was to go for England that Day, and he came into the Refectory, and told us a Story of this Mr. Conqueſt's being unwilling to riſe in the Morning to go for England.

L. C. J. When did he tell that Story?

Cox. That Day that he was to go for England.

L. C. J. How long was that after Mr. Hilſley went away?

Cox. The Day after.

Gavan. When was the Time that Mr. Conqueſt went for England?

Cox. In the Month of May, as we count.

L. C. J. What Time in the Month of May?

Cox. It was the 5th: And he ſays, that Mr. Pool and Mr. Nevil were in England with him, but I can teſtify that they were not abſent, for one of them was my Muſick-maſter.

L. C. J. Was he there all May?

Cox. Yes, that I can teſtify upon my Oath.

L. C. J. And all June?

Cox. Yes, my Lord, but if I prove he was not in May in England it is ſufficient.

L. C. J. Upon my word, you deſerve a ſharp Penance, for running into that Fault two or three times: You have done them no Kindneſs in this matter.

Gavan. If your Lordſhip will take Advantage of every Circumſtance, young Men may not remember the particular Day of his going away.

L. C. J. But you hear how he delivers his Evidence, 'tis as if he had been inſtructed, You muſt come and prove that Oates was not in England in April and May, and that will do our Buſineſs; for he tells you, it is ſufficient, but we will have it proved to ſatisfy us.

Cox. But why ſhould I ſay more than I know?

L. C. J. You mean, more than you are inſtructed about. I only ask you one ſhort Queſtion, Do you know when Mr. Oates left St. Omers? Name the Month.

Gavan. If you don't remember the Time, ſay ſo.

Cox. My Lord, I cannot remember it.

L. C. J. Then call another. Who ſtood up.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I deſire they may be Examined apart.

L. C. J. You need not trouble your ſelf about that. What is your Name?

Billing. My Name is Thomas Billing.

L. C. J. When

L. C. J. When came you from St. Omers?

Billing. I came three Months ago, I think, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do you know Mr. Oates?

Billing. Yes, my Lord, very well.

L. C. J. When did you ſee him at St. Omers?

Billing. My Lord, I ſaw him when he came, the ſame Day, or the Day after.

L. C. J. When was that?

Billing. In December, my Lord, the 10th of December.

L. C. J. And he ſtaid there, how long?

Billing. Till the latter end of June.

L. C. J. Was he never abſent?

Billing. I can very well remember that he went to Watton in the Chriſtmas. I was then in the Infirmary my ſelf, and he and his Companion came in there to ſee us, and ſaid he had been at Watton.

L. C. J. But he was twice in the Infirmary, was he not?

Billing. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. When was the ſecond time?

Billing. The ſecond time was in April, I went in the Week before Chriſtmas: On St. Thomas of Canterbury's Day I came out again.

L. C. J. But you ſay the ſecond Time was in April?

Billing. Yes.

L. C. J. How long was he there then?

Billing. Truly I was not with him then, but I think three or four Days.

L. C. J. Were you in the College then?

Billing. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him in the College from Time to Time?

Billing. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. How long?

Billing. For all the Time that he ſtaid.

L. C. J. How long was that?

Billing. That was from December, till the latter end of June.

L. C. J. Was he there all May?

Billing. Yes, my Lord. He ſays he was eight Days in England, but he could not be ſo, for he entred himſelf into the Sodality the 25th of March, and not long after his Admiſſion, he was put to read every Sunday morning at Six a Clock. And after that he began once to read, he never was abſent from that Time till the Time he went away.

L. C. J. Why, did he read when he was ſick?

Billing. He was not ſick upon the Sunday.

L. C. J. You ſay he was ſick in April?

Billing. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. But was he not ſick of a Sunday, in April?

Billing. He was only a little indiſpoſed, and frequented the Infirmary in the Day-time for a matter of three or four Days.

L. C. J. Did he read, at the Time he was ſick in the Infirmary?

Billing. He was not ſick an whole Week.

L. C. J. Did it reach to a Sunday?

Billing. No, my Lord, that I remember.

L. C. J. How long did he continue there?

Billing. Till towards the latter end of June.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him once in two or three Days?

Billing. Yes, my Lord, I did, conſtantly. And upon the 2d of May, I very particularly remember, looking out into the Garden, I ſaw Mr. Blunt walking in the Garden, and Mr. Oates with him: And obſerving him to be very intimately familiar with him, I asked ſome that were with me, Does this Sampſon, for he went by that Name in the College, ſays I, Does Sampſon know Dick Blunt? No, ſaid they; and we wondered at his Confidence, having no greater Acquaintance; I ſaw him that Day, walking in the Garden with that Blunt.

L. C. J. That was the 2d of May?

Billing. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. And he was conſtantly in this Gentleman's Company that Day?

Billing. Yes; and moreover the ſame Day this Sampſon was walking with one John Ruſhton in the Garden, and ſeeing me walk alone, Thomas, ſays he, have you never a Companion? No, Sampſon, ſaid I: Well, ſaid he, prithee come to us. So I was with him walking a little while, and then this Blunt, and one Henry Howard, were playing one with another, throwing Stones at one another's Shins. At which he was diſpleaſed, and ſaid, If they would not be quiet, he would go tell the Rector. Howard was haſty, and ſpoke angrily to him, and ſaid, If he would not be quiet, he would beat him: But Mr. Oates perſiſting, and daring of him, ſays he, What, do you dare me? and comes up to him, and throws up Mr. Oates his Heels. With that Mr. Oates look'd very fretfully upon him, and withdrew himſelf into the Infirmary, as we thought to ſpeak to the Rector. And by theſe Particulars, and ſuch as theſe, I remember to have ſeen him every Day, one Day with another, or every other Day, at St. Omers, till he went away, which was in June.

Then ſtood up another, one Townley.

L. C. J. Come, Mr. Townley, do you know Mr. Oates?

Townley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. When came you from St. Omers?

Townley. I came a Week before Eaſter.

L. C. J. When ſaw you this ſame Mr. Oates at St. Omers?

Townley. I ſaw him in June.

L. C. J. When elſe?

Townley. In May.

L. C. J. When elſe?

Townley. In April.

L. C. J. Was he there in all April, all May, and all June?

Townley. No, not all June. He went away, as I take it, about the 10th of June.

L. C. J. Pray, how often did you ſee him? Did you ſee him every Day?

Townley. I converſed with him every Day. He was partly a Scholar, and partly a Father; and ſat at a Table by himſelf. He went to School as a Scholar; 'tis true, indeed, he did not learn, as the reſt of the Boys did, but he went to School, as the Boys did, and was at a Table from the Fathers, as the Boys were, but apart and alone.

L. C. J. But how often did you ſee him? was it every other Day?

Townley. Yes, I believe I did.

L. C. J. What for all April, and all May?

Townley. Yes.

L. C. J. How came you to take ſuch particular Notice, of it, that you can ſay, you ſaw him every other Day?

Townley. If I conſtantly dine with one, or if he be at a ſingle Table alone, he cannot be abſent, but I muſt take notice of it: And he was neither as a Father, nor as a Scholar, but betwixt both, and therefore the more to be taken notice of.

L. C. J. This then you ſay, He ſitting by himſelf, and being diſtinct from all the others, you might might more eaſily obſerve his Abſence, than any other's. This is that you ſay?

Townley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. You ſay well. Call another.

Then ſtood up one Fall.

L. C. J. When came you from St. Omers?

Fall. About Two Months ago.

L. C. J. When did you ſee Mr. Oates?

Fall. I ſaw him when I was in my Syntax, and now I am in Poetry.

L. C. J. What Month did you ſee him in?

Fall. When he came firſt, as I remember, it was at Chriſtmas.

L. C. J. Chriſtmas laſt?

Fall. No, it was Chriſtmas was Twelve-month, Chriſtmas, 1677.

L. C. J. How long did you ſee him there?

Fall. I ſaw him there from that Time till June, only when he was at Watton.

L. C. J. Was he never ſick?

Fall. I ſaw him in the Infirmary my ſelf.

L. C. J. How can you tell when a Man is ſick?

Fall. I do not pretend to that, but he was in the Infirmary as a ſick Man.

L. C. J. How came you to take particular notice of it?

Fall. I took no particular notice, but I have recollected my Memory.

L. C. J. Upon what Occaſion?

Fall. Upon this Occaſion.

L. C. J. How often did you ſee him?

Fall. I ſaw him every Day.

L. C. J. How long have you been in the Convent?

Fall. My Lord, I have been there two Years and an half.

Then ſtood up John Hall.

L. C. J. When came you from St. Omers?

Hall. In July, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long have you been there?

Hall. Seven Years, and upwards.

L. C. J. How long is it ſince you came from thence?

Hall. In July in the Year 1678.

L. C. J. And did you ſee Mr. Oates there then?

Hall. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. When did you ſee him there then?

Hall. I ſaw him there in April, May, and June.

L. C. J. What all June?

Hall. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long in June?

Hall. He went away about the 23d of June.

L. C. J. How came you to take ſuch particular notice Mr. Oates was there all this while?

Hall. I was a Servant there.

L. C. J. In what Way?

Hall. A Refectorian, a Butler.

L. C. J. Did you keep Books of what Meat and Drink they had?

Hall. No; I laid their Table, drew their Beer, and laid the Bread.

L. C. J. And did you ſerve Mr. Oates with Bread and Beer every Day?

Hall. Yes, my Lord, moſt Days.

L. C. J. Did you ſerve the Infirmary?

Hall. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. But you ſay you ſerved him every Day?

Hall. Yes, my Lord, the moſt of the Time he remained there: I acknowledge he was in the Infirmary.

L. C. J. How long?

Hall. Four or five Days, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. Was he in the College in April?

Hall. Yes, my Lord, all along.

L. C. J. And all May?

Hall. Yes, my Lord, I ſaw him all May, I laid his Table near the Door, at a particular Place where he always ſat.

Jury. My Lord, we deſire to know what Employment he is of now?

L. C. J. Hall, what made you come into England?

Hall. My Lord, I had not my Health there.

L. C. J. How long had you lived there?

Hall. Seven Years, and upwards.

L. C. J. And when began you to be ſick?

Hall. I had not my Health at Chriſtmas, in December 1677.

L. C. J. What Employment have you here, for you had a good Place there?

Hall. I live at home, with my Father and my Friends.

L. C. J. What is your Father? where lives he?

Hall. He is a Gentleman; he lives in Radnorſhire.

L. C. J. When came you to London?

Hall. I came to England in July, 1678.

L. C. J. But you ſay your Father is in Radnorſhire, when came you here to London?

Hall. I have been here about a Month, I was ſummoned up as a Witneſs.

Then one Dalliſon was called, who did not appear; and one Mauſhel appearing, but ſpeaking French, and no Engliſh, and an Interpreter not being ready, he was for the preſent, by the Conſent of the Priſoners, ſet aſide. And then ſtood up one Cooke.

L. C. J. When came you from St. Omers?

Cooke. In January laſt.

L. C. J. And where have you been ever ſince?

Cooke. Here in Town, my Lord.

L. C. J. Does your Father live here in Town?

Cooke. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do your Friends live here?

Cooke. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. You came over upon this Occaſion, did you?

Cooke. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. When did you ſee Mr. Oates there?

Cooke. I ſaw him in laſt June.

L. C. J. And was he there in July?

Cooke. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. What Time did he go away?

Cooke. The 23d, the Eve of the Feaſt of St. John Baptiſt.

L. C. J. How do you know?

Cooke. I made him ſome Cloaths.

L. C. J. Are you a Taylor?

Cooke. Yes.

L. C. J. How often did you ſee him?

Cooke. Every Day.

L. C. J. How came he to keep you Company?

Cooke. I could not chuſe but ſee him, ſometimes I ſaw him twenty times a Day.

L. C. J. Where was he in April?

Cooke. He was there all April.

L. C. J. He might be abſent one Day, or ſo, and you ſee him not.

Cooke. He uſed to come twice a Week to my Shop for things.

L. C. J. Was he there all May?

Cooke. Yes.

L. C. J. You

L. C. J. You ſay you ſaw him every other Day?

Cooke. Yes, my Lord.

Sir Cr. Levins. Why Sir there are 150 Scholars there, how can you tell he was there ſo well?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Can you tell every one that was there all that time?

Cooke. No, I can't tell every one that was there, but he was particular enough.

L. C. J. Did you Live in Town as a Taylor or in the College?

Cooke. In the College.

Mr. Belwood. Was Mr. Oates at Watton any part of the time?

Cooke. Yes, he was.

Mr. Belwood. What Day? what Month?

Cooke. I cannor juſtly ſay the Day, but it was in April.

L. C. J. How long was he abſent?

Cooke. Only one Night as it ſhall pleaſe you.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Hark you, how came you to take notice that he was at Watton one Night?

Cooke. It was talked of among all the Scholars.

L. C. J. How can you remember what was ſaid a Year ago of one Man?

Cooke. It was reported all over the Houſe.

Gavan. In one Place of his Narrative, he ſays, he came over with Sir John Warner, and Sir Thomas Preſton.

L. C. J. North. That is nothing to the Purpoſe. If you can contradict him in any thing that hath been ſworn here, do.

Gavan. If we can prove him a Perjured Man at any time, we do our buſineſs.

L. C. J. You ſhould have proved him a Perjur'd Man before. How can we prove one Cauſe in another? and then too he had been provided to make his Defence. Can he come prepared to make good every thing that he hath ſaid in his Life?

Dr. Oates. Can I come to make good my Evidence againſt all I have done in my Life?

L. C. J. Look you, if ſo be he hath forſworn himſelf in any former Tryal, if that would appear, you have all the Reaſon to make uſe of it, but you have not taken the right way, you ſhould have Indicted him and Tried him for Perjury in the former Trial, and then he could not have been heard at all in this.

Whitebread. We were all Priſoners cloſe ſhut up.

L. C. J. We know you have a Party ſtrong enough, and willing enough to convict him of Perjury if they could; but look you Gentlemen here is the thing, if you can give ſuch Evidence as will ſatisfie the Jury that he was abſent all April and all May you have ſaid a great thing. His Evidence will be quite contradicted.

Whitebread. He ſays he came over with Sir Thomas Preſton and Sir John Warner and others.

L. C. J. He ſays nothing of it now.

Dr. Oates. May it pleaſe you my Lord, I will anſwer it, if you pleaſe.

L. C. J. They deſire to know who came over with you when you came over in April.

Dr. Oates. I will tell you, and to convince the Court, that in neither of the Trials I did contradict my ſelf, I ſay, I did name ſome Perſons at one time that I did not name at another, becauſe ſome Mens Names did occur to my mind at one time that did not at another. There came over with me the Rector of Liege, Sir John Warner, Father Williams, Father Marſh, Father Warner, Sir Tho. Preſton and others.

L. C. J. This is dealing plainly with you.

Then ſtood up one Bartlett.

L. C. J. What Country-Man are you?

Bartlett. I am a Dutch Man.

L. C. J. Can you ſpeak Engliſh?

Bartlett. Yes, a little.

L. C. J. When came you from St. Omers?

Bartlett. I came from St. Omers the 23d of May in the Year 1678. New Stile.

Gavan. My Lord, this Man is come over to teſtifie, that Oates is Perjured in a Circumſtance about Sir John Warner.

L. C. J. He is to contradict Mr. Oates's Teſtimony, for he ſays he came over with Sir John Warner, and you ſay Sir John did not come at that time.

Gavan. Yes.

L. C. J. Well when did Sir John Warner come over from St. Omers?

Bartlett. Whither?

L. C. J. Into England?

Bartlett. Sir John Warner hath not been in England all May, and all the Month of April.

L. C. J. Where was he?

Bartlett. He was at Watton. I did ſee him there.

L. C. J. Were you there all that time?

Bartlett. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. North. Were you there all May?

Bartlett. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. When did you come over into England laſt?

Bartlett. The 23d of May.

L. C. J. How long have you been in England?

Bartlett. About 5 or 6 Weeks.

L. C. J. What is your Name?

Bartlett. My Name is Bartlett.

L. C. J. But you ſay that you came over the 23d of May.

Bartlett. I did not come over till the latter end of June.

L. C. J. Juſt now you ſaid, you came over the 23d of May.

Bartlett. No, my Lord, I thought you had asked the queſtion when Mr. Oates came over.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. He ſays ſo, as your Lordſhip ſays before.

L. C. J. How do you know when Mr. Oates came over.

Bartlett. I heard ſo beyond Sea.

Then one Carlier a Foreigner appearing and not being able to ſpeak Engliſh, Mr. Tiſſer the Under-Sheriff of Middleſex was Sworn truly to Interpret his Teſtimony.

L. C. J. Mr. Tiſſer, you are only to tell us what he ſays: Ask him when he came into England laſt.

Mr. Tiſſer. He ſays, my Lord, it was between ſeven and eight Weeks ago.

L. C. J. Ask him if he knows where Sir John Warner was laſt Summer was a Year ago.

Mr. Tiſſer. He ſays, my Lord, he was in Watton for two Years laſt paſt.

L. C. J. Ask him where he was all April was Twelvemonth, and all May.

Mr. Tiſſer. My Lord, he ſays, that the laſt Sunday in April Sir John Warner was at his Houſe at Watton.

L. C. J. And where was he all May?

Mr. Tiſſer. In the ſame Houſe.

L. C. J. Ask him how he does know.

Mr. Tiſſer. My Lord, he ſaith, that he was a Gardener there.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. It ſeems he ſays to the ſame effect as the laſt Witneſs did. Call another. Who did ſtand up.

L. C. J. What is this Man's Name?

Gavan. His Name is Charles Verron.

L. C. J. Does he ſpeak any Engliſh?

Gavan. No, he does not.

L. C. J. Then, Mr. Tiſſer, ask him if he knows Sir John Warner, and where he was April and May was Twelvemonth.

Mr. Tiſſer. He ſays, my Lord, that he was at Watton all April and May, and continued there till September.

L. C. J. Pray ask this Man what Quality he is of there.

Mr. Tiſſer. He goes along with a Veſſel between St. Omers and Watton, and that he knows it to be true.

L. C. J. Ask him if he did ſee him every Day.

Mr. Tiſſer. He ſays, generally, my Lord, daily.

L. C. J. Ask him what Religion he is of.

Mr. Tiſſer. He ſays he is of the Roman Religion.

Then ſtood up one Baillee.

L. C. J. Ask him, Mr. Tiſſer, if he knows Sir John Warner; and where he was all April and May was Twelvemonth.

Mr. Tiſſer. He ſays the ſame, that he was at Watton all April and May.

L. C. J. Ask him how he can tell.

Mr. Tiſſer. He ſays he is a Servant of the Houſe.

L. C. J. And did he ſee him there Daily?

Mr. Tiſſer. My Lord, he ſays that he gave him directions to make a Baſtyment, that he is a Maſon, and that he did give him directions daily about it, and that he ſaw him every Day.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, he ſpeaks to the ſame purpoſe that the three Witneſſes before ſpoke to; he ſays he is a Maſon, and that he built a Baſtyment there by direction from Sir John Warner, and that Sir John Warner came daily to give directions about it.

Then ſtood up John Joſeph.

L. C. J. Do you know Sir Thomas Preſton?

Joſeph. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. When did you ſee him?

Joſeph. In the months of April, May and June.

L. C. J. Where was he then?

Joſeph. He was at the Engliſh Houſe at Liege.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him there? how often did you ſee him there?

Joſeph. I ſaw him there every Day almoſt.

L. C. J. What occaſion had you to ſee him? what were you there?

Joſeph. I was Porter of the Gate.

L. C. J. And did you ſee him all the month of April?

Joſeph. Every Day, moſt commonly.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him once in a Day or two?

Joſeph. I did ſee him in April, May, and June.

L. C. J. That you might do; but did you ſee him every Day?

Joſeph. Every Day moſt commonly, I cannot abſolutely ſay, but two or three Days in a Week.

Sir Cr. Levins. Pray do you know of any time that Sir Tho. Preſton was abſent from Liege?

Joſeph. He was in the time of Vacancy.

Sir Cr. Levins. Was he not abſent in April or May?

Joſeph. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. When are the Vacancies?

Joſeph. In Auguſt, my Lord.

Then ſtood up one Peter Carpenteer.

L. C. J. Do you know Sir Tho. Preſton?

Carpenteer. Yes, my Lord very well.

L. C. J. Where did you know him?

Carpenteer. I knew him at Liege.

L. C. J. How often did you ſee him there in April and May?

Carpenteer. Every Day I ſaw him there all April and May.

L. C. J. What Office had you there?

Carpenteer. I was Caterer.

Gavan. My Lord, we have no more Witneſſes as to this Point. But, my Lord, my Caſe is different from the others: Mr. Oates ſays he did not ſee me in the Congregation, but he ſays, he afterwards ſaw my Hand to the Conſult: Now, my Lord, I have a Witneſs to prove that I was at that time at Wolverhampton in Staffordſhire. No Body hath a Right to ſit in the Congregation till he become a profeſs'd Jeſuit, which at that time I was not.

L. C. J. He does not charge you to have been there, tho' he ſays he ſaw your Hand to it.

Gavan. My Lord, I was then in the Country.

L. C. J. North. That will do you ſome, and yet but little ſervice, if you can prove your ſelf at Wolverhampton at that time: but call your Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Mr. Gavan, he ſays he ſaw a Letter of yours, giving an account how Affairs ſtood in Staffordſhire and Shropſhire, and that afterwards in July, and before that Gentleman, Mr. Aſhby, went to the Bath, he heard you diſcourſe of the ſame matter: And tho' he cannot charge his Memory to ſay he ſaw you the 24th of April, yet, ſays he, I did ſee his Hand to the Conſult; and being asked how he knew your Hand, he ſays he knew it by your writing a Bill of Exchange in his preſence.

Gavan. I could not ſign the Conſult at London, and not be at London.

L. C. J. North. I believe in ſuch a Buſineſs you care not how many Hands you have; but we will not prevent you calling your Witneſſes: You are upon your Life, don't ſpend the time, call them quickly.

L. C. J. What do you call them to prove?

Gavan. To prove that I was at Wolverhampton the 24th and 25th of April.

L. C. J. Pray hear what he ſays himſelf. You ſay, Sir, you ſaw his Hand to the Conſult that was in April; pray when was it that you ſaw it?

Dr. Oates. It was in June or July.

L. C. J. North. You might ſet your Hand afterwards to it, if you were not there then.

L. C. J. You ſay you were then in Staffordſhire, and might not you ſet your Hand afterwards when you came to Town? I will tell you, Mr. Gavan, in April they met, and had ſuch a Reſolution; you were then in Staffordſhire, might not you come to Town in July following, and ſet your Hand to what was agreed in April before? And you cannot contradict him, but by ſhewing that all June and July you were not here: For if you prove your ſelf never ſo much to have been at Wolverhampton in April, that will not ſerve the turn. You ſeem to make a very great Defence of this: All that Mr. Oates ſays is, that the 24th of April he was preſent where there was a Conſult had about the Death of the King, and divers Perſons ſet their hands to the Reſolve. Mr. Gavan afterwards was in Town, and then, ſays he, I ſaw his Hand ſet to the Conſult; I will not charge my Memory to ſay he was preſent, but I will tell you why I believe it was his Hand, becauſe I ſaw him draw a Bill of Exchange, and that was juſt like the ſame Hand.

Gavan. Aye but, my Lord, I was not here in April.

L. C. J. But this proves, in effect, that you ſet your Hand to the thing afterwards. And now if you ſhould prove your ſelf never ſo plainly not to have been there in April, you do not come to the thing: it is ſtill a Non liquet whether you were here July or no. And Mr. Oates does not poſitively charge you as to April. Well, call your Witneſſes, and prove what you will.

Catharine Winford was called, and appeared.

Gavan. I deſire you would be pleaſed to ask her, where I was the 23^{d} of July.

Winford. My Lord, I am very ſure he was a Sojourner at our Houſe the moſt part of the Summer, in June and July both: In July the 23^{d} he went away from my Houſe, and took another Lodging more convenient for that which he had to do.

L. C. J. Where? in what Town was this?

Winford. At Wolverhampton in Staffordſhire.

L. C. J. Was he never away from you all that time?

Winford. No; and then he went to another Lodging in the Town.

L. C. J. Do you ſay that he ſojourned with you all June and July till the 23^{d}?

Winford. He ſojourned with me longer; but I only name thoſe Months, becauſe they are only in queſtion.

L. C. J. Where did he go when he went from you?

Winford. He took another Lodging in the Town.

L. C. J. And did you ſee him then?

Winford. I ſaw him then every Day, or every other Day.

L. C. J. Are you a Roman Catholick?

Winford. Yes, my Lord, I am ſo.

L. C. J. Call another.

Gavan. Call Mary Poole. Who ſtood up.

L. C. J. Do you know Mr. Gavan?

Poole. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long have you known him?

Poole. This ſix or ſeven Years.

L. C. J. Pray do you know where he was this time Twelvemonth?

Poole. He was at Mrs. Winford's Houſe at Wolverhampton.

L. C. J. How do you know?

Poole. I was a Servant there in the Houſe.

L. C. J. And where was he in April?

Poole. He was at my Miſtreſſes Houſe.

L. C. J. And where was he in May?

Poole. My Lord, I believe he was there.

L. C. J. And why do you believe he was there?

Poole. Becauſe I do not remember his going forth, till the latter end of July, and he was there in June too

L. C. J. You anſwer readily as to June and July, why did you ſtick at the Month of May, more than the other Months? for you know, when I asked you where he was in April, then you ſaid he was at home; why do you doubt whether he was there in May or no? pray tell us why it is not as certain to you that he was not there in May, as that he was there in June; why do you doubt more of it?

Poole. I do not doubt but that he was there.

L. C. J. But why did you not anſwer then as readily to the one as to the other?

Poole. My Lord, any one may miſtake.

L. C. J. This you were not prepared for, and it was a queſtion you did not come ready to anſwer: are you a Roman-Catholick?

Poole. Yes, my Lord. Here the People laugh'd.

L. C. J. Look you, you muſt know there is no other uſe to be made of it, but only to ſhew, that Proteſtants are ſo averſe to Popery in England, that they will not endure a Roman-Catholick in England: But they are good Evidence and competent Witneſſes, I muſt tell you that, and no Man muſt deny it: for tho' you deny Heaven to us, yet we will not deny Heaven to you, nor Witneſſes; tho' you ſay Hereticks will be damn'd, yet we hope they will never, while they do not follow your Practiſes. At which the People gave a great Shout.

L. C. J. You muſt pardon the Peoples ſhouting; for you have turned their Hearts ſo, that there is no living for a Papiſt in England, I will maintain it. [And then the People ſhouted again.] You ſhall have all the Juſtice that can be, and all the favour the Law will allow.

Gavan. If there be but a place for us in Heaven, I am contented: My Lord, I deſire you will be pleaſed to ask this Mrs. Catharine Winford, whether ſhe does not remember that I came from my Lord Aſton's the Monday before.

L. C. J. Mrs. Winford, what ſay you? do you remember any Paſſages about the time he left your Houſe?

Winford. My Lord, I did not know directly and poſitively what I ſhould come to anſwer, and therefore I cannot recollect my ſelf.

L. C. J. Do you know that he went to any Gentleman's Houſe ſome time before he left your Houſe?

Winford. Yes, my Lord, he went often abroad.

L. C. J. To whoſe?

Winford. To my Lord Aſton's.

L. C. J. How long before?

Winford. I cannot tell.

L. C. J. How long did he ſtay at my Lord's? Did he ever ſtay five or ſix Days?

Winford. I cannot tell.

L. C. J. My meaning is this, in plain Engliſh, to ask you plainly, and you ought in Conſcience to ſpeak the Truth as much as if you were upon your Oath; for you are in the Preſence of God, who will judge you as ſeverely for a Falſhood in this Caſe, as in the other: I would ask you, whether he could not poſſibly be abſent, and make a ſtep to London, and you be never the wiſer?

Winford. My Lord, I am as confident as I can be of any thing in the World, of the contrary.

L. C. J. Might not he be in London the latter end of June or July, and you not know it, when he pretended to go to my Lord Aſton's?

Winford. I do not know, but I am very confident he did not.

L. C. J. But was he abſent long enough to have done it? Can you charge your Memory with that?

Winford. It was poſſible it might be ſo, but I am confident it was not, becauſe I uſed to order my Maid to get him his Linen ready upon any Journey, and he had none now.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, he took a Chamber to go into the Exerciſe; now, my Lord, he taking a Chamber on purpoſe for this very thing, he might pretend that, and come to London the while, and they not know it, becauſe he was ſhut up; for none are to come at them.

Winford. My Lord, I know not any ſuch Thing of him; but this is a Rule amongſt them, that when they are ſo ſhut up, if there be a neceſſary Occaſion to come to them about any particular Buſineſs, as ſending them Linen, or ſo, they have Admittance to them.

L. C. J. Were you employ'd upon any ſuch extraordinary Matter?

Winford. My Lord, I uſed to go and ſee him, and carry him his Linen.

L. C. J. And can you charge your Memory with that?

Winford. Yes, my Lord, I can.

L. C. J. When? the latter end of July?

Winford. Yes, my Lord, I often went to ſee him then, when he was gone from my Houſe.

L. C. J. Where was he for all the former part of July, till thoſe eight Days?

Winford. He was at my own Houſe.

L. C. J. When went he firſt into this recluſe Way?

Winford. He went from my Houſe, the 23d of July.

L. C. J. Was he not cloſe, when he was with you?

Winford. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. And the laſt eight Days you had Acceſs to him?

Winford. Yes, I had.

L. C. J. I ask you, Are theſe People ſhut up at a certain Time, and there is no coming to them, upon any Occaſion?

Winford. My Lord, moſt of thoſe Days I did ſee him, indeed he was ſhut up, but upon any kind of Buſineſs, as the carrying of Linen, and ſometimes a pair of Gloves, and other Things of his own, or ſometimes to ſpeak with him about Buſineſs, we were admitted.

L. C. J. I ſee your Confinements are not ſo great as you would make them to be, or he would have us think: I ask you once more, whether you can ſay, that during the Months of June and July it was not poſſible for him to make a Step to London, and you never the wiſer?

Winford. I am very confident he did not, he was not abſent long enough to do it.

Sir Cr. Levins. You ſaid juſt now, You could not ſay poſitively, but he might be abſent for five or ſix Days.

Winford. I do not believe he did; for he had no Linen with him, which he uſed to have, when he went to London.

L. C. J. But, ſuppoſing he had no Linen, might he not go to London, and you not know it?

Winford. I can't tell whether he was abſent, or no, long enough to do it.

Gavan. Pray, my Lord, let me ſpeak; as I live, an innocent Man will be loſt elſe. He ſays expreſly, I was in Town in July; and gives this Argument for it, That Mr. Aſhby was in Town, and he met me with him.

L. C. J. No, no; Mr. Oates was not ſo poſitive: He ſays, it was either in June or July; but he rather thinks it was July. But, Miſtreſs, might not he, in the beginning of July, be abſent ſo long, as a Man might go to London, and return again; in the firſt three Weeks of July, I mean?

Winford. My Lord, I cannot charge my Memory, becauſe I did not know what I ſhould be asked, and ſo could not recollect my ſelf. I only ſay I am confident of it, becauſe he always told me, when he went ſuch a Journey, that I might make Proviſion of Linen to fit him for it.

L. C. J. Your Reaſons are weak; Becauſe he uſed to tell you, that you might get him Linen: Men, upon extraordinary Occaſions, do extraordinary Things; ſo that you are not to govern your ſelf by what he uſed to do, in his acquainting you, or you in providing his Linen. This was no ordinary Errand, and therefore I don't ask you whether he had Linen from you, or no; but you are only to charge your ſelf with remembring whether he could not be abſent long enough out of your ſight, to have been ſuch a Journey?

Gavan. Pray, my Lord, give me fair Play. He does charge it expreſly, and is preciſe to a Day: He ſaith, I was here in July, after that Aſhby was come to Town, and before that he went out of Town: And he ſays, That Aſhby came to Town in the middle of July, and went out of Town about the latter end of July, or beginning of Auguſt. Now, my Lord, I ſay this, he ſaying that Aſhby came to Town the middle of July, and ſtaid there a Fortnight, and then went to the Bath, and that I came to Town while that he was there; if I prove that I was in Staffordſhire, from the 15th or 16th of July, to the end of the Month, then I ſhall clear my ſelf evidently; for he does, in effect, charge me to be here, ſome Time in that Fortnight's Time, and I prove, that all the latter Part of July I was in the Country.

L. C. J. He does not charge it to a Day, but he ſays it was about a Fortnight.

Dr. Oates. Mr. Aſhby came to Town in the beginning or middle of July; I rather think it was the middle, but I dare not, upon my Oath, be poſitive, as to the Time; and in that Time that Mr. Aſhby ſtaid in Town, Mr. Gavan came to London: For I remember, he ſaid he would go and ſee Father Aſhby, who was then at Wild-houſe.

L. C. J. Prove where you were now, all July. Call your Witneſſes.

Gavan. I prove that I was at Wolverhampton, from the 23d, to the end of the Month.

L. C. J. Call your Witneſſes to prove where you were the beginning, that can ſpeak expreſly to it.

Gavan. My Lord, I have them not here.

L. C. J. Why then would you make us loſe all this Time?

Gavan. My Lord, I will tell you; hear the Words of an ingenuous Man: Being as I was, innocent, not knowing what they intended to charge me with, I, in my Mind, run over all that I could imagine I had at any time done, that they could lay hold on. If I had been guilty of any Thing, my own Conſcience would have told me of it; and I ſhould have provided to have given ſome Anſwer to it: But being innocent, I was to ranſack my Memory, to ſum up all the Paſſages of my Life; where I had been, what I had ſaid, what I had done, that would give them any Occaſion of accuſing me. And becauſe I did imagine they might think I was here the 24th of April, I brought Witneſſes for that; and becauſe I did imagine that they might ſpeak of ſome Conſults in April, I ſent up for ſuch Witneſſes, at my own Charge, as could teſtify where I was then.

L. C. J. But you have not one Proteſtant, that teſtifies for you.

Gavan. And now, my Lord, I humbly caſt my ſelf upon the Honour and Juſtice of this Honourable and Juſt Court; to which I ſubmit my ſelf, with with all my Heart and Soul, having uſed all the Remedies I can. I have cleared my ſelf, as to the main Day, the 24th of April, whereon all the pretended Plot lies: And I'll bring Witneſſes that ſhall ſwear, I was not in London in Auguſt; and if my eternal Salvation lay upon it, I could averr, I was not in London: And I wiſh I may be made an Example of Juſtice before all the World (in the Sight of God I ſpeak it) if I be not the moſt innocent Perſon in the World. And, my Lord, ſeeing there is only his Oath for it, and my Denial, I have only one Demand; I don't know, whether it be not an extravagant one or no; if it be, I don't deſire to have it granted.

L. C. J. What is that Demand?

Gavan. You know, that in the beginning of the Church (this learned and juſt Court muſt needs know that) that for One Thouſand Years together, it was a Cuſtom, and grew to a conſtant Law, for the Trial of Perſons accuſed of any Capital Offence, where there was only the Accuſer's Oath, and the Accuſed's Denial, for the Priſoner to put himſelf upon the Trial of Ordeal, to evidence his own Innocency.

L. C. J. North. We have no ſuch Law now.

L. C. J. You are very fanciful, Mr. Gavan; you believe that your Cunning in asking ſuch a Thing, will take much with the Auditory; but this is only an artificial Varniſh: You may do this with hopes of having it take with thoſe that are Roman Catholicks, who are ſo ſuperſtitious as to believe Innocency upon ſuch Deſires; but we have a plain Way of underſtanding here in England, and that help'd very much by the Proteſtant Religion: So that there is ſcarce any Artifice big enough to impoſe upon us. You ask a Thing that ſounds much of a Pretence to Innocency, and that it would be a mighty Suffering, if you ſhould miſcarry, becauſe you ask that you know you can't have. Our Eyes and our Underſtandings are left us, tho' you do not leave their Underſtandings to your Proſelites: But you are miſtaken, if you think to impoſe that upon us that you do upon them; and you do ſo impoſe upon them. But I'll tell you, there is ſcarce any Man with us that can be a Papiſt: For you cannot deceive and gull us, as you have done all that you have perverted to your Way.

Gavan. Is it any Harm, my Lord, to ask, whether I might not be ſo Tried?

L. C. J. North. Look you here, Mr. Gavan, the Time is far ſpent; if you have any thing to ſay, we will hear you; if you have any Witneſſes, call them, and we will examine them: But if not, the other Priſoners muſt be admitted to make their Defence, as well as you.

Gavan. All theſe Six can prove, that I was at Wolverhampton the laſt Week in July.

Then another Witneſs ſtood up, for him.

Gavan. Where was I in July?

Witneſs. I cannot ſpeak to all July; but, my Lord, I can declare, that Mr. Gavan was in Staffordſhire, the laſt Week of July, every Day, I am confident.

L. C. J. Where was he, the firſt three Weeks in July?

Witneſs. I cannot ſpeak as to that; but in the laſt Week in July, he came to an Apartment of an Houſe that I lived in.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Gavan, you ſee what this Evidence is; ſhe ſays, that you were in Staffordſhire the laſt Week in July, for you had an Apartment in the Houſe ſhe lived in. Call another.

Who ſtood up.

L. C. J. Where was Mr. Gavan in July laſt?

2 Witneſs. My Lord, I ſaw him my ſelf, at the latter end of July, for very many Days; for he was in a Room of the Houſe that I lived in, I am ſure, moſt of the laſt Week.

L. C. J. Where was he the laſt Fortnight?

2 Witneſs. I am confident I ſaw him all the laſt Fortnight, but I cannot be poſitive.

L. C. J. Call another. Who ſtood up.

L. C. J. Where was Mr. Gavan in July?

3 Witneſs. My Lord, I lived in the ſame Town with him, and I don't remember that he was out all July, but the laſt Week he was in our Houſe.

L. C. J. Well, call another. Who ſtood up.

L. C. J. Where was Mr. Gavan in July laſt?

4 Witneſs. He was, in July laſt, the laſt Week, in a part of our Houſe.

L. C. J. So then he came home, from London, the 23d or 24th of July. Well, Mr. Gavan, have you any more Witneſſes, to any other Purpoſe? For here are enough to this.

Gavan. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Mr. Whitebread, have you any Witneſſes to call?

Whitebread. My Lord, I have only this, and I deſire to be heard in this Point, to prove that Mr. Oates was miſtaken in his Evidence that he gave at the laſt Trial, againſt Mr. Ireland.

L. C. J. Look you, I muſt break in upon you; you have been told ſo often, all of you have been told it, and yet you are upon the former Trials again. You are now upon your Trial for your Life, if you could have diſproved any thing that he ſaid at a former Trial, you ſhould have taken a legal Way, and convicted him of Perjury; but now, to charge him with a Printed Paper, is not fair. You muſt ſpeak to what he ſays now.

Whitebread. He ſays the ſame now. But all that I ſay is this, If he be not honeſt, he can be Witneſs in no Caſe. I ſuppoſe, if any one can prove him not Probus Teſtis, his Teſtimony is not to be receiv'd in any Caſe.

L. C. J. But how will you prove that? Come on, I'll teach you a little Logick; if you will come to contradict a Witneſs, you ought to do it in a Matter which is the preſent Debate here; for if you would convict him of any thing that he ſaid in Ireland's Trial, we muſt Try Ireland's Cauſe over again. But if you will ſay any thing againſt what he ſays now, do.

Whitebread. That which I would alledge is this, If he be convicted of Perjury in one Caſe, he is not to be believed in another.

L. C. J. You ſay right, if he be convicted.

Whitebread. He is not only then an incompetent Witneſs, for he cannot be ſaid to be probus teſtis, but he is improbus. Now this is that I can prove.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Nay, you muſt ſhew it by a Record.

L. C. J. You cannot have ſo little Underſtanding; you that have been, and were to be, ſo great a Man among them; had been Provincial, and was to have been ſomewhat elſe. I have told you already, that to prove him to be a Man that hath no Faith in him, he muſt be Convicted. You muſt have Indicted him, and convicted him, of the Thing wherein he did commit Perjury, and then he had been prepared to juſtify himſelf. But ſhall you come now, and at this your Trial, and prove what he ſaid at Staley's Trial, and Coleman's Trial, and Ireland's Trial? And muſt We examine what Matters have receiv'd a Verdict and a Judgment There? For, conſider what will be the Conſequence of it; if it ſhould be falſe, you there Arraign a Verdict. You ſhould have convicted him of the Falſhood firſt.

Whitebread. I deſire the Jury to take notice, that he does not ſtick to the Teſtimony that he gave then, for if he does, it was falſe.

L. C. J. They muſt not take notice of any thing that was done at a former Trial, unleſs it be ſpoken of now.

L. C. J. North. Do not call any Witneſſes to prove what he ſaid then, but to diſprove what he hath ſaid now.

L. C. J. 'Tis a pretty hard matter to make a Prieſt underſtand one, for what I ſee. If the Witneſs ſhall not gain Credit with the Jury, that he came over with Sir Thomas Preſton, Sir John Warner; if they are ſatisfied by thoſe many Witneſſes, Ten or Twelve, at leaſt, that it is falſe, they ought not to believe him; but as to that Teſtimony, they ought to believe your Witneſſes; but he is not preſently guilty of Perjury: For if they ſhould not give Credit to Mr. Oates, you muſt indict him, and another Jury muſt paſs upon him, before he is convicted: For it is one Thing to be Forſworn and Perjured, and another Thing to be proved ſo; and he is not proved to be ſo, but by a Record for that Purpoſe.

Harcourt. If ſo be our Witneſſes can't be look'd upon as good Witneſſes, then there can be no Commerce abroad in any other Country.

L. C. J. They are, no doubt, good Witneſſes, till they be proved otherwiſe; and they are left to the Jury to believe as they think fit.

Harcourt. Now here are divers Things that are brought againſt my ſelf, by Mr. Bedlow, Mr. Prance, Mr. Oates, and Mr. Dugdale; if the Witneſſes that I bring, becauſe they are Roman Catholicks, are not good Witneſſes, then I am in a hard Caſe.

L. C. J. North. Look then, you miſtake the Thing; thoſe that are not Witneſſes, we don't hear at all; but our hearing them at all, proves that we look upon them as good Witneſſes. But when a Man is a Witneſs, he is either of more Credit, or of leſs Credit, according to the Circumſtances; and 'tis a proper Queſtion to ask them, whether they are Roman Catholicks? But they are Witneſſes, without all Queſtion.

Harcourt. I ſay, my Lord, theſe Perſons are known to be every one of them very bad and flagitious Perſons, and that every one of them have undertaken this Courſe, meerly to get a Livelihood: They are Men of deſperate Fortunes, they get a Living by ſwearing faſt, they find that the beſt Trade.

L. C. J. North. If you have any other Witneſſes, we will hear them: If you have no other Witneſſes, then we muſt hear what the King's Council reply, and then it will be your Turn to ſay what you can in your Defence.

Gavan. I have Witneſſes here: It is not indeed a poſitive Evidence, but a negative Evidence; and I have a Brother and a Siſter in Town, and upon my Salvation I never came to Town, but I came to their Houſe.

L. C. J. That will ſignify nothing. Mr. Harcourt, have you any more Witneſſes? If you have them, pray call them.

Harcourt. 'Tis in vain to call them, if they be not to be believed, becauſe they are Roman Catholicks.

Sir Cr. Levins. 'Tis a Miſtake, we do not refuſe any Witneſſes, becauſe they are Roman Catholicks.

L. C. J. No, we have not refuſed any one Point yet.

L. C. J. North. If you have any more, pray call them, and don't ſpend the Time.

L. C. J. Call a Prieſt or two, if you will, we will hear them.

Harcourt. Mr. Oates did accuſe me of paying fourſcore Pounds at my Chamber, and he did ſay afterwards it was at Wild-houſe. I have Perſons to juſtify what was done at my own Chamber; and he ſays Mr. Ireland was by, now here are Witneſſes to prove, that Mr. Ireland was in Staffordſhire all the Month of Auguſt, therefore he could not be preſent.

L. C. J. Does he ſay any ſuch Thing now?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. That was urged before; pray do not inſiſt upon that, it hath receiv'd a Trial.

L. C. J. I'll tell you what he ſays, and I'll ask him the Queſtion: Dr. Oates, it is ſuppoſed by your Teſtimony, that Mr. Ireland and Mr. Harcourt were together, when this fourſcore Pounds was paid, for the Villains that went to Windſor to murder the King?

Dr. Oates. I never ſaid ſuch a Word.

Harcourt. Here it is in the Trial.

L. C. J. I ſtand not by the printed Trial, it is no Record in Law. In ſhort, Were Mr. Ireland and Mr. Harcourt together at that Time?

Dr. Oates. No, they were not.

Gavan. He did then ſay, that he did receive of Mr. Ireland, the 2d of September, 20*s.* that he borrowed of him; now the 2d of September he was at Boſcobel.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I was not poſitive as to the Day; but as near as I remember, (thoſe were the Words I ſaid) it was the 2d of September; but whether it was the 1ſt, 2d, 7th, 8th or 9th, I would not be poſitive in it.

Then the Priſoners called Pendrel and his Wife, and Gifford and his Wife; and Gifford ſtood up.

Gifford. My Lord, I was here the laſt Seſſions, where I did teſtify the ſeeing of Mr. Ireland in Staffordſhire, on the 24th of Auguſt, Bartholomew-day, and the next Day after; at which Time Mr. Oates ſaid that he ſaw him here in Town. But Mr. Oates could not be particular in every Thing; but at laſt he came to a Circumſtance, and averred, that the 1ſt or 2d of September, he did receive 20*s.* of Mr. Ireland, in Harcourt's Chamber; he ſaid it was about the Faſt-day.

Dr. Oates. That was as near as I remembred.

Gifford. Here is in Court at leaſt ſix People that know it; I ſaw him ſeveral other of thoſe Days there; but theſe ſix People converſed with him every Day.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. How do you know all that?

L. C. J. North. Come, come, you muſt not ſpeak, as to what he ſaid in Ireland's Trial.

L. C. J. What time was it that Mr. Harcourt and Mr. Ireland conferred together about this ſame Buneſs?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I do not charge Ireland, but I charge Harcourt with being at Wild-houſe, and that there Coleman met him, and that there was the greateſt part of the Money, which was carried back to Harcourt's Chamber, and given to the Perſon that was to carry it down to Windſor; but Mr. Coleman

Coleman was gone away before, and had left a Guinea behind him, which was given to the Meſſenger for Expedition.

L. C. J. I am miſtaken, if you have not teſtified that Ireland was in Town in Auguſt and September with Harcourt.

Dr. Oates. Ireland took his Leave of London betwixt the 8th and the 12th of Auguſt, as to go to St. Omers.

L. C. J. Here is the Matter, they muſt have Right, tho' there be never ſo much Time loſt, and Patience ſpent. Say they, We muſt prove and contradict Men by ſuch Matters as we can; People may ſwear downright Things, and 'tis impoſſible to contradict them; but we will call Witneſſes to prove thoſe Particulars that can be proved: Say where Mr. Ireland was in Auguſt?

Dr. Oates. He took his Leave of us in Town in Auguſt, and that was between the 8th and 12th, at Harcourt's Chamber.

L. C. J. What do you infer from Ireland's being there then?

Dr. Oates. I'll tell you what I deſign in it: Your Lordſhip may perceive that I did methodize my Evidence according to the Time; for I ſaid, this was our Buſineſs in April, this in July, and now we come to the Buſineſs of Auguſt, ſaid I, we took our Leaves of Mr. Ireland between the 8th and 12th. I ſaid, in July Mr. Fenwick was out of Town, but then, if your Lordſhip remembers, I ſaid, he was in Town, and took his Leave of Mr. Ireland, betwen the 8th and the 12th of Auguſt.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Ireland in Fenwick's Company at that time in Auguſt?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, he was, when he took his Leave.

L. C. J. Did they talk then of this Buſineſs?

Dr. Oates. They took their Leaves of one another, but as to what particular Things of the Plot they ſpoke about, I don't remember.

L. C. J. Look you now, mind what he ſays, Ireland and Fenwick were together in Auguſt, between the 8th and the 12th; but being asked, Whether they were met on purpoſe to talk of the Plot? He ſays, he does not remember the Particulars.

Here the Lady Southcott, her Son, and her Daughter, were call'd.

L. C. J. Did you ſay, that Fenwick, there at the Bar, had Converſe with Ireland in Auguſt, for the carrying on of the Plot?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. My Rule is this, in doubtful Caſes, when Men are upon their Lives, I had rather hear what is impertinent, than not let them make a full Defence.

L. C. J. North. I had rather hear Things at a Venture, than forbid Things at a Venture.

Lady Southcott ſtood up.

L. C. J. How long were you in Mr. Ireland's Company?

Lady Southcott. From the 5th of Auguſt to the 16th.

L. C. J. What every Day?

Lady Southcott. Yes, every Day.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, here is Sarah Pain, who before hath teſtified what ſhe hath known in this Matter. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I deſire ſhe may be call'd, in readineſs to ſpeak to it.

L. C. J. Are you ſure it was the 5th?

Lady Southcott. Yes, as ſure as I can be of any Thing.

Mr. Recorder. Dr. Oates, you had beſt keep your Evidence entire till the laſt.

Then Sir John Southcott was called, and appeared.

L. C. J. Did you know Mr. Ireland?

Sir John Southcott. Yes, I did know him by Face.

L. C. J. Where did you ſee him?

Sir John Southcott. I ſaw him, the 5th of Auguſt, at St. Albans.

L. C. J. And did he travel along with you?

Sir John Southcott. Yes, he did travel along with us the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th.

L. C. J. How many Days did he travel along with you?

Sir John Southcott. He travell'd along with us four Days together, I am ſure.

L. C. J. What from the 5th to the 9th?

Sir John Southcott. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Is this all that you can ſay?

Sir John Southcott. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. But we would know where he was afterwards, did you ſee him after the 9th?

Sir John Southcott. My Lord, I ſaw him at St. Albans, and we went from thence to Northampton, and from thence to Coventry, and from thence to my Lord Aſton's, that is four Days; and I ſaw him Thurſday, I ſaw him Friday, Saturday, and Monday following. Tueſday I had occaſion to go further into the Country, and he went along with us; ſo I ſaw him Tueſday, Wedneſday, Thurſday and Friday afterwards.

L. C. J. Why then you ſaw him at leaſt twelve Days?

Sir John Southcott. Yes.

L. C. J. Have you any more?

Then Mr. Edward Southcott ſtood up.

L. C. J. Were you here when Ireland was Tried?

Sir John Southtott. No.

L. C. J. Did you ſee Mr. Ireland in Auguſt laſt?

Mr. Southcott. The 3d of Auguſt he came down to my Lord Aſton's at Stanmore, they ſaid ſo; but I cannot ſwear he came that Night, but I ſaw him very early the next Morning; the 5th we went to St. Albans, and we kept on till we came to Tixall; and I was in his Company from the 4th to the 16th.

L. C. J. Why, you hear what he ſays, He was in Company with him every Day from the 4th to the 16th.

Gavan. Call Mrs. Harewell, and her Daughter, Mrs. Gifford, and Mrs. Pendrel.

Then Mrs. Harewell ſtood up.

L. C. J. Did you ſee Mr. Ireland in Auguſt laſt?

Harewell. I ſaw Ireland in Auguſt laſt, the 17th Day: He came then to my Houſe at Wolverhampton, and there he continued every Day, and lay in my Houſe every Night, till the 26th Day.

Then young Mrs. Harewell ſtood up.

Harewell. Mr. Ireland came to our Houſe in Staffordſhire the 17th of Auguſt, and ſtay'd there till the 26th; I ſaw him every Day, unleſs it was Friday, the Day before Bartholomew-Day, when he went to Litchfield and returned again.

Gavan. My Lord, there is a Priſoner now in Newgate that can teſtifie the ſame.

L. C. J. North. Would you ask your Fellow if you be a Thief? he is in for the ſame Offence.

Gavan.

Gavan. My Lord I desire to know, if a Man be not convicted of the same Offence, whether he be not a good Witness?

L. C. J. North. If he stand charged of the same Plot, his Evidence is of little weight.

Then Elizabeth Keiling stood up.

L. C. J. Did you see Mr. Ireland in August?

Keiling. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. Where did you see him?

Keiling. I saw him at Wolverhampton, there he was from Saturday the 17th, to Monday, and then I went to see my Mother, and came back again on Thursday, and found him there, and there he was till the 26th.

Gavan. Call Mr. Pendrell and his Wife.

Then Pendrell stood up.

L. C. J. When did you see Mr. Ireland?

Pendrell. I saw him the second and third of September.

L. C. J. Where did you see him?

Pendrell. At Boscobel.

L. C. J. And what, did you see him in August?

Pendrell. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. How do you know you saw him then?

Pendrell. My Wife being paid for his Diet, set down the Day.

L. C. J. What, he came to sojourn with you, did he?

Pendrell. They were with me for their Meals, and so my Wife set it down,

L. C. J. Why, do you set down the Day of the Month when any one comes to you?

Pendrell. Yes, my Lord, when we are paid for their Diet, we do.

L. C. J. What, do you keep a publick House?

Pendrell. I keep the Royal Oak.

L. C. J. Methinks you should have a great deal of Company if you Live there; and 'tis hard you should charge your self to remember a particular Person you did not know before.

Pendrell. My Lord, he told me his Name was Ireland, and several others did so too.

L. C. J. You had as good have let such trivial Evidences as this alone. But go on.

Then Mrs. Pendrell stood up.

L. C. J. Do you know Mr. Ireland?

Mrs. Pendrell. I did know by Report it was he.

L. C. J. Where did you see him in August or September?

Mrs. Pendrell. At Boscobel, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you ever see him before that time?

Mrs. Pendrell. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do you know it was the same Man that suffered?

Mrs. Pendrell. I will take my Oath of it.

L. C. J. How! when you never saw him before that time?

Mrs. Pendrell. I was in Town when he died.

Then stood up Mrs. Gifford.

L. C. J. When did you see Mr. Ireland?

Gifford. My Lord, Mr. Ireland came to Wolverhampton the 17th of August, and he stayed there till the 26th it was of a Monday, I remember it by several Circumstances.

L. C. J. Did you know Mr. Ireland?

Gifford. I never saw him before.

L. C. J. Do you know it was the same that died?

Gifford. My Lord, here was my Brother in Town, who saw him executed, and he did assure me he was the same: And I saw him again the second of September, and the seventh of September again, and the tenth and eleventh: My Lord he was the same Man, I believe, because my Brother told me so.

Mr. Gifford. I saw him in the Country, and I saw him executed.

Then another Mrs. Gifford stood up,

Mrs. Gifford. I saw him at Pancras Fair in Staffordshire.

L. C. J. Was it the same Man that was Executed?

Mrs. Gifford. My Lord, I cannot say that, I did not see him suffer; but my Sister and I were at the Window, and she shew'd him to me, and said that was Mr. Ireland, and told me how long he had been in England.

L. C. J. How do you know that was the Man that was Executed? did you see him tried here?

Mrs. Gifford. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. And that was the same Man.

Mrs. Gifford. Yes it was, my Lord.

L. C. J. When was it your Sister shew'd you him?

Mrs. Gifford. I saw him upon the seventh of September.

Then stood up one Mr. Bedle.

L. C. J. When did you see Mr. Ireland?

Bedle. I saw him at a Place called Millage in Staffordshire the second of September.

L. C. J. Are you a Roman Catholick?

Bedle. If I must make a confession of my Faith, I will. But I saw him there, and they said it was Mr. Ireland the Jesuit.

L. C. J. Had you no Acquaintance with him before?

Bedle. No.

L. C. J. How do you know it is the same Man that suffered?

Bedle. I do not know that, but I suppose it was the same.

Turner. I am accused for being at Tixall at a Consult in September, I desire to know who saw me there, for I have not been there these Four Years.

L. C. J. Mr. Dugdale saw you there.

Turner. What Witnesses besides?

L. C. J. None but he for that.

Mr. Recorder. Hath Mr. Fenwick any more Witnesses to call?

Fenwick. My Lord, I have not any.

Then was Captain Hill called.

Fenwick. My Lord, he can prove something against Mr. Bedlow: He says, he lived in good repute; but the Captain will tell you, he was in the Marshalsea, and lived a poor mean Life, and all the time fed upon the Basket.

L. C. J. North. He was guilty of the same Treasons that you are guilty of, there is his fault.

L. C. J. No doubt he was a Naughty Man, he was with you in this Plot.

Fenwick. I can prove by Sir James Butler's Clerk that he cheated a Cutler of a Silver hilted Sword.

Then Sir James Butler's Clerk was called, but he having more than one; and the Person meant, not being there, there could nothing be examined about that.

L. C. J. North.

L. C. J. North. He hath had the King's Pardon for all that.

Fenwick. He was forced to run the Country for a many Cheats, and was forced to borrow 4 or 5 s. to redeem his Boots. My Lord, does his Pardon make him a good Witneſs? Then we will prove ſomething ſince his Pardon.

L. C. J. No doubt he was bad enough while he was with you.

Whitebread. My Lord, I think I have a plain Demonſtration againſt Mr. Bedlow ſince his Pardon; he did at my laſt Trial ſay, that he had nothing to ſay againſt me, and now he comes and gives freſh Evidece againſt me.

L. C. J. North. That is an Objection that will not take away his Evidence, but only goes to the leſſening of the credit of it. He ſays he was in Treaty with Mr. Reading about you, and the Lords in the Tower; and to beget a Confidence in him that the Lords in the Tower ſhould receive favour from him, and come off by his means, he was to be eaſie to you too, which made him leſſen his Evidence at that time. This is that he ſays, the weight of it muſt be left to the Jury. And he ſaid at that time he had more to ſay at Time and Place convenient.

Whitebread. There is no ſuch thing in the Trial. He hath alledged great Matters againſt me, therefore it is Evident he did falſifie his Oath; for if he were to ſwear the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and he did not ſay the whole truth, he is perjured; if he did, he can ſay nothing againſt me now.

L. C. J. North. Mr. Whitebread, you have your Objection, and it muſt be obſerved to the Jury. Your repeating of things ſignifie nothing.

Then Captain Hill ſtood up.

Fenwick. Pray Sir, what do you know of Mr. Bedlow?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But don't ask any thing before the Pardon.

Capt. Hill. I knew him in the Marſhalſea.

Fenwick. In what condition was he there, Sir?

Capt. Hill. He was a poor Man, as I be, and lived upon the Basket.

Harcourt. How long ago is it ſince you knew him there?

Capt. Hill. In May was Twelve-Month.

L. C. J. That was long before his Pardon. But he might be an honeſt Man for all that, tho' he were as poor as you. Are you an honeſt Man?

Capt. Hill. Yes, I think ſo.

L. C. J. And ſo might he be. Well, have you any more?

Priſoners. No.

Sir Cr. Levins. Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the Priſoners, and they have had a great deal of time to make their Defence; but the greateſt part of their Defence hath been to invalidate the Teſtimony of Mr. Oates; and what is the Evidence they have brought againſt him? they tell you firſt, That he did not come over in that Company that he ſays he came over with. And whereas he hath ſworn he was here the 24*th* of April, they have taken a great deal of Pains by fifteen or ſixteen Witneſſes to prove that he was all the time at St. Omers; and that Sir John Warner, and Sir Thomas Preſton, whom he tells you came over in Company with him, never ſtir'd from the Places of their Reſidence, that is Liege and Watton, all that time: But this, Gentlemen, you muſt obſerve, that if Mr. Oates were out of the Caſe, all theſe Perſons except Mr. Turner are proved guilty of the Treaſon they are charged with; and yet I ſhall ſet up his Teſtimony, and make him clear, notwithſtanding whatſoever hath been alledged againſt him. Gentlemen, to take them in order, Mr. Whitebread hath Mr. Dugdale, Mr. Bedlow, and Mr. Prance, to prove him Guilty, let what will come of Mr. Oates, all of them ſpeak to him.

L. C. J. Prance, do you ſpeak any thing againſt Mr. Whitebread?

Mr. Prance. No.

Mr. Recorder. It was Fenwick and Harcourt.

Sir Cr. Levins. But there is Bedlow and Dugdale againſt Mr. Whitebread, and therefore, Gentlemen, there are two have ſworn againſt him, beſides Oates; and there is two againſt Mr. Fenwick at leaſt; nay, there are three, for beſides Oates there is Bedlow and Prance; as to Mr. Harcourt, there is Bedlow, Dugdale, and Prance, beſides Mr. Oates; as to Mr. Gavan, there is Oates and Dugdale; indeed there is none but Oates and Dugdale againſt Turner; ſo that as to the three firſt however there are two Witneſſes beſides Mr. Oates, that is, againſt Mr. Whitebread, Mr. Fenwick, and Mr. Harcourt. Now as for Mr. Oates's Teſtimony, and what they have to ſay to him; in the firſt Place, they have brought a young Gentleman, Mr. Hilſley, and he ſays he did not come over with him, and there 'tis one againſt one, but Dr. Oates hath ſworn it, and hath given you ſuch convincing Circumſtances how he loſt his Money, &c. ſo that I leave it to you which of the two is in the Right, and ought to be believed. But then, my Lord, as to the reſt of the Witneſſes, here are a great many brought over to prove that Mr. Oates was all the while at St. Omers; but I ſhall bring you a conſiderable number of Witneſſes to prove that Dr. Oates was then in London, and that all theſe Perſons are miſtaken. They do all pitch upon the firſt of May, to fix it upon a time wherein he ſays he was here in Town: But Gentlemen, I hope you did obſerve, that as to other Things and Time that were not ſo neceſſary as to this Matter, there they were pleaſed to miſtake, and to differ one from another, to contradict one another; for ſome of them ſaid he went away and left St. Omers the 10*th* Day of June, others the 23*d*, others, which was the ſame Flemiſh Gardiner, that he ſtaid till July. Truly half that variance in the time which is neceſſary would ſerve our Turn, we are but for eight Days time, that is, he was not above eight or ten Days here, truly theſe Gentlemen will be ſure to ſpeak punctually to all thoſe eight Days that hurt the Priſoners, but they will vary thirty Days at another time that hurts them not. Why may they not be miſtaken as well with that portion of Time, as they were in the other wherein they ſo much differed one from another?

But I ſhall give you moſt infallible proof by and by, that Mr. Oates was in England at that time that he ſaid he was in England. My Lord, as to that of Sir John Warner, truly we have ſent for a Witneſs, but we did not know of the Objection before; they have now brought you the Gardiner, and he did ſay poſitively at firſt that Sir John Warner was there all that while, but being asked again how he knew it, he ſaid it was the talk of the Country, and ſo ſome of the Witneſſes did ſpeak to Sir Tho. Preſton. But then I did deſire to know of theſe Witneſſes, whether theſe Perſons were never abſent from theſe Places or not, they told told me they were abſent for ſome time in the Vacancy.

Gavan. That was in Auguſt.

Sir Cr. Levins. You are very good at expounding I know, but what thoſe Vacancies were I am not certain; but being apt to miſtake a little, they might miſtake the Time too, and they might extend their Journey beyond their Vacancy. Mr. Gavan he hath made a mighty Defence I muſt confeſs, endeavouring to prove that he was out of Town all June and July, and in April and May before, and truly he hath brought ſome Witneſſes that have ſpoken very far for him as to thoſe Months, but I will deſire you to obſerve, as I know you did, that the three laſt Witneſſes that knew him very well did affirm poſitively that he was there the laſt Week in July, but being asked to the Week before that, and the Week before that, they could not be poſitive. And, under favour, by that Evidence you will believe rather that he was not there, for if ſo be they could ſo poſitively Remember for the laſt Week, why ſhould they not be as poſitive for the two Weeks before? why theſe two Weeks were enough to ſerve our Turn, for it was towards the latter end of July that which Mr. Oates hath ſworn upon Mr. Gavan, that he was in Town, and talked of the ſame Matters which he had written the Letter about. And therefore it is much to be preſumed, that becauſe the Witneſſes will take upon them as to the laſt Week, they are ſure he was at Wolverhampton, but as to the two other Weeks they could not be ſure, that they ſpeak with ſome Conſcience, and therefore it may be true that he was here. And the Woman ſaid ſhe could not ſay but poſſibly he might make ſuch a Journey and ſhe never the wiſer. So that under favour, Gentlemen, all that which Mr. Gavan hath ſo induſtriouſly endeavoured to lay upon Mr. Oates, does ſhrink into a very ſlender Evidence, and that it might well be he was at London at the Time that Oates ſays, the three laſt Witneſſes ſpeaking poſitively only to the laſt Week in July.

Then truly, my Lord, they are fixed upon another great Matter to blemiſh Mr. Oates as to Mr. Ireland, a Perſon that is dead and out of the way. Mr. Ireland hath been hanged upon that Evidence, ſo far it was believed, but now after all this, will theſe Gentlemen come to queſtion the Evidence that was given againſt Mr. Ireland. They have likewiſe, my Lord, brought my Lady Southcott, and ſome other Perſons, who give you an Evidence concerning Mr. Ireland, that he ſhould not be here at this Time; but, Gentlemen, under favour, Mr. Oates hath ſworn before, and he hath now ſworn it again, that Mr. Ireland was at that Time in London, and, Gentlemen, I will confirm him in that by another Witneſs that did did ſee him here in Town at that Time. And when you have two Witneſſes for the King upon their Oaths come and teſtifie it, I hope you will believe them, rather than other Perſons that teſtifie only by hearſay. It was the Matter then in Iſſue, and had ſaved his Life if it had been true, but tho' it be now ſettled, and none could think it would be again ſtarted, they would make that an Objection, but by chance we have a Witneſs ſtill to give you ſatisfaction, that Mr. Ireland was in London at that Time that Mr. Oates did ſwear him to be. We will begin with that Witneſs about Ireland. And then we will call our Witneſſes to prove that Mr. Oates was in England, and did come over when he ſaid he did. Call Sarah Paine. Who was ſworn.

Sir Cr. Levins. What time did you ſee Mr. Ireland in London? did you ſee him in Auguſt laſt?

S. Paine. I ſaw him about ſeven or eight Days before I came to my Lord Chamberlain, and that was about a Week before the King went to Windſor.

L.C. J. Where did you ſee him?

S. Paine. At his own Door in Ruſſel-Street.

L. C. J. Did you ſpeak to him?

S. Paine. No, I knew him very well, and ſaw him as I came by.

Sir Cr. Levins. Had not you carried many Letters to him?

S. Paine. Yes, ſeveral Letters.

Sir Cr. Levins. But where did you live before?

S. Paine. I lived at Mr. Grove's.

Sir Cr. Levins. Did not Mr. Ireland uſe to come there too?

S. Paine. Yes, he did often.

L. C. J. Was any one talking with Ireland then?

S. Paine. No.

Sir Cr. Levins. How long did you look upon him? Did you ſee him go in? did you ſee his Face or his Back?

S. Paine. I ſaw his Face, and made him a Curteſie.

L. C. J. This ſhe ſaid to Ireland's Face.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Your Evidence is that Mr. Ireland went out of Town the 5th of Auguſt, and ſhe ſays ſhe ſaw him about that time, which muſt be the 12th or 14th of Auguſt.

Gavan. How does ſhe prove it? ſhe does not ſay ſhe ſpoke with him.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. She ſwears it.

Sir Cr. Levins. Now we muſt prove what time the King went to Windſor.

L. C. J. Sir Tho. Doleman, what time in Auguſt did the King go to Windſor laſt Summer?

Sir Tho. Doleman. I believe (I cannot charge my memory ſo well) it was the 13th, it was about the 12th or 13th.

L. C. J. Was my Lord Chamberlain there then?

S. Paine. My Lord Chamberlain went after the King.

L. C. J. And when do you ſay you ſaw Ireland?

S. Paine. I ſaw him ſeven or eight Days before I went to my Lord Chamberlain's, which was before my Lord went to Windſor, and that was a Week after the King went thither.

Sir Cr. Levins. Now I'll tell you what ſhe ſays; ſhe ſays ſhe ſaw Ireland a Week before ſhe went to my Lord Chamberlain's, and ſhe ſaw him go into Grove's Houſe, where he did uſually go for Letters; ſhe ſays ſhe ſaw his Face, and made him a Curteſie; and that this was a Week before ſhe went to my Lord Chamberlain's, and that was a Week after the King went to Windſor. Now the time that Mr. Oates pitches upon is between the eighth and the twelfth of Auguſt, which by computation is the time ſhe ſpeaks of.

Gavan. And our Witneſſes go from the third of Auguſt to the fourteenth of September.

Sir Cr. Levins. Call Sir Richard Barker, William Walker, Sarah Ives, &c.

William Walker was firſt Sworn, and bid to ſtand up.

Sir Cr. Levins. Pray, Sir, do you know that Mr. Oates was in England the beginning of laſt Summer? Pray tell your whole knowledge.

Mr. Walker. Yes my Lord, I will. I have known Mr. Titus Oates theſe ſeven Years, and had not ſeen him above five Years; but about two Years ago I did meet him in Newgate-market, and then again in the the latter end of the Month of March 1678, or the beginning of April, I did ſee Mr. Oates in a diſguiſe in a gray Searge Coat, and I think a gray Hat, but I did not underſtand it, nor did I know him to be the Man; and I was very much troubled that I could not recollect my ſelf who he was, and I went to Bed, and could not recollect who he was; but before I roſe in the Morning I did draw him within the Scheme of my knowledge, that it was Titus Oates, and to confirm my Judgment in that, I did go to a Gentlewoman, whoſe name I did not know, but I went thither becauſe it was the ſame place that I had ſeen him at a Year before, to enquire what became of Mr. Oates, and how he did: And when I came to her (in the Morning early, it was the next Day after I had ſeen him in Diſguiſe) I enquired of the Gentlewoman how Mr. Oates did, and ſhe clapped her Hand upon her Counter, being a Tradeſwoman, O, ſaid ſhe, he is an undone Man! Why ſo? ſaid I. Said ſhe, He is turned to the Church of Rome, and he abſconds and hides himſelf, I know not where he is. Then, in plain Terms, ſaid I, I ſaw him later than you, for I ſaw him Yeſterday, between Nine and Ten of the Clock, it was at the upper-end of St. Martin's-Lane, near Leiceſter-Houſe.

Sir Cr. Levins. What time was this?

Mr Walker. This was in April or March laſt was a Twelve-month.

L. C. J. Did you never ſee him more than then?

Mr. Walker. No, I knew his Face ſo well, as I looked back upon him, and he looked back upon me, but it was with ſome kind of Terrour, and he did ſeem to abſcond and hide himſelf.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Walker. It was ſometime from the latter end of March to the middle of April.

L. C. J. Why did you skip the beginning of April?

Mr. Walker. I am not able to remember exactly the Time; for why, I did never think to be called as a Witneſs about it.

L. C. J. Did you ſpeak to him?

Mr. Walker. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. How long before had you ſpoke to him?

Mr. Walker. A Year before, but in his Canonical Habit, and not before of five Years.

L. C. J. North. You will not ſure catch him upon a Day.

L. C. J. But I'll tell you what it does, it contradicts all that your Boys, all your Witneſſes ſay: Tho' it does not go home exactly to the 24th of April, yet, if it be true, and we have no Reaſon to believe it otherwiſe, it diſproves all their Evidence; for they charge him to have been at St. Omers all March, April, and May.

Sir Cr. Levins. Swear Sarah Ives. Which was done.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, we bring Sarah Ives to prove that this ſame Gentleman went to her to enquire of her about me.

L. C. J. Pray Mrs. what did that Miniſter ſay to you, and when, concerning Mr. Oates?

Mrs. Ives. Mr. Walker came to my Shop, and asked me when I ſaw Mr. Oates; ſaid I, I have not ſeen him ſince he went beyond Sea, Then, ſaid he, I have ſeen him later than you, for I was going to Leiceſter Fields, and at the end of St. Martins-lane I ſaw him in a Diſguiſe, and he looked wiſhly back upon me, and I upon him, and, ſaid he, I am certain it was the Man.

L. C. J. What time was this?

Mrs. Ives. It was April was a Twelve-month.

L. C. J. What time in April do you think?

Mrs. Ives. I cannot ſay the Day.

L. C. J. But what time of the Month was it?

Mrs. Ives. I don't juſtly know, I think it was the middle of April, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. Call another Witneſs.

Sir Cr. Levins. Call Mrs. Mayo. Who was ſworn.

Sir Cr. Levins. Well, what ſay you, when did you ſee Dr. Oates in England?

Mayo. I never ſaw his Face till a Week before Whitſontide, or a little after; there was a Young Man, a Servant of Sir Richard Barker's, that knew him a long time before; he came to me and ſaid, Yonder is Mr. Oates hath changed his Coat from a black to a white; what is he! ſaid I, he was a Miniſter, but he is either turned Quaker or Catholick; but, ſaid I, he is not turned Quaker, for he wears a Perriwig, and he fell a laughing and jeering at him; ſaid I, Why do you deride this Gentleman, when he is a friend of Sir Richard Barker's.

L. C. J. Where was Mr. Oates then?

Mayo. He was in the Court-yard, and I was in the Kitchen.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mayo. The Week before Whitſontide.

L. C. J. In what Month?

Mayo. It was in May.

L. C. J. Did you know him before then?

Mayo. No, I did not, but I had heard much of him in the Family.

L. C. J. How ſoon did you ſee him again after that?

Mayo. About a Week after he came and brought another with him, and walked into the Garden, and ſeemed to be diſcontented that they did not ſhew ſuch a Countenance to him as they uſed to do in the Houſe, for the Gentlewomen had heard he was turned Jeſuit, and therefore were very ſhye; that is, Sir Richard's Kinſwomen, my Lady's Siſters Daughters.

L. C. J. Do you know Dr. Oates now?

Mayo. Very well, Sir. Afterwards he came again and walked into the Garden, and the Young Man I ſpoke of before, that is now dead, came again and took notice of him, of the ſtrange Garb he was in; he was in a Room that looked into the Garden, I ſaw him walking there, and ſaid he, Yonder is Oates again, and hath brought another with him; he looked out of the Window, and ſaid he, Prithee look here, does not he look like a Jeſuit? and he that was with him looked back, and if it had not been for that, and the Young Man's Importunity, I had never taken notice of Mr. Oates. After, when I heard he was come over and gave in his Teſtimony about the Plot, I would needs go ſee him; but he ſpoke very ſlightingly to me, and ſeemed to be offended with the Family becauſe they did ſcorn him. Said I, They had no reaſon to countenance you, becauſe we all underſtood you were turned Catholick. They did, ſaid he, look very ſhye upon me. Why, ſaid I, you muſt not be offended, for you know all the Family are no Friends to Jeſuits, and I hope never will be ſo; but I hope, Mr. Oates, you will not forget eaten Bread, becauſe he uſed to be made very much of at Sir Richard Barker's.

Sir Cr. Levins. Is that the Man that you ſaw there?

Mayo. This is the Man, if you will put me to my Oath again I will ſwear it.

Sir Cr. Levins. When was this?

Mayo. It was the Week before Whitſontide, it was in May, for Whitſontide fell in May.

Sir Cr. Levins. Then call Philip Page. Who was ſworn.

Sir Cr. Levins. Do you know Dr. Oates?

Page. Yes, Sir.

Sir Cr. Levins. How long have you known him?

Page. I have known him four or five Years.

L. C. J. Pray did you ſee him in the Year 1678, laſt Year?

Page. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. At what Time?

Page. About the beginning of May.

L. C. J. Where?

Page. At Sir Richard Barker's.

L. C. J. Were you acquainted with him before?

Page. I had ſpoke with him before.

L. C. J. How do you know it was he? did you ſpeak with him then?

Page. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. What Habit was he in?

Page. He had a light-coloured Campaign Coat. I ask'd him, where he had been ſo long a Time, that we had not ſeen him, but he turned away from me, and gave me no Account, but, after he had been in the Houſe, made back again, and away he went, after he enquired for Sir Richard.

L. C. J. How do you know it was in May? why might it not be in April?

Page. It was in the beginning of May, to the beſt of my Knowledge.

L. C. J. By what material Circumſtances do you remember it was in the beginning of May? Is there any thing that puts it into your Mind more particularly?

Page. My Maſter had a Patient at that Time, that was ſick of a Fever.

L. C. J. Where? at Sir Richard Barker's Houſe?

Page. At Iſlington it was.

Jury. We deſire to know what the Patient's Name was, for ſome of us know Iſlington very well.

Page. I have forgot the Name.

Sir Rich. Barker. It was Aldram Milver's Daughter.

L. C. J. It was about that Time in May that you ſaw him?

Page. I did upon my Oath, and I ſpoke with him, and took much Notice of him, he had an old black Hat on that flapp'd, and a pair of Spaniſh-Leather Shoes.

Sir Cr. Levins. Call Sir Richard Barker. Who was ſworn.

L. C. J. Do you know Dr. Oates?

Sir Richard Barker. Yes, my Lord, I have known his Father and him ever ſince he hath been a Child; I ſaw him the laſt Summer.

L. C. J. About what time?

Sir Rich. Barker. At that Time that they have given in Evidence, I have only this to ſay, I was abroad, as my Buſineſs leads me often abroad into the Country, but they told me, Mr. Oates came to my Houſe in a Diſguiſe, and that they believed he was turned either Quaker or Papiſt.

L. C. J. When was this?

Sir Richard Barker. It was, my Lord, to the beſt of my Remembrance, after Whitſontide that they told me, but they told me a Story of him, how that he was in two ſeveral Diſguiſes, the one was a ſhort Hair, and then they thought he was turned Quaker, another Time he had a long Perriwig, and then they thought he was turned Papiſt; and the firſt that told me, was this Fellow here, that is a Coachman of mine, who was mending ſomething of his Coach. It happened, my Lord, upon the viſiting of a Gentleman, that I was very ill, in which Time Mr. Oates was gone, and afterwards, when I was recovered again, he came to my Houſe, to enquire concerning Dr. Tongue.

L. C. J. When did you ſee him firſt?

Sir Richard Barker. It was, my Lord to the beſt of my Remembrance, the latter end of June, or beginning of July, upon my Recovery.

L. C. J. By the Oath that you have taken, I would ask you one Queſtion, Did not you ſee him till June?

Sir Richard Barker. No, my Lord; but my Servants told me, they had ſeen him in May, before Whitſontide.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him in June?

Sir Richard Barker. To the beſt of my Remembrance, 'twas in June.

Then one Butler was ſworn.

L. C. J. Come, do you know Dr. Oates?

Butler. Yes, very well.

L. C. J. How long have you known him?

Butler. I have known him theſe three Years, before he went beyond Sea.

L. C. J. Come, you are upon your Oath, when did you ſee Dr. Oates, and where, the beginning of laſt Summer?

Butler. I ſaw him the beginning of laſt May, at my Maſter's Houſe in Barbican.

L. C. J. Upon what Occaſion? what are you?

Butler. I am Sir Richard Barker's Coachman. And I was making clean my Coach in the Gatehouſe, and in comes Dr. Oates, in May laſt was a Twelvemonth, the beginning of May; with his Hair cut off, cloſe cropt to his Ears, in Gray Cloaths, a Gray Coat like a Shepherd's Coat, a Yorkſhire-Gray, he asked me, whether Dr. Tongue was within? I told him, No: Nevertheleſs he went into the Houſe, and immediately came out again, and ſeemed to be very much diſcontented, but ſaid nothing at all to me, but paſſed by me, and went away.

L. C. J. And did you know him at that Time he ſpoke to you firſt?

Butler. Yes, my Lord, becauſe I knew him three Years before.

L. C. J. Could you have then call'd him by his Name?

Butler. Yes, my Lord, I could.

L. C. J. You ſay he came to inquire for Dr. Tongue, and was diſcontented that he could not ſee him?

Butler. He ſaid nothing to me when he came out, but paſs'd away as one that was troubled.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him afterwards?

Butler. Six Weeks after I ſaw him; and then he had a long black Coat and a Perriwig on.

L. C. J. But are you ſure it was the ſame Man?

Butler. I am, upon my Oath.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did you tell your Maſter of his being there the firſt time?

Butler. I did tell Sir Richard Barker of him, as ſoon as I ſaw him.

L. C. J. Sir Richard, how ſoon did he tell you Oates was firſt there?

Sir Richard Barker. It was ſoon after, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was it in May that he told you he had ſeen him?

Sir Richard Barker. He told me as ſoon as ever I came home, in May, as I remember.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Did he tell you, Mr. Oates was there by Name?

Sir Richard Barker. Yes, my Lord, he did: And when he told me what Habit he was in, I wondred at it.

Dr. Oates. There are ſeveral, my Lord, that did ſee me at that Time; but they are gone into the Country, and I cannot have them now ready: If you pleaſe now to call Mr. Smith, the Schoolmaſter of Iſlington. Who was ſworn.

Sir Cr. Levins. Do you know Dr. Oates?

Mr. Smith. Yes, very well.

Sir Cr. Levins. Pray, Sir, how long have you known him?

Mr. Smith. He was my Scholar at Merchant-Taylors-School, where I was Uſher.

Sir Cr. Levins. When did you ſee him, the beginning of laſt Summer?

Mr. Smith. I ſaw him in the beginning of laſt May, that is, 1678.

L. C. J. Where did you ſee him?

Mr. Smith. He dined with me, at my Houſe in Iſlington.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. What, the Boys at St. Omers now are gone!

L. C. J. Recollect your ſelf well: By the Oath you have taken, did Dr. Oates, in May was Twelvemonth, dine with you?

Mr. Smith. Yes, my Lord, he did; and it was the firſt Monday in May, as I remember.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. And this you ſwear, directly and poſitively?

Mr. Smith. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. C. J. How long did he ſtay there?

Mr. Smith. He ſtaid three or four Hours after: And, may it pleaſe you, my Lord, he was in a Summer-ſuit, and a coloured Ribbon, a green Knot upon his Shoulder.

L. C. J. What did you diſcourſe about?

Mr. Smith. About his being in Spain, and Flanders, and his Travels.

L. C. J. Had you a long Diſcourſe with him?

Mr. Smith. Yes, I had.

L. C. J. Had you nothing about the Times?

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord, not a Word.

L. C. J. Did you underſtand he had been turned Roman Catholick?

Mr. Smith. I did know it.

Jury. My Lord, did Mr. Smith ſee him any other Time after that?

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord, not in two Months, to my Remembrance, about the middle of Auguſt.

Sir Cr. Levins. Call one Clay. Who was ſworn.

L. C. J. Do you know Dr. Oates?

Mr. Clay. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. C. J. How long have you known him?

Mr. Clay. Ever ſince April laſt was Twelvemonth.

L. C. J. Was that the firſt Time of your Acquaintance with him?

Mr. Clay. Yes, at Mr. Charles Howard's.

L. C. J. Where were you there with him?

Mr. Clay. He lived in one Corner of old Arundel-Houſe.

L. C. J. How came you acquainted with him?

Mr. Clay. Truly I met him accidentallay, at Mr. Howard's Houſe.

L. C. J. How came you to come there?

Mr. Clay. I was there to viſit Mr. Howard, as a Friend.

L. C. J. Were you acquainted with him?

Mr. Clay. Yes, I was with Mr. Howard, and there I ſaw Dr. Oates.

L. C. J. When did you ſee him the ſecond Time?

Mr. Clay. The ſecond Time I think I ſaw him there too.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Clay. That was in May.

L. C. J. North. How long was that after?

Mr. Clay. I think the other was in April.

L. C. J. And did you ſee him in May?

Mr. Clay. I ſaw him in May too.

L. C. J. What Time of the Month was it?

Mr. Clay. I cannot exactly ſpeak to that, but it was in that Month as I remember, I am morally certain of it.

L. C. J. And when did you ſee him after May?

Mr. Clay. I can't tell whether I ſaw him after May or not.

L. C. J. Is that the ſame Man that you ſaw at Mr. Howard's, either in April or May?

Mr. Clay. Yes, my Lord, it is the ſame Man.

Sir Cr. Levins. Then we have done with our Evidence.

L. C. J. Come, Gentlemen, now what can you ſay to this? They have given you now their full Charge.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I have one Thing more, I deſire your Lordſhip to take Notice, this Gentleman, Mr. Clay, is a Prieſt in Orders, as they ſay.

L. C. J. I will not ask him that Queſtion, but, Mr. Clay, are you a Papiſt?

Mr. Clay. Yes, my Lord, I am ſo.

L. C. J. North. Come, what ſay you now, Mr. Whitebread, to this?

Whitebread. I have this to ſay; firſt, That at my laſt Trial, when I preſs'd him to declare who had ſeen him, when he ſaid he was here in Town, he could name no Body, not one. I know afterwards he was examined at the Committee, and then he could name no Body neither. He ſaid he was there privately at Mr. Grove's, and we can prove, that he never did lie there in his Life. And then he ſaid abſolutely, he had not ſeen much Company, he ſtay'd but ſix Days. Now this good Dr. that does ſay he ſaw him here in the latter end of March, or the middle of April, whereas he himſelf ſays he came over with Hilſley, the 24th of April.

L. C. J. He was Landed here the 17th of April, and the Witneſſes ſay, it was the latter end of April, or beginning of May.

Whitebread. Mr. Oates expreſly ſaid, he ſtaid here but ſix Days, when he came over to the Conſult.

L. C. J. Why, does not all this ſtand together?

Whitebread. No, my Lord, how could this ſtand together? his coming over the 17th, and his being here a great part in May, whereas he ſays he was but ſix Days?

L. C. J. Perchance Dr. Oates may be preciſe enough, but look you here, theſe Witneſſes do not ſo exactly to a Day or two, or three, or four, or five, but to the latter end of April: Now, why might they not ſee him the latter end of April, and the beginning of May, and yet ſtand very well with Mr. Oates's Teſtimony, who ſays he was Landed here about the 17th of April, and ſtaid here about ſix or ſeven Days? How nice would you have them be in that Caſe? which, becauſe they are honeſt, they will not be.

L. C. J. North. You make your Defences to depend upon an Uncertainty of Time, which no mortal Man can ever remember; beſides, pray obſerve this, That Mr. Oates ſtands a good Witneſs, till you impeach him by a Fry out of your own Schools, and they go to the whole Months of June, and April, and May, now theſe all ſpeak in Contradiction to them, and ſo Mr. Oates is ſtill ſet an upright and good Witneſs.

Whitebread. They ſay they did ſee him there every Day, or every other Day.

L. C. J. But ſure I can as well tell, who ſee him but once in ſuch a Month, and dined with him then, as any that ſaw him never ſo often; but here are five Witneſſes upon you in this Point.

Whitebread. The one was told by his Man, the other by his Boy.

L. C. J. The Coachman, and the Boy, and the Maid, and Mr. Smith did ſee him.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. The Divine did ſee him, and went and told the Woman that he had ſeen him, pray remember that.

L. C. J. North. Now the Evidence is concluded, ſay what you will for your ſelves; and then we will obſerve what you object, upon our Direction to the Jury, according to our Conſciences.

Gavan. My Lord, then I ſay this for my ſelf, We commit our ſelves to God Almighty. We muſt compare the Number, tho' ours were not ſworn, yet there were ſixteen of them, Boys, Young-men, that converſed with him every Day, and theſe Witneſſes ſpeak but of one or two particular Days: One ſays he dined with him, and another ſaw him in a Diſguiſe; but, my Lord, in theſe very Witneſſes there is an apparent Contradiction, becauſe out of his own Mouth (ex ore tuo te judico) they are contradicted. He ſays he came over upon Sunday, with Hilſley, which was the 20th of April, as I think, and ſtaid here only a matter of ſix Days. One of the Witneſſes ſays he ſaw him the firſt Monday in May. What ſignifie the Witneſſes, tho' upon Oath, that ſay they ſaw him in May? How can he come over the 20th of April, and ſtay but ſix Days, and be ſeen here in May? Before theſe can be reconciled, one of them muſt be falſe; and then, my Lord, beſides that which I firſt ſaid, there is the Number of Witneſſes, they are nothing in Compariſon with the Number of ours. And then, my Lord, Secondly, If we ſhould grant, that a leſſer Number ſhould ſerve the Turn, becauſe they are ſworn for the King, becauſe they ſwear for the Safety of the King, (whom God preſerve, whatſoever becomes of me,) and the other ſpeak not upon their Oaths, yet, my Lord, this does not deſtroy nor touch at all that Evidence that is brought againſt him, about the Rector of Liege, Sir John Warner, and Sir Tho. Preſton. And tho' it be granted, that all the others that ſpoke about Mr. Oates being at St. Omers be miſtaken, and muſt not be believed, yet we have him ſtill, by thoſe ſix others, who have proved that he hath ſworn falſe; and I hope we ſhall have fair play in the Law, to make the beſt Defence we can for our Lives; and I humbly conceive, no Body muſt be convicted of High Treaſon by the Law, but upon the Evidence of two ſufficient Witneſſes. Now I leave it to the Conſcience and Honour of the Court, whether he ſhall be believed, and counted a ſufficient Witneſs, when there are ſo many that have proved him falſe in that one Point? And then, beſides all this, my Lord, we have here ſixteen, at leaſt, Staffordſhire Witneſſes, who give you an Account of Mr. Ireland's being out of London, from the 3d of Auguſt till the 14th of September; ſo that in theſe two Things he hath been contradicted without any Anſwer, for he ſays, the 12th of Auguſt he was with him, when they ſay he was in Staffordſhire.

L. C. J. You have forgot the Maid that ſaw him in London, the 12th or 13th.

Gavan. No, my Lord, I have not. And this is it I anſwer to it, She is a Witneſs that only ſays, ſhe juſt ſaw him, but did not ſpeak to him.

L. C. J. She made a Courteſie to him.

Gavan. We are talking now of ſeeing Ireland in Auguſt, and we prove by Sir John Southcott, and all his Family, who ſay they began their Journey with him the 5th of Auguſt, and ſtay'd with him till the 19th, after the particular Day that ſhe ſpeaks of, you find ſeven or eight of them ſwear that they ſaw him all the Time. And therefore I would fain know, whether poor Mens Lives ſhall be caſt away upon ſuch Evidence as this? And then, my Lord, for the other Thing, I hope I have made a very good Plea for my ſelf concerning the Matter of July, my Witneſſes could be poſitive as to the laſt Week, but for the other Weeks, tho' they could not be poſitive, they rather believed I was there, than not: But when it is urged, Why might not they give as good a Teſtimony for the former Weeks as for that? To this I anſwer fully, that there is a great and predominant Reaſon why they ſhould have a particular Reaſon to ſwear, why I ſhould be there the laſt Week, rather than the other Weeks, becauſe I was then ſhut up in the Spiritual Exerciſe, and they had a particular Reaſon to take notice of that. Then, my Lord, I hope you will be pleaſed to mind this, by which I have made my Plea good, that is, my Lord, that Mr. Oates's Teſtimony againſt me is this, Mr. Aſhby came to Town about the middle of July, and that he ſtaid there about a Fortnight, and that in the Time of that Fortnight I came to Town, and ſaid I would go ſee Father Aſhby, and had that Diſcourſe he ſpeaks of; and ſo much for that. And then, my Lord, I beſeech you ſtill to bear it in your Mind, that I have been proved not to be in Town at the Time of the great Conſult about the Plot; and indeed I was not capable of it, for I was not then Profeſſed, and there could none be of that Congregation about the Plot, but thoſe that were Profeſſed. I could not be there in the Congregation, by reaſon of my Age, Mr. Harcourt here, and the reſt, if you will ask them, will tell you it, they were there, but, upon the Word of a dying Man, I was not there.

L. C. J. 'Tis not poſitively ſaid by Mr. Oates that you were.

Gavan. But then, my Lord, he ſays, my Name was to it, which he ſaw in July, now I prove, that I was in Staffordſhire, the laſt Week of July, and ſeeing I have Witneſſes to prove, that I was there till the 14th, and the laſt Week, and it was after the 14th that he ſaw me, I hope my Plea is good. Then, my Lord, I ground my Plea upon this, I have ſtudied Philoſophy, and other Things, but I never ſtudied the Law, and ſo am very ignorant of it; but this is my Caſe, I am accuſed by one Witneſs, concerning one Fact, and by another, concerning another; the one committed here at London, the other in Staffordſhire; I deſire, therefore, to know, whether the Witneſs that ſwears the Thing done in Staffordſhire, in another County, being joined to the other Witneſs, that ſwears what was done in London, can be eſteemed two Witneſſes, according to the Law, to convict me of Treaſon?

L. C. J. North. Yes, I'll tell you, if it were a Matter of Doubt, it might be found ſpecially, and and be argued, but it is a Matter that hath been already reſolved in the Caſe of Sir Henry Vane at the King's-Beneh-Bar, who was Indicted for levying of War againſt the King, and there one Witneſs proved the levying of War in one County, and the other proved the levying of War in another County, and ſo, tho' they were but ſingle Witneſſes of ſingle Facts, yet being both came up to the Indictment, they were adjudged ſufficient to maintain it. So it is in your Caſe, here is one Witneſs for the proving your hand to the Paper, which was for the Murder of the King, and their is another Witneſs of your Diſcourſe to the ſame purpoſe, the Fact is your joining and conſpiring to deſtroy the King, and to levy War againſt him, and both theſe are proved to the full of the Indictment by theſe Witneſſes; and tho' they are to ſeveral particular Facts, yet they are all Overt Acts of the ſame Treaſon.

Gavan. My Lord, I have a contrary Opinion to that in Serjeant Rolls.

L. C. J. North. But this is a known Caſe, and the Law is ſettled therein.

L. C. J. I'll tell you what you miſtake in what you ſay, for there are two Witneſſes, Oates and Dugdale, who ſwear to the ſame Fact, which is killing the King, altering the Government, and bringing in Popery: Oates ſays he ſaw your Hand to the Conſult, for the Murder of the King, for the raiſing the Army, and for the introducing of Popery, which is a neceſſary conſequence of change of Government; Dugdale ſays he was with you in the Parlour of my Lord Aſton's, where the Diſcourſe was between him and you, and others, about killing the King, and altering Religion. Are not theſe two Witneſſes to one and the ſame Treaſon?

Gavan. No, my Lord, I conceive not.

L. C. J. If I conſult a way to kill the King here, and then I go into the Country, and there I conſult of it with another Perſon, are not theſe two Witneſſes to the ſame Treaſon, ſure they are?

Gavan. Then my Lord, my ſecond Plea is this, If there be two Witneſſes, you will grant me this Ground, that no Man muſt be convicted but upon the Evidence of two Legal and Credible Witneſſes, and upon clear Evidence, as the Statute ſince His Majeſties happy Reſtauration does declare. Now two things are required certainly to make a credible Witneſs, and a clear Evidence; as the Witneſs muſt be credible, ſo it is as agreeable to reaſon that the Evidence muſt be plain and clear, yea as clear as the Light of the Sun at Midday. Now therefore if I prove, that neither the Witneſs is credible, ſuch as the Law requires, nor the Evidence clear, ſuch as the Law looks upon as ſuch, then I ought not to be convicted by this Witneſs upon this Evidence.

L. C. J. The Jury are Judges of that, and therefore there I leave it.

L. C. J. North. You argue mighty ſubtilly, but I'll give you this Anſwer, there muſt be two lawful Witneſſes, that is the Law; a Man cannot be impeached of Treaſon but by two lawful Witneſſes; now if they be not convicted of Perjury, and their Teſtimony be not taken away, but they may be heard in a Court of Juſtice, they are lawful Witneſſes; now for the being credible Witneſſes, that is a matter that is left to the Jury, but we muſt receive them as lawful Witneſſes till they be convict of a Crime that takes away their Teſtimony.

Gavan. Therefore becauſe they are left to the Jury, I am ſatisfied, and I turn my ſelf to you Gentlemen. You are to ſit upon my Life and my Death, as for my own part I can truly profeſs I am as innocent as the Child unborn, and this Gentleman Mr. Whitebread knows I was not capable of being at the Conſult, being not of Age. Now I muſt leave my ſelf to the Jury, and will leave it to their judgments whether theſe two Witneſſes can be eſteemed credible Witneſſes; for to make credible Witneſſes there is required honeſty of Life, and truth in their Teſtimony, for no Man can be a good Witneſs that is not an honeſt Man, nor that hath carried himſelf ſo that he is not to be believed. As to the honeſty of Mr. Oates his Life, you have heard that he was diſguſted by the Jeſuits, eſteemed not a Perſon of that diligence or fidelity to be intruſted by them; he was turned out of St. Omers.

L. C. J. Does that prove any Diſhoneſty in Mr. Oates?

Gavan. No, but I ſpeak to his Credibility.

L. C. J. Speak plain, how does it impeach Mr. Oates his Evidence, that the Jeſuits did not like him.

Gavan. It might be a ground of Hatred and Malice in him againſt them, and then Gentlemen, I deſire you to conſider that other thing, That we have proved him to ſpeak falſe in his Teſtimony about Sir John Warner and Sir Thomas Preſton; and all the buſineſs of the 12th of Auguſt, concerning Mr. Ireland's being here the 12th of Auguſt, who, by ſixteen Witneſſes, is proved to have been all the while in Staffordſhire: And tho' he was not convicted of Perjury before, which might have eaſily been done, as I have ſhewn to the whole World now, I appeal to the Honour and Conſcience of the Jury, whether all theſe Proofs ought not to make this Witneſs to be deem'd an incredible Witneſs. And pray, Gentlemen, hear me this, and carry this away with you, as to the buſineſs of Ireland, between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt, how many do ſwear that he was in Staffordſhire, I deſire you but to compare that one Woman that only ſaw him, and made a Courteſie to him, as ſhe ſays, with thoſe ſixteen Witneſſes that converſed with him daily. Then as for the ſecond Teſtimony of the St. Omers Witneſſes, which you ſee is thwarted by ſome that do ſwear in the King's Name to the contrary. Still I deſire you to compare Number with Number, the others, tho' they do not ſwear, are ready to ſwear, and there are only three or four againſt ſixteen of them, and there is an evident Contradiction in what they ſay, and that proved out of his own Mouth; for he ſays he came over the 20th of April with Mr. Hilſley, and ſtay'd only ſix Days; they ſay he was here in May, and I deſire theſe may be compared: for how could it be that he ſhould be here in May, if he ſtay'd but ſix Days. And then to make your Verdict, and take their Credit away, I would deſire you to conſider thoſe Witneſſes that I have brought for my ſelf, not being here, but in Wolverhampton; for being in Staffordſhire as long as till the laſt Week of July, it muſt fall within the time of his Teſtimony. I have brought Witneſſes to prove upon Oath, that from the 22d upward, they ſaw me in Wolverhampton, and they do remember the particular inſtance, that I was then at my Spiritual Exerciſe: And this is that I have to ſay as to Mr. Oates. As for Mr. Dugdale, I would deſire you to reflect upon the whole Story of his coming to diſcover this Plot, and his being an Informer about it: The truth is, I confeſs I have known him five or six Years, whilst he lived at my Lord Aston's, and I have divers times discoursed with him there in Mr. Ewers's Chamber; but, as I hope to be saved, never any thing of Treason in all my Life. Now, 'tis well known, and there are those that can testifie it, that in truth Dugdale run away from my Lord Aston's after he had lost 300 l. of my Lord's Money.

L. C. J. If you can say any thing against Mr. Dugdale by Witnesses that you can prove it, then you say well; but if you will tell a Story out of one Lord's Mouth, and another Lord's Mouth, that is never to be endured; you shall never take away a Man's Testimony by hear-say, you must prove it.

Gavan. 'Tis well known, if I prove Dugdale no credible Witness I play my own Game. You know I have been a Prisoner twenty Weeks, and could not seek out Witnesses, I asked it as soon as I knew of my Trial, but it was denied me to send for Witness to prove that Dugdale was in Goal for Debt. If I had the Recorder's Warrant, or the Authority of this Bench I could send for them.

L. C. J. You must not fall upon Persons without Evidence, if you have Witnesses to prove any thing, whom the Jury will believe, call them.

Gavan. I do assure your Lordship, as I hope to see the Face of God, I am innocent of what is charged upon me. And God bless the King and this Honourable Court.

L. C. J. Tho' you do an hundred times bless the King and Court and all, you must prove things if you will be believed. What say you, Mr. Whitebread?

Whitebread. My Lord, I have but one thing to say, and 'tis but a word: Your Lordship was pleased to make an Observation, and a good one it was, a Letter which Mr. Dugdale says was written by me to Mr. Ewers, which he says he intercepted; he was, in the mean time, a trusty Correspondent for his Friend. In that Letter he swears, there was expresly contain'd positive words of entertaining Persons to kill the King, that only such as were hardy, desperate and stout; but as your Lordship well observed, that it was an improbable thing that a Man who had his Wits about him should write such plain Expressions about such a Matter; and upon that improbability I leave it to the Jury.

Mr. Justice Pemberton. Have you any thing to say, Mr. Fenwick?

Fenwick. I desire, my Lord, your Lordship and the Jury, to consider and observe the nature both of our Witnesses, and of them that are brought against us. The one speak for the whole Time, that they saw him every Day, or every other Day; they daily conversed with him, and eat and drank with him in the same House; the others, they say only, they saw him one particular Day, another, another; and one of them says he saw him but in a Disguise. Now, my Lord, whether it be likely that so many innocent Children, brought up in a good virtuous Life, should come here to forswear themselves, to contradict People that we know not what they are; and then, besides, we know that these People are of a poor, mean, beggarly Condition, that intend to mend that Condition by such a pretence of Discovery, and hope thereby to advance themselves. It is probable such People might be drawn in. Then also we shall prove, that Sir John Warner did not come over with him, nor Mr. Williams, nor Sir Thomas Preston: Then all his Witness, as to them is false, and he does not say he went back with these People; and this for the Witnesses. Now suppose the Witnesses were all equal, what does he prove against us Three? Or what Reason doth he give of his Evidence. He says he saw such and such Letters from Mr. Whitebread. Now is it possible that a Man that had no Credit at all with us, that we should be such Fools to trust him with such Letters as those, then your Lordships must hang us twice, once for Fools, and then for Knaves. Or is it possible that we should be such egregious Fools that we should trust a Man that was never esteemed of, was expell'd the College. And for all his talk of Commissions and Letters, there is not one of those found, let him shew any one Commission, any Money paid, or any Order brought him, or any Arms that were found; there are three Quarters of a Year now passed since the first discovery; certainly all this time could produce something: Thousands of Letters have been taken from us, some of those Letters would have discovered this thing: certainly therefore we have better Evidence than he hath, supposing them to be equal as to credibility in their Original. Is it credible we should be so great Rogues to contrive the King's Death? tho' he speaks of the Writing being carried from Chamber to Chamber concerning this Matter, he can never produce one Paper, signed by any one Man's Hand, nor can he produce any thing to attest his Testimony. I leave this to your Lordship's Judgment, whether this Evidence be good, there is nothing appears in so much Time, of any Effect that is produced: Where were the Armies? Where were the Moneys paid? Where the Commissions? Is it possible such a thing should be, and no sign of it for a whole Year almost? there is no Reason brought, amongst them all, but Saying and Swearing, and that I will stand by.

Whitebread. I thank God I don't look like a fighting Man, nor I never did; but who can think that I should be so mad, when I had committed such a secret to him, to beat him, as he says. 'Tis strange that such a Plot should be discovered wherein so many Persons of Quality, Honour and Reputation are said to be concerned, and yet no foot-steps of it appear; and none of them, as my Lord Arundel, my Lord Bellasis, should never divulge such a Plot; I would feign know whether such a thing be probable, but I commend my self to God Almighty, and the Jury.

Harcourt. My Lord, I have only this to say, I have lived to this Age, which is 70 Years, and I never knew any Man that could say I was accused of the thing in the World, for which I should be brought before any Magistrate; and 'tis strange that after so many Years I should come to be Arraigned and Condemned for a Crime of the highest Nature, and there's no reason brought against me, nor any of the rest, for the Proof of what is alledged, nor do they who are the Witnesses against us deserve at all any Credit: They only affirm such and such things without any Reason, to perswade you to believe them, and 'tis easie to say, and so 'tis to swear it. So that all I have to say is this, since a Negative cannot be proved, I hope Innocency will find some that shall defend it. I leave my self to the Bench, for the Law is the Defence of Innocency. If they did bring any Evidence besides that, which is down right positive swearing, without any Reason or concurrent Reason to confirm it, it were something.

Fenwick.

Fenwick. And beſides all this, to think how theſe Men have Lived before time is worth reflection and conſidering. As for Bedlow, he hath been a very ill Man, the World knows it.

L. C. J. Have you proved it? Can you ſhew any Record of it?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Turner, Have you any thing to ſay? You have had your time.

Fenwick. You will find that Nemo repente fit neguiſſimus, No Man arrives at the higheſt Degrees of Impiety at firſt: Men grow extreamly wicked by Degrees. But let us ſee if they can blame our Lives, or any thing that we have done at any time before; we prove, and all the World knows what they have been, and how ſcandalouſly they have Lived.

Gavan. Our Witneſſes are to be regarded for their number and for their innocency, eſpecially ſince they give no Reaſon nor convincing Arguments for what they do affirm.

L. C. J. We would hear you, and we have heard you very long, but it muſt not be permitted you to go over the ſame things again and again.

L. C. Baron. Hath Turner any thing to ſay?

Turner. All that I have to ſay, my Lord, is this, to ask whether it be reaſonable that Bedlow and Oates ſhould be looked upon as good Witneſſes, that theſe Perſons who have been ſuch ſcandalous People ſhould be admitted to an Oath, who are debarred from the Sacrament; for according to the Church of England, no Man that is publickly ſcandalous can be admitted to the Sacrament.

L. C. J. But you prove nothing.

Turner. I can prove it firſt by Evidence of one Haſtins.

L. C. J. Call him. But he appeared not.

The Lord Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury, againſt Whitebread, &c.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury! Here hath been a very long Evidence, and a very confuſed one; and you cannot expect, that it ſhould be wholly Repeated to you: For it is almoſt impoſſible, for any one to remember it; neither would I if I could, becauſe a great deal of it is impertinent, and vainly to be Repeated: And beſides, Many Things have been ſaid over, and over again, to no purpoſe. But I will obſerve to you, as well as I can, what Teſtimonies there are againſt each particular Man of them; and that I do look upon, to be very Material. And I leave it to you, to judge and conſider, how far the Evidence is Credible, and how far it is Subſtantial.

Againſt Mr. Whitebread, you have the Teſtimony of three, Oates, Dugdale, and Bedlow: Againſt Mr. Fenwick, you have the Teſtimony of Oates, Bedlow and Prance: Againſt Harcourt, you have Oates, Dugdale, Bedlow. and Prance. You have againſt Gavan, Dugdale, and Oates; and againſt Turner, Dugdale and Oates: So that, to the two laſt, you have two, three to the two firſt, and four to Harcourt.

Now, the Matter that they have have ſworn, hath been all tending to one thing; the Murder of the King, the Advancing of Popery, and Suppreſſion of the Proteſtant Religion: That is the Thing, that all the Evidence does drive at.

For Dugdale, for ought we can perceive, he hath been upon the matter a Stranger to Oates and Bedlow; and I do not find, that he had any Correſpondence with, or Knowledge of them, at the time he charges Mr. Harcourt, and Mr. Gavan. And he charges them with the very ſelf ſame Things, viz. the Conſulting the Death of the King, and Advancement of Popery. And they have ſeveral Inſtances of the Facts, as their ſeveral Conſultations; How they met together, and where, or at what Place. And Dugdale tells you of a Letter, that he found; wherein Whitebread gave Charge, for the Entertainment of good ſtout Fellows; No matter for Gentlemen, ſo they were Reſolute. And ſo they have ſeveral Mediums to prove one and the ſame Thing.

Mr. Fenwick ſays to all this, Here is nothing againſt us, but talking and ſwearing: But for that, he hath been told, (if it were poſſible for him to Learn) that all Teſtimony is but talking and ſwearing: For all Things, all Mens Lives and Fortunes, are determined by an Oath; and an Oath is by talking, by kiſſing the Book, and calling God to Witneſs to the Truth of what is ſaid. That is the Eſſence of an Oath, and thoſe are the Ceremonies: The Kiſſing the Book, and Speaking, is the accidental Form; the Subſtance, is calling God to Witneſs. Therefore, What a vain Thing is i in Mr. Fenwick, to ſeem to Triumph, by ſaying, There is nothing againſt us, but talking and ſwearing. There is nothing againſt them, but Evidence and Proof of Men upon Oath: And their Reaſons, the Truth is, are very Trifles. They def nd their Lives as they do their Religion, with weak Arguments, and fallacious Reaſons.

For that long Buſineſs, that Mr. Gavan hath undertaken to ſay againſt Mr. Oates, and what they all inſiſt upon, viz. the Number of their Witneſſes, which were Sixteen, amounts to this, to diſprove Mr. Oates that it could not be true what he ſays, That he ſhould be preſent here at a Conſult, the Twenty-Fourth of April, becauſe they have brought Sixteen from St. Omers to prove, That he was there all April and May.

'Tis very true now, if that be ſo, it is impoſſible, Oates can ſwear any Truth: But whether that is to be believ'd or no, is the Queſtion? Methinks, they did not do well for themſelves, when they bid you remember the Nature of the Evidence. They did well enough, to bid you remember the Number: For the Number is more than what Oates is back'd with on t'other ſide; but the Nature is of much leſs weight: Not only becauſe they are not upon their Oaths, for by Law they may not be upon their Oaths; (and that muſt not be Charged on them as a Defect, ſeeing they would Swear, I doubt not, if they might) but becauſe their Teſtimony is really to be believed much alike without an Oath, as with one; becauſe they are of a Religion that can diſpenſe with Oaths, tho' falſe, for the ſake of a good Cauſe.

But, ſeeing they deſire the Nature of the Men may be conſidered, you are to obſerve, that they are Proſelytes, and Young Striplings of their Church; which does indeed, in one Reſpect or other, abuſe all Her Diſciples, and keeps them in a blind Obedience, to purſue and effect all Her Commands.

If the Doctrines of that Church were better; If ſuch which are allowed by their Chief Authors, were but leſs bloody and inhumane; If they had ever put thoſe that are ſo, into an Index Expurgatorius, that they might have been publickly diſowned and declared as the particular Opinions of ſome ill Men, which they did diſavow; theſe Men might might have been then more worthy to be regarded. But when none of their Popes have done this (who muſt have very ſtrange Fore-heads, if they ſay they have) and ſuch Doctrines are ſtill owned: There is much indeed to be obſerved from the Nature of the Evidence, the Nature of the Men, and their Profeſſion.

I muſt confeſs, I believe that they would deny their Principles to be bloody, or to be defended and allowed by any of their beſt Authors, if at this Time, the Fear of apparent Falſhood did not deter them: But if to Murder KINGS, or to Depoſe them, and Abſolve their Subjects from their Allegiance, for the Advancement of Religion, be a Thing moſt Impious, and void of Religion, and makes Religion worſe than none; which Doctrine yet they have owned, and their Counci's have owned, and we have proved it upon them, and out of them: I cannot tell what to ſay to theſe Men, or their Teſtimony; the Nature of whom they deſire to be conſidered.

But they were Young Boys, ſent for hither on purpoſe to give this Teſtimony; and it was not, indeed, a Fault in the Priſoners at the Bar, to ſend for what Evidence they could, for themſelves: But it is very doubtful and ſuſpicious, to have ſuch green, and flexible Minds thus imploy'd, and I muſt leave it to you, to conſider how far theſe Young Men, train'd in ſuch Principles, may be prevail'd on to ſpeak what is not True.

And now, if the King's Evidence, after this, ſtood alone, it were yet ſomething: But when you have Mr. Oates's Teſtimony, as to this great Matter of his appearing in April, confirmed by Seven or Eight Witneſſes, that ſpeak ſo expreſly to it, how will they anſwer it! Do they make Sir Richard Barker, a Perſon of no Value? Do they ſo little eſteem the Miniſter, that ſays, I knew him tho' he was in Diſguiſe; and went and ſaid it preſently to a Woman, that he knew was acquainted with Oates. And asking her, when ſhe ſaw Mr. Oates? And ſhe ſaying, Not a great while: He ſaid, I ſaw him later than you; and ſays, he did know him: And this is confirm'd ſtill by Sir Richard Barker, who tells you, That his Men told him, that he had been there. What ſhould make them to acquaint their Maſter ſo, if it were not ſo? Or do you think it is a Thing maliciouſly prepared or invented, to take away the Lives of theſe Men, that his Men ſhould tell him a Story ſo long ago? If it be not true, to what Purpoſe ſhould they tell him ſo? and if it be true, it confirms the Matter ſworn againſt them.

There is he that was his Companion, the Schoolmaſter, that ſays, in the beginning of May was Twelvemonth, Mr. Oates dined with him at his Houſe, ſate with him Four Hours, diſcourſed of his Travels into Spain and St. Omers: And there is the Man that is a Papiſt, if not a Prieſt, that ſwears he ſaw him Twice, about the middle of April, at Mr. Charles Howard's Lodgings in Arundel Houſe; ſo that here are ſeven Witneſſes, direct or circumſtantial, to prove Mr. Oates to have been in London, in April and May, 1678.

But ſay they, This is but Talking and Swearing. Very fine! and the St. Omers Youths is Talking, but not Swearing. Ay! but then their Numbers are not ſo many. That, Gentlemen, I leave to you, for both cannot be true. The Teſtimony of Mr. Oates, and the Witneſſes that he had to back himſelf withal, and to prove himſelf to be here, is inconſiſtent with what the young Men ſay, that he was at St. Omers.

Now, if you obſerve, all theſe Mens Defence is in the Circumſtantial part of the Evidence, in watching and catching at what Day, what Hour, and what Month? how Mr. Oates reckoned falſe, ſo and ſo: If he came here about the 20th of April, how could they ſee him the 1ſt of May? and they think then, they have got ſuch a mighty Victory, but it is not ſo weighty an Argument which Proteſtants after all their Conceit, that it is unanſwerable; for here is the Point, The Matter of Time is a Thing that no Man can ſo preciſely charge his Memory with, as that it ſhould be too ſtrictly the Meaſure of your Judgments about Truth or Falſhood, by the Miſtake of ſeven or eight Days. Examine your ſelves, how often every Day you do miſtake Things that have been tranſacted half a Year ago, and err in Point of Time, taking one Week for another, and one Month for another; and tho' I muſt ſay, it is conſiderable, yet too great Weight is not to be laid upon that.

As for that they inſiſt upon ſo much, the coming over of Sir Thomas Preſton, and Sir John Warner, with Mr. Oates; it is true, three or four Witneſſes ſpeak, as to Sir John Warner, and ſome to Sir Thomas Preſton; and they ſay, they were both beyond Sea when Mr. Oates came over; but if the Sixteen be not to be believed in the firſt Matter, and if Mr. Oates does ſay true, notwithſtanding all their Evidence, that he was here ſuch a Time in April and May, then I'll tell you what Inference may naturally be; to wit, That they can't want a Witneſs to prove what they pleaſe: For I believe there is none of them all will make any Bones of it.

I ſay, Gentlemen, if you are ſatisfied in your Conſciences, that the Evidence on Mr. Oates his Part, to that Point, (that is to ſay, ſeven Witneſſes) ought to prevail with you, to believe he was here in thoſe Months, (notwithſtanding the ſixteen Witneſſes, who ſay they ſaw him every Day beyond Sea, in April and May,) their other Evidence about his coming over with Preſton and Warner, will have no great Weight; becauſe the other is the Great Matter, by which they make the Subſtance of their Defence.

I am glad indeed to ſee a Gentleman here, whoſe Face I never ſaw before, and that is Mr. Dugdale. Upon my Word, he hath eſcaped well, for I find little ſaid againſt him, very little, either as to the Matter or the Manner of his Evidence. They would have made Reflection on him for his Poverty, but I hope that they, whoſe Religion is to vow Poverty, will never inſiſt on that for any great Objection againſt any.

L. C. J. North. Your Lordſhip hath forgot that he ſaid he gave away Three or Four Hundred Pounds to them.

L. C. J. But I will Challenge all the Papiſts in England, to ſatisfy any Man that hears me this Day, of one piece of Evidence, which will turn every Proteſtant's Heart againſt the Papiſts. If ſo be they Murdered Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, the Plot even by that, is in a great Meaſure proved upon them, by that baſe Murder. And what can be a plainer Proof of it, than the Evidence of this Day, which Mr. Dugdale produces? We had Notice, ſaith he, on Monday Night, that on the Saturday before it, Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was kill'd; (which falls out to be that very Saturday he was firſt miſſing;) which Notice was given in a Letter writ by Harcourt to Ewers, another Prieſt, that ſame Saturday Night, wherein were theſe Words, This Night Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey is diſpatch'd; and

I am

I am ſure, if this be true, then no Man can ſay, but They murdered him.

Whitebread. It is not alledged againſt any of us.

L. C. J. It is an Evidence of the Plot in general, and to Harcourt in particular.

Harcourt. He never ſhews the Letter that he ſays I writ.

L. C. J. He ſays that he uſed to peruſe the Letters, and that Ewers had this again, after he had peruſed it; he ſays alſo, he has received, at Times, a hundred Letters from you, and this among the reſt. Now the Queſtion is, Whether it be true, or no? To make it out, he produces Mr. Chetwynd, whom I hope you will not deny to be a Gentleman of one of the beſt Family of his Country, and of honeſt Reputation; who ſays, That on the Tueſday following that Saturday Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was miſs'd, he and another were talking together in Staffordſhire, and that the other Perſon asked him, if he knew of the Death of any Juſtice of the Peace at Weſtminſter, and when he told him, he had heard of no ſuch Thing; No! ſaid he, that is ſtrange, you living ſometimes about Weſtminſter; for ſaid he, The Wench at the Alehouſe ſays, That this Morning Mr. Dugdale ſaid to two other Gentlemen, There was a Juſtice of Peace of Weſtminſter, kill'd; and Mr. Dugdale ſwears, That was Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey. Now, if Dugdale be fit to be believed, that he ſaw ſuch a Letter, as he muſt be, if he be not a very great Prophet, to be able to foretel this: Or if the Maid that ſaid this, did not invent it (a Thing then impoſſible to be done): Or Mr. Chetwynd feigned, that he heard the Man make his Report from the Maid; this Thing could not come to paſs, but by theſe Men. Nay, if Mr. Dugdale could not do as great a Miracle as any are in the Popiſh Legends, how could he tell, that it was done on the ſame Night when it was done at London? Or ſpeak of it, on the Monday Night after, when it was not known in London till the Thurſday following? This will ſtick, I aſſure you, Sirs, upon all your Party.

For my own part, this Evidence of Mr. Dugdale's gives me the greateſt Satisfaction of any thing in the World in this Matter; and whilſt we reſt ſatisfied in the Murder of that Man, and are morally certain you muſt do it, knowing of what Principles you are, you cannot blame us, if, upon ſuch manifeſt Reaſons, we lay it upon you.

And this is Occaſional Evidence, which I, for my part, never heard before this Day; nor can I ever be more, or better ſatisfied, than I am upon this Point, viz. The Teſtimony that I have received this Afternoon, concerning the Murder of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey. As to the Defences they have made, they are Exceptions in Point of Time, but do not affect Mr. Dugdale; for they have hardly the Confidence to deny the Things he ſays, to be true againſt them.

They fall foul, indeed, upon Mr. Oates: He appears to have been their Agent; and whilſt ſo, bad enough: But if he had not had a mind to have become a good Man, he would not likely have done us that Good that he hath done, in diſcovering the Deſign you had engaged him in. Let any Man judge, by your Principles and Practices, what you will not do, for the promoting of the ſame.

For while this Gentleman's Blood lies upon you (and ſome have been Executed for it,) it muſt be yet farther told you, that in what you Did do, you have given us a Specimen of what you Would do. We have a Teſtimony, that for promoting your Cauſe, you would not ſtick at the Proteſtants Blood. You Began with Sir Edmund bury Godfrey, but who knows where you would have made an End! It was this One Man you Kill'd in his Perſon, but in Effigy the Whole Nation. It was in one Man's Blood your Hands are Embrewed; but your Souls were Dipt in the Blood of us all. This was a Handſel only of what was to follow; and ſo long as we are convinced you Kill'd him, we cannot but believe, you would alſo kill the King. We cannot but believe, you would make All of Us away, that ſtand in the Way of your Religion: A Religion, which, according to what it is, you would bring in upon us; by a Converſion of us with Blood; and by a Baptiſm with Fire. God keep our Land from the one, and our City from the other!

To return: The Letter that is found in Harcourt's Papers, does further confirm Mr. Oates in all the great and conſiderable Matters that he ſays; That there was a Plot; That that Plot was called by the Name of a DESIGN, which was to be kept Cloſe and Secret: And this is an Evidence that cannot lye. For that Letter will never be got off, no more than the other Letter, that Mr. Dugdale ſpeaks of about Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey.

And thus I leave it to you, Gentlemen: You have heard how many Witneſſes they have had for them, about Twenty four or Twenty five, of one ſort or another. You have heard what they apply their Teſtimony unto, to convict Mr. Oates of Falſhood in Matter of Time; which was their principal Defence: That he was not here in April and May, and that he came not over with Sir Thomas Preſton, and Sir John Warner, and that Ireland was not here all Auguſt. You have heard what Witneſſes Oates is back'd withal, as to the Time of his being here: And the Maid ſays, ſhe ſaw Ireland here in Auguſt.

However, tho' their Defence depends but upon a Point of Time, I muſt tell you, it ought to be well conſidered, for 'tis indeed very conſiderable towards their Defence; and God forbid but we ſhould be equal to all Men.

And ſo I have remembred, as well as I can, in this long and perplexed Evidence, that which ſeems to me moſt material, as to their Charge or Diſcharge; and that which they have made their greateſt Defence by the Youths from St. Omers, to diſprove Mr. Oates his being here, and Mr. Ireland's not being in London in Auguſt, which in Truth is not the proper Buſineſs of this Day; but hath received a former Verdict before; for if ſo be the Jury before had not been ſatisfied of the Truth of that, they could never have found Ireland Guilty. So I leave it to you, upon the whole Matter. I can remember nothing beſides. Go together, and conſider of your Verdict, according to your Evidence.

L. C. J. North. Gentlemen, my Lord hath repeated it ſo fully to you, that I ſhall not need to add any thing to it.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury, who withdrew; and the Judges alſo went off from the Bench, leaving Mr. Recorder, and a competent Number of Commiſſioners there, to take the Verdict; and about the ſpace of a quarter of an Hour, the Jury returned, and anſwered to their Names, and gave in their Verdict thus.

Cl. of the Cr. Gentlemen, Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of the Cr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of the Cr. Thomas White, alias, Whitebread, hold up thy Hand. You of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner: How say you? Is he Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of the Cr. What Goods or Chattels?

Foreman. None, to our Knowledge. And so severally of the rest.

Which Verdict being Recorded, in usual Form, Mr. Recorder spoke to the Jury thus:

Gentlemen, you of the Jury, There hath been a long Evidence given against the Prisoners at the Bar: They were all Indicted, Arraigned, fairly Tried, and fully Heard, for High-Treason, depending upon several Circumstances. They can none of them pretend to say, (and I take the Liberty to take notice of it, for the Satisfaction of them, and all that are here present, and all the World,) That not a Person among the Prisoners at the Bar, were either wanting to themselves to Offer, or the Court to them, to Hear any Thing that they could say for themselves. But, upon a long Evidence, a full discussing the Objections made against it, and a patient Hearing of the Defence they made, they are found Guilty: And I do think, that every honest Man will say, That they are unexceptionably found so; and that 'tis a just Verdict you have given.

And then the Prisoners were carried back to Newgate, and the Court Adjourned till Eight next Morning. And then Mr. Langhorn was Tried, and found Guilty: After which, they were all Six brought to the Bar together, and received Judgment to be Drawn, Hanged, and Quartered: Which accordingly was done upon the Five Jesuits and Priests, on Friday the Twentieth of June, at the Usual Place of Execution.

The Tryal of Richard Langhorn, Esq;

Published by Authority.

UPON Saturday the 14th of June, 1679, at the Sessions-House in the Old-Baily, London, the Court (according to their Adjournment the preceding Day) met, and proceeded to the Trial of Richard Langhorn, Esq; in this manner:

Clerk of the Crown. Set Richard Langhorn to the Bar. Richard Langhorn, hold up thy Hand. Which he did.

Thou standest Indicted in London, by the Name of Richard Langhorn, late of London, Esq;

For that you Rich. Langhorn the elder, as a false Traitor of the most Illustrious Serene and Excellent Prince Charles the Second by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, Your Supream and Natural Lord, not having the fear of God in your heart, nor weighing the duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the Devil, the Cordial Love and true, due and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, towards him do and ought to bear, altogether withdrawing, and devising, and with all your Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquility of this Kingdom to disturb, and the true Worship of God within this Kingdom used, and by Law Established, to overthrow, and Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom to stir up and procure, and the true Love, Duty and Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our said Lord the King, towards him do and of right ought to bear, to withdraw, relinquish and extinguish, on the 30th Day of September, in the 30th Year of His Majesty's Reign at London, in the Parish of St. Dunstan's in the West, in the Ward of Farringdon without London, aforesaid, Falsly, Maliciously, Subtilly, and Traiterously, with many other false Traitors of our Sovereign Lord the King unknown, did Purpose, Compass, Imagine, Intend, Consult and Agree, to stir up Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England, against our said Sovereign Lord the King, and a miserable slaughter amongst the Subjects of our said Lord the King, of his Kingdoms of England, to procure and cause, and our said Sovereign Lord the King from his Kingly State, Title, Power, and Government of his Kingdom of England, totally to deprive, depose, and disinherit, and our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, and the Government of this Kingdom to subvert and change, and the true Worship of God in this Kingdom by Law established and used, to alter, and the State of this Kingdom in all the Parts thereof well instituted, totally to subvert and destroy, and War within this Kingdom of England to procure and levy, and the same most Wicked Treasons, Traiterous Imaginations, Purposes, Compassings, and Agreements aforesaid, and to perfect and fulfil: You the said Richard Langhorn afterwards, to wit, the 30th Day of September, in the 30th Year aforesaid, and diverse other times before at London, &c. Falsly, Advisedly, Maliciously, Subtilly, and Traiterously, did Compass, Contrive, and Write two Letters, to be sent to certain Persons unknown at Rome, and at St Omers, in Parts beyond the Seas, to procure the Adherance, Aid and Assistance of the Pope, and of the French King, and others, to you the said Richard Langhorn, and other false Traitors unknown, the true Worship of God within this Kingdom of England, by Law

Law Established and used, to the Superstition of the Church of Rome to alter, and the Government of this Kingdom of England to subvert, and our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, and that you the said Richard Langhorn, in further Prosecution of the said Treason, Traiterous Imaginations, Intentions, and Agreements aforesaid, on the Day and Year aforesaid, and the said other Days and Times before at London, &c. did Compass, Contrive, and Write two other Letters to be sent to Rome, in Parts beyond the Seas, to one Christopher Anderton, then Rector of the English Colledge at Rome aforesaid, and two other Letters to be sent to St. Omers, in Parts beyond the Seas, to diverse Persons unknown there residing, and by the said respective Letters Traiterously you did advise the said Pope, and Christopher Anderton, and other Persons unknown residing beyond the Seas, of the ways and manner to be taken for accomplishing the said most wicked Treasons, for altering the true Worship of God in this Kingdom Established and used, to the Superstition of the Church of Rome, and for subverting the Government of this Kingdom, and for the Death and Destruction of our said Lord the King, and to the Intent that the said Christopher Anderton, and others unknown, should give their Aid, Assistance, and Adherance, and should procure other Aid, Assistance and Adherance, to you the said Richard Langhorn, and other false Traitors unknown, to alter the true Worship of God aforesaid, to the Superstition of the Church of Rome, and to subvert the Government of this Kingdom of England, and to put our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death, and that you the said Richard Langhorn afterwards, to wit the Day and Year aforesaid at London, &c. Traiterously did deliver the Letters aforesaid, to be sent to the said Christopher Anderton, and others, Persons beyond the Seas, to perfect the Traiterous Purposes aforesaid, and that you the said Richard Langhorn, further to fulfil and accomplish the same most wicked Treasons, traiterous Imaginations, Purposes, and Compassings aforesaid, afterwards the said 30th Day of September, in the Thirtieth Year aforesaid at London, &c. five Commissions in Writing, made by Authority derived from the See of Rome, for constituting Military Officers, for leading the Forces to be levied in this Kingdom against our said Sovereign Lord the King, for the altering the Protestant Reformed Religion, to the use and Superstition of the Church of Rome, and for Subverting the Government of this Kingdom of England, Traiterously you did receive, and five other Commissions in writing, made by Authority derived from the See of Rome, for constituting Civil Officers for Governing this Kingdom after the most wicked Treasons and traiterous Imaginations, Purposes and Compassing aforesaid were fulfilled and accomplished, then and there Traiterously you did receive. And that you the said Richard Langhorn, afterwards, to wit, the Day and Year aforesaid, at London, &c. The said several Commissions so received, to divers false Traitors of our Sovereign Lord the King unknown, falsly, knowingly, and traiterously did distribute, give and dispose for constituting Officers, as well Military as Civil, to the Traiterous Purposes aforesaid. And that you the said Richard Langhorn, afterwards on the Day and Year aforesaid, at London, &c. a Commission to constitute and authorise you to be Advocate-General of the Army, to be levied in this Kingdom, to war against our said Sovereign Lord the King, falsly, traiterously, and against the Duty of your Allegiance, from a certain Person unknown, did receive and had; and the same Commission then and there falsly, advisedly, and Traiterously, did inspect and read, and in your custody keep; and to the same Commission Traiterously did give your consent, to the Intent that you the said Richard Langhorn, should have and Execute the Place and Office of Advocate General of the Army aforesaid, after the Army aforesaid should be rais'd against our said Sovereign Lord the King, by you the said Richard Langhorn, and other false Traitors unknown, in Execution of the said Traiterous Compassings, Imaginations, and Agreements aforesaid. And that whereas William Ireland, John Grove, and Thomas Pickering, and other false Traitors of our Sovereign Lord the King, unknown, on the 24th Day of April in the 30th Year aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex, did consult to bring and put our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death, and final Destruction, and to change and alter Religion in this Kingdom of England, Rightly and by Law Established, to the Superstition of the Church of Rome, at London, &c. had Notice of that Consultation; and the same Consultation for the Destruction of the King, and for the Alteration of Religion in this Kingdom, rightly Established, to the Superstition of the Church of Rome, and the Treasonable Agreements had in that Consultation, on the said 30th Day of September, in the 30th Year aforesaid, from our said Sovereign Lord the King, Advisedly, and Traiterously did conceal, and to that Consultation Traiterously you did consent. And the said William Ireland, John Grove, and Thomas Pickering, on the Day and Year last aforesaid, at London, the Treasons aforesaid to perpetrate and perfect, Maliciously, Subtilly, and Traiterously, you did Abet, Counsel, Maintain and Comfort; and that you the said Richard Langhorn, afterwards (to wit) the said 30th Day of September, in the 30th Year aforesaid, at London, &c falsly, subtilly, and Traiterously, you did move and solicit the Benedictine Monks, (unknown) to expend and pay the Sum of Six Thousand Pounds, to procure a Person Traiterously to Kill and Murder our said Sovereign Lord the King. And whereas Edward Coleman, and other false Traitors of our said Sovereign Lord the King, unknown, on the 29th of September, in the 30th Year aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex, Traiterously had conspired and consulted to procure Rebellion and Sedition, within this Kingdom of England, against our said Sovereign Lord the King, and him from his Kingly State and Government of this his Kingdom of England, to deprive and disinherit, and to bring and put him to final Death and Destruction, and the Government of this Kingdom of England to alter, and the true Religion in this Kingdom of England by Law Established, to alter and change. And whereas he the said Edward Coleman had traiterously written four Letters to Monsieur Le Cheese, then Counsellor of the French King's, to procure the aid, assistance, and adherence of the French King, to perfect and accomplish the Traiterous Imaginations aforesaid, you the said Richard Langhorn afterwards, to wit, the said Thritieth Day of September, in the Thirtieth Year aforesaid at London, &c. well knowing the Treasonable Matters in the same Letters contained, to the same Letters did consent, and then and there falsly, subtilly, advisedly, maliciously, and traiterously did abet, counsel, maintain, and comfort the said Edward Coleman, to perpetrate and accomplish the Treason aforesaid, against the Duty of your Allegiance, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in this Case made and provided.

Clerk of the Cr. How say'st thou Richard Langhorn, art thou guilty of this High-Treason whereof thou standest Indicted, or not guilty?

Langhorn. Not Guilty.

Cl. of the Cr. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Langhorn. By God and my Country.

Cl. of the Cr. God send thee a good deliverance.

Then the Petty Jury impannelled for this Trial, was called, the Prisoner put to his Challenges, but challenging none, the Twelve sworn were these.

Arthur Yong.	Thomas Barnes.
Edward Beeker.	Francis Neeve.
Robert Twyford.	John Hall.
William Topp.	George Sitwell.
John Kirkham.	James Wood, and
Peter Pickering.	Richard Cawthorne.

After which, Proclamation for Information was made in the usual manner.

Clerk of the Cr. Richard Langhorn, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause: He stands Indicted in London by the Name of Richard Langhorn, late of London, Esq; for that as a false Traitor, &c. (put in the Indictment Mutatis Mutandis) and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not guilty; your Charge is to enquire whether he be guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands Indicted, or not guilty; if you find him guilty, then you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the time of the High-Treason committed, or at any time since; if you find him not guilty, you shall enquire whether he fled for it, if you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty: If you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, say no more, and hear your Evidence.

Then Roger Belwood, Esq; of Council for the King in this Cause, open'd the Indictment thus:

May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

The Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Langhorn, stands Indicted of High Treason, and it is for Conspiring the Murder of the King, and Endeavouring an Alteration in the Government in Church and State. And the Indictment sets forth, that the 30th of August, in the 30th Year of the King, he and other false Traitors did agree to stir up Sedition and Rebellion in the Kingdom, and to cause a great slaughter of his Majesty's Subjects; To introduce the Superstition of the Church of Rome, and Depose and Murder the King, and to alter the Government in Church and State. And 'tis there said, that to accomplish these Evil Designs, he writ two Letters to be sent to Rome, and St. Omers, the Effect of which Letters was to procure the Assistance of the Pope, and the French King, to alter the Religion Established by Law in this Kingdom, to Romish Superstition, to Subvert the Government, and to put the King to Death, and that in further prosecution of these Traiterous Designs, he writ two other Letters to be sent to Rome to one Christopher Anderton, Rector of the English College, and a Jesuit, and Two others to be sent to St. Omers; and in these Letters he took upon him to advise the way and means by which these Treasons might be effected, and that these several Letters were sent and delivered by him, and received. The Indictment further sets forth that in further prosecution of these Traiterous Imaginations of his, he did receive five several Commissions in Writing, by Authority derived from the See of Rome; and those were for the making of Military Officers, to Execute these Treasons by force of Arms, and that he did likewise receive five other Commissions for constituting Civil Officers in this Realm, after the Treason was committed. And that amongst the rest he did receive for himself one Commission to be Advocate General of the Army that was to be rais'd. And the Indictment further Charges upon the Prisoner, that to accomplish these Treasons, whereas Ireland, Pickering, and Grove, and other false Traitors, had consulted these Treasons, which I before mentioned, Mr. Langhorn had Notice of the Treasons, and did Consent to them and Abet them, and that he did solicit the Benedictine Monks to advance 6000 l. for the Murder of the King, for the Alteration of Religion, and for the Subversion of the Government in Church and State. And further, whereas Mr. Coleman, (who was Executed for Treason) had (with others) conspired the Death of the King, and the introducing of Popery, and has writ a Letter to the French Confessor Le Cheese, for Aid and Assistance, that the Prisoner at the Bar had Notice of this, and that he did consent to it, and did Abet it. This, Gentlemen, is Charged to be Traiterously, and Devilishly done against the Prisoners Allegiance, and the form of the Statute. To this he hath pleaded not Guilty, but if we prove these Treasons, or any of them, you are to find him Guilty.

Then Sir Creswel Levins, one of His Majesty's Learned Council in the Law, opened the Charge thus: Prout——

May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

Mr. Langhorn is Indicted for Treason, for having a part in that general Treason that you have heard several times before of and some Persons there were Indicted, Tried, and Convicted Yesterday, for that Treason that Mr. Langhorn had an Hand in: for the Indictment does set forth, that there were Letters written by him to Rome to the same Purpose, of which, Gentlemen, you have heard so often, and will hear again.

This Treason was no less than to Murder the King, to alter the Religion, to overturn the Law, to raise an Army, by force to effect all this, and in short to do all the Mischief that Men (if it be lawful to call such Creatures Men) could do. That there was in order to this, Consultations held the 24th of April among the Jesuits; and there it was resolved that the King should be killed, there were Persons appointed to do it, that was Pickering, and Grove, but they failed therein, and they prosecuted it at Windsor, but happening to fail there also, they followed him to Newmarket, and ordered that it should be done there: And when all this failed, they took another Course, His Majesty was to be Poisoned, and as I said before, to make all this good, an Army was to be raised of 50000 Men in England, to perfect this Work; but if that would not do, they were to have Forces from beyond Sea to joyn with them: And Mr. Langhorn he writ Letters to procure these Forces, and he not only did so, but he found the effect of his Letters, and received Commissions from beyond Sea, whereof one was for himself, to be Advocate General of the Army. All these things are laid to Mr. Langhorn's Charge.

But I'll begin first, and shew you before I come to the particular Evidence against Mr. Langhorn, some Evidence of the general Design, and therefore fore we will call ſome Witneſſes to do that in the firſt Place, and then bring it down to Mr. Langhorn himſelf.

Call Mr. Dugdale, and Mr. Prance, (who were both ſworn, and Mr. Dugdale firſt ſtood up.)

Sir Cr. Levins. Come Sir, what do you know of any Deſign to Murder the King? ſpeak what you know concerning the Plot and Conſpiracy.

Mr. Dugdale. I was in ſeveral Conſultations for Alteration of this preſent Government, and for the introducing of Popery, and for the Murder of the King. I was a Perſon in moſt of the Conſultations to the ſame purpoſe, and heard the very Words uſed, and was hired to be inſtrumental in it, and was to have a Sum of Money to be one of them that ſhould do it. I was to be an Actor in it, and was to have a Place appointed to do it.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. What were you hired to do?

Mr. Dugdale. I was to kill the King.

Sir Cr. Levins. And who were the Perſons that put you upon it?

Mr. Dugdale. There was Mr. Ewers, Mr. Gavan, Mr. Luſon, and Mr. Vavaſor.

Sir Cr. Levins. What were theſe Men?

Mr. Dugdale. They are all Jeſuits.

Sir Cr. Levins. Do you know any thing of an Army that was to be raiſed to effect it?

Mr. Dugdale. They always did ſpeak of an Army that was to be raiſed, but it was not actually to be done, till the King was killed; that was the laſt Concluſion: It was indeed at firſt concluded on to raiſe an Army, but the laſt Conſultation was, that there ſhould no Arms appear, till the King was killed.

Sir Cr. Levins. You do not know any thing of Mr. Langhorn in particular, do you?

Mr. Dugdale. No, I do not know any thing in particular of him, I have heard of him.

L. C. J. North. Why, you brought him only to prove the general Deſign.

Mr. Dugdale. There was a Maſſacre to be, and then there ſhould be an Army, a pretty good conſiderable Army, there was no certain Number that I could hear of; but thoſe that did eſcape the Maſſacre, ſhould be cut off by the Army.

L. C. J. North. Where were theſe Conſultations?

Mr. Dugdale. One was at Tixal, another was at Boſcobel, at my Lord Aſton's, and Mr. Gerrard's.

Lord Chief Juſtice. North. Where were theſe Places?

Mr. Dugdale. In Staffordſhire.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Pray, who were to be maſſacred, in the firſt place?

Mr. Dugdale. All Proteſtants, and thoſe we could not be ſure of to be Papiſts.

Mr. Belwood. Pray, Sir, what do you know of any Letter to be writ to Mr. Ewers, concerning Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's Death?

Mr. Dugdale. I do remember a Letter that came to Mr. Ewers, from Mr. Harcourt, which did expreſs, and begin thus, This very Night Sir Edmundbury Godfrey is diſpatched; with ſome other Words of like Import; and then I ſent to Mr. Ewers about it: And do you think this will carry on the Deſign? I will be hang'd if it don't ſpoil it: No, ſaid he, he was a Perſon that uſed to be very ſevere againſt debauch'd lewd Perſons, and ſo it will be laid, as if they had done it out of Revenge.

L. C. J. North. What Day of the Week was that Letter dated?

Mr. Dugdale. It was, as I can very well make it out, on Saturday.

L. C. J. North. And when was it received?

Mr. Dugdale. It was received on Monday Night.

L. C. J. North. What were the Contents of it, do you ſay?

Mr. Dugdale. It began thus, This very Night, Sir Edmund Godfrey is diſpatched.

L. C. J. North. Who did it come from?

Mr. Dugdale. It came from Mr. Harcourt.

Sir Cr. Levins. They themſelves know that he was not found here in London, till Thurſday.

Mr. Dugdale. I could not hold, it run ſo much in my Mind, but the next Morning, going to an Alehouſe hard by, I there ſpoke of it, and immediately it was carried to Mr. Chetwin, and he was here Yeſterday to make it out, that I ſo did.

L. C. J. North. But why did they kill him? was it expreſſed why?

Mr. Dugdale. I had ſeveral Times heard, he was too much privy to their Conſultations.

L. C. J. North. That is, you mean, he had too much diſcovered to him.

Mr. Dugdale. And ſo they were afraid of Mr. Coleman too, that he carried Things too high; and he was out of their Favour for two Years.

Sir Cr. Levins. Then call Mr. Prance. Pray, Sir, what can you ſay?

Mr. Prance. There was one Mr. Meſſenger, a Gentleman of the Horſe to my Lord Arundel of Wardour, who was employed by my Lord Arundel of Wardour, and my Lord Powis, and he was to kill the King, and to have a very good Reward for the doing of it; and I was told ſo by my Lord Butler: I afterwards met with the Meſſenger, and asked him, what his Reaſon was that he would kill the King. He told me, he was off of it now.

Sir Cr. Levins. But what was to be done after they ſhould kill the King?

Mr. Prance. Preſently there ſhould be an Army of 50000 Men raiſed, to be governed by my Lord Arundel, and my Lord Powis, and them: I have heard Mr. Fenwick, and Mr. Ireland, and Grove, to ſpeak of this at the ſame Time together.

Sir Cr. Levins. What was that Army to be raiſed for?

Mr. Prance. To ſettle the Catholick Religion.

L. C. J. What was to become of other Perſons?

Mr. Prance. They were to be killed and ruined all: So Fenwick told me.

L. C. J. North. Look you, Mr. Langhorn, theſe Witneſſes ſpeak nothing to you in particular, but only that there was a Conſpiracy in general, to kill the King, and introduce Popery: If you will ask them any Queſtion, you may.

Langhorn. No, my Lord, they not accuſing me, I have nothing to ſay to them.

Mr. Prance. I heard one Mr. Harcourt ſay, that the King was to be killed by ſeveral, before one Mr. Thompſon, twice in his own Chamber in Duke-Street. And I heard Fenwick ſay, that Mr. Langhorn was to have a great Hand in it.

Langhorn. Is that all you have to ſay, as to me?

Mr. Praunce. It is all that I know of.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs came in.

Sir Cr. Levins. Now, my Lord, we will call the Evidence, that ſhall prove the particular Matters of the Indictment, as of writing the Letters beyond Sea, of his receiving Commiſſions, of his diſtributing them here to the ſeveral Perſons to whom they were directed; of his ſoliciting for the Money, the 6000 l. to be raiſed by the Benedictine Monks, which was either for a particular Purpoſe to poiſon the King, or to carry on the Deſign in general.

general. And first we call Dr. Oates. Who was sworn; and stood up.

Sir Cr. Levins. Sir, you hear what the Matter is, as to Mr. Langhorn, be pleased to tell the Court, whether you knew he writ any Letters, and received any Commissions; speak your whole Knowledge.

Dr. Oates. I hope your Lordship will be pleased to give me Leave to use my own Method?

L. C. J. Ay, ay, take your own Way, Mr. Oates.

Dr. Oates. Then I begin thus. In the Month of April, 1677, I went into the Kingdom of Spain: In the Month of September following, the Sons of Mr. Langhorn came into the Kingdom of Spain; it was September, or sooner, but I will not be positive as to the Time of their coming; the one was a Scholar of the English College at Madrid, the other was a Scholar of the English College at Valledolid. They came there to study Philosophy, in Order to their receiving of the Priesthood. My Lord, my Occasions called me into England, in the Month of November, following; and coming into England, Mr. Langhorn's Sons did give me some Letters, to Mr. Langhorn their Father; and as soon as I had rested my self for a Day or two, after my Journey, I came to Mr. Langhorn's House in Sheer-lane. Now, Mr. Langhorn's Wife being a zealous Protestant, I did whisper his Foot-Boy, or his Servant-Boy, in the Ear, that he should go and whisper his Master, Mr. Langhorn, and tell him, There was one would speak with him, from his Sons. Mr. Langhorn, by his Son, did desire me to meet him at his Chamber in the Temple, (in the Inner-Temple-lane, it was, I think) I know the Chamber, however, and accordingly, I did meet Mr. Langhorn that Night, by the means of his Half Brother, who is Brother, I think, by the Mother, and not by the Father, his Name is Smithson; and when I came into Mr. Langhorn's Chamber, their Chambers being directly opposite one to another, I was treated by Mr. Langhorn with a great deal of Civility, and I delivered Mr. Langhorn the Letters from his Sons, and I told him, that I thought his Sons would enter into the Society: Mr. Langhorn was mightily pleased with the News, being himself a great Votary for the Society, that his Sons would enter into it. Now, may it please your Lordship, Mr. Langhorn did say, He thought if they did continue in the World, that is secular Priests, they would suddenly have very great Promotion in England; for he said, Things would not last long in this Posture; that is, at that Time he then spoke; I speak the Words now, that he said then. And now, my Lord, I was with Mr. Langhorn another Time, while I was in England, but in the latter end of November Old Stile, in the beginning of December, New Stile, I went to St. Omers, and there were Letters that He delivered me, (looking upon the Prisoner,) a Pacquet to carry to St. Omers. And when the Pacquet was opened, there was a Letter, Signed, Richard Langhorn, in which he gave the Fathers at St. Omers great Thanks, for the great Care had of, and Kindness they shew'd to, his Sons, and that what they had been out of Pocket for their Viaticum, in order to their Journey into Spain, which was 20 l. he promised them they should be repaid it; and in this Letter he did expresly say, that he had written to Father Le Cheese in Order to our Concerns; those were his Words. Now, my Lord, the Letter that he writ to Father Le Cheese I saw not, but only this Letter I saw, which gave an Account of that Letter he had writ to Father Le Cheese; and he said, Mr. Coleman had been very large with him, and therefore it would not be necessary for him to trouble his Reverence with any large Epistles at that Time. My Lord, there was another Letter, and I think that was in the Month of March, or April, I cannot be positive, as to the particular Time, but it was upon this remarkable Circumstance: Mr. Langhorn had a Son, that had been in Rebellion, and had turned Soldier, or some such Thing, in France, and this Young Gentleman came to St. Omers, being the Place where he had been Educated; and Mr. Langhorn, by the Intercession of the Fathers there, did order him Five Pounds, to bring him over into England, upon Promise of his Son's Submission, who had been very Extravagant in several Respects. In this Letter, my Lord, Mr. Langhorn did express his great Care for the carrying on of the Design of the Catholicks, and several other Expressions there were in it bad enough, which I cannot now call to Mind, but they were to this Effect; The Parliament began to flag in promoting the Protestant Religion, and now they had a fair Opportunity to begin and give the Blow; what that Blow was, I leave to the Court and to the Jury to expound.

L. C. J. But was that an Expression in the Letter?

Dr. Oates. It was, my Lord: But it was a very large Letter, I can't give a particular Account of every Thing in it. My Lord, in the Month of April, or the beginning of May, your Lordship remembers there was a Consult that hath been sworn here in this Court, to which Consult——

L. C. J. Pray speak it out.

Dr. Oates. There were several of us came over from St. Omers, and from other Parts beyond the Seas, to this Consult, at which Consult Mr. Langhorn was not present; but I had Orders from the Provincial, to give Mr. Langhorn an Account of what Resolutions, and Passages, and Minutes pass'd at this Consult; and this I did as well as I could, and when I did so, Mr. Langhorn lift up his Hands and his Eyes, and pray'd to God to give it good Success. My Lord, while I was at Mr. Langhorn's Chamber, giving this Account, I saw several Parchments lying upon the Table in his Study.

L. C. J. You had best tell the Effect of the Account you gave Mr. Langhorn in his Chamber, that you speak of.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I told him who went Procurator to Rome, that was one Father Cary, I told him what was the Resolve of the Consult concerning the Death of the King.

L. C. J. Did you so?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, I did: I told Mr. Langhorn that several of the Fathers were to be admonished for their irregular Living, as they termed it: And to this Mr. Langhorn did reply, as near as I can remember, that he found some of them did not live up to the Rules of the Society.

L. C. J. Pray tell us more particularly, what you told him. And tell us as near as you can, as you told it him then, the Business of the Plot upon the King.

Dr. Oates. I told him the Resolve of the Society, and of that Consult, and what was that which was resolved, that Pickering and Grove should go on to attempt to assassinate the King's Person, and what was to be their Reward, the one was to have, that is Grove, 1500 l. and the other, that is, Pickering, was to have 30000 Masses: He lift up his Hands and Eyes when I told him this (and I told him more particularly than I can now remember) and he he lift up his Hands and Eyes, and prayed God that it might have good Succeſs.

L. C. J. Did you tell him they had Signed to this Agreement?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, I told him, that they had all Signed it.

Langhorn. When was this?

Dr. Oates. It was the latter end of April, or beginning of May.

Langhorn. How long after they had Signed the Conſult?

Dr. Oates. A Day or two after.

Langhorn. Dr. Oates, Do you know the Day of the Month? you have aſſerted the Day of the Month formerly, pray do it now.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Let him go on; you ſhall ask him what Queſtions you will, by and by.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I ſaw there a Commiſſion for my Lord Arundel of Wardour, and another to my Lord Powis; the one was to be Lord High Chancellor, and the other to be Lord High Treaſurer; there was a Commiſſion for my Lord Bellaſis, to be General, another for my Lord Petre, to be Lieutenant-General, and there were other Commiſſions, of which I cannot remember the particular Names, but there was a Commiſſion for Coleman to be Secretary of State, and there was a Commiſſion for the Priſoner at the Bar to be Advocate of the Army.

L. C. J. By what Authority were thoſe Commiſſions?

Dr. Oates. They were by Authority derived from the See of Rome, by Vertue of a Breve from the Pope, directed to the General of the Society, and they were Signed IHΣ, and with the Mark of the Croſs thro' the IHS, and they were Signed Johannes Paulus de Oliva.

L. C. J. North. That is the Jeſuits Mark?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. North. Where did you ſee thoſe Commiſſions?

Dr. Oates. In Mr. Langhorn's Study of his Chamber, in the Temple.

L. C. J. Where? Did they lie open, that any one might ſee them?

Dr. Oates. They lay upon a Corner of his Desk, folded up.

L. C. J. How came you to ſee them?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I will tell your Lordſhip how I came to ſee them. We had Notice they were come, by a Letter from one Father Anderton, and he called theſe Commiſſions Patents, and, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I did ask Mr. Langhorn, whether he had received them? He told me, Yes: Then I asked him, whether he would do me the Favour to let me ſee them? and, becauſe I had been privy to the Conſults, and came to wait upon him by Order of the Provincial, he did let me ſee them.

L. C. J. And you ſaw them in his Study, upon his Desk?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, I did. And particularly one more I can tell of, which his Son was to deliver to a Son of my Lord Arundel of Wardour.

L. C. J. How many Commiſſions were there?

Dr. Oates. I cannot ſay, about Seven or Eight, I think, I did ſee, and looked over.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. And you knew what they were?

Dr. Oates. Yes, for thoſe that I ſaw, that I can remember.

L. C. J. What was my Lord Powis to be?

Dr. Oates. Lord High-Treaſurer.

L. C. J. And what my Lord Arundel?

Dr. Oates. Lord High-Chancellor of England.

L. C. J. And what my Lord Stafford?

Dr. Oates. As to my Lord Stafford, I cannot give ſo good an Account; but as I remember, he was to be a Pay-maſter in the Army, or ſome ſuch Office relating to the Army.

L. C. J. North. What was the Priſoner at the Bar to be?

Dr. Oates. A Judge in the Army, or an Advocate-General, ſo they called him.

L. C. J. You ſaw moſt of theſe?

Dr. Oates. I ſaw ſeveral of them, moſt of them in his Cuſtody, I cannot ſay all: There was more than for theſe Lords, for other inferior Officers.

L. C. J. How many might there be of them, as near as you can gueſs?

Dr. Oates. I think he told me they were about Fifty.

L. C. J. What Number did you ſee?

Dr. Oates. I ſaw about Half a dozen or Eight.

L. C. J. Well, Sir, go on.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I am now to ſpeak to your Lordſhip concerning ſome Letters that he wrote to Rome, and there was ——

L. C. J. Had you any Diſcourſe with him concerning the Matters of any of the Commiſſions of my Lord Bellaſis and my Lord Powis?

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord; I had but little Skill in Military Affairs, and therefore I ſaid but little, and I cannot give you an Account, Word for Word, what the Diſcourſe was, for it was out of my Way. My Lord, there were ſeveral Letters which Mr. Langhorn writ to Father Le Cheeſe, the Anſwers to which I ſaw in April and May; whereupon the Fathers did deſire they might have the Originals of thoſe Copies: He gave me the Originals to carry to the Fathers, I think it was that very Day I had been with him in the Afternoon; for I was with him in the Morning; the Fathers did read the Letters.

L. C. J. From whom came they?

Dr. Oates. From Father Le Cheeſe, and from Father Anderton. And Le Cheeſe, in his Letter, did aſſure him of his Stedfaſtneſs and Conſtancy, to aſſiſt the Society for the carrying on the Cauſe: And that they ſhould not need doubt, but the French King would ſtand by them, or to that Purpoſe. I cannot remember exactly the Words, but it was to that Effect.

L. C. J. But they were directed to Mr. Langhorn?

Dr. Oates. I cannot ſwear that directly, but he gave them me.

L. C. J. Who were Le Cheeſe and Anderton?

Dr. Oates. The one was Confeſſor to the French King, and the other Rector of the College at Rome.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. But you ſaw thoſe in the Priſoner's Cuſtody, you ſay?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. He gave them you to deliver to the Fathers, to Whitebread and the reſt of them?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, but I cannot ſay who they were directed to.

L. C. J. But pray repeat what was the Subſtance of that Letter.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, as to the Words of them, I dare not charge my Memory, but it was to this Purpoſe, That Le Cheeſe would ſtand by the Engliſh Society, and aſſiſt them, and that they ſhould not need to doubt the French King, or to that Effect.

Mr. Belwood.

Mr. Belwood. Do you remember any Letters that were writ by Mr. Coleman to Le Cheese?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, I remember several Letters that Coleman writ, but Mr. Langhorn was not affected in them.

Mr. Belwood. Did he know of them?

Dr. Oates. He gave an Account, in his Letter to the Society, That Coleman had writ Letters to Le Cheese, and was very large, and therefore he should not trouble his Reverence with any long Epistles.

Sir Cr. Levins. What do you know of any Money that was to be raised by the Benedictine Monks?

Dr. Oates. I had forgot that.

L. C. J. You say, that he said, they should not need to doubt the French, but he would stand by them with Men and Money; For what Purpose, pray?

Dr. Oates. I'll tell you for what Purpose it was, the Words of the Letter did alledge it to be for carrying on of the Cause.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. You mean the Catholick Cause?

Dr. Oates. So it was generally understood.

L. C. J. But for the other Money, what say you?

Dr. Oates. Mr. Langhorn was employed as Solicitor for the Jesuits, and did accompany some of the Society, Father Harcourt, Father Fenwick, Father Kaines, and Father Langworth, and they went and did communicate the Secret to the Benedictine Monks, desiring them to stand by them with a Summ of Money for the carrying on the Design: Now, upon Mr. Langhorn's soliciting them, and appearing for them, as I have heard, 6000 l. was promised and paid.

L. C. J. By whom promised and paid?

Dr. Oates. By the Benedictine Monks.

L. C. J. To whom?

Dr. Oates. To the Society.

L. C. J. To what Person?

Dr. Oates. That I cannot say; but it was said, Mr. Langhorn was to receive it.

L. C. J. Did you see the Money paid?

Dr. Oates. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Did you hear Mr. Langhorn confess it was paid?

Dr. Oates. Mr. Langhorn did say in the Month of July or August, I cannot be positive which, but thereabouts, when he was spoke to about it, that he would stir in it, and do to the utmost of his Power for the procuring of it. And another Thing, I am sure Mr. Langhorn was very much disgusted, that Sir George Wakeman was not contented with the 10000 l.

Sir Cr. Levins. What was the 6000 l. for?

Dr. Oates. It was for the general Cause.

Sir Cr. Levins. For the Murder of the King?

Dr. Oates. Yes, and for the Alteration of Religion.

L. C. J. North. How did it appear that Mr. Langhorn was disgusted, that Sir George Wakeman would not take the 10000 l? And, What was it for?

Dr. Oates. It was to poison the King. And he said, He was a covetous Man; that was in a publick Concern; and that, being it was to carry on the Cause, it was no matter if he did it for nothing: But he said he was a Narrow-Spirited, and a Narrow-Soul'd Physician.

L. C. J. When was it that he said he would stir for the Money?

Dr. Oates. It was in July, or in August.

Langhorn. My Lord, may I ask him any Questions?

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Yes, yes, Mr. Langhorn, you may.

L. C. J. North. Pray, Mr. Oates, you saw such and such Commissions from the Superior of the Jesuits, that were Signed Johannes Paulus de Oliva, pray will you look upon this, and see whether you know it? (And a Writing under the Jesuits Seal was shew'd him.)

Dr. Oates. This is the Hand, the very Hand, that was to the others, and they had put such a Seal; and that is for Mr. Stapleton, to be Rector of St. Omers.

Sir Cr. Levins. Now, my Lord, if you please, this was not one of those Commissions that Mr. Langhorn did distribute to the Persons that were to have them, no, he would let us have none of those, but it is a Commission of another Nature, 'tis neither for an Office Civil nor Military, but Ecclesiastical, yet it is under the same Hand and Seal.

Langhorn. You say, you came to me, the first Time, in November; and you went to St. Omers, when, Sir?

Dr. Oates. The latter end of November.

Langhorn. When arrived you at St. Omers?

Dr. Oates. I think it was the 10th of December, New Stile, I will not be positive.

L. C. J. All their Defence lies in Catches upon a Point of Time, in which no Man living is able to be positive.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, if the 26th of November fell upon a Monday, then it was on the 26th Day that I set out for Dover in the Coach, as near as I can remember, and I got to St. Omers a Friday Morning following.

Langhorn. A Friday after, you say, you got to St. Omers?

Dr. Oates. About that Time.

Langhorn. How long did you stay there?

Dr. Oates. Till April following, I stay'd.

Langhorn. Without any moving from thence?

Dr. Oates. Only went to Paris, and after that, a Night or two at Watton, and then came away in April. My Lord, I desire, if your Lordship please, that Mr. Langhorn may ask the Court, and the Court ask me; for I know the Court will be so kind, as to ask me such Questions as are reasonable, and proper for me to answer.

Mr. Just. Atkins. That indeed is the regular Way, for Prisoners should not ask the Question, but the Court.

Langhorn. Very well, I shall observe the Method, if your Lordship please. I desire to know, what Time in April he came back for England.

Dr. Oates. I came about the middle of April, or latter end, I will not be so positive in that, and I was in England under twenty Days.

Langhorn. Can you tell what Day you came into England?

Dr. Oates. No, I cannot exactly, but I came in April, the middle or the latter End.

Langhorn. I desire to know, who came with him?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, there came a matter of Nine or Ten of us in all.

L. C. J. Name them.

Dr. Oates. There was Father Williams, and Father March, the Rector of Liege, and Sir John Warner.

Langhorn. What is the Rector of Liege's Name?

Dr. Oates. Warren, I think, I cannot tell Names so exactly.

Langhorn. Go on, Sir, pray.

Dr. Oates. I cannot name any more.

Langhorn.

Langhorn. You have named them all in the Records of the Lords Houſe.

Dr. Oates. 'Tis like I have, I refer you to that.

Langhorn. Did Sir Thomas Preſton come over with you?

Dr. Oates. Yes, he did.

Langhorn. Did Poole come over with you?

Dr. Oates. Yes.

L. C. J. Look you Mr. Langhorn, we had all this Matter ſpoken of Yeſterday, and there were Witneſſes that prove that Sir Jeremy Warner, and Sir Thomas Preſton, were there.

Langhorn. I humbly conceive, that was upon an Iſſue tried in another County, by another Jury, and therefore I hope I do not amiſs in urging what I can ſay for my ſelf to this Jury.

L. C. J. You are not debarred, I only told you of it. Was Sir Robert Brett there?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I think he was, I am not confident of that. My Lord, I own what Mr. Langhorn can bring to the Court upon Record.

Langhorn. I only ask it, becauſe he ſays ſo in the Houſe of Lords.

Dr. Oates. If you can ſhew the Record of what I ſaid there, do

Langhorn. I do not deſire him to name them now, but to know whether he does now affirm the truth of what he Swore in the Houſe of Lords?

L. C. J. If you can produce, as you may, if you have been diligent, a Copy of the Record in the Houſe of Lords, and have it Sworn to be a true Copy of the Records, it will be Evidence for you, and ſhall be read; but to put him to remember a Record without Book, muſt not be, it would be hard for him to undertake that.

Langhorn. I deſire to know how he came from Dover; whether in a Coach, or on Horſeback, to London?

Dr. Oates. Indeed the Queſtion is ſo ſudden, that I cannot be poſitive, but as near as I remember, I came by Coach.

Langhorn. I will give my reaſon why I ask this; becauſe he hath formerly upon a Trial in the King's-Bench, affirmed he came by Coach, in the company of Mr. Hilſley.

Dr. Oates. No, I did never ſay ſo; but I came over in the Pacquet Boat, in the company of Mr. Hilſley, but when we were come over, Mr. Hilſley went out of the way from us.

Langhorn. I deſire to know where he Lodged, when he came to Town?

L. C. J. Where did you Lodge the firſt Night?

Dr. Oates. I did lie at Mr. Groves's Houſe, when I came to London in April.

L. C. J. But the firſt Night when you came from Dover, when you came into London in April?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I cannot ſay, I lay there the firſt Night; but my Lodging was provided for me there.

L. C. J. You are to Anſwer as well as you can, if you cannot remember it, ſay ſo. Do you ſay the firſt abſolutely, or not?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I cannot remember the firſt Night, but I lay ſeveral Nights at Mr. Grove's.

Langhorn. Then I ask, whether he did generally lie there, during his ſtay?

Dr. Oates. I did lie there ſome Nights.

L. C. J. How many times did you lie there?

Dr. Oates. I believe three or four Nights, I won't be poſitive as to the Number.

Langhorn. What Day was the Conſult?

Dr. Oates. It was the 24th of April.

Langhorn. What Day did you acquaint me with it?

Dr. Oates. A Day or two after.

Langhorn. When did he return back to St. Omers?

L. C. J. When did you go back? about what time?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I think it was a Week in May, I cannot be poſitive, but I think that was the outſide.

L. C. J. They ſaid, Yeſterday you affirmed you ſtay'd but Six Days.

Dr. Oates. I do not ſay ſo, but I ſay under 20.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Come, have you any thing elſe to ask him?

Langhorn. Thoſe Letters that he ſpeaks of, I deſire to know whether he ſaw me write them?

L. C. J. Thoſe Letters you ſpeak of, did you ſee him write them?

Dr. Oates. I did not ſee him write them, but I am ſure they were his Letters, becauſe I know his Hand.

L. C. J. How did you come to know his Hand, ſince you did not ſee him write them?

Dr. Oates. I ſaw the Letter whereby he ordered Money to be paid, 5*l.* to his Son. And I ſaw the Money paid to his Son, by that Order.

Langhorn. Do you know that le Cheeſe, and Anderton, writ to me?

Dr. Oates. I do not ſay that they writ to him, but he had Letters Subſcribed by their Names, and they were ſaid by him to come from them, and they were to be communicated to the Prieſts and Jeſuits; and he delivered them to me to that end.

Langhorn. When you returned to St. Omers, how long did you ſtay there?

Dr. Oates. Till 23d June, New Stile, which is the 13th Old Stile.

Langhorn. I remember he profeſſed himſelf a Roman Catholick, I ſee he is a Miniſter: I deſire to know of him when he left the Proteſtant Religion, and became a Convert, as he call'ed himſelf; call it what you will, when he left being a Proteſtant, and became a Papiſt, that is it I mean?

Dr. Oates. He does it for nothing but to quarrel.

L. C. J. When did you leave the Church of England?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, if it be the pleaſure of the Bench to ask me that Queſtion ——

L. C. J. You ought to anſwer it, tho' it be nothing to the purpoſe.

Dr. Oates. Then I anſwer, it was either in February or March 167$\frac{6}{7}$.

Langhorn. My Lord, I deſire to know whether he had any Benefice?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I was ſometime Vicar of Bobbing —— in Kent: But I ſuppoſe this is to make me accuſe my ſelf of ſomething, whereby I might forfeit my Living: for, my Lord, I have a Right in a Point of Equity ſtill to that Living, but only for going beyond Sea without leave of my Ordinary, I am not now Vicar of ——

Langhorn. When did you come to your Vicaridge?

Dr. Oates. In 1672.

Langhorn. You became a Papiſt in 1677. I ask this Queſtion, whether he did leave his Living before he turned Papiſt?

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I am not willing to anſwer that Queſtion.

L. C. J. When did you leave your Living? Did you leave it before you went away?

Dr. Oatēs. It was not very long before, but the reaſon why I am not willing to tell, is, When I left the Pariſh, I left it in the Charge of Mr. Thomas Turner, Vicar of Milton, and I did go near about Chicheſter, and ſerved a Sequeſtration there. The Air was not a good Air in that part of Kent, and I had not my Health; and that was one Reaſon, and for other Reaſons beſt known to my ſelf.

Langhorn. After he became a Papiſt, I deſire to know, whether he became a Jeſuit? Were you in any Order there?

L. C. J. Mr. Langhorn, it is not a proper Queſtion, we ought not to ask it him: You are a Man of the Law, and therefore you know it is not fair to ask any Perſon a Queſtion about a criminal Matter that may bring himſelf in danger.

Langhorn. I take him to be out of danger, he hath his Pardon.

L. C. J. I don't know what his Pardon is, nor how far it reaches, nor whether this be contained in it; but if Mr. Oates pleaſes to anſwer that Queſtion he may.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Tho' he hath his Pardon he may be in danger of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure.

L. C. J. He ſays he will not.

Langhorn. I'll give you another Reaſon why I ask it, becauſe in one of his Narratives he ſeems to call himſelf ſo; he ſays, There came over Nine of us, all Jeſuits, I ſuppoſe him to be one of that Order; this I took to be a ground, why I might properly call him ſo.

L. C. J. Narratives are no Evidence at all.

Langhorn. But that gave me an occaſion to ask the Queſtion.

Dr. Oates. I cannot anſwer it becauſe it tends rather to raiſe a Debate in the Court, than conduces to the Queſtion, to acquit or condemn the Priſoner.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You are not bound to anſwer it.

L. C. J. He tells you, he is not bound by Law to anſwer, and he refuſes to anſwer.

Langhorn. I deſire to know, whether he ever ſaw me, or converſed with me, from the time he acquainted me with the Conſult, and ſaw the Commiſſions in my Chamber?

L. C. J. How often did you converſe with Mr. Langhorn?

Dr. Oates. After I returned again in July and Auguſt, once or twice.

L. C. J. How often in April and May?

Dr. Oates. Twice, I think, about the time of the Conſult.

L. C. J. And when you came over again, how often?

Dr. Oates. Twice more I think, twice or thrice.

L. C. J. So, then he hath been four or five times in your Company.

Dr. Oates. He would not let me come to his Houſe, for he uſed to ſay, his Wife was but Aumsace turned from a Devil; and therefore he would not have me come thither.

Langhorn. I hope he will not go out of the Court?

L. C. J. No, he will ſtay here, but you have done with him at preſent, have you not?

Langhorn. Yes, my Lord, I have.

Sir. Cr. Levins. Swear Mr. Bedlow. Which was done.

L. C. J. Mr. Bedlow, I ask you but one ſhort Queſtion, becauſe I would not interrupt you afterwards, That Paper that you ſaw Signed by the Superior of the Jeſuits, where had you it?

Mr. Bedlow. I had it at Mr. Daniel Arthur's.

Langhorn. What is that?

L. C. J. It is an Inſtrument Signed and Sealed, juſt as the things were, which Mr. Oates ſays, he ſaw in your Chamber.

L. C. J. North. And beſides you muſt take notice, that this was found a long time after Mr. Oates had given his Teſtimony publickly, for his Cloſet was not ſearched till a great while after.

L. C. J. It is to ſhew you what Seals they uſed to have to their Commiſſions. Mr. Oates deſcribes ſeveral Commiſſions that he ſaw in your Study, ſo Sealed and Subſcribed, and after the ſearching Mr. Arthur's Study, being a Papiſt, that Commiſſion is found there. Now tho' it be a thing of a private Concern, a Church matter, not relating to the Matters in Queſtion, yet this very Commiſſion is ſo ſubſcribed, and ſo ſigned and ſealed, as Mr. Oates had deſcribed thoſe to be before in your Chamber.

Mr. Bedlow. Becauſe it was exactly the Hand and Seal that I ſaw to the Commiſſions in Paris, I did take particular notice of the Paper, and brought it to the Council.

L. C. J. Well Sir, now go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Bedlow. Firſt, my Lord, I'll only ask this Queſtion of the Court, whether a known Roman Catholick may take Notes of the Evidence in ſuch a Cauſe?

L. C. J. Truly no, I think not.

Mr. Bedlow. There is an Honourable Lady in that Gallery, the Lady Marchioneſs of Wincheſter, that hath took Notes all this Trial.

L. C. J. She will do her ſelf, nor no body elſe any great hurt, by what ſhe writes.

Mr. Bedlow. I only ſpeak it for the Information of the Court.

L. C. J. A Woman's Notes will not Signifie much truly, no more than her Tongue.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, about three years ſince, I was ſent by Mr. Harcourt, and Mr. Coleman, to Le Cheeſe, with ſome Letters for the carrying on of this Deſign. With theſe Letters, Mr. Coleman asked me, if I could go with him as far as the Temple. I have no particular Acquainrance with Mr. Langhorn, I was but twice at his Chamber, once with Mr. Harcourt, and once with Mr. Coleman. I waited upon Mr. Coleman to Mr. Langhorn's Chamber in the Temple: There did he Regiſter ſuch Letters as Mr. Coleman brought to him, and afterwards Mr. Coleman ſealed them up, and gave them me to carry to Le Cheeſe.

L. C. J. How do you ſay? when you went with Mr. Coleman to Mr. Langhorn's Chamber, were the Letters there?

Mr. Bedlow. The Letters were writ firſt at Coleman's Houſe, and brought open by Coleman to Mr. Langhorn, and he read them and Regiſtred them, and then Coleman ſealed them up, and gave them me to carry away.

Langhorn. What Letters were theſe?

L. C. J. Do you know what the Effect of thoſe Letters were?

Mr. Bedlow. The Letters were read ſome of them at the King's-Bench-Bar, at Coleman's Trial: There was one of them writ by Mr. Harcourt, another by Mr. Colemam, to Le Cheeſe.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What was the Effect of them?

Mr. Bedlow. Only to let Le Cheeſe know, that they waited only now for his Anſwer, how far he had proceeded with the French King, for the ſending ſending of Money; for they only wanted Money, all other things were in readineſs. That the Catholicks of England were in ſafety, had made all Places, and all Offices, to be diſpoſed of to Catholicks, or ſuch as they thought would be ſo; that all Gariſons were either in their own Hands, or ready to be put into them; that they had ſo fair an Opportunity, (as I remember that was one of the Expreſſions in the Letter to Father Stapleton) that they had ſo fair an Opportunity, having a King ſo eaſy to believe what is dictated to him by our Party, that if we ſlip this Opportunity, we muſt deſpair of ever introducing Popery into England; for having a King of England ſo eaſy, and the French King ſo powerful, they muſt not miſs ſuch an Opportunity.

L. C. J. For what?

Mr. Bedlow. To ſend over Money for the carrying on of the Cauſe, for they only wanted that, all elſe was in readineſs: And the other Letters were to the ſame Effect, tho' in other Words. That Letter was in Engliſh, but the Letters to Le Cheeſe, and the Nuncio, were both in French.

L. C. J. But you underſtand French, don't you?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, my Lord I do.

L. C. J. Did he Copy them out, while you were there by?

Mr. Bedlow. He Regiſtred them before me.

L. C. J. Did he write them into a Book? and were you there all that time?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, my Lord, I and Coleman walked in the Chamber, whilſt he went in and writ, as he did other things; for he Regiſtred all their Accompts: There was not a peny of Money either received or laid out, nor any thing done almoſt in relation to this Concern, but he did keep a Regiſter of it: I cannot ſay, that ever he did talk any thing before me of the King's Death particularly, but talked of the whole Deſign. About a Year and a half ſince, Mr. Harcourt ſent another Pacquet of Letters by me to Mr. Langhorn to be Regiſtred; he looked ſtrangely upon me, and received the Letter, and ſent an Anſwer to Mr. Harcourt, that Mr. Williams (for I went then under the Name of Captain Williams) had delivered him ſuch Letters, and that he ſhould have them again to Morrow, after he had Copied them, and Regiſtred them. Mr. Harcourt read the Letter of Anſwer to me, and in the Letter it was Mr. Williams. Said I to Mr. Harcourt, I thought I might have been Regiſtred by my right Name, becauſe when any thing ſhould take effect and occaſion ſerve, I reſolved to bear my own Name. Alas, ſays he, this does not ſignifie any thing at all, for as for this Regiſter, it is not ſo conſiderable: there ſhall be a New Regiſter made, of things of weight and moment, this is only a blind Regiſter amongſt our ſelves. The two Letters that I brought from Harcourt, there was one of them from Sir William Godolphin, that I had brought before from Spain.

L. C. J. Who was that directed to?

Mr. Bedlow. To my Lord Bellaſis; and about three Weeks after it was that I was ſent to Mr. Langhorn to have it Regiſtred; the other was from the Iriſh College of Jeſuits in Salamanca. The Letter from the Rector did ſpecify, that they would have my Lord Bellaſis, and the reſt of the Lords that were concerned, and the reſt of the Party in England, to be in readineſs, and to have this communicated with all expedition; for now they had provided in Spain, under the Notion of Pilgrims for St. Jago, ſome Iriſh Caſhier'd Soldiers, that had left their Country, ſome for Religion, and ſome for their Crimes, and a great many Lay-Brothers, whom they procured and gathered together under the Notion of Pilgrims, to be ready to take Shipping at the Groine, to land at Milford-Haven, there to meet my Lord Powis, and an Army that he was to raiſe in Wales to further this Deſign. And theſe Letters ſaid they had almoſt brought it to a Period, that they did only expect a Return from England, to ſhew in what readineſs they were here, that accordingly they might proceed.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Langhorn ſee theſe Letters?

Mr. Bedlow. He took theſe Letters from me, and told me Mr. Harcourt ſhould have them again, when he had tranſcribed them; and writ a Letter to Mr. Harcourt, that Mr. Williams had brought him ſuch Letters.

L. C. J. And he did tranſcribe them?

Mr. Bedlow. I ſuppoſe ſo, for he afterwards ſent them back to Mr. Harcourt.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Was it a good large Book that he regiſtred them in?

Mr. Bedlow. I know not what Book he regiſtred them in, not thoſe Letters.

Langh. It is a proper Queſtion, becauſe he ſaid I regiſtred theſe Letters before him.

Mr. Bedlow. I ſay, I ſaw him in his Study tranſcribe Coleman's Letter, whilſt Coleman and I walked in his Chamber.

L. C. J. Into what kind of Book did he Regiſter that? Had he more Books than one, pray?

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, I cannot tell that, I judge it might be the ſame Book. I ſaw the Book then, it was a large Parchment Book; but I did not ſee it when Harcourt's Letters were Regiſtred. When Coleman and I came thither, he went into his Study, and left us in the Chamber, I ſaw him tranſcribing the Papers that lay before him: but when I brought thoſe Letters from Mr. Harcourt, I only delivered them ſealed up, and his Anſwer to Father Harcourt was, that Mr. Williams had brought him ſo many Letters, and he ſhould have them again as ſoon as he had tranſcribed them.

L. C. J. Mr. Langhorn, you would do well to ſhew us the Book, and that would make the matter plain.

L. C. J. North. Could you ſee how far he had gone in the Book, and what Room there was left to write other Letters.

Mr. Bedlow. It was a Book at leaſt three Inches thick, and as near as I could gueſs, he had gotten through two thirds of the Book.

L. C. J. But you ſhould ſhew us your Book, Mr. Langhorn.

Langhorn. I ſay my Lord, if I had ſuch a Book it muſt needs be found in my Study; if I had it, it muſt be there, for I never removed it.

L. C. J. That was not a Book fit to be left there.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, Pritchard did tell me, that the Commiſſions were come, and that Mr. Langhorn had them, and things, ſays he are now in a readineſs. Then ſaid I, When ſhall I have my Commiſſion? Said he, thoſe that Mr. Langhorn hath are only for the General Officers; you muſt have yours, ſaid he, from my Lord Bellaſis.

Sir Cr. Levins. Do you know any thing of any Money that was to be raiſed by the Benedictine Monks; 6000 l. or what other ſum?

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, in May 1676. Among the Letters I carried to Le Cheeſe, one of them

Was directed to Stapleton a Benedictine Monk, to raise the Money for England.

L. C. J. The Money, what Money?

Mr. Bedlow. The Money they had promised to remit into England.

L. C. J. But did they name no sum?

Mr. Bedlow. No, my Lord, for they had no particular promise, but only that they did make it their business to raise what they could.

L. C. J. And what was it? Do you know of any sum of Money that was raised, and by whom?

Mr. Bedlow. Le Cheese told me himself, that they had no Reason to suspect him or his Interest with the French King, for he had laid that sure enough. And that when he found a fit Opportunity, the Money was ready to be remitted into England, and that he had remitted some of it already to Mr. Coleman and Ireland.

L. C. J. You know not but by what Le Cheese td you?

Mr. Bedlow. No.

L. C. J. He speaks what Le Cheese told him, that he would raise Money, and that he had sent some to Mr. Coleman and Ireland.

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, and that the rest should follow when he found there was absolute occasion; but he would not part with his Money till they had Assurance of their being in readiness here, and likely to further and carry on the Design.

Mr. Just. Atkins. Mr. Bedlow, had you any Discourse with the Prisoner about any Commissions?

Mr. Bedlow. No, my Lord, 'tis at least a Year and a half since I saw him.

L. C. J. Did he ever own any Commissions he had?

Mr. Bedlow. No, Pritchard told me he had some.

L. C. J. You have seen the Commissions, have you not?

Mr. Bedlow. No, I never saw any in Mr. Langhorn's Hand.

L. C. J. Where did you see them then?

Mr. Bedlow. Sir Henry Tichbourn did shew me three Commissions in Paris, Signed by the General of the Order, and Sealed with the Jesuits Seal, which made me take up this Paper, which hath been shewn, tho' it were a thing indifferent, yet because it was written with the same Hand, and Sealed with the same Seal that the Commissions were that I saw at Paris.

Mr. Belwood. Did Mr. Langhorn know any thing of the Treason to Murder the King, by Pickering and Grove.

Mr. Bedlow. That I do know only by report; but when Grove, Pickering and Conyers were going to New-Market, I was at Harcourt's Chamber, and I had a Design to go to Windsor, to observe what they did; and I did ask Father Harcourt to give me leave to go see a Friend of mine take shipping at Plymouth, to send some Commendations by him to my Friends in Italy; then says Father Harcourt you cannot be spared, you must not go now, for we don't know what return these Gentlemen will make of their Journey, and what occasion there may be for you, if there should be any good effect of it: Then, said I, I will go and write, and send it by a Friend down to be sent into Italy: But, said he, you must stay a while till I come back again; I am going to Mr. Langhorn's Chamber in the Temple, to take the Minutes of what they have done this Morning. That was the Contrivance of sending down those People to New-Market to assassinate the King.

Mr. Just. Atkins. That is no Evidence against the Prisoner, because it is by Hear-say.

L. C. J. It is right, and the Jury ought to take notice, That what another man said is no Evidence against the Prisoner, for nothing will be Evidence against him, but what is of his own Knowledge. But I desire, Mr. Bedlow, as well as you can, you would repeat the effect of one of the most material Letters Mr. Langhorn did transcribe.

Mr. Bedlow. Tho' I was not so exact a Frenchman, in the nicety of the Tongue, yet I understood enough to learn the sence of those Letters. The English Letter from Stapleton, which he transcribed, was to this effect; That Coleman and Harcourt, naming themselves We, (that is, We and the Jesuits, and it was to the Rector of the English Monks in particular, but I missed of the Rector, and Mr. Stapleton receiv'd it;) I say, the effect of that Letter was, they would have a certain Answer from them ——

Langhorn. When was it?

Mr. Bedlow. It was in 76.

L. C. J. What was the effect, say you?

Mr. Bedlow. The effect was, that they would have a final Answer from those Religious at Doway and Paris, to know how far they had proceeded with the English Religious, and all their Friends beyond Sea, in making Collections, and remitting of Money, for there was only Money wanting; for the Arms of the Catholicks were all ready, and they had all a good mind to the Business, their Arms and Hearts were ready, and the easiness of the King of England, and the strength of the Power of France, made it an opportunity not to be neglected: That the Garisons were ready to be put into such Hands as they could trust.

L. C. J. Was there such an Expression in the Letter, upon your Oath, that they had such Arms, and that the Garisons were ready to be put into their Hands, and whose Hands they were ready to be put into?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, my Lord, there were such Expressions, and they would have the Garisons only in such Hands as they could trust.

L. C. J. And did he transcribe those Letters?

Mr. Bedlow. He did transcribe those three while we were in his Chamber.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Was there any mention of exciting the French King, by Power, to Invade this Kingdom?

Mr. Bedlow. There was in the French Letter to Monsieur Le Cheese, which he transcribed too.

Langhorn. That was in French, he says.

L. C. J. I suppose you understand French too, or else you could not do what you did.

Langhorn. I understand Law French.

L. C. J. Mr. Bedlow, Did you never hear him discourse in French?

Mr. Bedlow. No, my Lord.

Dr. Oates. I cannot write nor read French, but I can translate it.

Mr. Recorder. If you have any Questions to ask him, you may ask him.

Langhorn. How many were the Letters that then I transcribed?

Mr. Bedlow. There were three, my Lord; one was to the English Monks at Paris, another was to Monsieur Le Chese, another to the Pope's Nuncio?

Langhorn. Were they long or short ones? I ask for this reason, because I observe that in the Narrative, Coleman's Letters are very long; of what length might they be?

Mr. Bedlow. They were the best part of half a

Sheet

Sheet of Paper, for Mr. Coleman writ a curious fine ſmall Hand, and would put a great deal of Buſineſs into a little Paper; the Popes Nuncio's Letter was very ſhort.

L. C. J. Did he tranſcribe them all before you went away?

Mr. Bedlow. Whilſt we walked in his Chamber, he Regiſtred them: We took a great many Turns about in the Chamber, and I ſaw the Papers before him, and his Book.

Langhorn. Did thoſe Letters expreſs what the Money was to be raiſed for, or did they leave it to be underſtood? My Meaning, my Lord, of my Queſtion, is this, whether Mr. Coleman writ to him to haſten the Money, and ſaid it was for ſuch a particular Uſe, or only in general.

L. C. J. He hath anſwered it already, but he will do it again.

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, tho' it was not expreſſed in the Letter, but only we want nothing elſe from beyond Sea, but your Aſſiſtance; tho' it was not expreſſed in the Letter to deſtroy the King and the Proteſtant Religion, yet the ſtill of the Diſcourſe betwixt Mr. Colem n and Mr. Langhorn, was to this Effect: We only ſtay for Money, when we have got that, we will put our ſelves into a Poſture.

L. C. J. If you obſerved it, he ſaid ſo before; when we asked him what the Effect of thoſe Letters was, that all Things were ready, it is a good Opportunity now for the effecting of our Deſign, having ſo eaſy a King to deal with, and your King having ſo powerful a Treaſury; do you but get the Money of him, and we ſhall do well enough.

Mr. Bedlow. Tho' it was not ſpecified in the Letters, what the Money was for, yet in the Diſcourſe between Mr. Coleman and Mr. Langhorn, it was Worded ſo, that it was plain, it was to deſtroy the Government, and introduce Popery.

Langhorn. My Lord, ask whether this be all that he charges upon me?

Mr. Bedlow. I cannot ſay that, my Lord, that this is all I have to ſay againſt him; Things may occur to my Memory hereafter, which do not now.

L. C. J. But at this Time you remember no more, do you?

Mr. Bedlow. No.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. But to my Apprehenſion, what you ſaid laſt is moſt material, that is, the Diſcourſe between him and Mr. Coleman, for that rivets the whole. When he ſaid, that is we had but a Return of this Money, then we have made our ſelves ſafe, or Words to that Effect; but it was to the full meaning of this, that the Proteſtant Religion could not ſtand any longer here, having Aſſiſtance from France.

L. C. J. So they conſulted together after the Letters were tranſcribed, did they?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, my Lord.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I omitted one Thing that was very material in my Evidence, which comes in my Mind ſince. The Congregation at Rome did contribute 800000 Crowns, to be ſent into England, and Mr. Langhorn did enquire concerning that Money, and had Knowledge of the Receipt of it in France, as Mr. Langhorn did ſay, in the Month of July, or Auguſt.

L. C. J. Did he ſay it to you?

Dr. Oates. He did to Father Harcourt, Father Kaines, and Father Fenwick, that were there, 800000 Crowns come to France.

L. C. J. What ſaid he then, concerning the 800000 Crowns?

Dr. Oates. He gave an Account of the Money's being lodg'd at Paris.

L. C. J. You hear what he ſays, that you gave an Account of 800000 Crowns that were raiſed abroad, that it was lodg'd and receiv'd at Paris.

Mr. Bedlow. I recollect ſomething more now, tho' I was not in Mr. Langhorn's Chamber; I met with Father Kaines, one Day, and ſaid he, I muſt go and ſpeak with one Mr. Langhorn, preſently, and when he came out again, he brought a Letter in his Hand, and afterwards we went to a Tobacco-ſhop in Wild-ſtreet, and there Father Kaines told me the Effect of the Letter. He told me, it was a Chiding Letter from the Secretary de propaganda fide, Cardinal Barbarino, who had ſent a Chiding Letter to Mr. Langhorn, and the reſt of the Conſpirators, for going on no faſter, when they had ſo fair an Opportunity.

L. C. J. Did you ſee the Letter directed to Mr. Langhorn?

Mr. Bedlow. Father Kaines told me the Effects of it, and he had the Letter from Mr. Langhorn.

L. C. J. He told you ſo; well, but this Evidence is as to the Plot in general, but not to Mr. Langhorn in particular. But that which he charges you particularly with, is this, Your Tranſcribing the Letters, wherein there was an Expreſſion made, of your being all in Readineſs, as for Arms and the Gariſons; and your Diſcourſe afterwards with Mr. Coleman, in what a Poſture all Things were for the Deſtruction of the Government, and the bringing in Popery, and there wanted nothing but Money, for the effecting the whole Deſign. This is that he ſays.

Langhorn. My Lord, I ſuppoſe he won't go out of the Court neither?

L. C. J. No, no, he will ſtay here.

Sir Cr. Levins. My Lord, there is one Witneſs, that we had not ready here, when we began to give ſome Account of the General Plot, I pray he may be Examined, his Name is Buſs. Who was ſworn.

L. C. J. What can you ſay of any Deſign upon the King's Life? What is your Name?

Mr. Buſs. My Name is Thomas Buſs.

L. C. J. What Profeſſion are you of?

Mr. Buſs. I ſerve the Duke of Monmouth.

L. C. J. In what Capacity do you ſerve him?

Mr. Buſs. I am his Cook.

L. C. J. How long have you ſerved him?

Mr. Buſs. Thirteen Years, I have lived with him.

L. C. J. Well, what is it you have to ſay?

Mr. Buſs. Being at Windſor, my Lord, with an old Acquaintance of mine, one Handkinſon that was then newly come from Italy——

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Buſs. In September laſt, within a Week after the Duke came from Flanders, and we were drinking together, for I had not ſeen him for many Years before, and there was one Anthony was in the Company, and ſaid he, I am newly come from Italy, and I am going again, and I am come to take my Leave of my Friends. When do you go away, ſaid I? I believe I go to Morrow, ſaid he; but pray, ſaid he to Anthony, have a ſpecial Care of thoſe four worthy Gentlemen. What Gentlemen, ſaid I? Four worthy Gentlemen, ſaid he, that I brought over with me. What, ſaid I, from Italy? No, ſaid he, they are four worthy Iriſh Gentlemen: They are very worthy Perſons, ſaid he, have a ſpecial Care of them, for they will do our Buſineſs.

L. C. J. What

L. C. J. What ſaid you to that?

Mr. Buſs. Nothing; for I knew nothing of it, till I ſaw Coleman's Trial, where it ſpeaks of the four Iriſh Men that were to kill the King at Windſor, then I bethought me of it.

L. C. J. Would you not ask him what that Buſineſs was, or ſo?

Mr. Buſs. No, I did not know, at that Time.

L. C. J. But no Man in England but would have asked ſuch a Queſtion.

Mr. Buſs. No he ſaid, they were four Strangers: But ſaid I, did you bring them out of Italy? No, ſaith he, they are four Iriſh Gentlemen, that I brought over with me, worthy Perſons.

L. C. J. North. And what Religion was he of that ſaid ſo?

Mr Buſs. He was a Catholick, one that bought all into a College, that did ſo here before he went.

Mr. Prance. He belonged to the Benedictine Monks, my Lord, in the Savoy.

L. C. J. And what was he that he ſpoke to?

Mr. Buſs. He was a Catholick too, he was Servant to one that belongs to the Queen's Chapel.

L. C. J. North. Did you underſtand what the Buſineſs was, they ſaid they were to do?

Mr. Buſs. Not till I read Mr. Coleman's Trial, and then I did gueſs theſe were the Perſons that were to have killed the King at Windſor.

L. C. J. You ſaw them not, did you?

Mr. Buſs. No; they were in Charge of this Anthony, that is now in ſome Place in the Queen's Chapel.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Did he ſpeak to Anthony to have a Care of them, or to you?

Mr. Buſs. To Anthony, he was the Perſon that was to take Care of them.

L. C. J. Is Anthony a Papiſt?

Mr. Buſs. Yes, a very ſtrong Papiſt, and we uſed to be often together; but now he is jealous, and will not come near me, to talk with me, as we uſed to do.

L. C. J. Now I underſtand the Reaſon of it, why he did not ask the Queſtion; it was not likely he ſhould, for it was not ſpoken to him, but he ſtood by, all the while the Diſcourſe was to Anthony, another Man, and it was to him that he ſpoke, to have a Care of the four Iriſh Men, for they would do their Buſineſs. What did Anthony ſay?

Mr. Buſs. He promiſed he would have as much Care of them, as of his own Life.

L. C. J. Where is this Anthony to be found?

Mr. Bedlow. My Lord, Anthony is a Portugueſe, and the Queen's Confeſſor's Man.

L. C. J. When did you ſee him?

Mr. Bedlow. He was ſeen this Morning, they call him Signior Antonio.

L. C. J. North. You ſhould have an Order to take this ſame Anthony into Cuſtody, but in order to the finding of him, let him go to my Lord Oſſory.

L. C. J. Mr. Tiſſer, we give you an Order for the taking of this Signior Antonio, you will find him at Somerſet-Houſe; for the doing of this, we do adviſe you to wait upon my Lord Oſſory, and tell him, that you have ſuch an Order, but that out of Reverence to the Queen, we have alſo ordered you to wait upon him, to deſire him to ſend him.

L. C. J. North. What is become of this Hankinſon?

Mr. Buſs. He is abroad, beyond the Seas, my Lord, for he ſaid he was come thither to take leave of his Friends, and was to go the next Morning into Surrey, and ſo away.

L. C. J. Well, what have you now to ſay, Mr. Langhorn?

Langhorn. I conceive this laſt Witneſs ſays nothing to me.

L. C. J. North. He ſpeaks only to the Plot in general, as the firſt Witneſſes did; but that which is upon you, is as to Mr. Oates, who ſpeaks to every Article of the Indictment expreſly; and Mr. Bedlow ſays, he did not only ſee you Tranſcribe and Copy out that Treaſonable Letter, but he carried other Letters to you, which you promiſed to Tranſcribe; and theſe are Overt-acts, that make you a Party to the Treaſon.

L. C. J. Beſides your Diſcourſe with Coleman, after the Letters were Tranſcribed.

Langhorn. Theſe two Gentlemen were Parties in this ſuppoſed Crime, the two Witneſſes which do concern me, are Mr. Oates and Mr. Bedlow, and they both of them clearly appear to have been in the ſame Treaſon that I ſuppoſe they charge me with; I deſire to know whether they have had their Pardon, or no?

L. C. J. I believe they have. Mr. Oates, and Mr. Bedlow, Have you your Pardons?

Mr. Bedlow. Yes, my Lord, I have three.

Dr. Oates. I have two Pardons under the Broad-Seal, but I don't know what is in them.

L. C. J. North. But make your Objection how you will; whether they had, or whether they had not, they are Witneſſes.

Mr. Bedlow. I never gave any Evidence, till I had my Pardon.

Langhorn. I ask for this Reaſon; I look upon your Lordſhip and the Court as my Council, to adviſe me in Matters of Law, whether theſe be good Witneſſes or not?

L. C. J. We do tell you, That if we had not judged them to be Witneſſes, we would not have heard them.

Langhorn. They come under the ſame Reaſon of Law with an Approver, having had their Pardon; I don't ſay they are directly Approvers, but I conceive they come under the ſame Reaſon of Law with them, and then if the Approver be pardoned, by the Law the Appellee ought to be diſcharged; and methinks by the ſame Reaſon, theſe Men having been participes Criminis, and having got their Pardons, ought not to be ſuch ſubſtantial Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner at the Bar. But, my Lord, I have one Thing yet further to ask, I deſire to know whether they have not received any Rewards, or Gratifications, for the Diſcovery they have made, and the Service they have done? And whether they do not expect further Rewards?

L. C. J. Is there any Allowance to be made to you?

Dr. Oates. I have received a Reward, by diſburſing 6 or 700 l. out of my Pocket, and I don't know when I ſhall ſee it again.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Mr. Langhorn does ſuppoſe that the Witneſſes are corrupted and bribed; Do you think, Mr. Langhorn, that the King will Bribe his Witneſſes?

Langhorn. My Lord, I only propoſe it as a Queſtion.

L. C. J. Would you anſwer that Queſtion your ſelf?

L. C. J. North. If you can ſuppoſe there was any Subornation or Corruption, call your Witneſſes, and prove it; but for their receiving Suſtenance and and Maintenance from the King, that is but reasonable, and can be no Objection. And you your self know, that an Approver, while he is in that Service, hath a Peny a Day, which in ancient Times was a great Matter for Livelihood and Sustenance; so that any Reward that they have, if you can prove it by Contract or Subornation, you cannot make an Objection.

Langhorn. My Lord, I am informed, by a Prisoner in the Goal, that Mr. Bedlow hath received 500*l.*

L. C. J. If you can prove any thing do, prove what you can.

Mr. Recorder. That 500*l.* was about a particular Fact.

L. C. J. But pray what is his Name?

Langhorn. His Name is Mr. Reading.

L. C. J. North. He is an infamous Person, he hath stood in the Pillory, we can't take him for a Witness; but now I'll tell you, for the 500*l.* 'tis a Thing we all know of. It was a Reward for a particular Business, not relating to the Plot, but it was for the Discovery of the Murtherers of Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey.

Mr. Just. Atkins. I think Mr. Prance is here, that will give an Account of that, for Bedlow discovered him.

Mr. Bedlow. I am so far from having any Benefit by this Discovery, that I am 700*l.* out of Pocket.

Mr. Just. Ellys. You shall have the Liberty to make what good Defence you can for your self, and prove what you can; you must not go this way to work.

L. C. J. 'Tis pretty reasonable for us to give a publick Satisfaction to all the World, that we do nothing under-hand, but that we do in this Case, as in all other Cases; any thing that is fit to be answered, they shall answer, and perchance in this Case something more than can be strictly required of us. 'Tis notorious enough, that Mr. Oates and Mr. Bedlow have been fed at the King's Charge, and it cannot be objected against them, and need not be wink'd at, for they were Parties in the Plot. And when they come to make the Discovery, without which we should never have known the Plot, for you know 'tis hard to discover any Crime, Forgery, or the like, but by one that hath been privy to it, and a guilty Person; yet these Men always have been, and are in Law, Witnesses, and 'tis just they should have a Competency to maintain them, since they came for the Publick Good to make such Discoveries.

L. C. J. North. And that particular Summ of Money was paid to Mr. Bedlow, in pursuance of the King's Proclamation, which we all know, which was all publickly done.

Langhorn. The Reason why I press this, was, because of the Proclamation, which was to invite Persons to come, touching the Discovery of this Plot; and to encourage them to it by a Promise of Reward. I think it may be reasonable enough, where any Person that is charged with a Crime doth absent, to propose a Reward for the bringing him in. But I think it is hard, that when a Prisoner is in Custody, Witnesses should be brought in against him by such Means.

L. C. J. North. You do artificially go off from the Point: Answer the Evidence that hath been given against you, and you shall be heard; but you labour very much, and trouble your self to make Answer to another Matter that is not pertinent.

L. C. J. Does your Defence consist wholly of this sort of Matter, objecting the Incompetency of the Witnesses? Can you make no Answer to the Fact?

Langhorn. I must tell your Lordship, My whole Defence must run to disable the Witnesses; for, my Lord, I was committed to Newgate the 17th of October, and I have been kept there a close Prisoner till this Day was Sevennight, or Friday the last Week; I never conversed with any Friend, or any Relation, nor knew any thing of News, but only with some few Persons, sent by Authority of the House of Commons or the Council. And I was never examined by any since I was committed. I never heard what was charged against me, and I could not foresee what these Men could testify, because I was not confident whereupon they would proceed; therefore I can have no Defence, unless it be by lessening their Credit, 'tis impossible I should.

L. C. J. Do, lessen it, if you can. If you have any Witnesses to take off their Credit, or contradict them, call them.

Mr. Just. Atkins. But I would say one Thing to you, Mr. Langhorn; You seem to put a very ill Construction upon the King's Proclamation, as if it were to invite and encourage Persons to come and swear about a Plot, where there was none; it was to invite People to make a further Discovery of a Plot that lay close, and we could not fully Discover for the Preservation of the King and Kingdom, without such a Means.

Langhorn. He did propose a Reward.

Mr. Just. Atkins. Ay, in order to a further Discovery of that Plot which we had Evidence of before.

Mr. Just Pemberton. And so you would be close in all your Accounts, and none should be rewarded that could make us any Discovery of them, but presently their Testimony must be gone. 'Tis very fine, but the Court over-rules it.

L. C. J. Mr Langhorn, whatsoever you object of this Kind, does fly in the Face, and reflect upon the Integrity and Wisdom, of King, Lords and Commons.

L. C. J. North. For it was done by the Advice of all Three.

L. C. J. If you'll go on, and prove any thing, but pray don't spend our Time to no purpose.

Langhorn. Call Parrey, and Townley, and Doddington, and the rest.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, here are Papists come into the Court with their Swords on.

L. C. J. They will not draw them here.

Lord Mayor. 'Tis well enough, 'tis well enough, Dr Oates, you are safe enough here.

L. C. J. Who will you have first?

Langhorn. I would have Hilsley set up. Which was done.

L. C. J. What would you ask him?

Langhorn. Your Lordship hath heard Dr. Oates affirm he came over, such a Time, in the Pacquet-Boat with Mr. Hilsley; I desire to know whether that be true, or no?

L. C. J. I can help you in that, for we had him and his Companions here Yesterday, but however we will hear them again, if you will have them. Do you know Mr. Oates?

Hilsley. I do, my Lord, very well.

L. C. J. When did you come over from St. Omers?

Hilsley. I came over the 24th of April, New Stile.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Oates come with you?

Hilsley. No, he did not.

Dr. Oates. No, my Lord, he did leave me there, but I overtook him at Calais.

L. C. J. Look you there now, you did leave him there, but he overtook you at Calais. Did you leave him there?

Hilsley. I did leave him there.

L. C. J. Ay, but he overtook you then, did he not?

Hilsley. No, he did not.

L. C. J. He answers as he did Yesterday, that he did not come over with him. You lost your Money, did you not?

Hilsley. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. How did you lose it? Did you lose it at Play?

Hilsley. 'Tis no mattter how I lost it; I did not lose it at Play.

Dr. Oates. I'll tell the Court, if your Lordship please, how he lost it; he lent a great deal of Money to a Gentleman, who went away with his Money, and left him to pay the Reckoning.

L. C. J. What say you to that?

Hilsley. That is very true, and I confess it; but what is all this? nothing to the Matter. He was told this by some Body else, I never saw him, nor ever any Man in the Ship saw him come over with me.

L. C. J. Ill tell you what then; first, here is something now that you would not confess Yesterday, nor indeed would you confess it now, I asked you how you lost your Money; you see Mr. Oates can tell you how it was, tho' you won't tell us; so that, tho' this be a Secret, he knows it; and how could he know this Secret, unless he were there?

Hilsley. There is one that I met by the Way, that did tell him this Story.

Then one Gifford stood up.

L. C. J. Did you see Mr. Oates?

Gifford. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What Discourse had you with him concerning Hilsley?

Gifford. Why he told us of his Departure.

L. C. J. When?

Gifford. After he was gone away.

L. C. J. How long after?

Gifford. Three or four Days.

L. C. J. What said he to you?

Gifford. He only told us he was gone.

L. C. J. What else said you of him?

Gifford. He only said he departed out of the College then.

L. C. J. What did you say to Mr. Oates about it?

Gifford. I don't remember what I said in particular.

L. C. J. Hilsley, Call up the other Person that you say told Mr. Oates.

Hilsley. He is not here, my Lord, but here is one that was in the Company when he told it.

L. C. J. Who was by?

Gifford. Mr. Burnaby, who came thither the 1st of May.

L. C. J. Hearken to me; When you talked with Mr. Oates, concerning Mr Hilsley's being gone from the College, was there any body by?

Gifford. I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Burnaby by, when Mr. Oates and you talked about Mr. Hilsley?

Then another Witness started up.

Third Witness. Yes, my Lord, there was Mr. Oates with me, and Mr. Burnaby put himself into our Company in the Garden, and he acquainted me with this Story.

L. C. J. What said he?

Third Witness. He said he met this Gentleman, and that this Gentleman was cheated of his Money.

L. C. J. How did he tell you he was Cheated?

Third Witness. I don't know the Occasion, but he said a Fellow cheated him of the Money.

L. C. J. Was that all he said?

Third Witness. Yes, my Lord, but I do not remember upon what Occasion, he said he was Cheated by a shirking Fellow.

L. C. J. Did he name the Place he met him at?

Third Witness. I don't know, my Lord, whether he mentioned it or no.

L. C. J. So that Mr. Oates names the Place which he was never told; and unless he was there, how could he then tell it?

Third Witness. But this does not prove that I speak against my Conscience, that does not argue.

L. C. J. Look you, the Answer is this, Mr. Langhorn. You would charge Mr. Oates with Falsity in saying he came over in the Pacquet-Boat with Hilsley, and you call up him, and he says, he did not come, but he left him at St. Omers; Mr. Oates comes and says, 'tis true, he left me there, but I overtook him at Calais, by this very Token, said he, you were cheated of your Money, by a Person that you lent it to, who went away, and left you to pay the Reckoning. When I asked Mr. Hilsley, how he could tell if it were true that he was not with him, he answered, he was told it by another; but when I come to know what that other Person said, it was no more than this, he said, in Mr. Oates's Hearing, Mr. Hilsley was Cozened of his Money, but did not say how, nor by whom, nor where.

Langhorn. Now, to prove that what Mr. Hilsley said is true, and that therefore Mr. Oates his Knowledge must come by another Hand, I desire that the Witnesses may be asked, how long Mr. Oates was at St. Omers?

L. C. J. How long was Mr. Oates at St. Omers?

Third Witness. From December till June, he was there, except one particular Day that he went to Watton.

L. C. J. And you saw him almost every Day?

Third Witness. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. You have fifteen or sixteen Witnesses that will say all this; but yet, if you will, we will call them.

L. C. J. When went he away, do you know that?

Third Witness. He went in June, I can't certainly say the Day.

L. C. J. Well, call another.

Third Witness. Pray, my Lord, let me speak, if your Lordship please to let me give you my Reason, why I might see him; I saw him in the Refectory; he had a little Table by him self, distinct from the rest, and dining together in a publick place, it was impossible but we should see his Place empty, if he were gone, and I know the Number of of my own School, and can tell whether any one be absent.

L. C. J. What, because he sat at a Table by himself, therefore you think he was there all the while.

Third Witness. Certainly, if I may believe mine own Eyes, I saw him there every Day.

L. C. Baron. Were you there every Day your self?

Third Witness. Yes, my Lord, I was, I did not miss one Day, I had no Infirmity.

Langhorn. My Lord, Mr. Oates hath affirmed, that there was with him, when he came over in April, Sir Robert Brett.

L. C. J. He says only he believes so, he says positively, he came over in the Company of Sir John Warner, Sir Thomas Preston, and he thinks also Sir Robert Brett, but is not positive.

Langhorn. This he affirmed, both in his Narrative, and upon Oath, in the Lords House.

L. C. J. Shew any thing that he was sworn to here.

Mr. Just. Atkins. But what says this Lad more? let him speak, for he is very full of it.

Third Witness. The 1st Day of May I saw him in the Garden, with a Lay-Brother, at Kittle-pins, in the View of all the College.

Langhorn. Let us examine him as to Persons, and then refer it to the Lords Register.

L. C. J. Why, if you will prove something Mr. Oates hath sworn there, that you can contradict, first prove what he swore, and then contradict it.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Pray take notice, you must not go to oppose him in any thing of that Oath, unless he hath sworn it here; whatsoever there be there, except he hath sworn the same here, 'tis in vain to object it, for he cannot be intended to have Witness to make good what he swore there.

Sir Cr. Levins. Let us hear what he does offer.

Langhorn. Under Favour, Mr. Oates hath acknowledged what he swore there was true.

L. C. J. You are mistaken, Mr. Langhorn, indeed when you asked him that Question, he said as far as what concerned what he swore here, was true, and he is bound at this Time to answer no more.

Langhorn. Then as to Sir John Warner, I desire my Witnesses may be examined.

L. C. J. I suppose they may be here, and say the same they did Yesterday; that he did not stir from his House at Watton, all April and May.

Fourth Witness. Yes, my Lord, he lived there all that while.

L. C. J. What Year?

Fourth Witness. In Year 1678.

L. C. J. That is the Time that Mr. Oates says he came over with him. You saw him almost every Day, did not you?

Fourth Witness. Yes, I did, only four Days that I was absent, being sent by him to St. Omers, at a great Feast.

L. C. J. And when you came back, you found him there?

Fourth Witness. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. You are his Gard'ner, are you not?

Fourth Witness. Yes, I am.

L. C. J. Did you stay all those four Days at St. Omers?

Fourth Witness. I was sent to the high Kirk, and carried some Instruments for the Musick, and there I stayed four Days, and the last Day of April, and the first, and second, and third of May. And I saw Mr. Oates there in the House, and I saw him going into the Refectory to Dinner.

L. C. J. He says, that Sir John Warner was at home all April and May, that he himself was absent but four Days, that he left him there, and when he came back found him there; and that in the four Days he was at St. Omers, he saw Mr. Oates; which was the last of April, the first, second and third of May. You don't know when Mr. Oates went away?

Fourth Witness. No, my Lord, not I.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Was Sir John Warner there all June?

Fourth Witness. My Lord, I can't tell that, I only speak to April and May.

L. C. J. Those are the two Months that fit him.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Why how come you not to remember that, as well as the other two, for that is since?

Fourth Witness. Because I took not so much Notice of him in those Times.

L. C. J. How came you to take more special Notice of them two Months, than of the other?

Fourth Witness. Because our Rector did then come into England, and he took the Charge of the House upon him in the Rector's Absence.

L. C. J. When did he come?

Fourth Witness. He came the 24th of April.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Pray who is your Rector? What is his Name?

Fourth Witness. Sir Francis Williams.

L. C. J. Where was Sir John Warner in June and July?

Fourth Witness. I cannot tell.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. And where was he in August and September?

Fourth Witness. He went out of Town, but where I am not certain.

L. C. J. You were Gard'ner there then?

Fourth Witness. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. Why can't you as well tell me then, where he was in June and July, as in April and May? Answer me plainly.

Fourth Witness. I think he was there all that Time, but I can't be certain.

L. C. J. Why not so certain for those two Months, as you are for the other?

Fourth Witness. Because I did not take so much Notice.

L. C. J. How come you to take more Notice of the one, than the other? that he was there in April and May, rather than that he was there in July?

Fourth Witness. Because the Question, my Lord, that I came for, did not fall upon that Time.

L. C. J. Now he hath answered plainly; when I asked the Question, Why he did not take so much Notice of those Months, as he did of April and May? he answered me, Because the Question did not fall upon those Months; and that, without all Question, is a plain and an honest Answer.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Indeed he hath forgot his Lesson; you should have given him better Instructions.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Langhorn, if he be to be believed, and that he doth not speak falsly, or more than he knows, it is impossible that Oates's

Testimony and his can stand together; for he directly affirms, he saw Mr. Oates the last of April, the 1st, 2d, and 3d of May. Now Mr. Oates says he was here then; so that these two cannot stand together. The Question then is, Whether he be to be believed? and, Whether he does not come wilfully, or prepared? the Jury have heard what a kind of Testimony he gives, when the Question was asked him, How he came to take Notice of the Months of April and May, more than of June and July? and why he was more sure Sir John Warner was there at the one Time, than at the other? Why, said he, because the Question falls upon those former Months, and not upon those of June or July. Now that does shake all that was said before, and looks as if he came on purpose, and prepared for those Months, and now this, I am afraid, will go thro' all your St. Omers Men.

L. C. J. North. Indeed I doubt it will go a great way, to shake all their Testimony.

Sir Cr. Levins. You, Gard'ner, what do you say was your Rector's Name?

Fourth Witness. Sir Francis Williams.

Sir Cr. Levins. And he came over in April or May, did he?

Fourth Witness. He came over the 24th of April.

Sir Cr. Levins. Why, that is the Time that Mr. Oates came over, and he was one of the Persons that he said came over with him.

Fourth Witness. No, he came alone, only with a certain Officer of the College.

Langhorn. Pray let Gifford be asked the same Question about Sir John Warner; for if he did come, as he saith, from Watton to St. Omers, at that Time, he must see him at St. Omers, for he was at St. Omers then. The Question is about Sir John Warner, if he were at Watton, or St. Omers, then he could not come over with Mr. Oates.

L. C. J. When did you see Sir John Warner?

Gifford. I saw him about June, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. Where did you see him?

Gifford. I saw him there in St. Omers House.

L. C. J. When?

Gifford. In June or July, when he invited me over to Watton.

L. C. J. This Man does not serve the Turn, he does not know the Month upon which the Question runs.

Fifth VVitness. The 1st Day of May there was a great Feast, St. Fortunatus and Gordianus, and then I saw Mr. Oates four Days, and he was there all the Month of May.

L. C. J. Where was Sir John VVarner then?

Fifth VVitness. I cannot tell; but at St. Omers I saw Mr. Poole, and Sir Robert Brett at that Time.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Poole come over with you?

Dr. Oates. Yes, my Lord, he did.

L. C. J. VVitness, when did Mr. Poole come from St. Omers?

Fifth VVitness. He came first to St. Omers with Mr. VVhitebread, he was my Master of Musick, and he taught me, and it was impossible he should be missing without my Knowledge.

L. C. J. But he was gone to England long before that; and he could not be at England and at St. Omers at the same Time.

Fifth VVitness. You say right, he could not.

L. C. J. When came he from St. Omers?

Fifth VVitness. In the Month of June, or May.

L. C. J. Or April.

Fifth VVitness. No, it was the Month of June.

L. C. J. These are but Collateral Matters, Mr. Langhorn, for you to stand upon this, it spends Time to no purpose; but the great Question is, Friend, Whether you don't mistake the Month?

Fifth VVitness. Yes, yes, (at which the People laugh'd,) no, no, I don't mistake the Month, I only speak the Truth according to my Knowledge.

L. C. J. How can you so precisely remember, the Month of May he was there; for when I asked you when he went away, you could hardly tell the Month.

Fifth VVitness. Yes, my Lord, Mr. Oates says, in the Month of May he was in England, but I say I saw Mr. Poole then at St. Omers.

L. C. J. But the great Question is, Whether you are to be believed? We know you answer the Question positively, but my Reason why I fear you are not to be believed, is, because you are so precise, that Mr. Poole taught you all May; but I ask you once more, Was it in June, or was it in May?

Fifth VVitness. It was about June.

L. C. J. May is about June. Why then you cannot tell. Was it in June?

Fifth VVitness. Yes, my Lord, it was; it was about June. And this is nothing but what I know, for I actually saw Mr. Oates there at that Time.

L. C. J. I'll tell you what, Mr. Langhorn, use your Discretion, call whom you will, and we will hear them as long as you will; but we had Sixteen of them Yesterday, that did all speak to the same Purpose; but in Answer to these Sixteen Witnesses, Mr. Oates did produce, and he will produce again, six or seven Witnesses, and one of them a Papist, if not a Priest, who do swear, that Mr. Oates was here in April and May; I'll tell you beforehand, do you as you will.

Then one Baille stood up, and being a Foreigner, an Interpreter was called.

L. C. J. Where did you see Sir John VVarner in April and May?

Interpreter. He says he saw him actually at St. Omers.

L. C. J. What all the Month of May?

Interpreter. Yes, he says he conversed with him all the Month of May.

L. C. J. And was he there all April, and conversed with him then?

Interpreter. Yes, he says every Day, of both Months. He says he saw him from the first Sunday in April, to the 14th of May, and conversed with him.

L. C. J. Where did Sir John VVarner go the 14th of May?

Interpreter. My Lord, he says he went for one Day only to St. Omers, and came back again.

L. C. J. Ask him, how he knows this?

Interpreter. He says he was employed about a Building, by Sir John VVarner.

Then Carpenteir stood up.

L. C. J. When did you see Mr. Oates? and where?

Carpenteir. I speak as to Sir Thomas Preston.

L. C. J. What say you as to Sir Thomas Preston?

Carpenteir. I saw him at Liege.

L. C. J. When?

Carpenter.

Carpenter. All the Months of March, April, May, and June, he was ſtill there.

L. C. J. When went he away?

Carpenter. In the time of the Vacancies.

L. C. J. VVhen is that?

Carpenter. That is from the beginning of Auguſt, till the end of September.

L. C. J. VVhen came he again?

Carpenter. VVhen they came to School again, and that was on the ſecond or third of October.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben. VVere you with him all that time?

Carpenter. Yes, I was: He hath not been in England theſe three Years.

L. C. J. How long have you been there?

Carpenter. I have been there four Years, and I never knew that he was abſent, but in the time of the Vacancies.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton. Call another VVitneſs.

Then ſtood up another Witneſs, who being a Dutch Man, and not ſpeaking Engliſh, an Interpreter was called for him alſo.

L. C. J. Well, what comes he for?

Interpreter. He ſays he comes to teſtifie, That Sir John Warner was at Watton in April; and he ſays he ſaw him there from the 14th of April, to the 25th of April.

L. C. J. And then to what time?

Interpreter. He ſays he was there till the 16th of May.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Ask him where he was the beginning of April?

Interpreter. He ſays he was Superior there in the Houſe, and did Govern.

L. C. J. Ask him where he was the latter end of May?

Interpreter. He ſays he was likewiſe in the Houſe, ſave only one Day, when he went to St. Omers?

L. C. J. Then he might have ſaid, in ſhort, he was there all April and May.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Call another Witneſs.

Langhorn. Call John Joſeph. Who ſtood up.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. What do you ask him, Mr. Langhorn?

Joſeph. That which I ſay is this, That Sir Thomas Preſton was at Liege in March, April, May and June, in the Year 1678.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him every Day in thoſe Months?

Joſeph. That I cannot well tell.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him every other Day?

Joſeph. Yes, my Lord, I believe I did once in two or three Days.

L. C. J. Where was he in July?

Joſeph. He was at Liege too: He was obliged to be ſo; but in the time of the Vacancies in Auguſt, he was abſent.

L. C. J. Then you ſay he was all thoſe months, March, April, May, June and July there.

Joſeph. Yes, my Lord, thoſe four months I am ſure of it.

L. C. J. What became of him in Auguſt, when he went, during the Vacancies, abroad? Do you know whither he went?

Sir Cr. Levins. Do you know whether he went into England?

Joſeph. I never heard that he was in England.

L. C. J. When did he return again?

Joſeph. When they began School, and that is in the beginning of October.

Then another Witneſs ſtood up.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you?

Tenth Witneſs. I can ſay that Mr. Oates never ſtirred out of the College at that time when he ſays he came to England, that is, he ſays he came upon Monday the 25th of April, but he did not, for that Day he went into the Infirmary, and he ſtayed at St. Omers all April and May.

L. C. J. And how much longer?

Tenth Witneſs. A great part of June.

L. C. J. Was he there the 20th of June?

Tenth Witneſs. I am ſure he was, but how much longer I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Where was he in February and March?

Tenth Witneſs. He was there too; in January he lay out one Night, and that was at Watton, but I am ſure he did not come over the 24th of April, New Stile, as he ſays.

Mr. Recorder. Now he ſays, it is New Stile, not Old Stile, as he ſaid Yeſterday.

Then another Witneſs ſtood up.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ſay?

Eleventh Witneſs. Mr. Poole was ſick, and I can remember when his Nephew went to him into the Infirmary before he went away from the College, and he gave him good Counſel, as he ſaid, and I remember that Mr. Brett was ſick at Watton, and did come home again on Horſeback, and I believe he did not ſtir out; and Mr. Poole was at St. Omers, I am ſure I ſaw him once in two or three Days all April and May. He went by the Name of Killingbeck.

L. C. J. But he does not poſitively ſay he ſaw Sir Robert Brett every Day there, he ſays he believes he did.

Eleventh Witneſs. He came into the School and gave the Boys Queſtions to diſpute of.

Mr. Recorder. Call the reſt of your Witneſſes.

Then another Witneſs was called and ſtood up.

L. C. J. North. When did you ſee Mr. Oates at St. Omers?

Twelfth Witneſs. I ſaw him almoſt every other Day from the time he came till he went away.

L. C. J. When was the firſt time you ſaw him?

Twelfth Witneſs. The beginning of December.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him in April there?

Twelfth Witneſs. Yes, I ſaw him in April there at an Action.

L. C. J. And did you ſee him in May there?

Twelfth Witneſs. Yes, I can teſtifie I ſaw him the firſt Day of May in the Garden.

L. C. J. How long ſtaid he there?

Twelfth Witneſs. Till June.

L. C. J. How came you to take ſuch preciſe Notice?

Twelfth Witneſs. By his very Place I could not but take Notice if he were miſſing.

L. C. J. How can you ſay you ſaw him in the Garden the firſt of May?

Twelfth Witneſs. I'll tell your Lordſhip why, becauſe there was a great Feaſt, and he play'd at Nine-pins in the Garden, and I can tell what they play'd for.

L. C. J. What ſay you as to Mr. Nevil, and Sir Robert Brett's being at St. Omers.

Twelfth Witneſs. I did not take ſo much Notice of Sir Robert Brett, as for Nevil, I think I ſaw him once in three Days.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. And there is nothing ſaid of him here.

Then another Witneſs ſtood up.

L. C. J. When did you ſee Mr. Oates firſt at St. Omers?

Thirteenth Witneſs. I firſt ſaw him in the Month of December.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him in April and May?

Thirteenth Witneſs. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. Was he there all thoſe Months?

Thirteenth Witneſs. Yes, my Lord, he was.

L. C. J. North. Was he there all the Month of June?

Thirteenth Witneſs. He went away towards the latter end of June.

L. C. J. North. Yeſterday you ſaid the latter end of July. Call another Witneſs.

Then another Witneſs ſtood up.

L. C. J. North. Come you, hear the Queſtion, Did you ſee Mr. Oates at St. Omers, in the Month of April?

Fourteenth Witneſs. Yes, my Lord, he was there all the Month of April.

L. C. J. Was he there all the Month of May?

Fourteenth Witneſs. Yes, my Lord he was.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton. And a good part of June?

Fourteenth Witneſs. Yes, my Lord.

Langhorn. What do you ſay as to Mr. Poole?

Fourteenth Witneſs. I ſaw Mr. Poole in the Infirmary the third Day of May.

L. C. J. North. How came you to take notice of it, ſo well as to remember it, that it was the third of May?

Fourteenth Witneſs. It was a Feſtival Day. And the Feaſt we kept was the Invention of the Holy Croſs. We had the Action the Day before, and ſome that were in the Infirmary would have it Acted over again to them, and we did ſo. My Lord, within one or two Days after, Mr. Hilſley went away, I diſcourſed with Mr. Oates about half an Hour; he came out within a Day or two after out of the Infirmary, and I ſaw him walking in the Gallery. And again, the 2d of May I ſaw him walking with one Mr. Burnaby, who arrived the Day before, the firſt of May, and then I ſaw him the 3d, 4th and 5th; in this Burnaby's Company; I ſaw him again the 26th of May, with a Band about his Head in order to Confirmation, for they always have a Linen Cloth bound about their Head at ſuch a time.

L. C. J. Call another. Who ſtood up, his Name was ****.

L. C. J. What can you ſay?

* All that I can ſay is this, that between the ſaid Month of December, 1677. and June, 1678. which is the time in Queſtion, Mr. Oates was never out of the College above one Night, when he went to Watton in January; and this is certain, that from the time that I ſaw him firſt, till the time he went away for altogether, there were not two Days that paſſed away wherein I did not ſee him, except in the Month of March, and when he was in the Infirmary the 24th of April, but then I heard that he was there——

L. C. J. Who did tell you ſo?

* The Man that keeps that part of the Houſe; and coming into my Office after my Recovery out of a Fit of Sickneſs a Week before Chriſtmas or thereabouts, I ſaw Mr. Oates by this Circumſtance, The Servitors of the Houſe ſaid they were glad to ſee me, and Mr. Oates being in that Place at the Refectory that was aſſigned to him, I asked who he was, and they told me ſuch an one, but I had heard of his admiſſion a few Days before. Likewiſe Mr. Oates was there when Mr. Hilſley came for England, which was about the 24th of April, by this Circumſtance, that he was preſent in the Refectory with ſome of the Scholars. Mr. Richard Burnaby came to the College about a Week after Mr. Hilſley went away, and Mr. Oates was actually there then, and we did very much wonder that he became acquainted with him ſo quickly after his Arrival. I ſay Mr. Oates was actually there when Mr. Killinbeck and Mr. Conqueſt came for England about the 3d of May, by this Circumſtance, that I had ſome Diſcourſe with Mr. Oates, and ſome others of the Scholars, that Mr. Conqueſt would by no means get out of his Bed betimes that Day he was to go away, being unwilling to leave the College. He was there the 26th of May by this Circumſtance, that the Biſhop dined there that Day, and Mr. Oates was there Confirmed that Day. Mr. Oates was there alſo in June my Lord.

L. C. J. Yes, he was there in June, he does not deny it.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton. And was he there all May?

* Yes, my Lord he was, and all April, except the time he was in the Infirmary, which was three or four Days.

Langhorn. What do you ſay as to Poole and Nevil?

* They were there all the whole time in queſtion, and they were never abſent any competent time to come to England, as he ſays.

L. C. J. North. We muſt not allow that, you muſt tell us what time they were there, that we may know it.

* They were there in March, April, May, June and July.

L. C. J. But did you ſee him every Day from the beginning of Chriſtmas, to the time he went away in June?

* Yes, except the time he was at Watton, and when he was in the Infirmary.

Mr. Recorder. But was not Mr. Oates twice in the Infirmary?

* He was I remember there on St. Thomas of Canterbury's Day, and I remember he was there in April.

Sir Cr. Levins. I did hear you ſay ſomething of ſomebody that was abſent five or ſix Days, was it you?

* I was ſick in the Month of March, and I was in the Infirmary till about the twelfth or fourteenth Day.

Sir Cr. Levins. And did you ſee him there all that time?

* I excepted that time, but I heard his Voice once in that time, in the next Room to the Infirmary, where I was by this Circumſtance; he uſed to come to a Table by himſelf, and it was near near the Door, and Nevil and Poole were there, as I ſaid before.

Mr. Recorder. He ſpeaks much more to the purpoſe to Day, Mr. Langhorn, than he did Yeſterday.

L. C. J. North. And much louder.

Langhorn I hope your Lordſhip will take notice that he ſpeaks likewiſe of the Reſidence of Mr. Poole, Sir Robert Brett, and Mr. Nevil.

L. C. J. Yes, I do. Call another Witneſs.

(Who ſtood up, and being a Foreigner, his Evidence was likewiſe Interpreted.)

L. C. J. Ask him what he ſays.

Interpreter. He ſays he ſaw Mr. Oates, he was there, and he remembers it till about the 25th of June.

L. C. J. Where did he ſee him?

Interpreter. He ſays it was either in the Houſe, or in the Garden.

L. C. J. North. When was that, that he was in the Infirmary?

Interpreter. He ſays, he was in the Infirmary towards the latter end of December or the beginning of January.

L. C. J. Ask him what he ſays about Nevil and Poole.

Interpreter. He ſays they were there all June, and that Mr. Poole went away in the Month of July; and he further ſays, that he being a Waterman, he carried this ſame Williams and March in his Boat the laſt Sunday in April.

L. C. J. North. Who is your next, Mr. Langhorn? let him ſtand up: (Which he did.) When did you ſee Mr. Oates at St. Omers?

Sixteenth Witneſs. In the Month of April, 1678.

L. C. J. And in May too was he?

Sixteenth witneſs. Yes, he was.

L C. J. Was Mr. Poole there all that time?

Sixteenth witneſs. Yes, he was; and ſo was Mr. Nevil and Mr. Brett.

L. C. J. Where is Nevil now?

Sixteenth witneſs. I believe I left him there.

L. C. J. What are theſe Perſons.

Sixteenth witneſs. The one is a Prefect, and I believe he is there ſtill. In the Month of May I made Mr. Killinbeck a Sute of Clothes, and Mr. Oates came into the Shop, and asked me whoſe Clothes they were? I ſaid Mr. Killinbeck's: ſaid he, how can that be? they are black: ſaid I, they muſt be black, for he is in mourning.

Langhorn. Here is Mr. Grove's Wife and his Maid.

Then Mrs. Grove ſtood up.

L. C. J. What Queſtion would you ask of her.

Langhorn. Mr. Oates hath ſworn, and given us ſeveral Circumſtances of his coming over, and being here at that which he calls the Conſult, and that he lay at Mr. Groves's three or four Nights; I deſire ſhe may be asked that Queſtion, whether he did ſo or no?

L. C. J. Do you know Mr. Oates, Mrs. Grove?

Grove. No, I never ſaw him.

L. C. J. Were there any Lodgers lay at your Houſe in April was Twelvemonth.

Grove. Yes, my Lord, there were.

L. C. J. Do you uſe to have Lodgers that you do not know?

Grove. My Houſe was full of Lodgers at that time. I did not know them till they lay there.

Sir Cr. Levins. Why then, Mr. Oates might be there, and you not know him.

Grove. If he lay there, I muſt needs know him.

L. C. J. Why might not a Man lie with any of your Lodgers three or four Nights, and you not know him?

Grove. Who ſhould he lie withal my Lord?

Dr. Oates. I had a Bed to my ſelf when I lay there.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates deſcribe the Chamber as well as you can.

Dr. Oates. It was a place taken out of another Room, where two Men were taken out that were committed to Priſon.

L. C. J. Were there any Perſons taken out of your Houſe, and ſent to Priſon?

Grove. Yes, my Lord, there were.

L. C. J. In that very Room he lay out of which thoſe Perſons were taken.

Grove. He did not.

Dr. Oates. Upon my Oath I did lie there three or four Nights, more or leſs.

Sir Cr. Levins. You were in a Diſguiſe, Sir, at that time, were you not, and went by another Name, and ſo the Woman might not know you?

Dr. Oates. Yes, I did ſo.

L. C. J. You cannot make any great matter of this, ſhe had ſome Lodgers and ſhe knew them, but he went by a wrong Name, and was in a Diſguiſe.

Langhorn. Mrs. Grove ſays, ſhe knew all the Lodgers that then lay there, pray ask her if ſhe did not?

L. C. J. Do you remember who lodged in your Houſe in April was a Twelvemonth.

Grove. Yes, I do.

L. C. J. Name them.

Grove. Why, there was one Pair of Stairs, one Mr. Strange by Name, and one Mrs. Fitzherbert, and above there lay my Siſter.

L. C. J. What, all the Month of May and April?

Grove. Yes.

L. C. J. And not in June?

Grove. I am not demanded of June.

L. C. J. She anſwers exactly to them two Months, what ſay you to March?

Grove. They were there in March.

L. C. J. Who lay in the Room from whence the Men were taken that were carried to Priſon?

Grove. There was one Maſter Crupper, and another Young-man that lay with him.

L. C. J. Why might not that be Mr. Oates?

Grove. He was one that was a Priſoner by Mr. Oates's Order. And Mrs. Fitzherbert lay there.

L. C. J. What, in that Room whence the Young-men were taken out in April or May?

Grove. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you to the other Months, March, and June and July?

Grove. I was not to be examined further than the two Months I ſpoke of before.

L. C. J. Look you, ſhe ſays, that for April and May two Gentlemen had the Lodging that Mr. Oates ſays he lay in; but for any other Time ſhe was not to be Examined: Well, have you any more Witneſſes?

Langhorn. Here is Mrs. Grove's Maid.

[Who ſtood up.]

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Maid, Can you tell who lay in Grove's Houſe, in April and May was Twelvemonth?

Maid. Yes, my Lord, I can.

L. C. J. Who were they?

Maid. There was my Miſtreſſes Brother and Siſter lay there.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Do you know them all? What Men lay there?

Maid. None but Maſter Strange, my Lord.

L. C. J. Miſtreſs Grove ſaid, that her Houſe was full.

Maid. Indeed, my Lord there was her Brother, Mr. York, and his Wife.

L. C. J. But who is that Fitzherbert?

Maid. She is a Gentlewoman.

L. C. J. Who lay there in March? and who lay there in July?

Maid. Maſter Strange, and Mrs. Fitzherbert.

L. C. J. How long did they lie there?

Maid. In April, May, June, July and Auguſt.

L. C. J. She ſays, they lay there in March, April, May, June, July and Auguſt, and her Miſtreſs ſaid, they were there but a Quarter of a Year, only ſhe ſaid ſhe was to be examined no further.

Langhorn. My Lord, I deſire to prove a Copy of the Record in the Lords Houſe.

L. C. J. That is not to be given in Evidence here.

Mr. Recorder. You know how far ſuch a Thing will be Evidence, manage your own Evidence well.

Langhorn. It is an Extract out of the Journal of the Houſe of Lords.

L. C. J. What Particular do you pitch upon?

Langhorn. About thoſe Perſons who, he ſays, came over with him from St. Omers.

L. C. J. North. Do you think it reaſonable, that any Man ſhould come to anſwer now, all that ever he hath ſworn in his Life? If you can ſhew any Record to contradict what he hath ſworn here, ſhew it. Do you think he can come prepared to juſtify all he hath ſworn in any other place?

Langhorn. He referred to that himſelf.

L. C. J. No, he does not.

Langhorn. But he hath ſaid over and over, that Sir John Warner came over with him, Sir Thomas Preſton, and Poole.

L. C. J. What ſhould you urge that Book for? Can you make any other Proof?

Langhorn. I would have the Perſons called that took the Narrative of Ireland's Trial.

L. C. J. If you have any more Witneſſes, call them.

Langhorn. Won't your Lordſhip allow me to prove by Witneſſes, what he affirmed, in relation to me, at another Trial.

L. C. J. By no means, you muſt not meddle with that.

Langhorn. Pray, my Lord, why not? I will prove the Words ſpoken by a Witneſs.

L. C. J. North. You muſt not; that is no Evidence againſt you, nor can it be an Evidence for you.

Langhorn. Then you take off the Defence that I have, and make it as if I had never any.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. That is not Evidence in a civil Cauſe, and therefore muſt not be Evidence here.

Then came in my Lord of Caſtlemain.

L. C. J. What do you come for, Sir? What is your Name?

E. Caſtlemain. My Name is Caſtlemain.

L. C. J. Are you my Lord of Caſtlemain?

E. Caſtlemain. Yes, my Lord, I am.

L. C. J. Does your Lordſhip come as a Witneſs for Mr. Langhorn? Mr. Langhorn, do you call my Lord of Caſtlemain?

Langhorn. My Lord, I don't know what he comes for, whether he comes as a Witneſs for me, or not, perhaps he may.

E. Caſtlemain. My Lord, I come to wait upon your Lordſhip and the Court, to give you an Account, that ſome of the Witneſſes that were ſummoned here for the Priſoners, are ſo beaten and abuſed without, that they dare not come to give their Evidence, for fear of being killed.

L. C. J. That is a Thing that is not to be ſuffered; let us but ſee any Perſon that dares but offer to meddle with them, and I'll aſſure you we will take care to ſee them puniſhed, according as they do deſerve.

L. C. J. North. 'Tis a very unjuſtifiable Thing, a Thing that we will very ſeverely puniſh, if they be hindred of free Ingreſs and Regreſs.

Mr. Juſt. Atkins. Indeed 'tis a very horrid thing that they ſhould be ſo abuſed; they ought to have their Liberty of coming and giving their Evidence here without any Moleſtation.

E. Caſtlemain. I can aſſure your Lordſhip, that one of them was ſo beaten and bruiſed, that we can't tell but it may coſt him his Life.

L. C. J. Nay, we muſt look to ſuch a Thing as that; for it is by no means to be allowed of. If your Lordſhip will but tell us who they are; let us but know them, and we will take Care for the Puniſhment of them; for we will ſhew our ſelves juſt and fair, and give them all the fair Play that can be.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Mr. Langhorn, have you any more Witneſſes?

Langhorn. Call the Woman that kept the White-Horſe-Tavern. Who ſtood up.

L. C. J. To what Purpoſe do you call this Woman?

Langhorn. I deſire, my Lord, to ask one Queſtion of Mr. Oates, touching the Conſult at the White-Horſe-Tavern in the Strand; How many Perſons met there?

Dr. Oates. Before that Queſtion be asked, I pray your Lordſhip would ask her, When ſhe came to the White-Horſe-Tavern, to keep it.

Witneſs. I don't keep it now.

L. C. J. When did you keep it?

Witneſs. I kept it in June, and I left it the beginning of July.

Dr. Oates. She does not come to the Time.

L. C. J. Did you keep it all the Year before that?

Witneſs. I kept it Seven Years before, till July laſt.

Langhorn. I would know of him, how many might be there at that Time.

L. C. J. What Number of Perſons do you ſay met at that Conſult?

Dr. Oates. That Queſtion, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip, hath no Reference to this Trial, neither is it at all material, but becauſe I have given the Priſoners ſo much Freedom, they impoſe upon me with Queſtions.

L. C. J. 'Tis a Queſtion they can't expect a preciſe Anſwer to from you; but yet I would have you give them as ſatisfactory an Anſwer as you can, what Number there might be there at a Time.

Dr. Oates.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, I think there might be at the White-Horse-Tavern, at a Time, about Eighteen or Twenty.

L. C. J. Were they in one Room, or in ſeveral Rooms?

Dr. Oates. They were in two or three Rooms.

Witneſs. Is this Mr. Oates, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, that he is.

Witneſs. I never ſaw him in my Houſe in my Life.

L. C. J. Was there no body never in your Tavern, but who you knew? What! can you tell all the People that were ever in your Tavern?

Witneſs. The moſt of my Company were People that I knew.

L. C. J. What is your Company?

Witneſs. Thoſe that frequented my Houſe.

L. C. J. Can you ſay who was in your Houſe, April 24, 1678?

Witneſs. No, my Lord, I will not undertake that, but I will give you as true an Account as I can.

Langhorn. I'll tell you why I ask this Queſtion, Mr. Oates did ſay, in his Depoſitions before the Lords, there met fifty.

L. C. J. At ſeveral Times in the Day.

Langhorn. But this muſt all be in the Morning.

L. C. J. Why ſo? ſuppoſe there met, of that Company, Twenty, in the Morning, and then ſome went away, and others came in their room, and ſo they did for divers Times in the Day, is not this properly ſaid of me, that there might be about Fifty at that Conſult?

Langhorn. He ſaith, in Coleman's Trial, there met Fifty, upon the 24th of April, and afterwards they adjourned into leſſer Colloquies.

Dr. Oates. I ſay, they met there the 24th Day, but the Conſult was not diſſolved till the 26th Day at Night.

L. C. J. North. You muſt go only upon what is ſworn now. And we ask the Queſtion, upon your Propoſal, How many were there at a time? and he ſays about Eighteen or Twenty at a Time. Now if he proves there were Eighteen at one Time, Twenty at another Time, and Ten at another, that makes about Fifty.

L. C. J. Good Woman, is your Houſe a little Houſe?

Witneſs. 'Tis a ſmall inconſiderable Houſe, there is not a Room in it that will hold above a dozen, I never remembred ſo great a Company was in my Houſe at one Time, but once, in all my Seven Years, and that was a Jury of the Pariſh, and they could not be together, but were divided into three Rooms.

Then there ſtood up a Stranger; who was ſworn.

L. C. J. Well, Sir, do you know the White-Horſe-Tavern in the Strand?

Firſt VVitneſs. Yes, my Lord, I do, very well.

L. C. J. Do you know the biggeſt Room in the Houſe?

Firſt VVitneſs. Yes, I do, my Lord.

L. C. J. How many may Dine there?

Firſt VVitneſs. It may be Twenty People, I have ſeen a Dozen, or Sixteen there often.

L. C. J. Did you know the Tavern a Year ago?

Firſt VVitneſs. Yes, my Lord, this was a Year ago.

Then a Second Witneſs ſtood up in the Court, and ſaid, That Twenty-five, or Thirty, might Dine in one Room that was backward, and another that was forward. And a Third atteſted, That he was at a Wedding, and there did Dine above Twenty, in one Room next the Street.

Mr. Recorder. If ſhe make a Jury to be in three Rooms, that is but four in a Room.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Thoſe Juries are Sixteen, generally, or more.

Langhorn. My Lord, I don't know this Tavern my ſelf; but I thought it very conſiderable, if they had not a Room that would hold ſuch a Number as he ſpoke of, Fifty.

L. C. J. But you ſee how unfortunately it happens, the matter had not been much if it had been proved; but it's very unlucky, that theſe Perſons ſhould be here in Court, by whom the other is contradicted, it had been better it were never medled with. That ſhe ſhould be ſo peremptory, in what Standers-by know to be falſe, makes this Contradiction in one Thing, to give a Suſpicion that all your Witneſſes may be falſe in all the reſt.

Sir Cr. Levins. Here is a Gentleman of good Quality, that ſaith, there have been Fifty in a Room.

Langhorn. My Lord, I hope neither the Court nor the Jury will reflect upon me for this.

L. C. J. No, it can't do that; but it reflects upon your Evidence, eſpecially this Woman.

Langhorn. I have been a Priſoner ſo long, and I know nothing but what Friends and Relations inform me.

L. C. J. The Thing was reaſonably offered, but it proves ſo unfortunate it will not hold. Have you any more Witneſſes to call?

Langhorn. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. I pray call them.

Langhorn. My Lord, I deſire I may examine them after the King's Council have done.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You may ſay what you will, for your Defence, but you muſt examine no new Witneſſes then, Mr. Langhorn.

Langhorn. I muſt ask this Gentleman a Queſtion or two, if the Court think fit.

L. C. J. Propoſe them to the Court; what is it you would have?

Langhorn. My Lord, it is in relation to a Matter that happened at Ireland's Trial, I know not whether it be proper, but the Queſtion I would ask is, Whether Ireland were here in Auguſt, or no?

L. C. J. He hath given you no Occaſion to ask this Queſtion at this Trial: And is there any Reaſon that we ſhould examine him to ſuch a Thing? Do you think it reaſonable, or according to Law, that Mr. Oates ſhould be examined, in your Trial, concerning what he then ſaid, of Ireland's being here in Auguſt, or not being here, when 'tis no part of his Accuſation that he brings againſt you? Can he be imagined to be prepared for ſuch a Juſtification, ſince he does not at all give any Evidence of it here?

L. C. J. North. Since he gave not any Occaſion or Uſe for ſuch a Proof now at this Time, 'tis not fit he ſhould be examined about it: Indeed Yeſterday he gave it in Evidence, becauſe it concerned a Circumſtance of Time that related to the Priſoners then to be Tried.

L. C. J. 'Tis true, as my Lord ſays, that it was Yeſterday proper, becauſe he gave Evidence that Fenwick and Ireland were here in Auguſt together. Now that did ſome way concern him, but you have no Concern at all in it.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. That brought it in at that Time, but this is a foreign Matter, it cannot be here.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witneſſes, Maſter Langhorn?

Langhorn. My Lord, Mr. Oates hath affirmed, when I asked him touching his receiving a Reward, he ſaid, he had his Reward, for he had been out of Purſe Six or Seven Hundred Pounds, and it is my Deſire to examine a couple of Witneſſes, touching the Probability of that; for he was ſo very poor, before this happened, that it is impoſſible, without a Purſe being made for him, to lay out Six or Seven Hundred Pounds.

L. C. J. Look you, here is the Thing, he gives you an Anſwer, to which he was not in the leaſt bound, nor is it to be charged by you; he ſays he is out Seven Hundred Pounds, but that is not any Evidence, nor is the Jury to take Notice of it, nor is it to affect him. And would you have him give us an Account how he came by that Money?

Langhorn. My Lord, I'll tell you how far it concerns me; the proving of his Indigency before this Thing happened, will concern me thus far——

L. C. J. If you ſhould prove this Man in an indigent Condition, what is that to the preſent Purpoſe? it goes to no part of the Evidence.

Langhorn. My Lord, I ask the Queſtion for this Reaſon, for certainly if he were ſo very indigent, it cannot be imagined in probability that any Man would truſt him with ſuch a great Sum, unleſs it were to give this Evidence.

L. C. J. If you have any more Witneſſes, call them, and make an end of them; if not, then you may obſerve what you will to the Court and Jury, after the King's Council hath done.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. But all your Witneſſes you muſt call now.

Langhorn. Doth your Lordſhip debar me from uſing this Copy of the Record of the Houſe of Lords?

L. C. J. To what Purpoſe would you have it read?

Langhorn. Becauſe Bedlow therein ſays, that he had no Perſon more to charge, either in the Houſe or out of the Houſe, than what he then charged.

L. C. J. What then?

Langhorn. I was not one of thoſe Perſons, then he knew nothing againſt me.

L. C. J. 'Tis but a Memorial taken by a Clerk, and do you think that his Omiſſion ſhall be concluſive to us?

Langhorn. 'Tis the Journal of the Lords Houſe, my Lord.

L. C. J. North. But can you think that can be uſed as Evidence here? If you had an Affidavit ſigned by the Party, and had Witneſſes to prove that he did make ſuch an Oath, you ſay ſomething.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. You can't read that againſt his Teſtimony, you underſtand that, being a Lawyer. If you have any Witneſſes, call them, but you pick out collateral Matters, and ſpend our Time to no Purpoſe.

L. C. J. Really, if it were a Thing conducing to the Point, I would very much ſtretch; but it being ſuch a kind of Thing as this is, he ſays he had nothing to ſay againſt any Body elſe, and I was not named then: What is this to the Fact you are charged with?

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. Why, it may be, he did not remember it then, will you conclude him, that he ſhould never remember it, or ſpeak of it?

L. C. J. You ſee that now at theſe Trials, he ſays ſometimes, this is all I can remember at preſent, but by and by he recollects himſelf; would you hinder him from ſaying then what he remembers?

L. C. J. North. Beſides, upon an Affidavit, or an Anſwer in Chancery, we never allow it, unleſs we have the Party to prove that he took the Oath.

Langhorn. I deſire to know of Mr. Oates, whether he did diſtribute any of theſe Commiſſions, and to whom? for he hath ſaid I did.

Dr. Oates. That which I ſay, is this, thoſe Commiſſions that I named, they were diſtributed, but the Perſons I do not know; I know the Commiſſions were for thoſe five Perſons, and in July or Auguſt he did ſay he had diſtributed them, but he ſaid not to whom, only one, indeed, he ſent by his Son, to the eldeſt Son of my Lord Arundel of Wardour, to be Commiſſary General; and he came back, and ſaid, it was delivered.

Langhorn. You do not ſpeak of any other?

Dr. Oates. I do not recollect that I know of any other.

Langhorn. I ask for this Reaſon, becauſe, in the Lords Houſe, he hath charged me, that I ſent my Lord Arundel's Commiſſion, and that I ſent it by my Son, and that he ſaw a Letter in my Chamber, of the receipt of it.

Dr. Oates. My Lord, there is ſome part of the Evidence, that does reflect upon the Lords, which I charge not upon Mr. Langhorn, becauſe I would not diſcover my Evidence againſt the Lords. He goes now to expatiate upon the Informations, but I hope, the Court will excuſe me, becauſe I reſerve it for another Trial.

Langhorn. I deſire Mr. Lydcot may be asked, whether he did not hear Maſter Oates, at a former Trial, ſay, (for ſo I find it in the Narrative) (it was at Coleman's Trial) that he came to me the next Day after the Conſult, and communicated it to me, and that he never ſaw me afterwards.

L. C. J. Do you know any Teſtimony, Maſter Oates gave concerning Maſter Langhorn?

Langhorn. You are not the Perſon that took the Trial, are you?

Lydcot. I know nothing of the Buſineſs, at all, I was at the Trial, but I cannot particularly ſpeak what was ſaid there.

Langhorn. The Perſons that took the Trial were ſummoned to be here. Call Mrs. Sylliard. (But ſhe appeared not.) Call Mr. Blayney.

L. C. J. Here is Mr. Blayney, what would you ask him?

Langhorn. I would know of him, what Mr. Oates hath teſtified concerning me?

L. C. J. Do you know what Mr. Oates ſaid concerning Mr. Langhorn?

Mr. Blayney. When, my Lord?

L. C. J. Nay, I can't tell.

Langhorn. At Coleman's Trial, Sir.

Mr. Blayney. My Lord, I was preſent at Coleman's Trial, and I remember Mr. Oates did ſay ſomething about Mr. Langhorn, but I have not my Book here, I can't tell what it was.

Langhorn. Here is the Book, Sir, here is the Narrative.

Mr. Blayney. That was not printed by my Copy, Sir.

Langhorn. Who were they that did take it?

Mr. Blaney.

Mr. Blayney. Of my own Knowledge I don't know whose Copy it was, but by hearsay.

L. C. J. It was taken as well as it could be taken, but you must not urge that which is but an Historical Narrative against him.

Mr. Justice Pemberton. Mr. Langhorn, do you think to convict a Man by an History? To say a Man is forsworn because he does not swear as that History says he did swear?

L. C. J. We will do you all the Right, and give you all the fair Play we can; but we are of Opinion that it signifies nothing, that you can make no use of it.

Langhorn. If I can have no Light, how can I imagine what they will charge me with?

L. C. J. Have you in any other Case observed it? If a Man be indicted of Felony or Treason, any Capital Crime, he is clap'd up, and is not permitted to have a Copy of the Indictment, nor he cannot by Law.

Langhorn. They know something of what they are accused for, they are confronted before a Justice of Peace.

Mr. Justice Pemberton. Why, I'll suppose you had been examined, do you think your Examination would have been Evidence for you here?

Then one Elizabeth Sylliard was called, but affirming, That she durst not speak unless the Court would promise her protection against the Rabble, because some of the Witnesses had been abused; which the Court not being able to do, otherwise than by promising to punish those that offered to meddle with her if she brought them before them, she was, by Mr. Langhorn's consent, set aside, and not examined.

Langhorn. She comes in relation to a Point that happened at Reading's Trial, where Mr. Bedlow did depose, That he did not say all he could have said against Mr. Whitebread and Mr. Fenwick, but that he knew more against them than he gave in Evidence at their first Trial.

Mr. Justice Pemberton. What is that to you?

Langhorn. That I take to be a kind of Perjury in him; for they are sworn, To speak the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Is this material in your Case what he said about Whitebread and Fenwick?

Langhorn. It makes it material to make him uncreditable.

L. C. J. Mr. Whitebread made that Objection, but he was answered; for he was told, That he could not tell all that he knew at that time, because he was in treaty with Mr. Reading about the lessening of his Evidence against them, and the Lords in the Tower, and the Lords were to judge what measure they should have from him, by his kindness to Whitebread and Fenwick. If you have no more, the King's Council will go on.

Sir Cr. Levins. My Lord and Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the Evidence that Mr. Langhorn hath given for the making of his Defence, which hath been principally to reflect upon Mr. Oates; and he first calls Mr. Hilsley to prove, that whereas Mr. Oates did swear he came over with him, he affirms he did not; but it falls out, that Mr. Oates hath counterproved him by such a Circumstance as does contradict him in what he says; for speaking of the loss of his Money, Hilsley said, some body else had told him of it; but producing his Witness for that, he only affirms, that Mr. Oates, in his Company was told, that Mr. Hilsley had lost his Money, but not how nor where; but Mr. Oates gives you a particular Circumstance, that he was cheated by a Person he lent his Money to, and that left him to pay the Reckoning, which Mr. Hilsley does confess was true, and which he could not hear from the others, for the others did never know it. Gentlemen, they have brought you a great many other Witnesses to prove, that Mr. Oates was not in England on the 24th of April, the time he says he was, and they all agree as to that time, tho' as to other times they are not so exact; but we shall give you as plain and as full an Evidence that he was here at that time, as that you are there now, and shall very fully satisfie you in it. For that of Sir John Warner, and Sir Thomas Preston they are Matters that were transacted beyond Sea, to be sure they did not come over by those Names, no more did Mr. Oates himself; therefore it would be hard to find out these Persons, or to give you so particular an account of them that were thus in Disguises, and had changed their Names; but truly if that were a matter done in England, it were far more easy for us to confront their Testimony in that; for matters that are done here lie more ready for our proof, than those that are done beyond Sea; for the last Woman that he called, which was the Woman about the White-Horse-Tavern, her Evidence would have gone as punctually for truth, if it had been a Matter done in Flanders, as any thing could be in the World; but it happening to be near Home, it hath the ill fortune to meet with a very sudden Answer, which is a manifest proof how they stretch to help themselves, and in my Opinion this contradiction overthrows all their Evidence. Gentlemen, we will call our Witnesses, and prove it as plainly as any thing can be in the World, that Mr. Oates was here at that time. First swear William Walker. Which was done.

L. C. J. Do you know Mr. Oates.

Mr. Walker. Yes, Sir, I have known him Seven or Eight Years.

L. C. J. When did you see him in England last Year?

Mr. Walker. I saw him the latter end of March 1678. or towards the middle of April following, I saw him then in a Disguise, insomuch as that I knowing what he was, and what he had been, I could not a great while recollect the face of the Man, and it was a great Trouble to me, that having known him so many Years, I should not then know him. I went home, but could not recollect my self that Night; but before I rose again the next Morning, I did recollect my self that it was Titus Oates, and I presently turned my self out of my Bed, and went to a Gentlewoman whose Name I did not then well know, to inquire of her about it. After the Salutation, said I, How does Mr. Oates? said she, knocking her Hand upon the Counter, He is an undone Man: Why, what is the Matter, said I? He is turned, said she, to the Church of Rome: Do you know where he is, said I? No, said she, but he is lurking up and down the Town, and only dares appear in the Evenings. Well then, said I, I saw him later than you did; for I saw him between St. Martins-Lane and Leicester House Yesterday, but he was in a Disguise: and I told her what Habit he was in.

L. C. J. What time was that?

Mr. Walker. It was about Ten of the Clock in the Morning.

L. C. J. But what time of the Year was it?

Mr. Walker. It was the latter end of March, or the middle of April.

Mr. Juſt. Pemberton. It was before the end of April?

Mr. Walker. Ay, ay, my Lord.

L. C. J. And that contradicts all your Witneſſes; for they ſay, that he was there all March, and all April, and all May, nay, from December to June.

Langhorn. He hath ſaid the latter end of March, or the middle of April, I would have him be as certain as he can.

L. C. J. He cannot be certain; for thoſe things in point of time, you know, and all Mankind muſt agree, that a thing done a Year ago that was of no greater importauce at that time, cannot ſo eaſily be remembred, or that he ſhould take ſuch ſpecial notice of the critical Day. What Man in the World does remember or take notice ſo as to charge himſelf in what Week or what Month ſuch an accidental thing as this happened? but to ſatisfie Mr. Langhorn I ask you, Can you ſpeak any more particularly than you have done?

Mr. Walker. Becauſe I would not be miſtaken, or do any one any wrong, I do rather take an uncertain time than a certain, but I do think it was in the Month of April, and towards the middle of the Month, that is all I can ſay.

Langhorn. But how is he ſure, ſince he is ſo uncertain in his Memory, that this was 1678. and not 1677?

Mr. Walker. Becauſe, my Lord, it was but a little more than a Year ſince, and I am able to judge of the Year as well as another.

L. C. J. Do you remember what you went about?

Mr. Walker. I was wont, about that time of the Year, to receive Money of my Lord Thomas Howard, and upon that Errand I came to Town then.

L. C. J. But are you ſure it was Mr. Oates that you ſaw?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord; for according to my apprehenſion I did know the Face when I firſt ſaw it, but I could not recollect who it was till I had refreſhed my Memory, and the next Morning I did ſo, and then concluded it was he.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. How came you hither?

Mr. Walker. I was brought here for a Witneſs.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. Did you diſcover this to Mr. Oates, or did Mr. Oates firſt come to you, to put you in mind of it?

Mr. Walker. I had diſcourſed with ſome Perſons about it a while after the Plot was diſcovered, and ſo I ſuppoſe it came by accident to him.

Then Mrs. Ives was ſworn and ſtood up.

L. C. J. Well, Miſtreſs, what ſay you?

Mrs. Ives. This is the Gentleman that told me this buſineſs.

L. C. J. What did he tell you?

Mrs. Ives. He asked me when I ſaw Titus Oates? I told him I had not ſeen him a long time, that he was gone beyond Sea: he asked me, if I never ſaw nor heard from him ſince? I told him, No; but of late ſome of his Friends had told me, that he was about the Town, and that they had ſeen him, but they did not know the place where he lodged. Then ſaid he, I have ſeen him ſince you; for I was Yeſterday going in Leiceſter-Fields, and going along I ſaw him, for he was in coloured Cloaths, and very much altered from what he had been.

L. C. J. When was this? How long was this ago?

Mrs. Ives. It was about the middle of April was Twelvemonth, and I remember it by a very good Token; for his Father Mr. Oates came then to my Houſe to ſee me, and that is the firſt Month that our new thin Cheeſes come in, and I did then ask him, if he would not come in and eat ſome new thin Cheeſe; and when he was come in and ſate down eating of Cheeſe, and drinking a draught of Drink, I was a ſaying to him, Pray, Sir, when did you ſee your Son? Said he, I have not ſeen him of late, I heard from him a little while ago, but I have not ſeen him: Then, ſaid I, I can tell you News of him. Here was ſuch a Gentleman in my Shop that ſays he met him in Leiceſter-Fields, but in a diſguiſe, and he told me what Habit he was in.

Sir Cr. Levins. Set up Butler. [who was Sworn.]

L. C. J. How long have you known Mr. Oates?

Butler. I have known him two or three Years before he went to Sea.

L. C. J. When did you ſee him laſt Year?

Butler. When he came back, he came to my Maſter's Houſe the beginning of May laſt was Twelvemonth.

L. C. J. Who is your Maſter?

Butler. Sir Richard Barker, my Lord.

L. C. J. What did he come there for?

Butler. He came to enquire for Doctor Tongue.

L. C. J. Did you know him?

Butler. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Are you ſure that's he?

Butler. This is the Gentleman.

L. C. J. And what ſaid he?

Butler. I was in the Gate about my Coach, and he comes in and asked me if Dr. Tongue was within. I told him, No: At preſent I did not know him, becauſe he was in ſuch a diſguiſed Habit; I knew him vety well before, becauſe he went in ſuch a Habit as he does now: But this is the Man, and Titus Oates is his Name. Said I, Mr. Oates, you are welcome into England again: But he took no notice but went forward into the Houſe, but he made but a little ſtay there, and came out again; it ſeems ſomebody had affronted him, and laughed at him, becauſe he was more like a Shepherd than a Miniſter: His Hair was cut, and he had a gray Coat on, and plain Shooes, and a flopping Hat; and ſo he went out of the Gate, and would not take any notice of me, or what I ſaid.

Langhorn. How does he know it was in 1678, and not in 1677? He ſays it was in the Month of May was Twelvemonth.

Butler. I know it by this Circumſtance: In February I went down into Lincolnſhire, and I came up again the ſame Month: Sir Richard Barker was then ſick and in the Conntry, and there he was a great while; and when he came to Town I did acquaint my Maſter that Dr. Oates was there to enquire for Dr. Tongue, in the ſtrangeſt Habit that ever I ſaw Man in in my Life.

L. C. J. How long after he had been there was it that you did tell your Maſter?

Butler. It was as ſoon as my Maſter came back, as ſoon as I ſaw him, it might be a Week.

L. C. J. Was it about a Week or a Fortnight?

Butler. I do not know exactly.

Mr. Belwood. Then ſwear Cicily Mayo. [Which was done.

L. C. J. Do you know Maſter Oates?

Mayo.

Mayo. I never saw his Face before that time, nor had I taken notice of him then, but that there was a Young-man that lived with Sir Richard Barker, who had a great acquaintance with him, and seeing him in that Garb he called me to the Window, and said, Mr. Oates is surely turn'd Quaker or Jesuit by the change of his Habit: No, said I, he is no Quaker, for he hath got a Periwig on.

L. C. J. Maid, when was this?

Mayo. This was before Whitsuntide.

L. C. J. Which Whitsuntide?

Mayo. Whitsuntide was Twelvemonth.

L. C. J. How long before that was it?

Mayo. It was a matter of a Fortnight before, as I remember.

L. C. J. Are you sure you know him now?

Mayo. Yes, this is the Man.

L. C. J. North. Did you tell your Master of it?

Mayo. I was not so well acquainted with him as to speak to Sir Richard Barker about it, but the other Servants they told him.

Mr. Belwood. Set up Philip Page. [who was sworn.] Do you know Mr. Oates?

Page. Yes, my Lord, I have known him these five Years.

L. C. J. When did you see him?

Page. About May was Twelvemonth.

L. C. J. Where?

Page. In Sir Richard Barker's House.

L. C. J. Are you sure this was the Man?

Page. Yes, I am sure it was he.

Langhorn. What time in May was it?

Page. About the beginning of May.

L. C. J. And you take it upon your Oath that you saw Mr. Oates the beginning of May was Twelvemonth in Sir Richard Barker's House.

Page. Yes, my Lord, I do.

Mr. Just. Atkins. What is become of the Boy that spoke to the Woman about him?

Mayo. He is dead, my Lord.

Sir Cr. Levins. Then swear Sir Richard Barker. Which was done.

L. C. J. Do you know Dr. Oates, Sir?

Sir Rich. Barker. I have known him these many Years, I have known him from a Child.

L. C. J. Did you see him about a Year ago?

Sir Rich. Barker. My Lord, I did not see him then; I was out of Town, but as the Servants tell your Lordship, so they told me, when I came Home, that Mr. Oates had been there in a strange kind of Habit, that he was either turned Quaker, or Jesuit. I did very much admire at it, for I had seen his Father but a little while before, and he told me nothing of it. I had a mind to have given him a Living while he was in our Church.

L. C. J. When did your Servants tell you they saw him?

Sir Rich. Barker. They told me when I came home, which was in the latter end of Whitsun-week, or the beginning, as I remember.

L. C. J. Was it in Whitsuntide?

Sir Rich. Barker. It was about that time; they told me the odd kind of Posture he was in, and that young Fellow that they speak of told me several passages of Mr. Oates. (He is now dead.)

L. C. J. But when did they speak of it to you?

Sir Rich. Barker. My Lord, when I came home, two or three of them told me of it with great Admiration, as they have told your Lordship and the Court; and I said to one of them, What! did he leave no Message? They told me he enquired for Dr. Tongue, and asked for me, but that was all that they told me.

L. C. J. Come, was it in May?

Sir Rich. Barker. Yes, my Lord, it was in May was Twelvemonth.

L. C. J. How do you know it was May was Twelvemonth?

Sir Rich. Barker. It was last Year, about the beginning of May.

L. C. J. North. Nay, he tells you this, when you asked him the Question, Whether he knew Mr. Oates.? Yes, said he, I did know him formerly; and when he was of our Church I did intend to have given him a Benefice.

Langhorn. Certainly his change, that is, his becoming a Roman Catholick, could not be a thing so strange that he should intend then to give him a Benefice.

Mr. Just. Atkins. But hark you, Sir, I suppose you remember it by your own Sickness very well?

Sir Rich. Barker, Yes, my Lord, very well; I had a little Distemper upon me, and Dr. Needham of the Charter-house came to see me; and I lay sick a matter six or seven Weeks, and the latter end of my Sickness I continued taking of Physick till I came to Town.

L. C. J. But you are sure of the Year by that?

Sir Richard Barker. Yes, my Lord, and Yesterday I should have acquainted your Lordship and the Court, that there are some Persons not unknown to some of the Bench, if not near ally'd to them, and that is Sir William Tyrril's Family, of Lincolnshire, his Grandson, who had been at Cambridge, and then came to visit me, tho' I happened not to be at home (they being my Wife's Relations) and it was before Whitsuntide, because he came to take the advantage of that Season of the Year: and he had conversed with Mr. Oates, but he is not in Town at present; and there are two or three of the University that conversed with Mr. Oates at that time.

Mr. Justice Pemberton. Are they here?

Sir Richard Barker. I only tell it you for a Circumstance.

Sir Cr. Levins. Then set up Mr. Clay. [Who was sworn.

L. C. J. Do you know Mr. Oates?

Mr. Clay. Yes, I know him very well.

L. C. J. How long have you known him?

Mr. Clay. Since last April was a Twelvemonth.

L. C. J. Where did you see him then?

Mr. Clay. I saw him at Mr. Howard's, my Lord.

L. C. J. What Howard? one of my Lord of Norfolk's Brothers?

Mr. Clay. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What is his Christian Name?

Mr. Clay. His Name is Mr. Charles Howard, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where was it?

Mr. Clay. In his House.

L. C. J. Where was his House?

Mr. Clay. It was Part of Arundel-House, 'tis now made a new Street.

L. C. J. Did you speak with him there?

Mr. Clay. Yes, we saluted one another, and he said, Your Servant, Sir. I am sure I saw him there.

L. C. J. How often did you see him in that House?

Mr. Clay. Twice.

L. C. J. In April and May?

Mr. Clay. Yes, in April, and in the beginning of May.

Langhorn. I ask you if you do remember any Circumstance of it, to bring this to your Memory?

L. C. J. By what token do you remember it, that it was April and May?

Mr. Clay. By this Token, that Mr. Charles Howard told me he was one that was come from beyond the Seas, from St. Omers; and, said he, he hath some thoughts of being a Jesuit, but I think I shall divert him from that.

L. C. J. How do you know that it was that Month?

Mr. Clay. It was in the latter end of April, and the beginning of May.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Are you sure it was last Year?

Mr. Clay. Yes, I am, it was in the Year 1678.

Langhorn. Was it at Dinner, or no?

Mr. Clay. No, no.

Langhorn. Did he dine there that Day?

Mr. Clay. I did not see him at Dinner, but I saw him there twice.

L. C. J. Are you a Roman Catholick?

Mr. Clay. Yes, I am of the Church of Rome, but not of the Court of Rome.

L. C. J. That is no new Distinction.

L. C. J. North. No, they have the Court of Rome distinct from the Church, and particular Favourites of it, as other Princes have, and there are those that profess themselves of that Religion, that won't acknowledge the exorbitant Power that the Pope claims.

Langhorn. Will your Lordship please to ask him, whether he does remember that Mr. Oates did at that time play with Mr. Howard's Son, and instruct him, and talk to him about his Learning, and put Questions to him.

L. C. J. Did he talk or put any Questions to Mr. Howard's Son about Learning his Book?

Mr. Clay. Not any thing that I heard.

Langhorn. Was Mr. Howard's Son there?

Mr. Clay. No, not in the Room, as I think, I cannot tell certainly, my Memory is frail.

Then Mr. Smith was called and sworn.

L. C. J. How long have you known Dr. Oates?

Mr. Smith. I knew him before the Fire, he was my Scholar at the School where I was Usher.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. What time did you see him last Year?

Mr. Smith. The beginning of May.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. How do you know that?

Mr. Smith. He came to see me, and dined with me.

L. C. J. Where?

Mr. Smith. At Islington, at my House there.

L. C. J. How long was he with you?

Mr. Smith. Three or Four hours.

L. C. J. What time was it?

Mr. Smith. It was, as I take it, the first Monday in May, and I give this Reason for my remembrance why it was in May, because we dined by the Fire-side, being a little cold, of which we took particular notice.

L. C. J. And you wondered that you should dine by the Fire-side in May.

Langhorn. Was it on a Monday in May?

Mr. Smith. It was on the first Monday in May, to the best of my Remembrance.

L. C. J. Was there none of the Family there besides?

Mr. Smith. Yes, there was my Wife there.

L. C. J. Why did you not bring her to testifie the same?

Dr. Oates. He cannot find his Wife.

L. C. J. North. How long do you say was he with you?

Dr. Oates. Three or Four Hours.

L. C. J. What did you talk of?

Mr. Smith. We talked about his Travels, about his Journey into Spain, and to Valledolid, and Sallamanca.

Mr. Just. Pemberton. Was he in a Priest's Habit, or in another Habit?

Mr. Smith. My Lord, he was in a Cinnamon-coloured Suit, trim'd with green Ribbons.

Sir Cr. Levins. We have done with our Evidence, my Lord.

L. C. J. Now, Mr. Langhorn, the King's Council have done with their Witnesses.

Langhorn. Pray call Mr. Charles Howard and his Wife.

L. C. J. I do not think Mr. Charles Howard will appear.

L. C. J. North. I believe he does not think it safe to come here; we know upon what Account.

But upon calling, after a while he did appear and stood up.

L. C. J. Well, what have you to say to Mr. Howard?

Langhorn. The Question that I would ask him is this; it hath been affirmed here by Mr. Clay, that old Gentleman, that about the end of April, or beginning of May last was a Twelvemonth, he did meet Mr. Oates at Mr. Howard's House; I would know the truth of it.

L. C. J. Mr. Howard, you have heard the Question, do you know Mr. Oates?

Mr. Howard. Yes, my Lord, very well.

L. C. J. How long have you known him?

Mr. Howard. Above two Years.

L. C. J. When was he at your House?

Mr. Howard. My Lord, he hath been at Arundel House about two Years ago, and several times since.

L. C. J. Was he there about a Year ago?

Mr. Howard. Thereabouts he was.

L. C. J. Do you think he was there about May was Twelvemonth?

Mr. Howard. My Lord, after July I remember he was there.

L. C. J. Was he there in May?

Mr. Howard. No, my Lord, not to my remembrance.

Langhorn. Pray, Sir, when did your Son die?

Mr. Howard. The Fifth of May was two Year, 1677.

L. C. J. Why, how does that appear to be any thing in this Case; he did not say that Mr. Howard's Son was there.

Langhorn. He said he was in the House, but he could not tell whether he was in the Room or no.

L. C. J. You asked him whether he talked any Latin, or asked him any Questions; and he says he cannot tell whether the Son were there in the Room or no.

L. C. J. North. He says, About two Year ago I remember member he was at my Houſe, and about a Year ago; which contradicts all your Witneſſes.

Langhorn. No, he ſays, About two Year ago I remember he was there, and about a Twelvemonth ago, after July; but he cannot remember whether he was here in April and May was a Twelvemonth.

Mr. Howard. Mr. Oates was in my Lodging in April 1677, and then my Child was alive, and dined together with him and Mr. Clay.

L. C. J. That is two Years ago?

Mr. Howard. Yes, my Lord, two Years ago Mr. Oates was there with Mr. Clay, but not ſince.

L. C. J. Call Mr. Clay again to confront him in that.

Dr. Oates. I did not know Mr. Clay two Years ago.

L. C. J. You are miſtaken, I believe, for Mr. Clay does pretend that he did but juſt begin to know Mr. Oates in April was a Twelvemonth, and ſo Oates ſwears too.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton. And he ſays nothing whether you had a Child died or no.

L. C. J. When was the time that you firſt knew Mr. Oates?

Mr. Clay. The latter end of April laſt Year.

L. C. J. Did you ever know him before that time?

Mr. Clay. I never did.

L. C. J. Do you remember that ever you dined with him?

Mr. Clay. I do not remember the Day exactly, and I do not remember that e'er I dined with him.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton. But he is poſitive that he did not know him but a Year ago.

L. C. J. Do you remember whether Mr. Howard's Son was alive?

Mr. Clay. He had a Son alive at that time.

Dr. Oates. He had one Son indeed that died a Year before Mr. Clay and I met there.

Mr. Howard. I ſpeak of my eldeſt Son, who died two Years ago.

Mr. Clay. I never knew him.

L. C. J. Well, 'tis plain there was a Miſtake in it, he ſpoke of a Son that was then and is now alive, and you ſpeak of your eldeſt Son that died two Years ago. Have you any more Witneſſes, Mr. Langhorn?

Mr. Langhorn, No, my Lord, I have no more Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Well, would you ſay any thing? If you would, ſay what you have a mind to ſay.

Langhorn. My Lord, I am charged here by two Witneſſes, the firſt is Mr. Oates; if I can prove any one Point (in anſwer to that which he hath given in Evidence) not to be true, then I conceive, my Lord, he ought to be ſet aſide: And I think it hath been clearly proved, That whereas he ſaid Sir Thomas Preſton came over with him in April, it hath been clearly proved he was then at Liege; and whereas he hath affirmed, Sir John Warner, Mr. Poole, and two or three more that were at St. Omers, came over with him, I have proved That not to be true, beyond any contradiction: Then, as the Witneſſes about his own not coming over in April, Mr. Hilſley ſays he came not over with him in the Pacquet-Boat; and the other ſays that he was ſick in the Infirmary after Mr. Hilſley came away: Theſe Points being thus proved, I think there can be no credit given to what he ſays; for I can ſay, and I know it to be truth, that from November 1677, to this very Day, I never ſaw him: I have been a cloſe Priſoner ſo long, and have had but one Weeks time to provide, and therefore muſt be fain to take ſuch Information as my Friends and Relations could pick up, to anſwer what he hath ſaid in his Narratives, ſuppoſing he would have ſaid the ſame here; therefore I am not able to make any better Defence.

L. C. J. Did you never know Mr. Oates?

Langhorn. I have ſeen him once or twice.

L. C. J. When was that?

Langhorn. In Michaelmas-Term, 1677.

L. C. J. Upon what occaſion?

Langhorn. He brought me a Letter from one of my Sons, my younger Son in Spain, and then he told me he was going to St. Omers: He ſaid he could not be ſettled in any of the Colleges in Spain, and therefore he would go to St. Omers: and from that Day I never ſaw him till I ſaw him in the Court: I hope truly I have well proved that he was not here in England when he ſays he was, but that I muſt leave to the Jury: But ſurely theſe Boys cannot be ſuppoſed to have any Deſign, or to be bribed by any Reward, for I never ſaw the Face of any of them till now.

L. C. J. North. They are all Papiſts, and ſpeak in a general Cauſe.

Langhorn. If that be an Objection againſt them, I think it is hard if they are not to be believed becauſe they are Papiſts and Friends; then the other, on the contrary, are not to be believed becauſe they are Enemies: I think it is clear that he did not lodge at Groves's Houſe; and I think it is clear that he did not come over in the Pacquet-Boat with Mr. Hilſley, and that Sir Thomas Preſton did not come over with him, nor Warner, nor Poole; and if any of theſe Points be clear for me, I think his Teſtimony ought to be ſet aſide. Now, as to what Bedlow ſays, in truth it is impoſſible for me to examine any Witneſſes, and that I think will be your Lordſhip's Opinion; it will not ſeem probable that one that was in my way of Practice ſhould become a Clerk to regiſter Letters, and to keep Accounts of any particular Religious Order, as he makes me to do; or, if I were, that I ſhould admit Mr. Bedlow to be privy to thoſe Accounts; but that I muſt leave to the Court; my Lord, 'tis impoſſible to prove a Negative: Mr. Bedlow is a Perſon that I have no acquaintance with, truly I do not know that ever I ſaw him before this time in all my Life; tho' it is poſſible I may have ſeen him, but I do not know that ever I did: Now that I ſhould admit ſuch a Perſon to ſuch a Privacy in Accounts of this Nature, (if I were guilty of them) ſeems very improbable; but yet, as I ſaid, it is impoſſible to prove a Negative. If I had known what he would have charged upon me before, perhaps I might have made a better Defence; and for thoſe Witneſſes that I have had, they were prepared by ſuch Friends as thought they would be uſeful for me. Theſe Men have had time to get their Witneſſes together: I never ſaw one of mine till they came into the Court. I hope, my Lord, I ſhall find no diſadvantage in my coming here upon the account of my Religion, for that would ſeem as if you condemned me meerly for that: I diſclaim all Principles of Diſloyalty; and I do aſſure your Lordſhip, I do believe it is Damnation to any one that ſhall go about to kill the King, or deprive him of his Government; I ſhall leave the reſt to your Lordſhip and the Jury.

The

The Lord Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury, againſt Mr. Langhorn.

Look you, Gentlemen, you have had an Account, in the firſt Part of the Evidence, in general, That there was a general Deſign of bringing in Popery; and in order to that, as the beſt and quickeſt Means to accompliſh it, to deſtroy the King. And without doubt, they were in the right for that matter: To deſtroy the King, was the moſt effectual Courſe to introduce Popery they could take. Whether they would do it, or no, is not now any Queſtion; but, How much Mr. Langhorn, the Priſoner at the Bar, is concerned in it? And that depends upon the Teſtimony of Witneſſes.

The Teſtimony that Mr. Oates gives againſt him, amounts but to thus much: I cannot affirm, ſays he, that Mr. Langhorn was at the Conſult, on the 24th of April, at the White-Horſe-Tavern, where they Signed the Agreement to deſtroy the King: But this I can ſay, That the next Day, or within a Day or two, I went, by Order from the Fathers, Whitebread and Harcourt, to Langhorn's Chamber, and acquainted him with what they had Agreed upon. And he ſwears, That Mr. Langhorn did lift up his Hands and Eyes, and pray to God to give them good Succeſs. He tells you further, That after ſome Talk with him, about bringing in of Popery, and deſtroying of the King, he had alſo Diſcourſe concerning ſeveral Commiſſions; that he ſaw about Seven or Eight of them, and that he told him, he had more: One for my Lord Bellaſis, to be General, and one for himſelf, to be Advocate General, with others; but thoſe, he ſays, he ſaw, and peruſed them: And tho' he does not know of the Delivery of thoſe ſeveral Commiſſions, yet he does know of the Delivery of one to his Son, to be carried to my Lord of Arundel's Eldeſt Son: And he does ſay, That Mr. Langhorn did tell him, he had ſent it; and ſwears, that he had ſome Diſcourſe with him, concerning Killing the King.

Bedlow, he comes, and ſwears, That he was there twice, and that he ſaw him Tranſcribe Letters; and that the Effect of one of them was, That they were prepared with Arms, and all Things, but Money. That the Gariſons alſo were ready to be delivered up to them, but they ſtaid only for this, and Six Thouſand Pounds would do it, which the Benedictines were to raiſe. If that came, then there was nothing wanting. They had an eaſy King, whom they could deſtroy as they pleaſed; an Army in Readineſs, every thing in good Poſture, and no Time like this, to bring in Popery: Which Diſcourſe, he ſays, was before Mr. Coleman. Here is the Effect then of thoſe Letters which by him were written into a Book, and in which this Plot and this Contrivance was mentioned. Theſe were Tranſcribed by Mr. Langhorn, ſays he, while Mr. Coleman and I walked in his Chamber. I ſaw him write them. And he ſwears it.

Now the Matter is this; If theſe two Witneſſes do ſwear true, then is this Indictment of Treaſon highly Proved. For the contriving, To bring in Popery, To Levy War, and, To Kill the King, (which, when he was acquainted withal, he lift up his Hands and Eyes, and begg'd of God to give it good Succeſs; and which Bedlow ſays was the Effect of the Letters that he Tranſcribed into the Book,) Mr. Langhorn himſelf will not deny to be High Treaſon: And when this is Sworn here by Two Witneſſes, he muſt either Invalidate their Teſtimony, or acknowledge it Juſt, if you find him Guilty of the Indictment with which he is Charged. Now the Queſtion is, What Defence there is againſt it?

Mr. Langhorn ſays, If I can diſprove a Witneſs in any one material Thing that he ſays, then will it take off from his Credit in every thing he ſays. And firſt as to Mr. Oates; Saith he, I did know him, I muſt confeſs, but I never ſaw him ſince the Year 1677. The Thing that Mr. Oates charges him with, is in April or May 1678, or thereabouts. And Mr. Langhorn ſays, he never ſaw him ſince 77. Why Mr. Oates, ſaith he, was not here in England; and produces a great many Witneſſes, that came from Beyond Sea, to teſtify, That Mr. Oates was there in April and May, and longer. And whereas Mr. Oates ſays, That there came over in his Company with him, Sir John Warner, Sir Thomas Preſton, Mr. Poole, and others. He proves by ſome Witneſſes, that Mr. Oates was there both Months; and by others, that Sir John Warner was at Watton, and Sir Thomas Preſton at Liege, and Poole at St. Omers, at the Time that Mr. Oates ſays they came over with him: And this, ſays he, I hope will be plain Evidence why you ſhould not believe Mr. Oates; and the rather, becauſe theſe Witneſſes are ſuch, ſays he, as that I do not ſo much as know their Faces; and you will not preſume, that People to whom I am wholly a Stranger, ſhould come hither, from St. Omers, to teſtify a Lye for me.

In Anſwer to this, I ſay, 'Tis no good Argument for all that; for tho' I believe they are Strangers to him, they are not Strangers to the Errand they came about. They came to defend all the Roman Catholicks, whom we would hang here for a Plot; and they are ſent over for that Purpoſe, as far as their Teſtimony can go. How far that is, tho' they are not upon their Oaths, (for the Law will not permit it) I muſt ſay to you, in Favour of the Priſoner at the Bar, as I did to the Jury Yeſterday, You muſt not take it, therefore, as if it were meer Talk and no more; nor reject them too much becauſe they do not ſwear: They would ſwear, 'tis likely, if the Law would allow it. Only one Remark I muſt obſerve to you upon their own Evidence: The St. Omers Gard'ner (which is one of them) takes upon him to give a very exact Account of Mr. Oates, in the Months of April and May; but when I came to enquire, what he knew of him in the Months of June and July? he tells you, Thoſe were not the Months in Queſtion.

But on the other ſide, Did not the Principles of their Religion ſo teach, and make us to know, that they will not ſtick at any Wickedneſs to propagate it: Did not the beſt and chiefeſt Doctors of their Church Preach and Print it: Did not His Holineſs, the Pope, allow it; and never condemn any one Book in the World that hath aſſerted the Lawfulneſs of DEPOSING and KILLING KINGS, for ſeparating from their Religion: Did not they Teach and Practice all ſorts of Equivocations, and that a Lye does God good Service, if it be for the Propagation of the Faith: Were not theſe Young Boys capable of having this Doctrine inſtill'd into them; and, Were not they bred up in Colleges chiefly to ſerve that End; Then Mr. Langhorn had ſaid ſomething. Neither are theſe Things artificially objected againſt them, for the Doctrines of their Church are ſo Falſe and Pernicious, Pernicious, ſo Deſtructive and ſo Bloody; and the Way they take to come off from all Vows, Oaths, and Sacraments, by Diſpenſations before-hand, or Indulgence and Pardons afterwards, is a Thing ſtill ſo much worſe, that they are really unfit for human Society. They ſhould get their Pope, if they would not have it thrown into their Diſh, and have it believed by us; I ſay, they ſhould get the Pope of Rome to Decry and Anathematize ſuch Doctrines of Depoſing and Killing Kings, and Diſcharging Subjects from their Allegiance: But that will never be; for His Holineſs, the Pope, will keep himſelf where he is, and will part with Nothing that he hath of Advantage over any.

Look you, Gentlemen, thus much I cannot omit, with a good Conſcience, to ſay, The Profeſſion, the Doctrines, and the Diſcipline of the Church of Rome is ſuch, that it does take away a great Part of the Faith that ſhould be given to theſe Witneſſes; nevertheleſs, we muſt be fair, and ſhould hear them, if we could not anſwer what they alledge, by Evidence to the contrary. Mr. Oates therefore, to juſtify himſelf, hath produced, I think, Seven or Eight Witneſſes, that do prove, that he was here in the latter end of April, and beginning of May, which does contradict all their Teſtimony, who does ſay, he was Abroad all along, from December to June, and that they ſaw him every other Day.

'Tis true, if we were certain that what theſe Young-Men ſpake, were indeed ſo as they ſay, it is impoſſible for Mr. Oates's Teſtimony to be believed. If I were ſatisfied, that really and truly Mr. Oates was not here, but was Six Months together there, and that he hath invented this Story, and made this himſelf; I could no longer confide in the Man, nor find Mr. Langhorn Guilty: Yet is not the Time really the Subſtance of the Thing, tho' he hath made it ſo now, becauſe the Conſult was the 24th of April, at which he was preſent; and he did go, he ſays, to Mr. Langhorn, within a Day or two after, to acquaint him with the Reſolution of it.

To this End hath Mr. Oates produced Seven or Eight Witneſſes that ſaw him, as they ſwear. He hath produced a Miniſter, that ſays he ſaw him in a Diſguiſe, but having known him before, recollected him to be the Man. He hath produced a Woman that agrees with that Story; for ſhe ſays, that he came and talk'd with her about it, and told her then, that he had ſeen Mr. Oates the Day before, and gives you a Token why it was about that Time of the Year. Now, if this be not a new Matter, and new found out, this Woman (if ſhe ſwears true) does juſtify the other in what he did ſay a Year ago, when they could never imagine that any great Weight and Moment ſhould be laid upon that Accident of his ſeeing Oates in the Street. He hath produced to you the Coach-man of Sir Richard Barker, that ſays, he knew him well, when he came to his Maſter's Houſe. There he call'd him by his Name, That asking for Dr. Tongue, but not finding him within, he went away preſently; That he was in Diſguiſe; That they acquainted their Maſter with it, as ſoon as he came Home; and their Maſter ſays that ſo they did. And the Perſon that then lived in the Houſe, and now is dead, ſaid to the Maid, Yonder is Mr. Oates, I think he is either turned Quaker or Prieſt, what a Kind of Habit he is got into! No, ſaid the Maid, he can't be a Quaker, becauſe he wears a Periwig; but ſhe ſays, he named him to her, Oates, and that this is the Man, ſhe knew him ſince. 'Tis the ſame Man that the Young-Man ſpoke to her about.

He hath produced farther, one of their own Religion, one that is a Papiſt ſtill, and he ſays, he ſaw him twice at Mr. Charles Howard's, in Arundel-Houſe. There was indeed ſome Perplexity, they would have put upon it, by reaſon of Mr. Howard's Son being dead a Year before; but the Witneſs ſays he did not know the Son. A Papiſt he confeſſes himſelf expreſly to be, if not a Prieſt; and I would not ask him the Queſtion, becauſe 'tis not fair to make him accuſe himſelf: But he does ſwear expreſly, he ſaw Mr. Oates at Mr. Charles Howard's, in April or May, which contradicts all their Witneſſes. He alſo produces a Schoolmaſter, that tells that he Dined with him the Beginning of May: And I remember it, ſays he, very well, for we dined by the Fire-ſide, which gave me occaſion to wonder at it, in May, and remember it. He ſays, moreover, that he ſtaid three or four Hours with him, and talk'd of all his Travels in Spain. Now muſt all theſe People be downright Perjured; it can be no Miſtake, but they are all falſly forſworn, if there be not Truth in it. And when here are Seven or Eight Witneſſes poſitively Swearing, againſt the Affirmation of ſo many others, we leave the Credit of both Sides to you, who are the Judges of the Fact.

There is indeed, (and I will repeat it for you, for I would not miſs any thing, as near as I can, that would make for the Priſoner's Advantage); there is a Proof concerning Sir John Warner, and Preſton, and Poole, that they were there at the Time, and there hath been no Anſwer given to it: But I ſay ſtill, 'tis the ſame Thing, for if you do not believe thoſe Witneſſes to ſpeak true, that affirm that Oates was there all the Time, but rather believe that he was here, by Seven or Eight People that teſtify it: I ſay, if you cannot believe he was there, you will never change your Mind for one Circumſtance, whether he came over with Sir John Warner and others, or not; for it is but a Circumſtance.

Langhorn. They are not the ſame Witneſſes.

L. C. J. 'Tis true, they are not; you have Four or Five Witneſſes that ſpeak apart; but two of them do ſay, that they knew Oates alſo was there at the ſame Time that they ſpeak that Sir John Warner was at home.

Langhorn. Not thoſe two of Liege, my Lord, about Sir Thomas Preſton.

L. C. J. No, they do not, for I leave it to you of the Jury, upon the whole Matter; there is little more to be ſaid by me. If ſo be Credit is to be given to theſe Witneſſes of Oates, more than to the others, then you muſt find him Guilty, and the rather, becauſe I do a little ſuſpect, they come over inſtructed, to ſay what they do. You find they apply themſelves to the Thing they came for, and not only the Gard'ner, but another could tell you (which hath a very great Influence upon me, as to their Credit) that the Months of April and May were the Months in Queſtion, and they were not to be Examined any farther. So that it looks as if theſe Young-Men were ſent of an Errand, and tho' you do not know them, Mr. Langhorn, and are innocent as to any tampering with them, yet I am afraid they are come to ſerve the Catholick Cauſe, as they call it. For they are very well taught, and they keep to thoſe Months of April and May, of all the Months in the Year. Then they bring the Woman of the White-Horse-Tavern, where the Conſult of the 24th of April was; and what is the Uſe they would make of her? why, it is, that Mr. Oates ſhould make a Story of Fifty Fathers being in her Tavern at one Time (but he inſiſts now there was a matter of Twenty) when there was not a Room in her Houſe, that would hold Ten: But you hear how ſhe was anſwered, from Teſtimony riſing up in the Court of themſelves, that were acquainted with her Houſe, and know, that Forty People may Dine in two of her Rooms: And the King's Council obſerved well, how Chance it ſelf hath put to Silence this Evidence. So that when Matters are alledged to be done at Home, there is not ſo great a Difficulty as in proving Things that are done Abroad.

and

I leave it to you, Sirs. Here is a Gentleman that ſtands at the Bar, upon his Life, on the one Hand; but if Mr. Oates ſays true, all our Lives, and Liberties, our King, and Religion, are at the Stake, on the other Hand. God defend that innocent Blood ſhould be ſhed, and God defend us alſo from Popery, and from all Popiſh Plots, and from all the bloody Principles of Papiſts, which are very Cruel, as we know by Experience; and you cannot blame us to look to our ſelves. For I muſt tell you, the Plot is proved as plain as the Day, and that by Oates; and farther, Oates's Teſtimony is confirm'd by that which can never be anſwered. For when he comes at his firſt Teſtimony, and ſays, that upon the 24th of April, ſuch a Conſult was Summoned, and Held, it falls out, that five Days after a Letter is found amongſt Harcourt's Papers, (a principal Perſon in the Deſign,) which does order the Meeting upon the 24th of April, being the Day after St. George's Feaſt, and gives them a Caution that they ſhould not come too ſoon to Town; that they ſhould not appear too much in London, for fear of diſcovering the Deſign, and of diſcloſing That, the Nature of which requires Secrecy. Plainer than this is hardly to be writ from a Jeſuit, eſpecially in ſo dangerous a Matter. And what can be anſwered to this Letter, that is found in a Prieſt's Hands, four Days after Mr. Oates had given in his Information about it?

Put all this together, and if you be ſatisfy'd herein, you may judge the better, as to the particular Buſineſs of Mr. Langhorn, how far the Teſtimony of Oates and Bedlow affect him. You know what you do. And for Bedlow, 'tis true, what he ſays, that there is nothing to be ſaid to his Evidence, becauſe no Man can prove a Negative; and he ſwears expreſly, that he had this Diſcourſe with him, of theſe Treaſonable Matters, Killing the King, and Altering Religion. If this be ſo, and you are ſatisfy'd in that particular, (and that a Man may very well be, as to the Subſtance,) I do not ſee any conſiderable Anſwer that is given. I ſay once more, there is the Life of a Gentleman at Stake, and there are all our Lives at the Stake: Follow you your Conſciences; do Wiſely, do Honeſtly, and conſider what is to be done.

L. C. J. North. With my Lord's Leave, becauſe there hath been mention made of this Letter, which goes much in Confirmation of Mr. Oates's Teſtimony; it is in Court, but it hath not been produc'd at the Bar, I deſire it may, if your Lordſhip pleaſe.

Sir Cr. Levins. It is here in Court, my Lord, we will give your Lordſhip an Account how we came by it. Swear Sir Thomas Doleman. Which was done.

Sir Cr. Levins. Sir Thomas, did you find the Paper amongſt Mr. Harcourt's Papers?

Sir Thomas Doleman. I found this Letter among the Papers of Mr. Harcourt, that were committed to my Search.

L. C. J. When did you find it, Sir?

Sir Thomas Doleman. It was ſome five or ſix Days after Mr. Oates had given in his Information to the King and Council.

L. C. J. Do you mark it, Gentlemen? After Mr. Oates had told the Council of the Conſult in the 24th of April, is this Letter found.

L. C. J. North. 'Tis in Confirmation of Mr. Oates's Teſtimony.

Then the Letter was read, being the ſame with that in Page 292, in the Trial of Whitebread, Harcourt, &c.

L. C. J. This Letter is only as to the Plot in general, and not to be applied to Mr. Langhorn in particular.

Langhorn. Mr. Oates might very well be able to ſpeak of this Meeting of this Congregation, as they call it, before this Letter was taken, 'tis eaſy to believe, becauſe Mr. Oates being at St. Omers, I ſuppoſe the like Letters of Summons might come over to St. Omers, to fetch ſome of them over hither.

L. C. J. You ſay well, but if you have but the Luck to give me an Anſwer to a Thing or two, you'll have better Fortune, and more Skill than the Prieſts. 'Tis true, he might, perchance, know of the Conſult, if he were at St. Omers: But will you tell us what that Deſign was? And what is the meaning of the putting thoſe Words into the Letter, That they ſhould not come too ſoon to London, nor appear too much about Town, for fear of diſcovering that Deſign, which they knew required Secrecy in its own Nature?

Langhorn. My Lord, I will tell you what I take to be the Meaning of that Letter. The Deſign, was the holding of a Congregation: There were divers of them, and it was like the Meeting of a Dean and Chapter in a College, and he bids them not to come too long before the Time, for they were certainly in very great Danger to be Taken.

L. C. J. What! at that Time? What Danger were they in then?

Langhorn. Yes, my Lord, the Parliament was then ſitting.

L. C. J. But you know what Indulgence there was to all Papiſts at that Time, if they would be but quiet. Well, but put it all together, they were to come to London, not too ſoon, nor to appear too much, becauſe the Parliament was Sitting, for fear of diſcovering the Deſign. What, was that only for Mr. Whitebread, and his Fellows, to make an Officer! Can it be anſwered by that?

Langhorn. Certainly, their holding of a Congregation in England does require Secrecy.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, here is the Thing, this is only an Evidence to the Plot in general, that there is a Plot, and you may make what reaſonable Uſe you think fit of it. It is not a particular Evidence againſt Mr. Langhorn's particular Perſon, only it ſhews there was a Plot, and you have heard what they ſay to him in particular about it. And I'll tell tell you one Thing more, which, if Oates ſwears true, concerns you very much. He ſaith, they were a talking of the Ten Thouſand Pounds that Sir George Wakeman was to have for poyſoning the King, when their other Attempts had failed, and that he would not take under Fifteen Thouſand Pounds: You, Mr. Langhorn, was very angry, and ſaid it was a baſe, covetous Thing in him; and it being ſuch a publick Cauſe, it would have been no matter if he had done it for nothing. I have repeated as much as I can well remember, without any Prejudice to Mr. Langhorn's Teſtimony. And ſo I leave it with you.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury, who withdrew to conſider of their Verdict; and the Judges alſo went off from the Bench. The Lord Chief Juſtice telling the Auditory, that the Day being ſo far ſpent, and the Commiſſion determining that Night, becauſe of the Term, Sir Geo. Wakeman, and the reſt, could not be Tryed till next Seſſions. And after a ſhort ſpace the Jury returned, and anſwering to their Names, delivered in their Verdict.

Clerk of the Crown. Gentlemen, Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Cr. Richard Langhorn, hold up thy Hand. Look upon the Priſoner: You of the Jury, How ſay you? Is he Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. What Goods or Chattels?

Foreman. None, to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Cr. Hearken to the Verdict, as the Court hath Recorded it: You ſay that Richard Langhorn is Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted: But you ſay that he had no Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the Time of the High Treaſon committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge. And ſo you ſay all?

Omnes. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. It is a Verdict according to the Juſtice of the Evidence.

Upon which there was a very great Shout.

Then Mr. Recorder ſent for the Priſoners Convicted before, to receive their Judgment; and they were brought to the Bar, and the Court proceeded thus:

Cl. of Cr. Richard Langhorn, hold up thy Hand: Thou ſtandeſt Convicted of High Treaſon; What canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why the Court ſhould not give Judgment on thee to Die, according to Law?

Langhorn. I have nothing to ſay.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, hold up thy Hand: Thou ſtandeſt Convicted, in Middleſex, of High Treaſon; What canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why the Court ſhould not give Judgment on thee to Die, according to Law?

Whitebread. I can ſay nothing.

Cl. of Cr. John Fenwick, hold up thy Hand: Thou art in the ſame Caſe with him that went laſt before thee; What canſt thou ſay, &c.?

Fenwick. I have nothing more to ſay.

Cl. of Cr. William Harcourt, hold up thy Hand; Thou art in the ſame Caſe with the Two that went laſt before thee; What canſt thou ſay, &c.?

Harcourt. I have nothing at all to ſay.

Cl. of Cr. John Gavan, hold up thy Hand: Thou art in the ſame Caſe with the Three that went laſt before thee; What canſt thou ſay, &c.?

Gavan. I have nothing more to ſay, than I did ſay. God bleſs the King, and the Kingdom.

Cl. of Cr. Anthony Turner, hold up thy Hand: Thou art in the ſame Caſe with the Four that went laſt before thee; What canſt thou ſay, &c.

Turner. I have nothing to ſay.

Cl. of Cr. Then, Cryer, make Proclamation of Silence while Judgment is given, upon pain of Impriſonment. Which was done, on both ſides of the Court.

Then Mr. Recorder gave the Judgment thus:

You, the Priſoners at the Bar: You have been ſeverally Arraigned, and now are ſeverally Convicted, of High Treaſon: And that attended with all the ill Circumſtances, that can be poſſible to aggravate ſo high a Crime. You attempted the Life of the beſt of Kings; who was full of Mercy and Compaſſion, even to You, under whom you might ſtill have lived peaceably and quietly, had not your own Malice and Miſchiefs prevented it. Nor were you ſatisfied with that alone; for you intended thereby to make way for the Deſtruction of the greateſt part of the Kingdom, by a publick Maſſacre, by cutting the Throats of all Proteſtants; for that alſo appears to be your Deſign: To effect which, the neareſt Way, and the beſt Means you could think of, was firſt to kill the King. And this was to be done, for the introducing of another Religion, as you call it; which, as we think, we more properly call Superſtition; and ſo root out the beſt Religion that is Eſtabliſhed amongſt us by Law. And I therefore call it the Beſt of Religions, even for your ſakes; for had it not been for the ſake of our Religion, that teaches us not to make ſuch Requitals, as yours ſeems to teach you, you had not had that fair formal Way of Trial, and of being Heard, as you now have been; but Murder would have been returned to you, for the Murder you intended to commit, both upon the King, and moſt of his People. What a ſtrange ſort of Religion is that, whoſe Doctrine ſeems to allow them to be the greateſt Saints in another World, that can be the moſt impudent Sinners in This? Murder, and the Blackeſt of Crimes here, are the beſt Means, among you, to get a Man to be Canonized a Saint hereafter. Is it not ſtrange, that Men profeſſed in Religion, that uſe all Endeavours to gain Proſelites for Heaven, ſhould ſo pervert the Scripture, (as I perceive ſome of you have done) and make That juſtify your impious Deſigns, of Aſſaſſinating Kings, and Murdering their Subjects? What can be ſaid to ſuch a ſort of People, the very Foundation of whoſe Religion is laid in Blood? Nay, leſt you ſhould not be able ſo eaſily to perſuade them ſo cleverly to imbibe thoſe Bloody Principles, you do Abſolve them from all the Obligations that they remain under, of Obedience to their Sovereign; you do therefore from the Pulpits publickly teach, That the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, ſignify nothing. It's a ſtrange Religion, that applies every thing to theſe wicked and deteſtable Purpoſes.

There is one Gentleman that ſtands at the Bar, whom I am very ſorry to ſee, with all my Heart, in this Condition, becauſe of ſome Acquaintance I have had with him heretofore: To ſee a Man who hath Underſtanding in the Law, and who hath arrived to ſo great an Eminency in that Profeſſion, as that Gentleman hath done, ſhould not remember, that 'tis not only againſt the Rules of all Chriſtianity, but even againſt the Rules of his Profeſſion, to attempt any Injury againſt the Perſon of the King. He knows, that it is againſt all the Rules of Law, to endeavour to introduce any Foreign Power into this Land. So that you ſinned both againſt your Conſcience, and your own certain Knowledge. But your ſeveral Crimes have been ſo fully proved againſt you, that truly, I think no Perſon that ſtands by, can be in any Doubt of the Guilt: Nor is there the leaſt room for the moſt ſcrupulous Man to doubt of the Credibility of the Witneſſes, that have been Examined againſt you: And ſure I am, you have been fully Heard, and ſtand fairly Convicted of thoſe Crimes you have been Indicted for.

I rather mention theſe Things to you, becauſe I know not whether you will think it neceſſary to have any Aſſiſtance, (I mean, ſuch Aſſiſtance as by the Law of the Land, is to be allowed to Perſons in your Condition, of any Proteſtant Divines, or of any other Proteſtants) to prepare you for another World. And tho' what hath been ſaid proceeds from a Lay-man, to you that are Profeſſed in Religion; yet I hope, it will not be thought amiſs, it being intended for your Advantage. Let that vaſt Eternity, that you are e're long to enter into, you are now on the Brink of it; I ſay, let that prevail with you to conſider, that there is a God in Heaven, who will call you to an Account for every one of thoſe private Conſultations, of which we can never come to any certain Knowledge. Tho' you have put all thoſe Obligations of Secrecy, upon your Party, which Religion could tye them by; tho' you give them the Sacrament, not only to oblige them to do wicked Acts, but to conceal them when they are done; yet remember, there is a God in Heaven, from whom you cannot keep them ſecret. All your Ties and Obligations, all the Diſpenſations that you can give to your Inferiors, or your Superiors to you, will never diſpenſe with that Account you are to give to the Great God of Heaven.

Gentlemen, with great Charity to your immortal Souls, I deſire you, for the Love of God, and in the Name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, Conſider theſe Things; for it will not be long e're you be Summon'd before another Tribunal about them: And Great and Dreadful is the Day of Judgment, at which You and all Men muſt appear.

And I hope all Perſons that ſtand by, will take Notice, that it is not the Principles of the Proteſtant Religion, to Murder any, (let it be upon their own Heads that profeſs it) for we abhor theſe Things. And we hope theſe publick Teſtimonies of our Religion, and this fair ſort of Trial, will not only confirm thoſe that are Proteſtants now, but will prevail upon thoſe whom they have inveigled into their Perſuaſion, to deſert ſuch a Religion, till ſuch time as they alter their Principles, from the Bloodineſs and Inhumanity they are ſtained with, and which theſe Men have inſtilled into all their Proſelites. And this I thought fit to premiſe to you in great Compaſſion and Charity. And I pray God it may have that Effect which I deſigned; that is, that it may put you in Mind of that Great Immortality that you are to enter upon e're long. And thus, having given you this Hint, and the Law having had its Courſe upon you, you have been fairly Tried, fully Heard, and have nothing to ſay, why that Judgment ſhould not be pronounced, which the Law hath deſigned againſt ſuch Offenders: I am, therefore, in the Name of the Court, to do the Duty which the Law requires of the Court; and I do, in the Name of the Court, pronounce this to be your Sentence:

That you be conveyed from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence you be drawn to the Place of Execution, upon Hurdles; That you be there ſeverally hang'd by the Neck; That you be cut down Alive; That your Privy Members be cut off; That your Bowels be taken out, and burnt in your View; That your Heads be ſever'd from your Bodies; That your Bodies be divided into four Quarters, and your Quarters to be at the King's Diſpoſe. And the God of infinite Mercy be merciful to your Souls.

After which there was a very great Acclamation.

Whitebread. My Lord, ſince we have not long to live, we deſire we may have the Benefit of the Company of our Friends, that they may be permitted to come at us.

Mr. Recorder. Yea, 'tis fit they ſhould have the Comfort of their Friends and Relations; and God forbid, but we ſhould do all we can to make their Paſſage as comfortable as may be. You muſt keep that Decorum that becomes ſuch as are in your Condition. You know you are under the publick Notice of the World, therefore you muſt uſe the Liberty that is granted to you with that Moderation and Prudence, that 'tis fit to uſe ſuch a Priviledge with; for I ſhall not deny you any lawful Favour.

Langhorn. Sir, there will be more People come to me than ordinary, in Regard of their Buſineſs, that I have had in my Hands; I deſire they may have the Liberty to come to me.

Mr. Recorder. I would not deny Mr. Langhorn any thing that I could grant him: If it be any Buſineſs that any Perſon would have an Accompt of, which you have been concern'd in for them, they may be permitted to come to you.

Capt. Richardſon. There is no Body to be in private with him, to ſay any Thing but what I ſhall hear?

Langhorn. Yes, my Lord, I hope my Wife and Children may.

Mr. Recorder. Yes, God forbid but he ſhould have his Wife and Children with him.

Langhorn. Or any others, that come about Buſineſs?

Mr. Recorder. Yes, Captain, with the Caution I have given you.

Then the Court Adjourned for London, to Guild-Hall, the 14th of July; and for London and Middleſex, in the Old-Baily, the 16th of July next. And the Priſoners were carried back to the Goal.

For that you, as falſe Traitors againſt the moſt Illuſtrious, Serene, and moſt Excellent Prince, Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. your Supream and Natural Lord; the Fear of God in your Hearts not having, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced, by the Inſtigation of the Devil; and the cordial Love, true, due, and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King do, and of Right ought, to bear towards Him, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, utterly withdrawing and endeavouring, and intending, with all your Strength, the Peace and common Tranquility of this Kingdom of England to diſturb, and the true Worſhip of God within this Kingdom of England uſed, and by the Laws of the ſame eſtabliſhed, to Overthrow, and the Government of this Realm to Subvert, and Sedition and Rebellion, within this Kingdom of England, to Move, Stir up, and Procure, and the cordial Love, true, due, and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, ought, and of Right are bound, to bear towards Him, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, wholly to Withdraw, Put out, and Extinguiſh, and Him, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to Death and Final Deſtruction to Bring and Put, You, the ſaid Sir George Wakeman, William Marſhal, and William Rumley, the 30th Day of Auguſt, in the Thirtieth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord King Charles the Second, at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, and traiterouſly did purpoſe, compaſs, imagine and intend, Sedition and Rebellion, within this Kingdom of England, to move, ſtir up, and procure, and miſerable Slaughter among the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to cauſe and procure, and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, from his Royal State, Title, Power and Government of his ſaid Kingdom of England, wholly to deprive, depoſe, caſt down, and diſinherit, and Him, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, and the Government of this Kingdom of England, and the ſincere Religion of God, within the ſame rightly and by the Laws of the ſame Eſtabliſhed, at your Will and Pleaſure to Change and Alter; and the State of this whole Kingdom of England, through all its Parts well Inſtituted and Ordained, wholly to Subvert and Deſtroy; and War againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England to Levy; and to accompliſh and fulfil thoſe your moſt wicked Treaſons, and traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes, You, the ſaid Sir George Wakeman, William Marſhal, and William Rumley, and other falſe Traitors unknown, the aforeſaid 30th Day of Auguſt, with Force and Arms at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, and traiterouſly did aſſemble, unite, and gather your ſelves together; and then and there, falſly, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly did conſult, conſent and agree, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put; and the Religion within this Kingdom of England rightly and by the Laws of the ſame Eſtabliſhed, to Change and Alter to the Superſtition of the Church of Rome; and to move, procure, and perſwade them, the ſaid William Marſhal, William Rumley, and other falſe Traitors unknown, the Agreement aforeſaid to fulfil and accompliſh, You, the ſaid Sir George Wakeman, after, to wit, the ſaid 30th Day of Auguſt, in the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, to them the ſaid William Marſhal, William Rumley, and other falſe Traitors unknown, did traiterouſly promiſe to give your Aſſiſtance, the Government of this Kingdom to ſubvert, and the True Worſhip of God, in this Realm rightly and by the Laws thereof Eſtabliſhed and Uſed, to the Superſtition of the Church of Rome to alter: And that You, the ſaid Sir George Wakeman, then and there, falſly, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly, did undertake to Kill and Murder our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King: And in further Proſecution of the Treaſons, traiterous Conſpiracies, Intentions and Agreements aforeſaid, You, the ſaid Sir George Wakeman, the ſaid 30th Day of Auguſt, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſly, traiterouſly, and againſt the Duty of your Allegiance, did receive and had (from a certain tain Perſon unknown, pretending to be Provincial of the Jeſuits in England, and claiming Authority for the Granting Commiſſions in that Part from the See of Rome,) one Commiſſion to inſtitute and authorize you the ſaid Sir George Wakeman to be Phyſician-General of the Army, to be raiſed for the waging War againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King within this Kingdom of England, and the ſame Commiſſion then and there falſly, adviſedly, maliciouſly and traiterouſly did inſpect and read over, and traiterouſly did keep in your Poſſeſſion, and to the ſame falſly, knowingly, adviſedly and traiterouſly did conſent and agree, with that Intention, that you the ſaid Sir George Wakeman ſhould have, receive and exerciſe the Place and Office of Phyſician-General of the Army aforeſaid, when you the ſaid Sir George Wakeman, William Marſhal, William Rumley, and the ſaid other falſe Traitors unknown, ſhould have performed and accompliſhed your Treaſons, Compaſſings, Imaginations, Purpoſes, and Traiterous Agreements aforeſaid. And that you the ſaid William Marſhal and William Rumley, in further proſecution of your Treaſons, Traiterous Conſpiracies, Intentions and Agreements aforeſaid, the ſaid 30th Day of Auguſt, in the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, did falſly, ſubtilly and traiterouſly conſult, conclude, conſent and agree, that you the ſaid William Marſhal, William Rumley, and other falſe Traitors unknown, ſhould pay the Sum of 6000 l. towards furthering and conſummating the Traiterous Agreements aforeſaid, amongſt the ſaid falſe Traitors had, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to kill and murther, the true Worſhip of God within this Realm rightly and by the Laws of the ſame eſtabliſhed, to the Superſtition of the Church of Rome to alter, and the Government of this Kingdom of England to ſubvert, againſt the Duty of your Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the form of the Statute in this Caſe made and provided.

Cl. of Cr. How ſay'ſt thou Sir George Wakeman, art thou Guilty of this High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted or not Guilty?

Sir George Wakeman, Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Sir George Wakeman. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance. (And ſo the other Two.)

Cl. of Cr. Set James Corker to the Bar, (who was arraigned and pleaded the laſt Seſſions.) James Corker, hold up thy Hand. You the Priſoners at the Bar, Sir George Wakeman, William Rumley, William Marſhal and James Corker, Thoſe Men that you ſhall hear called and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your ſeveral Lives and Deaths; If therefore, you or any of you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to ſpeak unto them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn. Call Ralph Hawtrey Eſq; who appeared, and there being no Challenges the Twelve that were Sworn are as follows.

JURY.

Ralph Hawtrey of Riſlipp, Eſquire.
